COMMENTARY
Upon all the pt. 11
PROPHETS
GREAT and SMALL.

Wherein
The divers Translations and Expositions both Literal and Myſtical of all the moſt famous Commentators both Ancient and Modern are propounded, examined and cenſured, for the ſingular benefit of all that be ſtudious of the HOLY SCRIPTURES.

We have alſo a more ſure word of Prophecy, wherunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that ſhineth in a dark place, untill the day dawn, and the day-ſtar ariſe in your hearts: Knowing this firſt, that no Prophecy of the Scripture is of any private Interpretation.

COMMENTARY

TO MY HONOURABLE BRETHREN
the Filomathons of the Clergie
OF THE CHURCH of ENGLAND.

TO whom can the Prophets more properly belong then to the sons of the Prophets, the Lords Clergie, or chosen singularly from amongst many Brethren, to minister immediately to him in his Sanctuary? But if the Reader shall marvel, why I put this Title (My Brethren) upon you, I would wish him to have recourse to 1 Tim. 5. 17. The Presbyters or Elders that rule well are worthy of double honour, especially they labouring in the Word and Doctrine, μαλιστα δι' οπισθους εν λογω κ' διδασκαλια, although the world now saith, the most contemptible of all other sorts of men; and some most audacious Prognosticators of late, call them a company of prating Priests, and an Antichristian Ministry, because exclaiming against their Heathenish Astrological Art, by all the most godly and learned Theologues that ever have written, and cried down as Ars nugatoria, because the main ground hereof, the Position of the heavenly Bodies in their various Aspects and Houses, is only imaginary. And Astrologers never hear or read any thing spoken well, but alwayes ill of them by the Prophets of old, whose word we know, is a sure word, whatsoever the Astro-ger boastingly prateth of his being for his skill of more worth then all Sion-Co-ledg, but they shall one day answer to God for this their Rabbshakeh-like language against his Angels; whenas Michael the Archangel durst not bring a railing accusation against that evil Angel the Devil of hell, as Jude testifieth. And for the Commonalty of this Land, who joyn in the same sinne, as they are blindely lead by a new generation of Preachers, I would wish them to look into 2 Chron. 36. 15, 16. where the miserable end to which the Jews came by the Caldees is ascribed to this, That they mocked Gods messengers, and despised his words, &c. But to return to the Text alledged, hereby it is manifest, that such as vilifie the Ministry of Christ, as hath been said, or combine together against them to deprive them of their dues, oppose God in his Word; standing for the honouring of them with double honour, which what is it, but The honour of estimation as it is set forth, 1 Thel. 5. 13. That ye highly esteem of them that labour in the Lord for their works sake. 2. The honour of maintenance, as in the next verse, Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the Ox that treadeth out the corn; and the labourer is worthy of his hire; whereby if it shall be thought some stipend only can hence be proved to be due unto them, this is checked Gal. 6. 6. Let him that is instructed make him that instructs him partaker, or communicate to him in all good

ing of a mean stipend, fulfilleth not Gods will; but if he giveth Tithes of all his increase, as God of old ordained it should be done to the Levites; which served at the Altar, he doth fulfill it, as may also be further gathered from 1 Cor. 9. 13. as they that serve at the Altar partake of the Altar, and they that minister about holy things live of the Temple; so God hath ordained, that they who preach the Gospel should live of the Gospel, which is a comparison added to many others made before taken from Oxen, Souldiers and Husbandmen, Shepherds, Herdsmen and Planters, lest it should be thought, that as all these have stipends for their labour; so nothing else is hereby meant, but that Preachers of the Gospel should have stipends; but that it was not necessary to give them Tithes, as the Levites of old had: for against this it is said, as they so these must live of Tithes and Offerings; for why doth the Apostle add this comparison to all the rest, but particularly to denote, what the Preachers maintenance ought to be, of which he had spoken before only in general? And if yet there be any doubt hereof, consult with Heb. 7. 4, 5. where Abraham the father of the faithful is said to have given Tithes to Melchisedeck the Priest of the most high God, thus doing him the greatest honour that could be, as hereby intimating, that he was greater than he; and that being by him blessed after that he had done so, he was blessed indeed, and in his example teaching all the children of Abraham that would be blessed to do likewise, and so is confirmed that of Mal. 3. 8, 9, 10. Bring all your tithes into my house, and I will pour out a blessing without measure, &c. And how a Nation should look for Gods blessing, and not rather for his curse, as is there said, that takes Tithes away, I cannot tell. In Germany and the Palatinate, what judgements followed after the taking away of them, who is such a stranger in Israel as that he knoweth not, although Ministers had good stipends allowed them? For if part goeth to other men, as it must, if put into Treasurers hands, and lesse be paid then the full value to Gods chosen Tribe, God is robbed of part, and his Ordinance is transgressed, which is, that if any man would redeem his Tithes, he must adde a fifth part thereunto. Lastly for further proof, that the old Ordinance of God herein is still of force, appears, because that when all Ordinances ceremonial are shewed under the Gospel to be repealed, Circumcision, sacrificing, divers washings, counting some meats unclean, and Sabbath-dayes; nothing is said in any place of the repealing the Ordinance of Tithes.

Touching the Elders, said to be worthy of this double honour, they are much mistaken that from hence infer two sorts, Ruling Elders, and Preaching Elders; for the very reason yielded v. 18. sheweth, that none other Elders are meant but Preachers, because the Church of God was never charged with maintenance giving to any other but them; Neither is it any where spoken of the ordaining of them, as of preaching Elders, yea and of Deacons also; therefore if there had been any such Officers in the Primitive Church appointed by God, the ordaining of them should not have been passed over in silence any more then of Bishops and Deacons; so that if there were any in after times, as some gather out of Ambrose, they were not set up by God, but by men; unless it shall be thought that Deacons had also the name of Elders and Rulers, because they ruled in matters concerning the poor. And thus both the distinction of Elders imagined first by Calvin, into two sorts, Ruling and Preaching, is taken away: and 1 Cor. 12. 28. brought to prove Governments besides these of Pastors and Teachers, is answered, Those Governments were none other but Helps, such as the Deacons were to the Apostles and Pastors, to denote which they are placed last of all others, and put so helps by apposition, as being the same. And for Rom. 12.8. He that giveth, let him do it with simplicity; he that ruleth, with diligence; that sheweth mercy, with chearfulness; no other Officer can be found here, but the Deacons, who was made the instrument of distributing the Churches treasure to the poor, and set some over and order them, that every one might work what he or she was able, and none might eat the Churches bread living in idleness, which is also prohibited, 2 Thel. 3.10. and the same in doing these things faithfully and carefully, are said also to shew mercy, and these now are Overseers of the poor, being changed often, and made without Ordaining, contrary to the first Institution; and the Office of a Deacon, where any such Office is, it is turned into a Degree to the Ministry. And thus much touching imaginary ruling Elders, to satisfy all that will be satisfied.

Touching the Preaching, they had both the Keys committed unto them, being the Ensign of Government, and were encouraged in using them, and as the seventy two Elders joyned of old with Moses, had some of his spirit put upon them to inaugurate them to the governing Office, so had they when Christ breathed upon them, and said, Receive the holy Ghost, whose sins ye remit, they are remitted, &c. And therefore not only the prime Preachers, called Apostles, but all preaching Elders are called Rulers, Heb. 13. 7; 17, 24. amongst whom, although some may be superiour to others, yet others ought to have a stroke in the Government together with them, as Assistants, otherwise how are they called Rulers?

Now for the last words, wherein these Rulers merit of honour chiefly lieth, chiefly they labouring, or because they labour in the Word and Doctrine, which words if they be supplied thus, will make this sense plain, and that one sort of Presbyters only is spoken of, chiefly they are worthy of double honour for their labouring, &c. To labour in the Word, what is it, but in reading to give the true sense of all parts thereof, that the hearer may hear and understand the most obscure passages thereof, so farre forth as any Expositors old or new have given light thereunto, or by study can by the Preacher with their help and prayers be attained? as Ezra is said to have read and given the sense, and Timothy is bidden study to shew himself a workman, that needeth not to be ashamed, dividing the word of truth aright, that is, shewing those places to be mystical that are, and the mystical sense thereof, and which are to be understood according to the letter, which are figurative, and which not, and freeing the truth every where from false glosses put thereupon, thus giving sincere milk to nourish, and not corrupt to poison the hearer. A great and necessary task, but for the labour that belongeth to it too commonly bawked: what the excellency of him is that studieth thus to do, yet appeareth by that which is said, Job 33. 23. An Interpreter is one of a thousand, and therefore this should prick us on to this study, and to constancy herein, and in the practising of this faculty I have known some to have been these many years, but alas they have been, and are still too few even of the learned that labour this way, and some without labouring expound so, as that it may be said, as good never a whit as never the better. By constantly going on in this way in a few years, ye may make your and ours acquainted with the sense of the greatest part of the Scriptures, which otherwise by your Doctrine they shall never come to know in all your life time, although ye should attain with Socrates to eighty years of age, or with Hoccrates to miners. If it be objected, The Priests then did nothing else but expound. Sol. If they did not, yet by this place the doing of both is commend- ed to us, and in Christs example, Luk. 4. and in Peters Act. 2. and in Pauls Heb. 7. 8. 9. 10. To labour in Doctrin, is in raising Observations out of the Word, first expounded, and hence arguing to the convincing of gainsayers, re- proving, exhorting, and threatening, and comforting as occasion serves, pre- ferring rather to edifie the hearers hearts, then to tickle their itching ears, not sparing the greatest for fear or hope, as the Prophets did, not even Kings or Captains living in sinne; as the Physician to whom the Kings son is committed to be cured, spares not to give him bitter pills for any displeasure that he takes thereat: for it is his healing that he intends, and not the pleasing of him, be- cause that if through any default in him he dieth under his hand, such a Physi- an should incur the danger of his life; as the King of the Persians is said to have done to Manes the Author of the Manichean heresie, undertaking to heal his sick son by his prayers, who died under his hand: So if the Preacher, the spiritual Physician, that he may please and not offend, doth so, that any son or daughter of the King of Heaven, dieth by his default, he will cut him off as a traitor by a terrible death. And that young Students in Divinity may the more readily attain to the faculty of rightly expounding the holy Scriptures, and other Theologues of more years, who for want of improving their time well hi- therto to get this theological knowledge, are too defective herein, might be henceforth furthered more then they could hitherto be by reading any one Au- thor whatsoever upon the whole Book of God, consisting of the Old and New Te- stament, I have by Gods singular assistance and enabling me the least of many of my Brethren, done and brought to a full period this great Work, even beyond my strength, being alwaies valetudinarius, travelling herein no less then thirty four years. In all which time I have not spared for any pains in perusing all the best Expositors, both old and new, that have written before me; so that I think there is scarce any thing of worth in any of them that might make for il- lumination in every particular that hath escaped me. And in this long tract of time, although I have been encountred with a thousand Headaches, and some other grievous maladies, yet I have not been without Joy of the light aris- ing and encreasing in my understanding mixed with my sorrows, and making them to seem light unto me. Now what is my request unto you (my learned Brethren) but that none of you would prejudge these my Works, as some are apt to do, not once vouchsafing to reade them, as deeming them to be such as contain nothing but what they have met withall in other Expositors before, for if I had only made a collation of divers, as Marlorat, Lippomannus and Thomas Aquinas have done, Nihil egissem, nisi quod prius factum fuisset, although to do this by adding more lights also, could not but be acceptable for the usefu- lness of it to the frequent Practitioner in Divinity. But before ye judge reade all or upon some Book thorow, and then I doubt not, but that ye will be so fully satisfi'd and end with such pleasure-taking herein, that ye will cry out as Ber- nard touching the holy Scriptures, as they are barely in themselves, but much more presented with multifarious Expositions, Scientia scientiarum omni pane suavior, omni melle dulcior, omni vino hilarior.

Now before I conclude, that nothing may be wanting which I have since met withall, which might seem to enlighten the Reader further in some passages of the Prophets now shortly to be accomplished, I have thought good to propound a new Interpretation upon Ezek. 37. 38. 39. of an anonymous Author, who will have by Gog and Magog, with their innumerable Armies are spoken of the Turks and Tartars to be understood, as also Revel. 20. against these an Army shall be raised up out of dead and dry bones, spoken of Chap. 37. that is, the Fewes when they shall be converted to Christ, which shall be within a few years after Rómes and the Popes overthrow, which shall be Anno Domini 1666. according to Revel. 13. where the number of the Beast is said to be 666. the number of a 1000 being cut off for brevities sake, as we use to say of the Spanish invasion 1588. 88. and of the Gunpowder treason 605, not mentioning the number of 1000, and this is said to be the mark of his name, not only because this Mystery of iniquity shall then have an end, but also because it began an. 666, or thereabout, Pope Vitalian setting up the Latine Service in all Churches at that time, contrary to 1 Cor. 14. And if the Kingdom of Antichrist shall then have an end, the great offence of the Fewes being taken away as it then shall, viz. Image-worshipping, against which they have been as zealous ever since the Babylonish Captivity, as ever they were prone unto it before, it is very probable, that they shall soon be converted that now live amongst Christians in these Western parts of the world, and not long after all the rest of the ten Tribes, which were sometime placed in Haba and Habor of Assyria, and in the Cities of the Medes. All of them are spoken of as dead and dry bones, because being dead so long ago by sin and infidelity they hitherto continue so, for which both Dan. 12. 3. it is said of the Fewes, Many of them that sleep in the dust shall awake, and Paul calls it life from the dead. For the time when this shall be, the fore-named Author out of Grebner the famous Swevian Astrologer saith, that it shall be anno 1679. and anno 1684. then the Fewes and Israelites shall return, and reinhabit the Land of Canaan, their bounds being enlarged more then ever in the time of the greatest Kings that ever reigned amongst them, according to all that God promised by Moses, but was not all fulfilled in Joshuah his time by reason of their sins, but then shall according to Obadiah his Prophecy, vers. 17, 18, 19. &c. Of this their turning also see Hof. 3. 4, 5. Zech. 12. 3, 4. &c. Chap. 14. 7, 8, 9. &c. to the end, Mich. 7. 15, 16, 17. Isa. 2. 2. and of the house of God then to be re-built farre greater, implying larger bounds, Ezek. 40. 4. to the end. The Turks and Tartars then set forth under the names of Gog and Magog, shall with very great Armies go and fight against them in the holy Land, and be destroyed in so great numbers that they shall be a long time in burying them, and a far longer time in burning their spears and arrows, &c. making of them fewel for the fire seven years. But touching the year when this shall be done, the fore-said Author is so variable, that I think what is said hereof is meerly conjectural, and the rather, because our Lord being asked, When he would restore the Kingdom to Israel, answered his Apostles, It is not for you to know the times and seasons, and if not for Apostles, verily not for Astrologers in these times, what soever they boast of their seeing things to come in the book of the stars, the Scripture fore-telling that they shall be, and they by their Art finding out when, and one in particular touching the Papacy, that it shall suffer greatly in the year 1654, yea and an. 1655. the fatal Catastrophe thereof. But one more skilful then he, That the Pope shall not fall till 1666, as I have already shewed, and the Fewes shall begin to be converted thirteen years after, thus pretracting the time still unto anno 7830. Another whose Prophecy was found in the study of Justus Lipfias, saith thus,

Thus the conjecture of this Astrologer falleth to the ground, and either he must not be one of the Wise-men of Issachar, that knoweth the times, and of so great worth as he speaketh of, or else the credit of others both Astrologers and Prophets before him, famous for their Prophecies and Predictions, must be cracked. And for the understanding men of Issachar, whom he thinks to have been of his own profession, when he shall make it appear, that there was a company of Astrologers of the people of God in those uncorrupted times, I shall believe him: but till then I shall hold them to have been only rarely studious of the will and word of God, and diligent hearers of Samuel the Prophet, who foretold that David should be King, and to this end anointed him. For it is only said, That they understood the times and what Israel ought to do, that is, according to Gods will in receiving him for their King, and living under him in the fear of God, to promote which David set himself with his whole heart. There were others also doubtlesse many in those dayes, who did the like, but the Tribe of Issachar was singular in this, that all their Elders were not onely as Rulers but Teachers of piety to all their brethren of that Tribe, and herein prevailed so farre, that when the Heads of other Tribes are said to have brought with them certain thousands, it is said of these, that all their brethren were at their command, and therefore are not numbered, as the rest be, intimating that piety so farre prevailed with them, that they in obedience to Gods will came all, not a man of them being excepted, whereas of other Tribes some only came, and others stayed at home. Of Israels not knowing the times; thus the Lord speaks by Jeremiah by way of reproof, Jer. 9. 7. and Luk. 17. 44. they are by Christ threatened likewise, because they knew not the time of their visitation. But of knowing the times as Astrologers take upon them to know them, it is more Manasseh-like, 2 King. 21. 6. who is said to have observed the times, and to his further disgrace, to have consulted with wizards and familiar spirits, then Isachar-like: which I speak not against looking at the signs of heaven, yet, to be warned either by this to come March 29, or that greater to come An. 1654. when the whole body of the Sun shall be eclipsed above two hours, because these are fearful signs of grievous judgements; or at blazing stars, when they appear, or burnings, or other terrible sights shewing themselves there, as over Jerusalem before the destruction thereof, for these are immediately given by God, summoning to repentance, that the evils to come may be prevented. But from constellations for any man to take upon him to foretell that the Clergie shall go down, and that the people shall be so knowing, that they shall need no more teachers, but every one shall be taught of God, is so far from acting the part of a wise man of Isachar, that it is turning such as we call in derision Wise-acres: The meaning of Joel being nothing less than what he would wrest it to, as I have shewed in my Expositions. And therefore I would advise them, (if they give not more heed to the books of Ptolomy, Haly and Albumazar, then of Prophets, Apostles and Evangelists, as this man would not be thought to do, as seems by his frequent alledging of the Scriptures,) to do as some exercising curious Arts, are by the Evangelist Luke said to have done, viz. confess their works, and burn those books, whereby they are so fascinated, as not to obey the truth, which saith, The secret things of the Lord belong to the Lord, but his revealed to us and our children. And be not wile, saith Paul, above that which is written; And to be moved the more, see Isa. 47. 13. Jer. 10. 1. and this Commentary thereupon.

Deu. 29. 29

To return again from this digression: What times God hath appointed to do the strange things before-spoken of, I confess yet we may lawfully search into so far as he hath given us any light therein in his holy word. For he hath not only foreboded great judgements and great deliverances, all things being first disordered, and then put into a better order again, and more durable then before, but somewhat touching the time how long such confusions and impious doings shall last, his people being without King, Priest, or Sacrifice, as Hosea speaks, and addeth, That it shall be to the later dayes, when they shall return and seek the Lord and David, that is Christ of the house of David their King. And Daniel saith, In the dayes of those Kings, God shall set up a Kingdom that shall never have end, and it shall break in pieces and destroy them; whence it is apparent, That the Kingdom of Christ, which he will rule by his peculiar people of Israel, shall both be all over the world, and to this end they must be converted, and that whilst the last Monarchy of the four, that is, the Roman standeth, and their conversion must be Romes destruction, and of all other Kingdoms also, which were sometimes appendices thereof, or of any of the other three Babylonian, Persian or Grecian, there being no Kings any more over any of them, but the Saints swaying the Scepter in them all; of which Saints, that is, convert Jews and Israelites, it is spoken again Dan. 7. 18, 27.

Hos. 3. 4.

Jer. 5.

Dan. 2. 44.

Now for the time more particularly when this shall be done, we must look into Dan. 12. 11, 12, 13. where the time from the cessation of the daily Sacrifice is said to be 1290 dayes, that is, so many years, as is not unusual in holy Scripture to set times forth, both in Ezekiel, where it is expressed, a day for a year; and Hof. 3.3. Many dayes for many years. Hereby then 1290 years are meant from the ceasing of the daily Sacrifice by some thought to be meant of the time when the City and Temple were destroyed by the Romans An.Dom.71. for experience hath taught the contrary long ago, because that this number being put to 1290, the total will amount but 1361. Therefore another beginneth the reckoning An.363. or thereabouts, when Julian the Apostata exhorted the Jews to sacrificing again, as of old they were wont to do, and they replying, That they might not sacrifice, but at the Temple in Jerusalem, he licenced them to go thither and re-build their Temple, and to sacrifice there, only to confound Christians, who were confident from the words of Christ, That till the Jews conversion it could not be. The Jews then in great multitudes went thither to re-build it, that they might there do sacrifice daily, as was in the Law appointed, but they were soon deterred from this attempt by an earthquake, not only casting down in the night what they built in the day, but also making the earth to vomit up the old foundation thitherto lying hid in the ground: So that now was first fully accomplished the threatening of our Lord, That a stone should not be left upon a stone, and their renewed hope of sacrificing here again was quite taken away. And if from hence we reckon putting to 1290, we shall come to 1653, or thereabouts. So that we may now upon very good ground very shortly expect somewhat to be done as touching the Jews conversion; and whereas he is said to be blessed that attaineth to 1335, if we adde this number of years to 1653, being 45. the total will amount to 1698, the very time before-spoken of: so that in 45 years after the first beginning of Romes overthrow, and of the conversion of all Israel, both they that live amongst Christians, and in remotest parts, and all other Nations that yet are Heathen, and know not Christ, shall be converted to the faith, and then shall be the time of the universal peace prophesied of Isa. 2. and ch. 11. before which nothing but wars, and Nations fighting against Nations, and some making intestine wars amongst themselves, is to be expected; and of these the two great eclipses of the Sun now at hand, and divers more, as one saith, after them to An. 1663, are the signs. Now that that Prophecy of Daniel is not to be restrained to the time when Antiochus his rage had an end put unto it, but belongs to that which shall be done about the end of the world, appears both by the rising out of the dust, spoken of Dan. 12.3. that is, the rising of the Jews, when the life of grace shall enter into them, otherwise called the Spirit, Ezek. 37, (for both as I take it set forth the same thing) and from Dan. 12.4,5. where it is said to be sealed up to the end, when knowledge shall be increased, that is, the knowledge of these things, which were as a book shut up and sealed in times past under the Old Testament, and a long time under the New, although revealed to inspired Apostles Paul and John, but not to many more, till of late, which was the cause that the ancient Doctors of the Church conjectured that the Antichrist should be one singular Person, and not a succession of proud superstitious men usurping all Authority in the Church of Christ, the contrary to which is now by many clearly known.

The Epistle Dedicatory.

Touching the state of the Church which then shall be, because it is said, The daily sacrifice shall cease till then, but then the Temple shall be built again more ample then ever before Ezek. 40.41, &c. and they shall have a Prince, Ezek. 45.7. c. 46.2. and sacrificing of a Lamb every morning, ver. 13, 14. it may be be conceived, that the Monarchy of the world shall not be so in the Saints hands, but that they shall have one Head and Prince to reign over them, and that in the Temple, which then shall be re-built, there shall daily be communions of the body and blood of the Lamb of God, Christ Jesus, which are set forth by the name of Sacrifices, because that hereby that all-sufficient Sacrifice is represented, and to the faithfull exhibited to be fed and feasted withall. There are also that gather the time, when these things shall be, and the Turkish Empire shall have an end put thereunto, from Rev. 19. 15. where it is said, The four Angels, who were bound at the river Euphrates, were loosed and prepared for an hour, a day, a moneth and a year, a day being put for a year, a moneth consisting of 31 dayes for so many years, a year of 336 dayes for so many more, which being put together, make 398, and these being added to 1300, when the Ottoman Empire of the Turks began, we come to 1698, as before, when the Turks shall be utterly destroyed, as hath been before said.
but

By all which it appears, that not the stars, but the holy Scriptures give us some light into the times, when these great and long expected things shall be brought to pass; with which I having now done, return to you again (my beloved Brethren) upon whom I would not that these phantastical self-conceited star-gazers, or other malevolently affected Coridons, should have their expectations of your being put down, fulfilled; it standing more with the piety of a religious Parliament a thousand times to put this cursing new-upstart company down, though fawning and adulatory towards them, then Gods Priests, that be διαβολικοι and αχαιοι, although opposite to them in some of their wayes, because it is said, Touch not mine anointed, and do my Prophets no harm: And again when Hosea would set forth wickedness come to the full, he saith, This people are as they that strive with the Priest; and again of the Tribe of Levi, of which the Priests were, Bless Lord his substance, and accept the work of his hands, smite thorow the loins of them that rise against him, and of them that hate him, that they rise no more. And that we for our parts may not bring this judgement upon us, nor any way be a cause of the peoples contemning our holy order, as now they do, and that not through default in some of us, Let us seriously consider, what may be the cause hereof, and whether it be not (I will not say scandalous viciousness in any kinde, or idleness, for the Church hath been of late well purged of such blots and spots) divisions amongst our selves into Presbyterians and Independents, or a judgement befallen us for turning Heralds of war, and Incendiaries hereunto of late, from Embassadours of peace, to which our Office alwayes binds us. For I fear, that our setting of others together by the ears hath brought this judgement of schisms and divisions amongst us. And to speak of the natural causes hereof, what can they else be but pride and an overweening conceit of our selves, an affectation of superiority Diotrephe-like, a sleighting of the precept bidding us to enquire after the old way, which is the good way, and a willingness to please the stricter sort of people discontented with Episcopal Government, as it stood in the Church of England? Therefore, and because that lord-like, and not Apostle-like Government was grievous to some of our selves also, we rashly gave all Episcopal Government for Antichristian, not doubting soon to finde out a better: but having gotten it down, O into what a maze or labyrinth of divers wayes are we brought, there being no possibility that I can see of agreeing about any! This, this is it chiefly that makes the Ministry in this Land contemptible, some going one way and some another, and that about no meaner things then the Lords-Supper, Lords Prayer, and the Lords Birth day, day, onward reverence in the publick service of God, private praying in Gods house, and the ordaining of Presbyters before they officiate. And how may we be again reconciled to think and speak the same things? Verily by no means, but by considering quid antiquissimum, id enim verissimum. How was the Church of God governed in the Apostles dayes by them and by some singular men, appointed to execute this Office for them in their absence, as Timothy and Titus, and all this by commission first had from the Lord? And to this must we endeavour to return, letting all the pontifical Government go, which was not introduced till 300 years after Christs birth, and since more corrupted. Then shall we have Unity and Honour again, but till then be in contempt and disgrace, we being then only a sweet odour, and acceptable every where, when as we are Brethren, so we live together in Unity, Ps. 133. 2 Cor. 2. 15. That the spirit of love and peace therefore would unite all our hearts in one, let us uncessantly pray, and that the Supreme Power upon earth, now by Gods providence ruling over us, may be bent, not by tolerating any schism or faction, or new way to hinder it, but unpartially enquiring after the old way, walk, and cause others so walk therein, to the great praise and glory of God, the vindicating of his Ministers from contempt, the stopping of the course of sin and error, and the more facilitating of their account at the great and dreadful day of judgement before him with whom there is no respect of persons.

A
 UPON THE
PROPHECIE

THE PREFACE.

Ho Isaiah was, and at what time he wrote, appears Chap. 1. He was the son of Amos, the brother of Azariah King of Judah, as it is commonly held, saith Calvin; wherefore he was of the blood royal. The time of his prophesying was in the reign of the same Azariah or Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz and Hezekiah, which Calvin reckoning to Jotham 16, to Ahaz 16, and to Hezekiah 29, sums up 61. But he laboured in prophesying longer, viz. in the dayes of Uzziah also, but how many years is uncertain, only Chap. 6. because he had a vision in the year that Uzziah died, it is certain that he prophesied in his time also that in Chap. 5. haply, as some conjecture ten years. That he continued after Hezekiah also it is generally agreed, because he was slain by Manasseh his son, that wicked Idolater by being sawn asunder, being so hated by him, because he was a true Prophet of God, that he was not spared from a most cruel death, although of his kindred, and that very near.

The Scope of his writing, as of all the Prophets, is to set forth true Doctrine according to the Law, whereupon their Prophecies be, as it were, Commentaries, and to inveigh against sin, whereby the Law is transgressed, and to comfort the penitent and reformed; and lastly to fore-tell the coming of Christ, and things pertaining to his Kingdom, and the consolations of the Gospel more plainly, whereas the Law figured out these things in Sacrifices and Ceremonies more obscurely. And in this point Isaiah excels all the rest of the Prophets, being therefore worthy to be called the Evangelical Prophet, as being herein more plain and full. He also prophesies against divers particular Countreys round about Judea, for the better understanding whereof, it is necessary, saith Luther, to know the scite of those Countreys, the knowledge whereof he briefly gives thus. Sodom, where was the dead sea, lay Eastward from Judea, beyond it Moab and Ammon; further East Babylon or Caldea, and beyond it Persia: Northward was Mount Libanus, and beyond it Syria and Damascus, the chief City thereof, beyond Syria, Assyria, and is more towards the East. Westward Philistia and Tyrus and Zidon, yet more West. Southward lay Egypt, the Red Sea, Ethiopia, Edom and Midian, of which Egypt declined more West. And for the understanding of the Prophecies the better, he greatly commends the knowledge and remembrance of the Histories set forth, 2 King. and 2 Chron. because it is adapted to them. For excellency of this Prophecy, it is generally preferred before any other, as containing in it all Rhetorick, Ethics and Theology, as Jerom saith. And whereas some make a question, whether the Prophets understood their own Prophecies, he derides them, because the holy Prophets were most wise men, being called Seers, and therefore were not used as instruments only to utter the secrets of God, but also to understand them, and to apply them to others. And to prove this further, he alledgeth that 1 Cor. 14. The spirit of the Prophets is subject to the Prophets.

Now although Isaiah be placed first of all the Prophets, yet it is to be understood, that Hosea was contemporary with him, because he uttered also his Prophecy in the time of Uzziah, Jotham, Abaz, and Hezekiah: yet because, Hos. 1. 2. it is said, The Lord spake first to Hosea; some gather, that he began before all the rest. Under the same King Uzziah also was Amos, and as Expositors agree, Joel, although his time be not noted, because as Junius saith, he is placed between Hosea and Amos, and there is nothing to intimate a different time, but the same, the matter agreeing so well to the time of Uzziah. The next three Obadiah, Jonah and Micha, are by some also made contemporaneous with the former, but Junius proves Jonah to have been more ancient than any of them, because he prophesied in the time of Amaziah, father of Uzziah, or before, seeing he is said to have fore-told, what victories Jeroboam should obtain, who began to reign over Israel, an. 15. of Amaziah; as is commemorated, 2 King. 14. 24. But whereas he placeth Obadiah long after as contemporary with Jeremy and Ezekiel; it is more probable, that he prophesied also in the time of Amaziah, before Jonah, because of the destruction of Edom, which was by Amaziah, before his overthrow received at the hands of Jeboahaz King of Israel. Micha prophesied in the time of Jotham, Abaz and Hezekiah. Nabum, as Junius thinks most probable, by the arguments somewhat before the Captivity of Israel by Tiglath Pileser King of Assyria, because he fore-tells the destruction of Nineveh, the chief City of Assyria for the comfort of the faithful in Israel against their miseries suffered at the Assyrians hands, but in Tiglath Pileser there is a mistaking, for it was by Salmanassar in the 12th of Abaz. Habakkuk prophesies about the same time, threatening, as Jeremiah, the coming of the Caldees, and lamenting it, or at the least at the end of Josiah his reign. Zephany in the dayes of Josiah. Haggai and Zechary after the return of the Jews from their Captivity in the time of Darius; And Malachi after the Temple built last of all others, reproving the abuses committed about the Temple and service of God. Ezekiel was of the same time with Jeremiah. And Daniel in the time of the Captivity unto the end of those seventy years. To take the Prophets therefore according to their times, 1. was Obadiah. 2. Jonah. 3. Hosea. 4. Isaiah. 5. Joel. 6. Amos. 7. Micha. 8. Nabum. 9. Habakkuk. 10. Jeremy. 11. Ezekiel. 12. Zephany. 13. Daniel. 14. Haggai. 15. Zechary. 16. Malachi. And the consideration of each ones time availeth not a little to the understanding of their Prophecies.

But to say somewhat more of Isaiah in particular. He was the son of Amos, brother to Amaziah, the father of Azariah, according to the Hebrews tradition, and Manasseh, as they say, was his daughters son, so that he was his grand-father, being at the time of his Martyrdom by Manasseh an hundred twenty six years old. And his Martyrdom as is generally held by all Expositors was by sawing asunder, whereunto that Heb 11. 37. Some were cut asunder, is applied. Some have held Isaiah to be the son of Amos the Prophet, as Epiphanius and Clemens Alexandrinus, but that Amos is written with Y for the first letter, and D for the last, this with N and S Amos. And his manner of writing sheweth, that he came not of a Cowherd, as Amos was, but of a royal Stock, being brought up at the Court, which commonly is eloquent and quaint in phrases. He is worthily placed first of the Prophets for his high birth, his excellency this way, and because in abundance of visions he exceeds all the rest, and had things more plainly revealed unto him. The cause why his grandchilde Manasseh put him to this cruel death, was his reproving his Idolatry, and calling him and his Princes, Princes of Sodom, and because he said, he saw the Lord, who is invisible, and threatned the rejection of the Jews, and vocation of the Gentiles, &c. as Jerom saith out of the Jews tradition. Of this Prophecie are two principal parts: 1. Commintory and sad, to Chap. 40. 2. Joyful and comfortable, from thence to the end of the Prophecie. In the first principal are five particulars. 1. Threatnings against the Jews for their great wickednesses against which he exclaims and prophesieth of their destruction by the Assyrians, by the Babylonians, and by the Romans, when rejecting Christ Jesus, they should be given over to blindness, to Chap. 7. 2. Prophecies touching Christ to come of a Virgin, and his Kingdom, to Chap. 13. 3. Burthens of Babylon, Philistia, Moab, Damascus, Ethiopia, Egypt, Idumea, Arabia, Judea and Tyre, to Chap. 24. 4. A Prophecie of the destruction of the world, of hell fire, and the glory of the faithful, and the destruction of the Kingdom of Leviathan, to Chap. 28. 5. A repetition of the judgements threatned against Israel and other particular Countreys, and the whole world mixedly, to Chap. 36. After which to the 40th is nothing but the History of Hezekiah and Sennacherib. The second principal part being a Prophecie of Christ and his Kingdom is full of Promises, Comforts and Exhortations; yet some objurgations and threatnings are mixed.

Chap. 1. 10.

CHAP. I.

THe Vision of Isaiah the son of Amos which he saw upon Judah and Jerusalem, in the dayes of Uzziah, Jotham, Abaz, Hezekiah, kings of Judah. Of what Amos he was the son, hath been already shewed: but the Hebrews have a rule, that when to any Prophets name, his fathers is added, it is to be understood, that his father was a Prophet also, and so they say, was the father of Isaiah, although not Amos the third of the small Prophets, but one of royal birth. From the names being expounded Isaiah, the salvation of God, Amos, fortitude, Judah, praise, Jerusalem, the vision of God, Uzziah, the strength of God, Jotham, perfection, Abaz, holding, Hezekiah, the Empire of the Lord: some raise here a mystical sense. But to let that pass, by Vision we are not to understand only what Isaiah saw with his bodily eyes, but as is common in the holy Scriptures, what he saw with the eyes of his understanding, or perceived by hearing with the ear; so the people are said to have seen the voice of the Lord. For whereas Vision sometime signifieth the act of the Seer, sometime the object represented to the sight, sometime any thing, to the knowledge whereof a man comes by revelation any way: here it is put in the last sense, and it is the Title of the whole Prophecie, for it is said, Which he saw in the dayes of Uzziah, Jotham; &c. and not of one part of the Prophecie only, Vision being put for Visions: and yet he meant not by giving his Prophecie this Title, to intimate a confused setting forth of things here, as if the Reader should not distinctly know, at what time he had each Vision, or in what Kings reign.

For from Chap. 1. to Chap. 6. the Visions in the time of Uzziah are set forth: from thence to Chap. 7. in the time of Jotham; from thence to Chap. 14-28. in the time of Abaz, and from thence to the end of the Prophecie, in the time of Hezekiah, as Cornel. a Lapide observes out of Jerom, and is confirmed, because there it is said, The year that Abaz died. The word ⁊ rendered [upon] is by the Septuagint rendered [against] and indeed it signifies either, but here it is best rendred [upon] because not only sad things against, but joyful things also are contained in this Vision. Judah set forth not only the Tribe of Judah, but that Kingdom containing Benjamin. Which he saw] although Isaiah had these Visions, and more properly he might have said, Which I saw] yet he rather speaks in the third person, for modesties sake. Whereas no other places are named, whereupon he saw these Visions, but Judah and Jerusalem, yet he prophesied against Edom, Ammon, Moab, &c. Also, it is, because Judah and Jerusalem were the Countreys, to which he chiefly prophesied.

Hear (O Heavens) and hearken (O Earth)

The Lord being about to lay open and tax the wickedness of his people, calls Heaven and Earth here to witness, how justly he doth it, and herein Isaiah followeth Moses, Deut. 32.1. By Heavens, saith Jerom, we may understand either the Angels in Heaven, and by the Earth men dwelling upon the Earth, or these very creatures without sense, being yet more ready to obey their Creator then the Jews, to their greater shame. And this last is to be preferred as most aggravating their wickedness; so Ambrose, God calls the elements to witness, to prove them that would not obey his voice. And Chrysostom, as the Prophet sent to Jeroboam, passing him over, speaks to the Altar, and Jeremiah to the Earth, O Earth, Earth, &c. So Isaiah to the Heavens so far remote, and the Earth so crasse and senseless, as if they would yet sooner hear, then men. Moses called Heaven and Earth to hear the charge given, Isaiah, to testify the great and intollerable neglect hereof, intimating, that they shall alwayes continue witnesses against the rebellious. And they are the rather called to witness, because from them men enjoy all sorts of blessings, and yet by idolatry most grossly abuse them in worshipping the Sunne, Moon and Stars, and four-footed Beasts, and Fowls, and creeping things upon the Earth, and therefore, and for other abominations they are often punishr, before they come to receive their last doom, the Heaven becoming as brasse, and the Earth as iron, and the Heavens at the passion of the Lord shewed themselves to be, as it were, affected with shame, the Sun hiding the face in darkness, and the Earth with trembling and fear, when it quaked at the acting of so monstrous a wickedness. And indeed, saith Calvin, the Heavens and Earth can hear Gods voice or command, as appears by their constant keeping of their course, as he willeth. That of Haimo [Hear, O Heavens] that is, ye which are spiritual and heavenly, and take the spiritual sense of this Prophecie, and Earth, that is, men of weaker understanding; the literal sense, I pass over as a conceit. I have nourished sons, and exalted them. Symmachus and Theodot. Filius genui, but the word is גדלתי I made them grow great. Those that I took for sons, yea for my first-born son, and by nourishing increased and promoted more then any other people, giving them such Laws as no other Nation had, and doing miraculously for them in Egypt, in the wilderness and Canaan, whereby they came to be in high estimation in all Countreys, over whom I set famous Kings, and amongst whom is my house, the Glory and Joy of all the Earth, even they have rebelled against me, or fallen from me אפסדו, that is, by falling from my worship to that of Idols. Lycargus, saith Musculus, amongst all his Laws, made none against the ungrateful, because that was thought to be a thing so prodigious, as not to be committed by man. Jerom and Rupert. take this as spoken against the Jews for despising Christ, rendering it, They have despised me, but it is better understood by others of the Jews then, though applicable to such as cumulated against Christ, and all wicked ones all the world over, who enjoying means and worldly blessings, requite God the giver with defection from his wayes, and rebellion.

The Ox knoweth his owner, and the Asse his masters crib, &c.] To aggravate the rebellion of Israel the more, he makes a comparison, not from a Dog, that that is more witty, who for a little food defends his masters house, but from an Ox that ploweth, and an Asse that carrieth burthens, being the most stupid and dullest of all others, yet they are called jumenta, & juvando, because they help man that feeds them. The Ox was a clean beast, figuring out the Jew, the Asse unclean figuring out the Gentile, wherefore it was forbidden to plow with an Ox and Asse together, but whether a comparison be made betwixt them, and their own type, or the type of the Gentile, they must needs be every way condemned so, as that they might be ashamed. He might, saith Calvin, have argued from the Gentiles, but doth it rather from brute beasts, the more to aggravate their sin, especially they being in nature nearer to Angels, and made after Gods own Image. And not only the Ox and Asse, but other earthly creatures condemn wicked men in that they serve those that keep them, are most loving to their young, and eat and drink not to surfeiting, but to satiety, whereas these cast off the yoke of God, mothers oft times make away their own young, and they commonly drink to drunkenness, and eat to surfeiting. For owner, Hebr. is Possessour; but every possessor of the Ox is not meant; for some buy and possess them only for slaughter, but the possessor that works and feeds, and brings them up, although for his own benefit, not theirs, he feeds them, and counts them but as beasts, and presseth them with burthens, but God makes men of servants children, works them for their own good and brings them to high dignity. But the Ox knows not his owner any more then another man, and what praise is it for the Asse to know the crib, where he is continually fed? Sol. The comparison stands in this, the Asse knows what is good for him, but they did not, and the Ox would be ruled, and labour for his master, but they not. Yet Israel hath not known, my people hath not understood. He saith not, Hath not known me, but not known, what is good for himself, as if more brutish, and void of understanding, and yet Israel, one prevailing with God, and the people by me chosen from amongst all others, which sheweth the greater ingratitude. Popish writers, as Leo Castrius writing upon this, tell a tale of the Ox and the Asse fed at the manger where Christ being an Infant was laid, doing reverence on either side unto him. But forso much as if it had been so, it had been worth the recording by an Evangelist; Calvin well calls it an Asinine invention. Yet of other beasts gratitude strange things are written, as by Aul. Gellius of a Lion, unto which one Androchus a Dacian was cast, but the Lion came fauning to him to the admiration of all the beholders. Then he being asked the reason, said, That when he fled from his Master, he went into a Cave, into which this Lion entring lame of one foot, he pluckt out a thorn and healed it, for which the Lion fed him there with the best flesh he could get for three years. At length he being weary of that kinde of life, came away and was taken and cast to the same Lion. Whereupon he was pardoned, and having the said Lion given him, led it about, and so lived a long time. And of a Dragon by Democritus, which being brought up by one, was, when it waxed great, put out into the wilderness, and when the man travelling that way fell into the hands of thieves, the Dragon hearing his voice came and rescued him. And of a Panther, whose young ones were fallen into a pit, and could not be gotten out, till a man travelling by the Panther, gently pulled him to the pits side, and he help out the young, then the Panther went with him, till he was past all danger of other wilde beasts to defend him. And of an Asp nourished up by one till she had young, and one of the young by biting one of the mans children one day killed it, but the old one in revenge fell upon that and kild it.

Woe to the sinfull Nation, the people laden with iniquity, to the seed of evil ones, wicked children. Before he said, I have brought up sons, but now he calls them wicked sons, and seed of the wicked, who had thus corrupted themselves, but not so made of God: For wicked sons, some render it degenerating, some corrupting, implying such, as endeavoured to do all the wickedness that they could, and to draw others to it also. Divers words are used here, saith one, setting forth the same thing to stirre up the greater indignation: וְיָ, translated Woe, may also be rendred, Oh, intimating grief in the Lord, who makes this complaint, They have forsaken the Lord, and lightly regarded, &c. This they did, when they turned from God to Idols. For lightly regarded, the Septuagint have, mado angry, as the word נָעַם here used in Piel signifieth. Here are five degrees of sinning set forth. 1. Simple sinning, Woe to the sinful Nation. 2. Sinning so much as to be herewith pressed down to the ground. 3. Generation after Generation, to the seed of evil ones. 4. Endeavouring to corrupt others בְּנֵי מַלְשֵׁי חַיִּים, Banim malschishim, Children cutting off, or corrupting. 5. Doing direct injury to the divine Majesty by Idolatry, and blasphemy against Christ Jesus.

Why should ye be smitten any more, be made to adde transgression? A double sense is here given, 1. In what part should ye be smitten? because there is no part now unsmitten, not because no one person amongst them was free, but the whole state being considered as a body, the Princes as the head, the Priests as the heart, the common people as the feet, were smitten. 2. To what end should I smite? as speaking to a people incorrigible, and therefore to be given over, as desperate, to a reprobate sense. For this is the end, of Gods smiting, to reform from sin. And both these senses the words מִן הָרֶגֶל וְעַד הָרֹאשׁ will bear. The whole heart is faint, and the whole heart heavy. Following the former Metaphor, by the head heavy, the Princes wickedness is set forth, and by the heart, the wickedness of the Priests and wise men of the Land, who are set to be guides unto others.

From the sole of the foot to the head, there is no soundness, but wound, bluness, and swelling sore. Some by wound understand sin in the heart, by bluness, it breaking out in word, by swelling sore, it breaking out in act. Others more probably, because wounds appear, manifest wickedness thereby, and because livor or rancour is inward, envy lurking in the heart, and pride to defend sin by the swelling sore. They are not pressed out, nor bound up, nor mollified with oil. These words, saith Jerom, are used to set forth a most desperate condition, such as was not the state of the Jews by the Babylonish Captivity, for from this they were restored again, and had Princes of their own to rule over them, but when the City was destroyed by Titus, and so lay waste for ever afterwards. Calvin understands all of ourward miseries. But if from outward miseries we pass on to the most miserable estate of the soul, the exposition will be more full. These swelling sores were not pressed for the matter stuff to run out, nor wounds bound up, that they might heal, nor the parts black and blue annointed with oil. They would not by any means suffer themselves to be healed of their sins, and therefore their outward evil and miserable estate continueth alwaies.

Your Land is wasted, your Cities burnt with fire, strangers devour your Land before your face, and it is wasted after, or according to the destruction of strangers. Here in other words the same misery is further expressed, which was fulfilled when the Caldeans burnt the City, and wasted all things, and it is compared to a destruction made by strangers, that is, far dwellers, who spare nothing for future use, but utterly ruine all things, and it is spoken in the Preter tense, when it was yet to come, because it should most certainly be thus.

The Daughter of Zion is left as a tent in a vineyard, as a cottage in a cucumber ground. By the daughter of Zion understand Jerusalem, which stood at the foot of the hill of Zion, as a daughter comes out from between the feet, being also cherished and tendered by God, as his daughter. But now desolation is threatned to her, as if he had said, as after the vintage gathered, and the cucumbers, the Husbandmen pull down their tents set up before to shelter and shadow them, whilst they tended upon their fruits growing there, and going away leave nothing, but a mention of some tents standing; so shall it be with Jerusalem, and this the next words plainly expresse, As a City destroyed it shall be made as base and contemptible as such a ruined cottage, or both, in the one of which the Husbandman lodged in the night, from whence the word מִן־בֵּית is taken, as a lodging place; and in the other sheltered himself in the day from the Sun and rain during the time of his working about his vineyard, being now as a thing of no use any more; so likewise Jerom.

If the Lord had not left us a remnant, as it were a very little, we had been as Sodom. Still he goeth on to speak of the miseries to come both by the Caldeans, and afterwards by the Romans, whereby from infinite multitudes, if by Gods singular providence some had not been saved out of that burning, they had been all utterly consumed, as the Sodomites. Lyra expounds these few left, of those who with Zerubbabel and Jesus the son of Iosidech, yet remaining returned out of Captivity from Babylon, but Sabons holding that the Prophet here suddenly passeth to Evangelical things, as his manner also elsewhere is, for so S<sup>t</sup> Paul citeth this place, expounds this remnant of believers, whereof if there had not been some amongst the Jews, the whole Nation had utterly perished, never to be repaired again. And this he borrows from Ierom, who will not have it understood of the destruction by the Caldeans, but by the Romans. For the Lord of Sabaoth, the Septuagint render, Dominus virtutum, or Dominus omnipotens, to be understood of the Son as well as of the Father, because he hath all power.

Hear the word of the Lord (ye Princes of Sodom, &c.) This, saith Ierom, is to the Scribes and Pharisees, who rejected Christ, and set light by him, as the Sodomites did by Lot, professing to have no King but Cesar: and Sabons, Therefore he set them forth by this name, because they were most like to the Sodomites in sinning, being most open and impudent in it.

For what is the multitude of your Sacrifices to me, &c. There is a passage like this, Psal. 50.8.9. whereby God sheweth a light account of their Sacrifices: 1. Because they were never ordained, but to keep them from sacrificing to Idols, as Ierom saith: 2. Coming from them so wicked, they were abominable: 3. Because they thought hereby to please God, how wickedly so ever they lived: 4. Because they were appointed only for signification, as being types of the only expiating Sacrifice, Christ Jesus, and of praise and thanksgiving proceeding from a pure heart: 5. To intimate that there should be an end put to such sacrificing under the Gospel, nothing but praise, and prayer, and obedience being now the Sacrifices of Gods people.

When ye come to appear before my face, who required this at your hands? &c. All this Ierom, and some other Ancients understand as spoken of the Evangelical times, when an end was put to all carnal sacrificing by the death of Christ. For even after the Captivity ended, the Temple was again re-edified and Sacrifices offered, but after the destruction of the Temple in the time of the Gospel, not: men trod no more then in the Courts of Gods house, neither shall to the end of the world. But the sense will be good, if it be taken as spoken of those times, for God never required sacrificing as the principal part of his service, neither it, or alms, or judgement coming from the wicked, who go on still impenitently in their sins, from whom neither ceremonial nor moral duty coming is acceptable, sith the person from whom, is displeasing to God.

Bring no more Sacrifices in vain, Incense is abomination, &c. And if Sacrifices in the wicked were vain or lying Sacrifices, as the Vulgar Latine renders it, how blinde are they that will not acknowledge their worship by mans invention to be vain much more? So Calvin. The word rendered Sacrifices, is זֶבַח a meat Offering, וְעֹלָה it is עֹלָה, Sacrifices, wherein the fat only was burnt, and חֹלֶבֶת Holocausts, or whole burnt Sacrifices; and these were the three kinds of Sacrifices preſented in the Law, but all now for wickedness loathed. And with incense a sweet perfume was daily made in the Temple, but now it smelt abominably. Their Festivals and Sabbaths also were insufferable, whether new Moons, Passeeover, Pentecost, or feast of Tabernacles, or weekly Sabbaths, which were commanded not only in the ceremonial, but also in the moral Law, because although the seventh day from the Creation be ceremonial, yet keeping a seventh day, as a Sabbath, is moral and perpetual, viz. to praise God for a greater work, viz. the Redemption of man, from which Christ rested, when he had finisht it upon the Cross by dying for us, and so bearing all the wrath due to us for our sins, a burthen importable.

My soul hateth your new Moons and solemn Assemblies, &c. Because they were wicked that kept them, God hated them, and made account of them, as an intollerable burthen. Therefore much more is he grieved at the holydayes of Christians, which he never prescribed, but did spring out of a superstitious observance towards the Apostles, especially being turned into days of more licentiousness then any other dayes of the week, as if the devil had set them up for his own ends, so much advantage makes he of them to prey upon men.

When ye shall stretch out your hands I will hide my eyes from you, &c. Not only Sacrifices and Solemnities, but most earnest and frequent prayers are rejected, when they come from the wicked, because stretching out or lifting up of hands set forth prayers, this being the gesture in prayer appointed, Because your hands are full of blood ] That is, ye are grossly wicked. For blood sets forth not only murther, cruelty, rapine and oppression more properly, but also in a more large sense, all gross sins, as Hos. 4. 2. Blood toucheth blood, according to divers Ancients, one gross sin is heaped up upon another. And that not unaptly, 1. Because blood of murther is abominable. 2. The eating of blood amongst all the Ancients. 3. The blood of the menstruous woman. The servants of God used to stretch out their hands in prayer, saith Calvin; hereby as by an outward sign, shewing from whence they sought for help, viz. from God in Heaven, thus stretching out themselves as much towards Heaven as they can. And it is a thing taught by nature in misery, to stretch out the hands to him that can help. Wherefore hereby we are to shew our faith in God in Heaven, when we pray to him. Cyprian and Jerom, &c. expound this, Your hands are full of blood, of the blood of the Prophets, and of Christ, whom he foresaw by the Spirit, that they should crucifie. For this indeed was the blood that cried most against them, and all blood shed crieth, whether it be by actual murther, or by taking away through oppression or injustice, that which should support life, wherefore this is intimated, vers. 17. to be the blood here cried out upon, as making prayer frustrate.

Wash you, make you clean, &c. Having censured as nought-worth all their pains and cost about Gods worship in outward things, now he teacheth, how he may be served acceptably, viz. by ceasing from those foul sins, for so they should wash off the blood upon their hands, and become clean and fit to worship God by sacrificing and praying to him.

Learn to do well, seek judgement, &c. Here some good works are mentioned for examples sake, intimating all others. Jerom by washing understands Baptism under the Gospel commanded, as pleasing God better then all Sacrifices: but withall evil must be put away, and good done, as also John Baptist there prescribeth.

Come and let us reason together: Jerom, Come and reprove me; that is, if ye do thus, speak openly against me, if I forgive not your sins, if of a scarlet colour I make them not white, that is, of most foul clean, as when a bloody cloth is thorowly washed, reprove me of falshood, levity and inconstancy. And the word נִסְּחָה of which the word here used cometh, doth signifie to argue or reprove. But by the Septuagint, Vatablus, Tremellius, and others, the word נִסְּחָה is rendred, Let us dispute or reason together, as men that be at controversie; and if ye do thus, and I clear you not, reprove me: otherwise acknowledge that ye are by me both charged and punished justly, and indeed the word is of that Tense, which amongst the Hebrews hath the force of the Imperative, viz. of the second future, the first person plural. God condescends herein unto his people, that they should argue with him as one man with another, being willing to have it judged against him if he did not justly.

If ye be willing and hear, ye shall eat the good things of the Land. Because he had before threatened vers. 7. that strangers should devour their Land for their disobedience; now he promiseth the contrary, if they would incline their mindes to hear and obey: whereby, saith Calvin, is not intimated, that man hath free-will to good, for this is Gods singular grace, but that when he doth evil, he is not hereto impelled, but doth it of his own will. Hieronym. contrariwise, God hereby confirms unto man the liberty of his will, that he may as he is willing, or will not, attain the reward: or be destroyed, for so it followeth, If ye will not, the sword shall devour you. Yet in his Epistles he writes against the liberty of mans will maintained by Pelagius, so that this liberty of will must needs be understood of mans will holpen by grace, and not by any natural strength thereof, and this help of grace is offered in the Word to all hearers, in some few, who do what they can, taking effect, in others not, and so they are hardened. Now although that which man can do of himself, is nothing, yet if it be wanting, and he co-operates not, when grace is offered, the course of all grace is in him dammed up. A man indeed in corruption is dead, yet he is not in all things like the dead; but in that he cannot of himself do ought to his own reviving, any more then one naturally dead: for there is in such some light of nature, and a conscience of good and evil, which is not in the dead, wherefore he in his quickning is not a meer patient, as the naturally dead, but when grace is offered, acts his part together with it, yet no thanks to his will, but all to grace, because without it his act is nothing, as a childe is not in lifting a weight far beyond his strength at the Fathers command, and by his help.

But if ye will not, the sword shall devour you. That is, saith Ierom, who will have it a Prophecie of the Evangelical times; the Army of the Romans shall destroy you, but the Caldeans sword first did it.

How is the faithful City become an harlot, judgement filled her, righteousness lodged in her, but now murderers. This is also by Ierom understood of the time when Christ was by the Jews murdered; and for righteousness, he saith, and that rightly, is P<sup>er</sup> Righteous, the Lord being meant, who lodged many nights there. But it was also fulfilled in the time of Ahaz, when Idolatry was set up: for spiritual fornication by going from one God unto more, makes an harlot as well as corporeal. It was the faithful City, because the true Faith was there taught, and the only true God was there served aright, and there were many godly persons dwelling in it. For justice lodged there; the Septuagint have it, In her justice slept or rested, to shew, that it was constantly executed, judges uprightly doing their office to the encouraging of the good, and the terrifying of the evil, as Iehoshaphat is said to have appointed Judges in every City, and both in his time, of Asa and David, Ierusalem was famous for her fidelity towards God. The faithful City she is called, because faithful, as to an husband a wife, abhorring from all other wayes of divine worship besides those which he hath prescribed in his Word as adulterine, for the Church is the Spouse of God. And if Ierusalem so famous for the faith fell thus foully, why not the Church of Rome? against that, which they commonly object, the faith of the Church of Rome was famous throughout the world. The word translated Harlot, signifieth an Hostice, who receiveth into her Inn all comers, for so in Ierusalem the evil and corrupt manners of all wicked Nations about were received, idolatry, fraud, oppression, hatred, injustice and bloodshed. When Piety and true

Thy ſilver is turned into drofs, thy wine is mixt with water. By ſilver, ſaith Jerom, underſtand pure teaching, for this is the word, which is more pure then ſilver, tried in the fire ſeven times; the word tranſlated drofs is the ruſt of ſilver, or the ſordes ariſing upon the trying thereof, then which nothing is baſer. Wine is mixt with water when the Word is not taught to reprove ſin, but handled ſo, as that the hearers may be pleaſed. The Word was like- wiſe mixt with water by the Pharifees, when the Law was corrupted by mens traditions through mingling therewith; and likewise by hereticks, who under pretence of the Word, teach their own, corrupting of it, they turn wine into water, contrary to Chriſt, who turned water into wine. The Law was pure and unmixt, when delivered and taught by Moſes, but ſince thus groſſly corrupted. Of the Word ſet forth by wine, ſee Prov. 9.5. Some by ſilver underſtand faithfullneſs to God; by wine, fervency to do Juſtice, according to the two things before complained of, The faithful City becoming an harlot, and for Juſtice lodging there, murtherers: ſilver then is turned into drofs when it is degenerated to Idolatry, and wine mixt with water, when this fervour to juſtice into all manner of injuſtice, and wrong and diſſoluteneſs in all wickedneſs. Others by ſilver underſtand men, that are pure Teachers, as Plato ſometimes taught, That the wiſe had gold in their hearts, men of good common underſtanding, ſilver; others braſs or iron. Musculus mentioneth a little underſtanding, that their ſilver and wine were deceitfull, but concludeth the metaphorical. Calvin, becauſe ſilver drofs looks like ſilver, and wine mixt with water like wine, takes it for a taxing of hypocrites, who ſeem to be godly: let the Reader take it either this, or any of the three wayes before mentioned, for they come all to one.

Thy Princes are perverſe and companions of thieves, &c. Jerom according to his manner applying this to Chriſts time, ſaith, That the Scribes and Pharifees were theſe Princes; and upon Chap. 27. the Judge hears the thief, and condemns him; the Judge is a thief giving ſentence againſt himſelf in another. They love gifts, he ſaith not, they take gifts, for this they may do for their need, but they count him not a friend who giveth not to them, looking not to the mouth, but to the hand, neither count they them Saints, by whom ſomething comes not in to the filling of their pouches. They follow retributions, Symmachus renders it viciffitudes; whereupon Jerom expounds it, rendering evil for evil; the word is נִסְיוֹן in Cal. ſignifying to be perfect, in Piel, to retribute. Hereby therefore is meant, that they would do nothing for any man by judging for him, but as he bribed them, for good done, gave them of his goods, and for ſuch retribution they would judge an evil cauſe to be good. For this cauſe the orphan and widow, who were poor, from whom no ſuch retributions could be expected, went without Juſtice, they cared not for judging their cauſe, but they were put off from time to time. The firſt words, Thy Princes are perverſe, Hebr. There is a paranomaſie in them, Saric, Sorrerim, ſignifying, Recedentes or perverſi, ſo ſaith Calvin, Episcopi may be called Episcoti, vel apoſcopi. Cardinales carnales, vel carpi- nales, and we may call Canonicos cenonicos, Prapoſitos prapoſteros, becauſe they are nothing leſs then that which they pretend to be, they are overſeers, but in darkneſs, or erring from the mark, carnal or carpet-men, &c. For ha- ting gifts, ſee Exod. 18. 21. Chap. 23. 8. Ifa. 33. 15. Bribes, ſaith P. us serve in the liberty of Justice. Which is not pictured by the Throne of Jupiter, as a certain flatterer once told Alexander, when he was so full of sorrow for killing Clitus his friend, viz. to shew, That whatsoever the King or Jupiter wils is Justice, but that the King should be subject to Justice, as Bias sometime said, that he was truly a Prince, that made himself first subject to the Laws, and Justinian, Principis digna vox, se subditum legibus profiteri, because the Law is the rule of Justice, and where this is not kept, all things are full of tumult, which threatens destruction to the Prince himself.

Therefore saith the Lord, &c. I will comfort me of mine enemies, &c. He beginneeth with this word וְיִנְחָם which some will have to be an interjection of rejoycing, because he speaks of being comforted, when he took revenge, as Ezek. 5. 13. and Deut. 28. he saith, As I rejoyced over them to do them good, so will I rejoyce to bring evil upon them: But it is properly of one grieving, and hereby is shewed, That the Lord punisheth unwillingly: he grieved when he must destroy Jerusalem, and wept over it, as a Physician grieves for his Patient, when he must cut or use other violence to him to his greater danger.
Mans destruction then is not a thing that God delights in, but grieveth for.
In saying therefore, I will comfort me, he speaks after the manner of men, who when they can be revenged upon such as do them wrong, take some comfort in it, yet as a father correcting his childe doth it grievously, which grief notwithstanding it is a comfort to think of the good, which may redound to his childe hereby; so the Lord out of his compassion grieveth when he is forced to judge, but for his Justice hereby glorified he rejoyceth: וְיִנְחָם therefore signifieth either heu dolentis, or ab exultantis. Calvin hence rightly notes, That unjust Judges, and such as wrong the helpless are Gods enemies, and he will proceed against them accordingly. He grieves, that by no other means the City will be reformed, and yet it is a comfort to him to think of the reformation thereof by any means, even by severe judgements, and therefore of this it is prophesied to the end of the Chapter, for which this is made the second part.

I will turn my hand upon thee, and will purge thy dross as Water. Vatablus renders it, as sope, the word is כֹּר signifying a cistern, wherein is water to purge and wash withall, and sope doth not properly serve to purge the rust of silver, and I will take away all thy pewter, a * Metaphor taken from those that try metals in the fire purging from precious silver all dross and pewter.
The meaning is, they were of silver turned into dross, but he by his judgements would make them of drossie and pewter, silver men and women again, that is, of vicious, virtuous. But as Jerom saith, hereby great sufferings, as by fire, are first intimated, so Malachi saith, He will sit down as a refiner to purge them, but in the Gospel another similitude is used, He will thoroughly purge his floor. That we may not be grieved at Gods judgements upon his Church out of measure, but with comfort expect the issue, the Church more purified and purged, and in the warts and miseries hereby suffered tending to this, look at Gods hand, of which the Prophet, I will turn my hand upon thee, for otherwise men could do nothing.

And I will restore thy Judges as in the beginning, &c. That is, saith Jerom, such as thou hadst at the first; Moses and Ioshuah, and after them David, and other godly Kings, which according to the Hebrews was fulfilled, when after the Captivity Zerubbabel, Jehoshuah, Ezra and Nehemiah were set over them, but he rather refers it to the time of the Gospel, when of Christians godly Rulers were set over the Church, at what time thou shalt be called, Civitas justitia, the just and faithful City, for the Church now consisting of Jews and Gentiles is set forth by a City set upon an hill. It may well be referred to both, and the clause answers to vers. 21. where it was complained, that the faithful City was become an harlot, but now it should come to have the name of the faithful City again, and the City of the just one, as the word Tzelak properly signifies, that is, of Christ who taught there, and kept many feasts there. Or Faithfulness setteth forth piety prescribed in the first Table, Righteousness, just dealing with men prescribed in the second. Luther notes from hence, when God will bless a Commonwealth he sets up good Magistrates, but when he will punish, evil ones and corrupt, for in them is the beginning of blessedness or misery, the people being most commonly as they are. Musculus commemorating that Exposition, whereby it is said, that the meaning here is, they should not have Kings any more, but such Judges and Councillors, which are all one, as Moses, Joshua, Barak, Gideon, &c. viz. Zerubbabel, Ezra, Nehemiah and the Maccabees, holdeth rather, that such Judges as David, Solomon and Jehoshaphat are meant, because in the time of the former Judges Jerusalem was not the faithful City, but then first began to be famous, when David was King, and brought the Ark thither, and set up the holy worship and service of God there. This, I confess, is a seeming exception to those that take this as a Prophecie of the alteration of Kings into Judges again. But because that for Kings they had then Judges, and good Judges or Princes, I cannot but approve well of that Exposition, and then these words, As in the beginning, have reference not so much to the City consisting of houses and buildings, as to the people inhabiting there, that is, the Jewish Nation, who should be governed as at the very first, before that ever they inhabited that City, by righteous Judges.

Sion shall be redeemed in judgement, and they that shall be brought back to it in justice, Heb. and her converts in justice. These words are spoken, that if it should be doubted, how so great a work shall be wrought, as was before spoken of, it might be understood by the power of him that judgeth righteously. For although in mans reason it appeared not, how this blessed change could be made, yet God, to whom nothing is impossible, could do it, and his justice could not but do it in regard of his gracious Promises made to his people. He speaks thus, saith Calvin, to draw mens mindes from any thing in themselves to God, in whom alone all their righteousness lieth. Musculus either so, or they that shall be brought out of Captivity shall be such, viz. faithfull and righteous, according to Jerom, not all, but a remnant, which shall be righteous, shall be brought back, the rest being destroyed, as the next words do declare. And then, Shall be redeemed in judgement, is as one saith, not rashly, but these being chosen out, and brought back, which be righteous. Some think judgement to have reference to the great judgement of the seventy years Captivity, as if it had been said, being first judged temporally. Lastly some refer this to the redemption made by Christ of a Church, consisting both of Jews and Gentiles, in saving whom it was judicially proceeded, Christ satisfying for their sins, and because the devil, who had before power over them, had abused it to the murdering of the Lord of life, all power over them was now taken from him. The next words do plainly shew, because he saith, The rest shall be destroyed, that it is literally to be taken, as Jerom expounds it, and mystically to be referred to the redeemed by Christ. And all this must be done out of Justice for his promise sake, which the just God cannot but make good.

Musculus.

But a destruction shall be made of transgressours and sinners together, &c. This is added, lest the wicked should lay hold of the Promise before-going, because such are alwayes mixed with the godly, although they cloke their wickedness by hypocrisie: for the righteous being delivered, they shall be destroyed, and utterly perish; God will single them out in his due time, and they shall not escape. Here are two sorts of sinners threatned, the more notorious and the less, Scelesti & peccatores, as in the vulgar Latine; so that whether they be noted sinners, or go on in sin more closely, they shall not escape perdition. They that fall from God shall be consumed. They fall from God, saith Musculus, who go from his profession or communion of his Church, and their punishment shall be to be consumed by poverty, and misery, and want, as many of the Jews were.

For

For they shall be ashamed of the Oaks which ye have desired, &c. By Trees and Groves here spoken of, their false wayes of worship are to be understood, their Idolatries in such places committed, whereby they hoped to have been holpen, but when they should see that in stead of help, destruction was hereby brought unto them, they should be much confounded. And he calls them the Oaks that they had desired with all earnestness, to intimate how eagerly Idolaters and superstitious persons are bent to their own way. Because men delight in green Trees and pleasant Gardens, they thought that God was likewise affected, and being by this conceit blinded, none could stay them from running to such places; The vulgar Latine for Trees have it Idols; but the word signifieth either Oaks or Gods, coming from strength, and Oaks are robora. And he calls them [The Gardens which they had chosen] to shew, that these were no places by God appointed, but of their own devising, whereas indeed all our worshipping of God should be regulated by his will revealed in his Word, all other devices are as the Gardens, which the Jews chose, even an abomination. For God appointed them sacrificing upon one Altar, only to exercise their obedience, and to teach, That Obedience is better then Sacrifice, and that all humane inventions introduced into his worship are base and vile.

And ye shall be as an Oak, whose leaves are fallen, and as a Garden without water. This is spoken in allusion to that which was said, vers. 29. it being meant that they should be deprived of all their wealth, which is as leaves, for so much as they bear no fruit, and leaves are upon Trees to comfort the fruit and to shelter it in some part, and to adorn the Tree. And as a Garden without water withereth, and beares no herbs nor flowers, so should their estate be withering and consuming, as was before said. And he passeth from the third person to the second, to shew, that this judgement was not far, as being to come upon them, not by the Romans, but by the Babylonians, because now they were so much tainted with Idolatry, but not afterwards, when the Romans destroyed them, for they were then clear from this sin.

And all your strength shall be as tow, and the work thereof as a spark. As tow, saith Jerom following Symmachus, as the refuse of tow, which a little fire soon consumes, he meaneth, that the strength of Idolaters shall be brought to nothing, in the day when God shall judge them; for it shall easily be destroyed with all their pride, as an imbecil and weak thing, and that by the work thereof, that is, the Idols, which they made, and thought they did mightily in making them, for this very thing should prove by Gods just judgement to them, as a spark to the base frothy gear going out of tow when it is dressed, utterly to consume them, none being able to help against it. Some by their strength understand their Idols, which they thought most mighty to protect them; as God is called, The strength of Israel, but from all their supposed strength, when they work to any wicked thing, shall come no help, but a spark to consume both themselves, and their servitours. But if we render the word work the maker thereof, as may be and is by many rendered as well as the work, then the setter up of Idols to himself is meant, from this his wicked act shall come a fire to consume both himself and them. And in saying, None shall be able to quench it, he sheweth, That the wrath of God shall burn everlastingly against the wicked, as is further expressed Chap. 30. and Chap. 66.

The word which Isaiah the son of Amoz saw upon Judah and Jerusalem. He began the former Chapter thus, The Vision of Isaiah, which he saw, here, The word which he saw, because there he threatned the Jews, but here being to speak comfort both to Gentiles and Jews, he begins with the Author thereof; the Word or Son of God, saith Jerom, which was in the beginning; and this comfort cohereth with that spoken of, Ch. 1. 26, 27. being added for further confirmation and explanation. But yet comforts are here so uttered, as that threatnings also follow, as in Chap. 1. comforts followed after threatnings: the word is also put for the thing in many places, and so Musculus takes it here, the first is more acute.

And it shall be in the last dayes, that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be set upon the top of the mountains, &c. This is not literally to be understood, as some Rabbins would have it, inferring hence, That the Messiah is not yet come; sith no such miracle hath been hitherto wrought of elevating Mount Zion. But forsomuch as Daniel speaks of a stone falling from a Mountain without hands, which grew to a great Mountain, and filled the Earth, which Mountain did set forth Christ to come; rejecting the literal sense, as absurd, it is to be held that this mountain is set up above all Mountains, when Christ coming into the world was magnified above Moses, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and above all hills, when above other Prophets and Saints, and famous Martyrs. For upon him as upon a Rock or Mountain is the Church of the Lord built, it is as a City set upon an hill*. And all Nations shall flow to it, v. 3. And much people shall come to it. By Nations the Gentiles being understood, and by people the Jews, it is here shewed, that the Gentiles should more readily imbrace the Gospel, and the Jews more slowly. The time when, should be in the last dayes; of which Jacob dying said to his sons, I will tell you what shall come in the last dayes; and then speaking of Judah, prophesied of Christ, The Scepter shall not depart, &c. And 1 John 2. 18. These are the last times. Vatablus saith, That Zion was made thus famous, when they returning out of Captivity built the Temple there again, but as Musculus well noteeth, this was not so, because that Temple was not comparable to the Temple formerly built by Solomon; but the elevation of this Mountain lay in the glorious Gospel of Christ, which went out from thence. Whereas all Nations, it is said, shall flow to it, this is contrary to the nature of waters, and this Metaphor intimates a Miracle, mens hearts set upon the world lifted up to this high Mountain, as if waters should be made runne up an hill: and the word flowing is used to shew their swift coming, and their voluntary coming, without any compulsion.

And they shall say, Let us ascend up to the Mountain of the Lord, &c. Believers shall not onely come willingly, but also stirre up others to ascend to this Mountain, Christ and his Church, by imbracing the same faith, and turning by repentance from all their sins, and the word is varied, To the house of the God of Jacob: alluding to the name Bethel, where Jacob lay and had his vision. The Jews object, That this is not fulfilled in us Christians, because we go not to Jerusalem, but when we come to Christ, and to any Oratory dedicated to his worship, we go to Bethel, that is, Gods house. And the same Church is also in the new Testament often called, The Kingdom of Heaven, because of the extent of it, saith Bernard, being extended as heaven from East to West in the universality thereof, the Sunne thereof being Charity, the Moon Faith, the morning Starre Hope, and all the rest of the Stars other Virtues, or the Saints in the Church shining in Virtue. So that the house to which Christ and his Apostles would bring us, is none other but that which was figured out by Bethel, the house of the Lord, being the same now, and then, and alwayes, that is, The Congregation of the faithfull: And he will teach us his wayes, and we shall walk in his paths. The truly faithful are not content to walk in the right way themselves only, but invite others to do the like, and to joyn themselves to the Church of Christ by believing, which is to go up to the house of the God of Jacob*. As if they had said, We have been hitherto taught in the wayes either of Moses, or of Plato, or other Philosophers, who have taught the way of virtue and endeavoured thus to bring to happiness, but they have onely endeavoured it; now let us go to the Lord Jesus, who will both teach us and streng-strengthen us to walk in the paths tending to happiness, and finally bring us unto it; for this is meant, when he saith, He will teach us his ways, and we shall walk in his paths *: for the Law shall go out of Zion, that is, the Law, not concerning one Nation of the Jews, but the new Evangelical saving Law given to all Nations, whereby they may live, is first taught at the Temple in Zion, and from thence is carried abroad into all Countreys by Christs Apostles and Ministers, according to that Commission, Go, teach all Nations baptizing them in the Name, &c. The Law came once out of Sinai, now out of Zion, to intimate a new kinde of Law, and therefore the abrogation of the old, which stood in figures and rights, it being yet for substance the same, but coming forth in another habit, that being put off. And least any man should think, that a continuation of the same Law is meant, because the word [Law] is used, it is to be understood, that the word לֹא signifieth as well Doctrine as Law, and so setteth forth all the Doctrine of God in general. Now the preeminence above all Mountains being for this given to Mount Zion, how is it that the hills of Rome, whereof no such thing is spoken, should vaunt themselves as the chief and above all, whereas if any Church in the world be the chief, it must rather for this reason be the Church of Jerusalem?

And he shall judge among the Gentiles, and reprove many peoples, and they shall break their swords into Mattocks, &c. By Gentiles amongst whom he shall judge, Jerom understands the conversion of them prophesied of, and by the many peoples whom he shall reprove the hardening of the Jews, for which they shall suffer sharp reproof, because they believed not in him, whom God sent. And the description of peace here made, and ceasing from warre, that they might follow their Husbandry, to the time when Christ was born. For the Nations burning alwayes in a desire of warre one against another before, as appears by the Histories of all times, were in peace under Augustus Caesar, anno 41. of his Reign, and twelve years before. A place like to this for the first words, is Chap. 42. 1. He shall bring forth judgement for the Gentiles, that is, Justification for such as believe, as they should generally do. When judging is joined with an Accusative case, it is against the party spoken of, but when with an Ablative, for him, although this rule doth not alwayes hold. Whereas it is concluded, Neither shall they learn war any more it is not meant time without end, but not a long time after, as indeed it fell out, seeing there was no warre during all the time, that Christ lived upon earth, nor till almost forty years after, when Jerusalem was destroyed *. Thus Adam Sautont, who also applieth that of his arguing many people, to Christs reprovng of the Jewish Pharisees and Scribes, and the Spirits reprovng of the world afterwards by the Apostles his instruments, according to that, I will send the Spirit, and he shall reprove the World of sin. Others, By judging amongst the Nations, understand Christ ruling and reigning amongst them, and not amongst Jews only, and so in a farre more ample manner, then David had done, and by reprovng, reforming the Doctrine of the Church corrupted, and the manners of men in all parts thereby. And this is more simple then the former, and agreeth best with the words following touching such an universal peace, which our modern Writers also expound of the peace which comes by Christ amongst all the truly faithful; so that agreeing in him, Nation warreth no more against Nation, nor Neighbour quarrels, or is at strife with Neighbour, but because the Gospel is not unanimously imbraced by all men, but even they amongst whom it is received, receive it not solidly either in their hearts or opinions, there be quarrels and dissensions either in their hearts or opinions, there be quarrels and dissensions, and wars still even in all places, where the Lord judgeth and argueth or reproveth, neither must we look for the perfect fulfilling of this; saith Calvin, till we come to Heaven. * But in all those that are truly sanctified it is fulfilled here, and they have little profited by the Gospel, that are not so cicurated as to lay away all envy and contentiousness, and injustice, and to seek to do good offices towards one another, as he that turns his sword into

to a plowshare in stead of fighting and killing, and slaying, now endeavours by his Husbandry to get wherewithall to feed himself and others. But that this Prophecie is against all use of the sword under the Gospel, as some teach, as if now no battels upon any occasion ought to be fought; or Magistrates to use the sword against malefactors, is to be denied, as absurd; seeing still it is said, The Magistrate bears not the sword in vain; and the Law of Nature teacheth, vim vi repellere: yet it is true, if all were so converted by the Gospel as they should, there would be no more use of one sword, or of the other.

O house of Jacob come, and let us walk in the light of the Lord. After a Prophecie of the conversion of the Gentiles, here followeth an Exhortation to the Israelites to turn also, for to walk in the light of the Lord is nothing else but by the light of the Gospel to go to Christ. But foreseeing by the Spirit the hardness of their hearts, to which God would give them over for their sins, that they should not turn, he immediately by an Apostrophe turns to God, and saith,

Certainly thou hast forsaken thy people, because they are filled with the East, &c. He takes up this Exhortation, saith Calvin, to aggravate the hardness of their hearts the more; as if he had said, Sith the Gentiles exhort one another, ye shall not want Exhortation to walk in the light; and ye are the [House of Jacob] a people peculiarly chosen of God, they but Gentiles, for which it will be the more to your confusion, if ye do not, as I know ye will not. <sup>a</sup> But the cause why they do not is noted, vers. 6. to be Gods leaving of them, his giving them over to hardness of heart, and that for their gross sins, as it is said of the idolatrous Gentiles, Rom. 1. The coherence of this verse with the former, is, as if he had said, but what should I do speaking to them to come, seeing God hath in his just judgement forsaken them, and being left of God all Exhortations are vain unto them <sup>b</sup>. They are full of the East] The word ἄνατολῃ rendered the East, signifieth also the beginning; so that it may be understood of the abominations of the Canaanites, which they found there, when they began to enter the Land. The vulgar Latine, Septuagint and Chaldee, Repleti sunt, ut olim, they are filled as of old, or at the first, and so the word may denote their being addicted to Idolatry, for that was the old sin of Israel, and in it they continued, till they were by Nebuchadnezzar destroyed. If it be taken for [From the East] then it is to be understood as spoken of their Divinations, for which the Eastern parts, where Balaam lived, and from whence the Magi came, were notorious; and the next words shew, how they were full of the East, viz. they had Soothsayers, Augures ab Avibus, so called because by Birds they divined, and there were Aruspices, divining by the entrails of Beasts, &c. One kinde is named, and the rest also meant; and this was a sin straightly forbidden Deut. 18. But what was this to the Jews in the time of the Gospel? Calvin saith, The Scribes and Pharisees were their Soothsayers, because they took as great heed to their sayings as of old to Augurs, not to be moved herefrom by any means.

And it is said, They had Soothsayers, as the Philistims; To aggravate this sin the more in them, when God had distinguished them as his peculiar people from the uncircumcised Philistims, to affect to be like them in this devillish vanity.

And they have mingled with strange children; That is, either living by the same impious laws that they did, as desirous to be all one with them, to come into the more favour: or taking their daughters for wives without all regard to Gods Laws forbidding it, whereby their children were part Jews, and part Heathens: or buying fair boyes of the Heathens, with whom they mingled themselves as Sodomites. And thus Jerom takes it, saying, That this sinne so farre prevailed amongst the Greeks and Romans, that their most famous Philosophers kept such publickly; and Adrianus the Emperour having been brought up amongst the Philosophers, kept one Antinow, and for the love which which he bare to him, built a Temple, and appointed Sacrifices to his honour, and built a City, calling it after his name Antinopolis; and this filthiness continued till the time of Constantine, who did quite put it down. And this seemeth specially to be meant, because Chap. 1.10. they are called, Princes of Sodom, &c. and Ezek. 16. they are compared to the Sodomites for their sins; and Isa. 3.9. They have sinned with Sodom. Yet Calvin rather prefers the first, having first mentioned all three.

The Land is full of silver and gold, neither is there any end of the treasures, it is also full of horses. Amongst other vices covetousness is here taxed in them, whereby they were in the midst of their abundance in their minds unsatiable, which is meant, when he saith, There is no end of their treasures, because they knew not when they had enough, according to the Poet, Semper avarus eget, the Covetous alwayes hath need. But to lay up treasures upon earth is forbidden; and the King of Israel must not multiply horses, much lesse private persons. Therefore this also is reproved, as arguing pride and diffidence in God, for which cause they so greatly increased the number of their horses, that they might be stately carried, and by means of their horses the more able against their enemies in battel. Oecolampadius subscribing to this, as also Calvin, yet addeth another of using their silver and gold, to make thereof glorious Idols, as is complained Hof. 2. Against horses, and trusting in horses, see Psal. 10.9. Psal. 147.10. Pro. 11.31.

Another Land was filled with Idols, &c.

A man bowed himself, and a man humbled himself, therefore spare them not. This is by Jerom referred to the time when Adrians Image was set up in the Temple, but unaptly, because the Jews in those times abhorred all Idols. It is therefore meant of their present and past Idolatry added to their other sins. Whereas man is twice named, Hebr. the first is בָּנָה setting forth one of the common sort; the other שָׁבַח a Prince or Noble man, for all sorts were Idolaters; in Latine it is Homo and Vir. For Idols, Hebr. is בָּנָה Vanities, to shew how vain and nought-worth they were. And saying, The Land was full of them, he intimateth the insatiability of Idolaters, in these vanities, A man bowed himself to the work of his own hands, Hebr. They bowed themselves to the work of his hands, that is, saith Varatius, of the Image-maker. Which is added to aggravate their sin: For man is the work of Gods hands, and for the work of God to bow before the work of man, is most unreasonable, and an indignity to God. If it be said, The matter is the work of God, that is not bowed to, but the form which is the work of man, and therefore to this is the humiliation. Whereas vers. 9. may be taken as a further aggravating of the same sin. Varatius renders the word, And a man is bowed, and a man is humbled; as if hereby were set forth his punishment, he is bowed and brought down by heavy judgements falling upon him, whether he be small or great, for thus the same words are used, Chap. 5. 15. So Calvin and Oecolampadius. And if it be thus taken, the last words will agree well, And he will not pardon them, as the Septuagint readeth them, and they may best be read. And thus the Question is avoided, how Isaiah could approve his love to them, when he prayed against them contrary to the manner of Moses and Paul? But reading it as an imprecation, it is to be held, That the Prophets imprecations were but predictions of judgements, seeing they spake by the Spirit of Prophecie; yet it is to be understood, that whereas it is commonly read, Therefore spare, or forgive them not, Hebr. it is לֹא and not.

Go into a Rock, hide thee in the dust from the sight of the fear of the Lord, &c. This is by Jerom expounded, 1. Literally, seeing so great judgements shall come, flee into some Cave in a Rock, or hide thee in the dust from them, when they shall be executed by the Caldeans and Romans, and so that place, They shall call upon the Rocks to cover them, is agreeable to this. 2. Anagogically, flee to God, as to a Rock and a Refuge, for so it is said, The stony Rock is a refuge for the Conies: and Moses was hid in a Rock, whilst God passed by, and banon; and lastly by reason of the white stone wherewith the wals of this City were built, it appeared white to those that approached, as Libanus through the snow thereon. Bashan was famous for fruitfulness, therefore the fat Bulls of Bashan are often spoken of, and the Oaks of Bashan were the best fed Oaks, figuring out the rich and pampered with all delicacies and pleasures.

And upon all high Mountains, &c. The same are hereby also meant, men proud and stout, yet Musculus understands also the inhabitants of the mountains and hills, because of the high-places so infamous for Idolatry that were there. Some are likened unto Mountains, saith Jerom, for the greatness of their virtues, and some for the greatnesse of their vices, especially of pride for the Nobility of their Birth, they shall be torne by Gods judgements.

And upon every high Tower and fenced wall. In these the Jews trusted, hoping by means of them to be defended: but these were broken down at the coming of the Caldees, and afterwards of the Romans, no Fort being able to save them.

And upon all the ships of Tarsus, and the exquisite pictures. The Septuagint for the ships of Tarsus have, The ships of the sea, affirming that in the Hebrew tongue, Tarsus signifieth the sea, the reason is by Sabon yielded, because the precious stone called Tarsus, in the brest-plate of Aaron, which is rendred a Chrysolite, was of a sky colour, therefore any sea being of this colour, is called Tarsus. But Tarsus was also a City in Cilicia lying North from Jerusalem, and stood near the Sea, from whence many ships were sent out from time to time, to fetch gold and other precious things, whereby they were enriched, and so corrupted by pride and other vices; so Solomon sent ships from Tarsus, which returned once in three years. In threatening these ships then he meaneth the stripping them of their wealth. The vulgar Latine for exquisite pictures, hath, Super omne quod visu pulchrum est: The Septuagint, Super omnem aspectum pulchritudinis navium. But the Hebrew words signifie Pictures of delight, or pleasant Pictures. And these are by Calvin expounded of Tapistry-works, and Turkey-works, and carved-vessels of gold or silver, wherein they much delighted; and these are mentioned together with the ships, because in them brought from beyond Sea; but specially, as I take it, such Pictures are meant as were abused to Idolatry, for ver. 18. the abolition of all Idols is threatned, as a further explanation of this clause.

The loftiness of man shall be brought down. This is nothing else, but a repetition of that which was said ver. 11. to shew that the Cedars and Oaks, Mountains, &c. hitherto threatned, were great, and proud, and high-minded men, metaphorically so called.

And he will abolish Idols. That the Land was full of them, was complained ver. 8. as the main cause of Gods wrath; now their abolition is commemorated, as the end of his judgements upon men. When God is forced to purge a Land of Idols by his judgements, great destructions come together, and so it is by Christians to be expected, if they of themselves put them not away.

And they shall enter into the holes of the Rocks, &c. A repetition of that ver. 10. only there he bids them enter in, here he saith, they shall, through the fear coming upon them.

In that day a man shall cast away his Idols of silver and of gold, &c. The things which Idolaters have trusted in, shall in the time of Gods judging them be so far from being had in estimation by them any more, that they shall cast their precious and most esteemed Idols away as unprofitable and vain, and that into most secret places, where they may never more come to light, as being utterly ashamed of trusting in things so vain; wherefore he saith, They shall cast them to the mounds and the bats, that is, according to Zuinglius, some into the cliffs of the earth, and some into dark corners of houses. The vulgar Latine, He shall cast away the Idols, which he made to adore: the mounds and the bats, that is, saith Jerom, blinde as the mounds, and in darkness as the bats, for unto these Neither can this sense be drawn out of the words without adding the word Images, and the Preposition 7 before the word 777 signifying a mould, plainly sheweth, that by these last words such obscure creatures are meant, as unto which they should cast their Idols, according to the former Exposition, because 7 is, to. The Septuagint for moulds, hath vain things. Symmachus, Infructuosa. Vespertilio the bat hath the name from Vespere volare, because in the evening it flies out. It is like a mouse, and brings forth young likewise, not eggs, and gives suck, yet hath wings, but not of fethers, and avoids the light; a fit embleme of the devil, as Basil makes it, who flies in the darkness of ignorance, and is not long in hatching, as birds, but soon brings forth, and seems to be an Angel as a bat a bird, and hath teeth as the bat to bite.

And they shall go into the clefts of the Rocks, &c. This Jerom expounds not, as vers. 19. but of men turned from Idolatry, when of blinde like moulds they come to see, they shall seek the holes of virtue to hide them in, and renounce the errors of their former opinions. Calvin and some others take it for an inculcating of the same thing, that it might make the deeper impression. Vatablus for these words [And they shall go] rendering it, that they may go, as if here were yielded the reason, why they should cast away their Idols, viz. that they fleeing without any carriage might make the more haste. And because other things before spoken of are again repeated, and the words here used are for the most part the same with those vers. 19. I cannot think with Jerom, that a different thing is meant, but the same with Calvin, their hiding themselves for fear, as also vers. 10.

Vers. 22.
Hieron.

Cease therefore from man whose breath is in his nostrils, why should he be reputed? Jerom, Quia excelsus reputatus est ipse, and he saith, that it is by the Jews expounded of Christ, but in a contrary sense, as if they were warned to take heed of him, as a weak man, and therefore after Aquila, they read the last words Wherein is he to be esteemed? He also expounds it of Christ, who though he draweth breath by his nostrils, as another weak man doth, yet for his Divinity he is acknowledged the most high. Thus he also saith Origen expounds it, because spoken of a singular man, which is Christ the Lord. But the Septuagint omit it, at which he marvels, but not all the verse, but only the last clause, which yet is now also in all copies. The cause of the different reading is in the word 777 because 777 signifies excelsus; Jerom renders it so, but forso much as it signifieth also wherein. Pagnin and Munster, and others after Aquila render it wherein, or for what is he to be reputed? And it is by them generally expounded of any man of what power or dignity soever in this world, Cease yet from trusting in him, for he liveth by his breath, which if it be stopt he presently dieth. And this is most agreeable to the premises touching the abasing of man, vers. 11, 17.

CHAP. III.

Vers. 1.

Hieronym.

For behold, the Ruler, the Lord of hosts will take away from Jerusalem and Judah all the strength and stay, &c. This is a continuation of the same Prophecy, as the first word [For] sheweth, the coherence with the last verse of the former Chapter being this. Because ye will not cease from trusting in man, the Lord will frustrate all the strength of your mighty ones, and that by taking away their sustenance, bread and water. Jerom following on in applying this to Christ, saith, because they refrained not, but persecuted him, they should should be by the Roman Army besieged, and have no power to resist, untill that all their provision being consumed, they should all be made feeble and perish by famine. He also applieth it spiritually, they should have no sound teachers left upon whom they might stay, nor any spiritual food to nourish the soul. For although the Jews have the parchments, wherein the word of God is written, yet being without the understanding thereof, their souls perish for want of the spiritual food herein contained. That by bread and water, the Word truly set forth is meant, see Amos 8.11. But forsomuch as in enumerating the particulars to be taken away, the Prophet speaks altogether of corporeal and external sustenance, and vers. 7. is plain for corporeal food, it is better to follow the literal sense only. Yet allegorically Cyrl, Basil and Haimo also understand by bread and water spiritual food, and some the bread of the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, and the water of Baptism, of the comforts whereof men shall be deprived for sin. And the Ancients generally understand this threatening as belonging to the time, when the Roman Army was by Gods just judgement brought against Jerusalem for their cruelty against the Lord Christ, against wronging of whom, they take the last words of the former Chapter to be directed. The words translated strength, or staff, and stay, are all one; but that the first is of the Masculine, the second of the Feminine gender, by the Septuagint therefore rendred validum & validam, and hereby he means both men, Judges, and Prophets, and women, as Miriam, Deborah, Huldah, &c. Bread is called the staff of bread, because hereby life is sustained, as an old feeble man by a staff. See the like Levis. 26. 26. Ezek. 4. 16. 5. 26. 14. 13. And this is taken away not only in the want of it; but of a blessing upon it to make it nutritive and strengthening.

Basil.

The valiant and the warrior, the Judge and the Prophet, the Diviner and old man. For the valiant, saith Jerom, the Septuagint have the Giant, but then it must be understood of a Giant not in an evil sense, as Gen. 6. but in a good, as Psal. 19. yet the word is גִּבּוֹר, signifying strong or valiant. The valiant and warrior were taken away, when they became subject to the Romans, and could never get free from this servitude any more; the Judge, when they had no more Judges of their own, but the Romans were their Judges; Prophets also, that is, true Prophets ceased; and Diviners, that is, such others as they had taken heed unto, that were the Prophets of Idolaters, who divined by the flying of birds, the entrails of beasts, or any other unlawful way by consulting with devils, or with the dead; of these Diviners it was spoken before, Chap. 2. 6. The old man is by the Septuagint rendred Presbyter, who is a man, though not of years, yet of wisdom; in saying then that the old man shall cease, he meaneth, the wise, all becoming like children for foolishness and vanity. In the first verse generally, they in whom their strength lay according to man, are threatned, here such are more particularly enumerated; and vers. 3. the valiant, who regard not their lives in defending their Countrey, who have also skill and strength accordingly. These and other men of warre are taken away, either when they are cut off, or of couragious they became cowardly. Diviners, saith Calvin, first seem to be taken in a good sense, because they are spoken of, as conducing to the well-being of a state, yet afterwards he yieldeth to them that understand evil instruments hereby; of whom to be deprived, they in their superstition thought it a great punishment. But taking a Diviner in a good sense, he understands by him one that hath sharpnesse of wit to finde out the meaning of things obscure in the holy Scriptures. By the Prophet he understands all teachers of the Word, and the old man one old in years; and if it be taken so, then the meaning is, that the aged who is past warre, shall not be spared any more, then the young and strong. But because children ruling over them are spoken of, vers. 4. and by them children in years are not meant, but in understanding, it is plain, that by the old man is meant one for his wisdom made an elder, whether old or young.

Hieronym.

The Ruler over fiftie; and the honourable, the Senator and excellent Artificer and eloquent. As we have Captains over hundreds, so had the Jews over fifties, and these he threatneth should be taken away, so as that they should have none left skilfull enough to lead the least band of men, and this is a weak state of a people amongst whom a valiant and skilfull Leader is of so great avail, that Epaminondas a valiant Captain of the Thebans dying, perswaded them to make peace upon any terms; because he saw that they had none fit amongst them to be a worthy Leader, and so with him began and ended the Empire of the Thebans. For honourable, is acceptable of face, Hebr. hereby one being set forth, who for the estimation, wherein he was, might bear some sway amongst the people to direct and guide them. Jerom following the Septuagint puts this and the next together in his Exposition, unum virum admirabilem consiliarium, the admirable Counsellor, who is but one of a thousand, concerning whom, he saith, the Greek Poets have a saying, He is blessed first that is wise. 2. That hearkens to the wise, but he that doth neither is altogether unprofitable, both to himself and all others. And in our books, thou maist have many friends, but one Counsellor. And the Roman Consuls had their name from this, that they guided that state by their counsel. The Jews then, from whom the Lord threatens to take away the honourable and Counsellor, were most miserable. The excellent or wise Artificer is also taken away, Hebr. The wise in handy-works; of such it is spoken, because there is great use of them for the making of arms and instruments for the warre and fortifications; therefore when no such are left, the people are in a weak state; And the eloquent man] Hebr. The man understanding mystical or anigmatical speeches. The word Wise here used, signifieth Incantation or Charm. But a divine Charmer is meant, of whom the Psalmist saith, They will not hear the voice of the Charmer, charm he never so wisely: for the wicked are like Serpents or Adders not hearkening to a godly teacher, who wisely layeth open divine mysteries; some yet there are, who have judgement in these things, of whom Paul saith, Let others judge. And amongst the Jews some of the Priests were appointed to hear the Prophets, to judge who prophesied truly and who falsly; and of such intelligent men it is here spoken, that none should be left, but all taken away, and thus all means of good both corporeal and spiritual should fail them.

Ecll. 10. 16.

And I will set children for Princes over them, &c. That is, not in years, but in want of wisdom and fortitude, for so Rehoboam, though forty years old, was but a childe. The next word rendered [Little ones] is by Jerom translated effeminate, and the word signifieth also childish and illuders. For, Woe, is it said, to thee (O Land) when thy King is a childe; the contrary to those before named are meant, such as like children are without understanding, and easily turned any way, and set their minds not upon things serious but vain, no not upon any heavy accident, as children play and laugh still. The wise amongst the Heathen accounted this the way to ruine. In Portich taberna meritoria, it was thus written in golden Letters,

*Roma vetus cum te veteres rexere Quirites,
Nec bonus immunis, nec malus ullus eras.
Defunctis patribus successit prava iuventus, Cujus consilio precipitata ruis.*

Nichemachus Vepiscus. Dii avertant principes pueros, & patres patria dici impubes, quos ad consulatus dandos dulcia, circuli, & quaecunque puerilis voluptas invitet. And such for imprudence, rashness and inconstancy were the Scribes and Pharisees, and the Zelots amongst the Jews, who brought Jerusalem to ruine, as Josephus sheweth more then the Roman power. By the effeminate ruling over them, or illuders, some will have the Romans meant, whom riches made of hardy, tender and luxurions, and Titus in particular, who delighted in Sodometry, as also Trajan, and who through Gods just judgement illuded the Jews, as they had mocked at our Lord.

Verf. 5.

The people shall deal violently every one against another, &c. Hebr. it is, Man against against man, the young against the old, and the base against the honourable. In such confusion is a state, when ruining, and this was the state of the Jews, when being besieged in Jerusalem they were divided into three factions, one holding the Temple, another the Superiour, the third the Inferiour part of the City, fighting against and killing up one another. Calvin here notes well, because this is threatened after the taking away of wise and stayed Governours, that it is the greatest misery, which can befall a Nation, to be without a good Government, and therefore they are great enemies to the publick good that impugn this.

Calvin.

And a man shall lay hold upon his brother, saying, Thou hast apparel, be thou our Prince, and let this ruine be upon thee. Theodotion for ruine, hath infirmity, saith Jerom, and the Septuagint meat; the meaning is, to such poverty and want shall they be brought, that they shall desire to be subject to him, as their Prince, that hath but good apparel and food. They shall not choose him, that is wisest, or valiantest, or most noble, but that abounds most with provision. The sense then of these words, Let this our ruine be upon thy hand; is, Let our misery and want be sustained by thy aid Vatablus, Put thy hand to this our ruine to help against it. Hebr. Under thy hand, that is, to help it, as a Patient under the Physicians hand. Calvin here notes a most miserable condition of a Kingdom, when to be Prince over it is a thing thought not worth the having, yea by every great man refused, although with some force drawn to it, as is intimated in saying, Shall lay hold upon him. For all men are naturally ambitious of Principality, at the least, in any place there be some, but now in Judea there should be none, an argument that it should be brought very low. By their apparel, saith Musculus, Nobles were known, others going basely, but now such is the pride of the times, that a Nobleman and a peasant cannot by their apparel be known asunder. It is to be noted, that men desire to commit the Principality to one that is wealthy, that he may not need to pill and poll his subjects, or in judging gape after gain.

He shall swear in that day, saying, I will not be a Prince. Hebr. שׁוּב אֲנִי אֶחָד אֲנִי אֶחָד אֲנִי אֶחָד A Chyrurgeon or Physician, as Jerom renders it, rightly answering to the last words of verf.6. Let this ruine be under thy hand; that is, to be bound up and healed, as by a Chyrurgeon healing the wounded. Hereby then is intimated, that a Prince should binde up the breaches of the Kingdom, and heal the infirmities of all, wherefore the Greeks call a King ἀσκλητήρ, which comes of ἄσκα, signifying a medicine. And Alciatus makes an Anchor with a Dolphin round about it an emblem of a King, because as a Dolphin he should foresee tempests a coming, and providently hold the Ship of the Commonwealth as by an Anchor out of danger. The word translated swear, is by Vatablus noted to come of נָשָׂא to lift up, because a man in sweating lifts up his hand to God, as Abraham; it signifieth also to take, because he taketh Gods name into his mouth. And here be that denies to take upon him to be Prince, is set forth as denying it with an oath, that there might be no hope of bringing him to it. And this, saith Musculus, is the state of the world, when there is apparent danger in having the principality, but at other times, every one seeks it, and likewise touching Prelacy in the Church, when Bishops were most exposed to the danger of Martyrdom, and had little means, every one refused this dignity, but now hunt after it. There is not in my house bread or apparel, that is, not sufficient means of maintenance for a Prince; for this is requisite in one that is a Ruler, that he should be a man of Ability, that he may both be of the more credit, and not have need to oppress the Commonwealth by Bribes, but freely execute Justice and Judgement, as one that needs the gifts of none.

Note.
Muscul.

Certainly Jerusalem is come to ruine, and Judah fallen, because their tongue and studies are against the Lord to provoke the eyes of his glory. He speaks in the Preter tense of a thing to come, for the certainty thereof. For their tongues against God, this most probably was by their mocking at his judgements, Chas. 5.10,24. and plainly refusing to obey him speaking by his Prophets Jerem.44.

Verf.8.

They

Hieronym. They were so desperately wicked, that they set themselves against God, and studied how to provoke him. His eyes are spoken of, to shew their open sinning, even as it were before the Judges face, not being ashamed of any wickedness, although his glory had oft shewed it self unto them, yet they were nothing moved hereby to fear to sin thus against him. And that their open sinning is hereby meant, is shewed vers. 9. where they are said to sin with Sodom. Jerom applieth that of their tongues and studies against the Lord, to their crying out, Crucifie him, We will have no King but Caesar.

Verf. 9. And the proof of their countenance answereth to them, they shew their sin like Sodom, &c. That is, the impudency of their faces in other sins committing, is suitable to their speeches: for herein they are as the Sodomites, who were not ashamed to bid Lot to bring out the young men, that they might lie with them, as man with woman, which is an abomination. This may be taken as spoken in answer to them, if they should say, Why do we come to ruine? whereby doth it appear, that we deserve it? Answ. If it appeared not otherwise, yet the cause might be seen in their countenance, which shewed pride, stoutness, cruelty and effeminateness. For the countenance oft times discovereth mens wickedness, as wisdom makes the face to shine; so it is hard not to bewray wickedness by the countenance, as Ovid saith, and Seneca, Vultus loquitur quodcumque negas. So it is said of an holy Bishop sometime, that he saw in the faces of those that came to the Communion, who were wicked and who godly, for the faces of the one sort appeared to him red and deformed, the faces of the other fair and amiable. The word מַרְבָּר here used hath divers significations. 1. For an alienation or transformation of the countenance, whereby the wicked, as if they forgot themselves to be mortal men, carry themselves most arrogantly. 2. For feigning himself to be another, as the wicked shew one thing in their face, but are another in their heart. 3. In Hithpael, he hath made himself unknown, and R. Jonah saith, that the Arabick Haccar, signifieth hardness. And if it be thus taken, the meaning is, the hardness or brazenness of their faces testifie against. Otherwise their dissembling countenance or their proud and disdainful look.

Verf. 10. Say, it shall go well with the just, &c. That is, saith Calvin, resolve upon it in your hearts, that what calamities soever come for sin, yet good, as the word צַדִּיק signifieth, shall redound hence to the righteous. To work righteousness, as Musculus hath it, is hereby intimated to sow, and of this sowing, good fruit shall come in the end, as of doing evil, evil and destructive fruit, as is added vers. 11.

Verf. 11. Hieronym. Sasbon. Septuagint. Verf. 12. Hieronym. Who to the Wicked, they shall be rewarded according to the Works of their hands. And so saith Jerom the Jews were, when as they had delivered Jesus into the hands of the Romans, so they were at length by God delivered into their hands for their destruction, and by the Jews being a Noun singular he will have Christ understood, as if all men were exhorted to praise him, as doing a good thing in destroying the Jews for their enmity against him, and therefore rendereth it, He shall eat, for they shall eat, contrary to the Hebrew. This, saith Sasbon is spoken to the Reader of this Prophecie, it shall finally be well with every just person, but woe to the Wicked; whereby eternal damnation is commonly set forth, Hebr. Here is no more in the beginning of this sentence, but, Say to the just, צַדִּיק which may as well be rendered, that he is good, as that good shall be to him; but the common reading is to be preferred, as the next words added for explication shew. The Septuagint have a strange interpretation here, reading it isru for imru, bind, for say; and it is this, Binde the just one, because he is unprofitable for us, as if it were the saying of Jews conspiring against Christ.

Little ones are oppressours of my people, and women reign over them, &c. Jerom according to his manner, applies this to the Scribes and Pharisees, who exacted Tithes and first-fruits through their covetousness, and for profits sake rejected Christ. And he calls them women, because they were drawn also by pleasure, pleasure, and so much regarded the favour of women, that they did in a manner rule in the Church. The same that before were called effeminate, saith Sasbon, are here called for more disgrace women. Vatablus, and Calvin, and Musculus understand it of their Princes, who were of little strength and power as women and children be, so that he speaks of it, as a wonderful judgement that they should be under such, whereas men naturally are so impatient of rule, if it be tyrannical and exacting, that they will not be brought under it, unlesse by force: but these grew to that stupidity like asses, that a childe or a woman might exact upon them, and they bare it, and this is the best *. My people, they that govern thee, deprave thee. This is added, to shew by what means they that were of no more power then women, were exactors over them, viz. by seducing them, by getting such Authority in their hearts, that they thought their dictates Oracles, and any thing well done, which was done according to their direction. For when people do thus over-honour their Princes, being ready to obey their wils in any thing, they are a people depraved indeed, and so is the way of their paths, as here followeth, that is, the whole course of their lives. The word rendered, They that govern thee, is כְּשִׁירֶיךָ, They that blesse thee, and speak all good unto thee, and as if there were no fear of any evil to come, saying, Peace, Peace. these make thee secure in thy sins, till destruction comes suddenly upon thee. It may be applied either to their Elders, to follow whose Ordinances they were so addicted, accounting it the greatest piety and security to the state, or to their false Prophets, who countenanced these their doings, as from the Spirit of God, Heb. for the first words, Hebr. עֲשֵׂי נְשִׁירַי מִיְּדֵי מִשְׁכָּנִי My people, his oppressours a little one, the singular being joined with the plural to disparage them the more in that they were oppressed by such, as if all their wit and power were put together, they were but as one little one.

Jehovah shall come to judgement With the Elders, &c. Having shewed both the internal cause of their punishments, viz. their sins, and the external, their unworthy Governors, now he cometh to threaten these Governours, who oppressed and seduced them, for so Jerom expounds [With the Elders] against the Elders, and this is by the following words, where he challengeth them for it, made plain, Ye have destroyed my vineyard, &c. Vatablus, To come to judgement With the Elders, is to come to judge them; so Pf. 82. he sets amongst them to judge them for their faults in judging. After the manner of a great man at variance with others, he will come and stand to see if these Princes have any thing to say for themselves, that a just judgement may be made betwixt him and them, as one not willing to carry it by his power, but that justice should prevail. Sasbon by Elders here rather understands Abraham, Isaac, Moses, &c. with whom God will come to judge the present wicked Generation. And coming to speak upon this, Ye have destroyed my vineyard, this, he saith, is the house of Israel, according to Chap. 5. But if so, as indeed it is, how can any other be meant, but their Princes, and Priests, and Elders, who by seducing them, and through exactions impoverishing them brought them to destruction: for it cannot certainly be spoken to the Commonalty, who were the persons destroyed; wherefore the persons destroying must be the wicked Elders, with whom he threatneth to come into judgement, as he before complained of them. Thus also Calvin and Musculus. The Princes were accused Chap. 1. 23. that they judged not the fatherless or the widow; now God speaking to that saith, that he stands to judge these his poor people by revenging their wrongs upon their Rulers, that none may think great men to have a license to sinne in their places any more then mean persons. They are challenged for destroying Gods vineyard, whereby both is intimated, how dear the Church of God is to him, and what a foul sin it is in Princes and Rulers over this vineyard, that should dresse and keep it, after the manner of beasts to eat it up and to wast it, The spoil of the poor is found in your houses; this is added for conviction; for when stoln goods are found in the chiefs house, it is evidence enough against him: The Ruler counts that which he can get any way by reason of his place, his own: but God makes another reckoning, viz. That they be the goods of the wronged, for which the Judge shall answer. And such, saith Musculus, be the tithes, which are appointed to the poor in the houses of Bishops, Canons, and great secular men. This indeed is true of secular men, they taking of tithes cannot be excused of having the goods of the poor in their houses, but if by Bishops, Ministers feeding the flock of Christ be meant, and keeping Hospitality for the poor, the accusation is not true, sith the tithes were at the first given to the Levites as their inheritance, who ministred about the Temple, and the tithes spoken of to be alike communicated to the Levites and poor, were tithes every third year arising out of the nine parts, when the yearly tithe was paid, as I have shewed upon the place.

The first is also rendred by Vatablus, Asteritis, Why do ye wear out my people? that is, by oppressions and exactions bringing them to poverty, what an audaciousnesse is this for you, that are set over the people for the good of every one, through your pride and covetousnesse to do them so much evil? They are said to grind the faces of the poor, who when they are brought into judgement are reviled and stricken upon the face both to their smart and ignominy, as was often used by the Jews, for so was Michaiah used, and Jeremy, and Christ, and Paul, and it is set forth by a Metaphor of grinding, because the cheeks suffered violence between both the hands; sometime being stricken with one, and sometime with another; and this is set forth as spoken by the Lord God of hosts for more authority and terrour to the greatest. Vatablus to expresse the exposition before-going, hath Colaphis caditis. But the faces of the poor are also ground by want, as Amos 8. 4. when they even perish hereby.

Also the Lord saith, because the daughters of Zion are proud, and walk with a stretched out neck, &c. Having taxed the Princes and Elders, here, because he had spoken before of women reigning over them, and exacting upon them, he speaks against their pride and wantonnesse, saith Jerom, to maintain which the people were so greatly oppressed. And it is not only against the greatest, but all women labouring with the same vices. And this pride is shewed in the affected carriage of the head and body, and of the feet in going. He mentioneth also another exposition by daughters, understanding lesser Towns and Villages about Zion, as we sometime read of this City or that, and her daughters. And a third exposition Tropolog. by daughters understanding souls. But it is best to understand it properly of the women of Zion, for whose sake oft times such exactions to the impoverishing of many were made, that they might be the more profuse in cost about their bodies. In reproving them the Prophet, 1. Censures their inward pride, as the fountain of their proud gestures and ornaments, then by speaking against stretched out necks, he taxeth their outward pride; for to have a submisse look argueth humility, and a lofty look pride, which is intollerable in man, but much more in a woman, being the more infirm both in body and minde, and the first in transgressing. Wandering eyes here also next spoken against, argue immodesty and insolency, for the Matron-like carriage of the eye is a stayednesse. But much more do they offend, that paint their eye-lids and faces, such pride is most intollerable, it being an attempt to amend the work of God. Walking about is also levity in women, and is spoken against by Paul, and they are bidden to keep the house, according to which the Ancients made Venus with the shell of a snail, to intimate that a woman should alwayes have her house over her head, and look to the affairs thereof. The tinkling with her feet here also taxed, is understood by some of her affected gait after the manner of dancers, by others of costly ribbons with bells tied at her feet, which made a little tinkling noise as she went, but all devised to set forth her pride; and if these things be taxed in women, much more in men, as arguing effeminatenesse so curiously to deck and set forth themselves, because it is more tolerable in a woman, in whom attiring the body to make her shew the more amiable, renders her the more acceptable to her husband, whom she ought to please.

Therefore the Lord will make bald the top of the daughters of Zion, &c. As pride begins at the head, saith Musculus, so doth the judgement threatned for it, the hair, which is the greatest ornament to a woman, being taken away by some scab or scurviness, they being forced to pluck it off. Whereas it is added, that he would also discover their shameful parts, he understandeth it as accomplished, when by the Caldees they were stript and driven after the manner of beasts into Babylon. Jerom for the last words hath, The Lord will make naked their hair; and ignominy shall be for ornament. The Hebrew is, He will lay open their nakedness, for the word גל signifieth nakedness, and so though it may set forth any naked part of the body, yet more properly the secrets, of the discovering of which women are most ashamed, as being taught by nature to hide them. The meaning is, that whereas in their pride they multiplied their bodily ornaments unreasonably, not being content some of them with their own hair, now they should both be stript of garments and hair both, and be put into a most shameful and miserable condition.

In that day the Lord shall take away the ornament of the rattlers, the cauls and half moons. Hieron. The ornament of the shoes. But a word coming from the same Root is used here, and ver. 16. expounded tinkling or rattling; and Vatablus saith, That the Spanish women did wear bells about their heels when they danced.

Their olfactories, bracelets and miters; That is, something hung about their necks, having sweets inclosed therein, and their tires were vails covering head and face all but their eyes. The rest of their implements, not to speak of them in particular, because I finde nothing but conjectures about divers of them; the reason why this enumeration is made, is to shew proud and light womens vanity in their dresles, unto which must go so many things all over the body from top to toe, and how much God is provoked hereby, that all such as have any modesty or fear of God in them, may eschew this superfluity, as a means to bring them to the want of all things, and be content with fewer ornaments, as becometh the humble professing the truth.

And there shall be for a sweet savour a stinke, for grinding tearing, &c. That is, wherein any excesse hath been used, and pride shewed, a contrary punishment; so much doth God abhorre the curious, excessive and proud use of all bodily things, that we may be sober herein. And for stinking it is noted by Ammianus Marcellinus, lib. 2. That they were very irksome to the Emperour Marcus for the stink that came from them, whereupon he calls them Fetentes Judaeos; and this Fortunatus saith, is washed away by holy Baptisme.

Thy men fall by the sword, &c. Here again he returns to the destruction of those in whom their strength lay; their valiant men, so that the City Jerusalem which he brings in by a Prosopopeia, shall lie upon the ground, and her gates mourn, because there should be nothing but misery, and matter of grief, and sorrow for her desolation.

CHAP. IV.

IN that day seven women shall lay hold upon one man, &c. The number seven, saith Jerom, and sometime ten, were familiar amongst the Hebrews, because of the Sabbath of the seventh day, and the ten Commandments. But by seven is not alwayes meant precisely the number of seven, but many, so likewise by ten, as when Zechary saith, Ten men shall lay hold upon the skirt of a Jew, saying,

Hieronym.

Musculus. The Allegory.	saying, We will go with thee. For the present place, such a destruction being made in Jerusalem, as hath been formerly prophesied of, he sheweth here, that many women shall be forced to follow one man, pleading only for the benefit of marriage with him, for the encrease of posterity, it being then counted a great reproach for a woman to be barren. And this sheweth, saith Muscul. how few men should be left by the sword of the enemy, whereas there should not be above one for seven women, &amp; women for fear of wanting husbands should lay aside womanlike modesty so far, as to offer themselves to men, and whereas the man commonly should provide for the woman food and raiment, to offer to provide these for themselves. Basil allegorically by seven women laying hold upon one man, understands the Jews living after their own laws, but laying hold upon Christ to be delivered from the reproach of spiritual barrenness, and other Allegories there be of Jerom and Cyris, which are as little or lesse pertinent. For the womans being called by the name of her husband, that hath been so ever since the Creation, for the woman is called Ishah, from her husband Ish, for as Ishah signifieth a woman, so Ish the man, although Adam called his wives name in another respect Evah, viz. because she was the mother of all men. And the Hebrews and Romans also called the wives by their husbands names, as Mary of Cleophas, Mary of James, Cornelia, Tullia, Caia, &amp;c.
Verf. 2.	In that day the branch of the Lord shall be to beauty and glory, and the fruit of the Land to excellency.
Muscul.	In that day ] saith Musculus, in those dayes, whereby is not meant strictly the time of the destruction before prophesied of, for what glory could there be then? but in a time that should follow after this, viz. at their return out of Captivity. But by the Branch, saith Calvin, some understand Christ, because he is set forth by this name, Zech. 6. 12. yet to him that shall more accurately look into this place it will appear, that not that branch, but a stock of people delivered and flourishing again is meant, because at the end of this verse it is expressed, of whom this is spoken, viz. the delivered of Israel, and
Calvin.	verf. 3. Those that are left in Zion; Thus Calvin, who also laboureth to prove, that by the branch may be understood blessings temporal and spiritual, wherewith that people should be blessed, who had been before made so miserable. But Jerom by the Branch understands the branch of Christianity springing up in the time of the Gospel, and the glory here spoken of, shall then be not to all, but to a remnant of Israel which shall be saved, of which remnant the Prophet spake before Chap. 1. 9. that is, the Apostles and such as were converted by them, whose names were written in the book of life; suitable to which is the speech of Christ to his Disciples, Rejoyce, that your names are written in Heaven. Verf. 3. When the Lord shall wash away the filthiness of the daughters of Sion, and the blood of Jerusalem. that is, when they shall come to be baptized for the remission of sins, and in saying [blood] he alludeth to that Chap. 1. Your hands are full of blood; and points at their crying out, His blood be upon us and our children; they that turned being also cleansed herefrom. And according to this the Fathers generally expound it; and Tremellius also, alledging Isa. 1. 1. and Jer. 23. 33. where Christ is also called the branch, neither is any other elsewhere set forth by this name. And most aptly is Christ thus called, who sprung up in Israel to the great illustration of that people, when they were wasted with many miseries and brought most low, so that they had no Ruler of their own, but were under strangers, the Romans and Herod, even as a tree cut down to the stump, but he then coming was as a Branch springing forth, to glory and honour, when he wrought so many miracles, that made him famous in all parts, And the fruit of the earth to excellency and ornament to the deliverance of Israel. The Son, who was before called the Branch of the Lord, is now called the fruit of the earth, because he took flesh, and so was born upon earth; and he is said to be an ornament to the deliverance, that is, the delivered, the abstract being put for the contrate, and by the delivered are meant such as are saved of the Church consisting both of Jews and Gentiles, which is Gods Israel.

And it shall be that the remnant in Zion, and in Jerusalem shall be called holy, &c. That is, every one, who shall be delivered from the sword, and infidelity by turning to the true faith, that is, every true Christian shall be holy, even every one, that is written to life in Jerusalem; here it is alluded to the writing of mens names in a book of Genealogies, for here they searched in the time of Nehemiah and Ezra, to finde who were true Israelites: but by Jerusalem here is meant the heavenly Jerusalem, where who so is written shall live for ever, but others not, and this is the book of Predestination, wherein no man knows who is written, but God only, till he be truly converted, for then he hath a white stone given him, and a new name written in it, which no man knoweth, but he that hath it.

In the spirit of judgement, and of fire. In this verse are the means, whereby they shall be sanctified and made holy, that are by Christ delivered, viz. They shall be washed by Baptism, and unto water fire shall be added, as was done in the day of Pentecost, and thus every one that is truly baptized is baptized with water and the holy Ghost. Others that understand all this of the Jews returning from Captivity, say, that the Prophet having spoken figuratively of them, vers. 2. under the name of a Branch, and the fruit of the earth now speaks of the same plainly, they shall be called holy, not that every one of them shall be such, but so many as be elect, who are the invisible part of the Church mingled here with the impure. For the reason yielded vers. 4. He will wash away the filthinesse, &c. They understand this of his destroying the wicked by his former judgements, who were as filthiness and bloud amongst them, but being taken away the remnant was pure and holy. Whence Calvin noteth, That judgements executed upon the Church in the most rigorous manner, do not, as is commonly thought, make against the welfare thereof, but for it, because although the people be reduced to fewer, yet they are more worth now then all the great multitude before, because holy.

And the Lord shall create upon all the habitation of mount Zion a cloud by day, and in the night the brightness of flaming fire, &c. Hebr. A cloud and smoke, יָבֵל as also Tremellius renders it, and Jerom: but Marlorat, Darknesse. And it is a Prophecie, saith Jerom, of renewing the like favours to the Church under the Gospel to those of old in the wilderness, the meaning being, that they should be sheltered from trouble both in adversity and prosperity. Wherefore smoke here doth not set forth the darkness of ignorance or error, but glory, as the house of God is sometime said to have been filled with smoke; and Joel prophesying of the coming down of the holy Ghost, saith, bloud and fire, and the vapour of smoke. Tremellius, upon every Tabernacle, that is, every Congregation of the faithfull shall be a cloud, that is, direction in the right way, and upon all the glory protection, ora covering, wherein it is alluded to the Tabernacle, over the glorious things whereof there was a covering, because also vers. 2. it is said, The Branch of the Lord shall be to glory, the Congregation is here set forth by the name of glory for the excellency thereof. The cloud and smoaky darkness, intimating the flame ready to break out, and the flame were both for direction to the Israelites going through the wilderness to Canaan, wherefore hereby is set forth, that the faithfull under the Gospel should have the direction of Gods Spirit through the wilderness of this world to the heavenly Canaan. And because the cloud cooled and defended them from the heat of the Sun, but yet was occasion of some darkness, their light not being so bright, and the flame of fire enlightened them against the darkness of the night: in speaking hereof the Prophet sheweth both the protection of God, that should continually be over his Church, and the mixture of adversity with prosperity for the greater good thereof. For light in the night setteth forth comfort to mitigate the darkness of calamity, and a cloud in the day, affliction whereby God tempereth the prosperity of his Saints, lest they being taken herewith should wax proud, wherefore God in the day of prosperity protecteth his with a cloud of affliction, and in the night of affliction visits them with the fire of divine oblectation, for overmuch prosperity hurteth as much as overmuch adversity, For upon all the glory shall be protection. Here it is alluded to the Ark, which was the glory of Israel, and because the Ark figured out the Church under the Gospel, it is meant that every Church shall be under Gods protection, and special providence, as the Ark and Tabernacle then was, when the cloud was over it.

Psal. 31. 21.* for Gods protecting of his. This benefit which cometh from Christ to the faithfull, is further amplified by Ambrose, saying, If thou hast need of cure, he is a Physician, if thou fearest death, he is life, if thou sleepest darkness, he is light, if thou desirest heaven, he is the Way, if meal, he is nourishment.

CHAP. V.

Vers. 1.

Hieronym.

I Will sing unto my Beloved a Song of my Beloved concerning his vineyard. Jerom, Canticum patruelis mei, and expounding it, he saith, The Prophet calleth Christ Patruelis, because he was of the same Countrey with him, yet in expounding it, he saith, that this is made to Christ by the name of his Beloved, as is the title of Psal. 45. and according to which God saith of him, This is my beloved Son. And the word יָדָד here used signifieth either patruelis or dilectus. What this vineyard is vers. 7. sheweth, viz. the house of Israel. Wherefore Jerom will have that of Christs weeping over Jerusalem, and the Parable of the Vineyard planted, and let out to Husbandmen the same with this. In an horn, the son of oil, Septuagint, in a fruitfull place; and so Tremellius respecting rather the sense, then the Hebrew words. The Land of Canaan is hereby meant, called an Horn for the strength thereof, and the son of Oil for the fruitfulness even from the river of Egypt, saith Jerom, to Euphrates, and in the latitude of it to the Mountain Taurus: And he saith, the Hebrews expound it, in an Horn, that is, a strong place and lofty, the son of Oil, needing the mercy of God, and sustained by his help, or yielding the clear light of the knowledge of God to all Nations. Pagnin turneth, in an Horn, in an Hill, in the Syriack, in a corner of the Earth, because that Land was in fashion like an Horn, understand a strong Kingdom, for such had the Kingdom of Judah been. The son of Oil, especially because fruitfull in Hebrai. Olive trees, and in regard of the King and Priest there anointed with oil, being therefore called two Olives, Zech. 4. but above all was Christ herein pointed at, before whose Birth a little Oil flowed out in Rome an whole day together, Euseb. Chron. Orosii l. 6. c. 10. This is, according to Jerom, the beginning of a second Vision, according to Tremellius this Chapter contains the summe of two Sermons going before, and it is set forth by way of Song after the manner of Moses, Dent. 32. One, because the word Patruelis signifying uncle, is here used, will have Amisab Isaiahs fathers brother meant. But to passe this over as a conceit; the same word, which signifieth Uncle, and Beloved, or Friend, is used, because both come of one roor, and he would set forth one most dear, as a most near Kinsman, which is Christ, and he calleth this his Song, because he in Parables sets forth Judaea, as a Vineyard planted and fenced, and let out to Husbandmen.

Vers. 2.

Jer. 2. 21.

Hieronym.

Which he fenced about, and gathered out the stones, and planted it with most fruitfull Vines, &c. Hieron. He planted it with Sorech, that is a kinde of most fruitful Vine that never ceaseth bearing, but Symmachus alone not so fitly, renders ders it vineam electam, fencing it with a ward of Angels, and gathering out Idols, or whatsoever might hinder Gods worship, set forth by stones. And he built a tower therein and a wine-press, that is, a Temple and an Altar, which received the Sacrifices brought out of all Israel, as the wine-press grapes. For wilde grapes, Aquila hath Pessimos fructus. The Septuagint Thorns, either where-with they crowned Christ, or the thorns of worldly cares, but the first is to be preferred, see the like Psal. 80.9. Theophilus and Euthymius, by the hedge understand the Law, whereby the people should have been kept within compasse. But Origen saith, The custody of God was the hedge, the Tower the Temple, the Wine-press the place of drink-offerings, so Zech. 2. I will be a wall of fire round about her, saith the Lord. Touching wilde grapes, they were so sour, that they could not be eaten, because they never come to full ripenes, whereas the grapes of a Vine planted are sweet, the meaning is, The Lord looked for godly living and good works, but ungodliness and evil came forth in the old Jewish Synagogue, before their destruction.

Now therefore (so) inhabitants of Jerusalem, and men of Judah, judge, &c. The case being so plain that any man must needs condemn such a Church and people, the Lord puts it to them whom he accuseth, to judge, that out of their own mouths sentence coming against themselves they might be the more ashamed; so Nathan dealt by David, and Jesus by the wicked Jews. And he speaks in the singular number, as who would refuse no one of them to judge in this matter, it was so plain.

What was more to be done to my vine, which I have not done, &c. Even as a carefull vine-planter can do no more, but plant in the best ground, the best kinde of Vine, gather out the stones and fence it well, and build a Tower from whence thieves coming to rob the Vineyard might be espied and prevented, so have I done, and yet for sweet grapes I finde four grapes, which use to grow in the fields without any cost. Nothing therefore can be alledged, as an error in me, unlesse that I have long waited for fruit; so Jerom. But this makes more for your condemnation, because ye cannot deny, but that you have had time enough given you, as to a Vine time must be given to bring forth grapes to maturity. Calvin mentions this, as an expostulation of God with himself for waiting so long for fruit, and in the end to be frustrated, as a man is angry with himself, as having done simply in the like case, knowing the ill condition of a ground, to strive with it, and to bestow great cost upon it, in the end looking for fruit and being deceived, because he knew the bad condition of it before. But he prefers this as more genuine; What fault can be found in me after all this done and so long expectation, Saubont takes it as an irony, unlesse I have faulted in this, that I have waited, which no wise man will affirm. If it be objected, God can make mens hearts anew. Answ. Whatsoever he can do, although he doth it not, yet it cannot be objected as a fault unto him, for if he doth all, which he ought to do, it sufficeth, as providing for the evident preaching of the Word, and the enlightening of the Understanding: for now he that brings not forth good fruit shall be condemned, not through any default in God, but only in himself; yet this satisfieth not, unlesse it be yielded, that man by vertue of the light shining to his heart hath his will, which was bound up before loosed; so that now he can will the good, which also is indeed implied Ezek. 18. and Matth. 23.23. And so the fault is in rebellious man, sith that although by nature, and of himself he be not able to will the good, yet when he hears outwardly, and the Spirit moveth his heart inwardly, he becomes able, and now because he will not bring forth better fruit, he is justly condemned. If it be said, But many hear not, amongst whom the Gospel cometh not. I answer, they that are under the Law shall be judged by the Law, but they without Law without it, for the evils which they have done against the light of nature; For this is the condemnation of the world, that light is come into it, but men love darkness: And to him that knoweth to do well, and doth it not, it is sin; And if I had not come amongst them, they had not had sinne,

- but now they have no cloak for it; for this were not true, if when the Gospel is preached it were not a sufficient means to enlighten and encline the will, though naturally averse, in whomsoever, however few be inclined by it.
- And now I will shew you, what I will do, &c.* God is so gracious and unwilling that any of his people should perish, that he shews them before by his Prophets, what evils he will bring upon them being wicked, I will take away thy hedge, and break down thy wall, that is, the hedge and wall of my protection, whereby thy enemies have hitherto been kept from making a prey of thee, and treading thee under their feet by contempt. Jerom by hedge understands the guard of Angels, according to Psal. 34. and some by wall, good men, for murus magnus vir bonus est, A good man is a great wall, according to the Proverb. So the great brazen gate of the Temple a little before the destruction of Jerusalem opened of it self, and a voice of Angels was heard, saying, Migremus hinc, Let us go hence: So that this Prophecy was fulfilled, when the Romans destroyed it.
- It shall not be pruned nor digged, and I will command the clouds not to rain upon it, &c.* Here the taking away of all good means of grace to bring forth good fruit is threatened, as lesser chastisements and afflictions, which are as digging and pruning, the end whereof is to keep Gods Commandments, as David saith, Before I was afflicted, I went astray, but now I keep thy Commandments: and a with-holding of the influence of Heaven whereby famines come, as in the dayes of Ahab. And this, as Jerom saith, was not done, as some expound it, at the Babylonish Captivity, for Jeremiah was still amongst them, and afterwards Haggai and Zechary, but when the Apostle being rejected by the Jews, said, Henceforth we turn to the Gentiles. For the Prophets and Apostles are the clouds here meant, for which it is said, Paul planteth and Apollo watereth; and Isa. 60. Who are these that flee as the clouds? Thus being destitute of means they should henceforth bring briars and thorns of evil works, to aggravate more their condemnation, as the ground accursed, the end whereof is to be burnt with fire.
- Certainly the Vineyard of the Lord of hosts is the house of Israel, &c.* Here the Parable is explained both for the meaning of the vineyard, and also for the meaning of the sweet and sower Grapes. Neither is it proper to Israel and Judah only, but common to us Joh. 15. Rom. 11. who shall likewise be judged for our evil fruits, by clamour or crying here spoken of is meant the crying of the oppressed by unjust dealing, or the crying out of unjust Judges against the innocent, as thieves and robbers upon the way against the traveller, as Christ was cried out against, Crucifixe him. So Jerom and Cyril. Or lastly, the crying out of any sin, which particularly is said to cry, as murder, Gen. 4. Sodomety, Gen. 18. Oppressing of the widow and fatherless, Exod. 22. and detaining the labourers wages, Jam. 5. 4. Heb. Elegans est Paronomasia Expectavi וַיִּשְׁמַע & ecce וַיִּשְׁמַע & וַיִּשְׁמַע ecce וַיִּשְׁמַע.
- Wo to them, that joyn house to house, and field to field, &c.* Here the Prophet enlargeth himself, taxing not only Judges, but all rich men who are unsatiable in their desires by right and wrong to get into their possession all the Lands and Houses about them. But he is not to be understood, as condemning merely the possessing of many grounds and houses about them, but their covetous desires which are never satisfied with that which is enough, in regard whereof they care not what becomes of others, being by covetousness transported to that, which if they could attain to, they could have no comfort in it, sith the rich cannot live without the poor, and man being a sociable creature, if he should have no neighbours inhabiting near him, could have little comfort of all his possessions. And in denouncing this woe he taxeth also unjust dealing and oppression to the devouring of other mens estates. A desire, saith Jerom, to have more houses and grounds, then he knoweth how to use, for ostentation, when others are harbourless, and want grounds to husband for their sustenance, is here cried out against. Would ye dwell alone in the midst of the Earth? that is, would ye ye be all like Kings, ye rich men having all the Land in subjection to you, as they have. As proud Nero turned a great part of the City of Rome into an house for himself. Against such ambition and covetousness Ambrose inveighing, saith, The Gentiles have called the Judge of hell Ditum, because it shall be sedes divitum, the seat of the rich, who when they most abound are in greatest want, because they think all things which others possess.

These things are in mine ears, if many and fair houses be not without inhabitants. For their insatiable covetousness, here desolation is threatned to their houses made so great and fair by their rapine, which was fulfilled, when they were partly cut off by the sword of the Caldeans, and partly carried away Captive. And he begins, These things are in the ears of the Lord of hosts That is, the cries of the poor before spoken of for the manifold oppressions of the rich, he the Judge takes notice of them, and will be avenged upon such great and mighty men. The speech is Ecliptical, part being kept in by an Apophegsis, and it is an oath for further confirmation and terrour, being to be supplied with these or the like words, Let me not live. Sabons, Have not me for your God. And the like happens commonly to great rich mens houses, upon the building whereof no cost hath been spared, being within a few years left for Cadows and Jackdaws to dwell in; and so shall it be shortly, saith Musculus, with sumptuous Monasteries, to shew the vanity of the founders thereof.

And ten acres shall make one bath of wine, and the seed of a chore an Ephah. A bath was seventy two Sextaries, that is fifty four quarts, a poor encrease of so much ground; A chore was a measure of twelve bushels, an Ephah according to some, a Bushel and a Peck; so Budens; but some others say, Medimnum Atticum, a Bushel wanting a pottle. However it was not above the tenth part of the seed sown. Here then great barrenness is also threatned, wherewith they should be punished for their ambition & covetousness, they should sow much and reap little, as Hag. 1.6. for what greater famine, then when the tenth part of the seed sown, and that upon a fruitful ground, is scarce reaped? The vulgar Latine hath it Lagunculum unum vini, which Sabons saith, was but equal in wet things to an Ephah in dry, but Hebr. it is  $\text{לֶבֶת}$  and for a chore, it hath thirty measures, and for an Ephah three measures, wherein Jerom confesseth, that he followeth the Septuagint, whereas Hebr. it is a bath and a chore, but yet whereas my Author makes a bath and Ephah so much different, as fifty four quarts and fourty quarts, he saith, they were both equal, alledging Ezekiel, who puts them together, a just Ephah, and a just bath.

Woe to them that rise in the morning to follow drunkenness. The Prophet having spoken of a vine doth here rebuke the vine-dressers, who when they should attend upon this work, give themselves wholly to riot and pleasure, from morning to night, for thus, saith Jerom, do many Princes: for which the viol also and harp are spoken of vers. 12. And he applieth this to such, as passe their time in pleasure from the morning of their youth to the night of their old-age. Rising in the morning to drink argueth the greatest intention to this sin, and continuing till night, such as are given over to do things tedious even to nature, being carried on by an evil custom; and they are said to continue at it till the wine inflames them, that is, makes them more dry and thirsty, so that the more they drink the more they desire it. The word rendred Drunkennesse, is Sichar signifying wine or strong drink, or any liquour causing drunkenness.

And the Lute and the Harp, &c. are in their feasts. That is, to make them the more mad upon pleasure, they use all manner of musick. But they consider not Gods work; that is, why man the work of Gods hands was made, viz. to labour in some honest calling, and to glorifie God, for they contrariwise like brute beasts are without this consideration. Some understand a double work, viz. of Creation and Redemption, neither of which drunkards consider, to praise him; and to love and fear him, as men ought to do. For did they but consider, consider, how God provideth meat and drink for all, and that when we eat we are therefore bound to bless God, as Dem. 8.10. they would not be so brutish, or if they considered the sufferings of Christ for our Redemption from sinne, they would not so ungratefully sit quaffing wine and strong drink, when he tasted gall and vinegar for us, or exceed so in their mirth. Amos 8.

Therefore is my people gone into Captivity, because without Knowledge, &c. That is; so stupified by gluttony and excess, that they know not him, who feeds them to serve him, but serve their own bellies. The Captivity and famine here threatned, is spoken of as past for the certainty thereof, but as Jerom saith was fulfilled in the time of Titus and Vespasian, since which the Jews have also suffered another famine, viz. of hearing the word. And it is said, Their Nobles die with famine, to aggravate the judgement, and that it might be the more remarkable. For these were they that are before complained of v. 12. to have used such excess, but now they are in want enough, and so shall all intemperate and voluptuous brutish people be one day.

Jer. 7. 32.

Ambros.

Therefore hell hath enlarged itself. The word גֵּהֶנְזֵי signifying hell or grave is here used, and she is said to have enlarged her soul by a Prosopopeia, by the soul her mouth being meant, the wide opening whereof is from the enlargement of the soul. But the grave is here commonly understood, and more particularly Tophet, otherwise called Gebenna, hell, which was the valley of the son of Hinnom, wherein they sacrificed their children to Molech; and therefore are threatned that it should be turned into a great burying place of an huge multitude of dead bodies, that should fall by the sword and famine for their sins. But here, as Ambrose noteth, Per legem talionis, they who like greedy beasts had devoured the substance of the poor, and of whose gluttony and drunkenness devouring excessively the best meats and drinks, there had been no end, are threatned, that they shall be devoured by the grave both of the greater and meaner sort. That if otherwise they would not be moved to repentance, yet for fear of so great a destruction to come upon the whole Nation they might.

Vers. 15.

And the mean man shall be bowed down, and the great man humbled, &c. For homo and vir, the words here used are to be understood, as hath been shewed Chap. 29. 17. where the words both of this, and vers. 16. have been already expounded.

Vers. 17.

And the Lambs shall be fed after their manner, &c. These words are otherwise read by the Septuagint, their torn ones shall be eaten as Bulls, and the Lambs which are taken shall eat their desert places. But the Hebrew is, as hath been said, only the words following in this verse are diversly rendred by some, Gladii medullata ruminantia devorabunt; The swords shall devour the fat chewing the cud, because the word רָכַס here used signifieth Swords as well as desert places, and רָכַס Ruminatours as well as Strangers. By others, The desolate places of the fat strangers shall eat. And this is to be preferred, and so by the Lambs the poor are to be understood, to such as remained of whom after the destruction before spoken of, it is here promised, that they should live plentifully of the possessions of the rich, who had oppressed them formerly, being now either destroyed or carried into Captivity, and the Caldeans meant by strangers should enjoy the best things of the Land, as indeed the sacred History sheweth that it came to passe. For there were left of the poor for vine-dressers and tillers of the Land, of whom the Caldeans, Their Landlords took rent. Some turning this to an Allegory, by lambs and strangers understand the Gentiles converted to the faith; it is here prophesied, That they shall be fed after the manner of the Jews in former times with the Word and Sacraments, which is the fat of their desolations, and this was fulfilled in the time of Titus and Vespasian. For the exposition of the Septuagint, Jerom saith, he knows not why they render der it so, unless by Bals, to set forth the fat Bals of Babylon, that is, the mighty men of Judea; and their destruction by the enemy, the poor as lambs after the subduing of the Countrey being let go to occupy the ground, and to feed upon the fruits thereof. For strangers devouring the best things of the Land; see before Chap. 1. 7. Calvin by lambs and strangers understandeth the same, viz. the poor faithfull, who were put from their possessions; whilst unconscionable rich men oppressed them, and now these being cut off and carried away, returned again unto them as very strangers; and these possessions are called either desolate places of the fat, that is, of rich oppressours, who incroached upon so much Land, that they could not tell how to use it all, so that much of it lay desolate, or fat desolate places for the fruitfulness of that Countrey. And so here is a consolation for such as feared God, against the danger of being all pell mell destroyed in that common judgement. For though the wicked being as Goats should perish, yet the faithfull as Lambs should be distinguished from them, and in the end reap benefit by this common calamity. Musculus mentioneth another Exposition of Lambs properly understood here, but rejects it, because God propounds not consolation for beasts, but men.

Woe to them that draw iniquity with cords of vanity, &c. Cords or ropes here, saith Calvin, serve to set forth any means, whereby the wicked sooth up themselves in their sins, and so go on in them without end, either because they think God sees them not, or to excuse them, as little, or proceeding from their nature, and therefore to be born with; or because they condemn Gods judgements, thinking that they shall never come: but because all this is vain, he calls them cords of vanity. Musculus by cart-ropes understands such sins, as they strengthened themselves in by unjust Laws, of which ch. 10. 1. Of sins called ropes or cords, see also Pro. 5. 22. Jerom likens these cords to those small threds, wherewith the Spider weaves her web, working it about her self till that she is all over inclosed herewith, but in vain. Funiculi, or cords, or cart-ropes may the sins of the wicked be well called, because as a rope consisteth of many small threds woven together, and so is drawn to a great length, and is strong and not to be broken, so sins being multiplied, and some woven into others, and long lived in, are long and strong enough to binde the sinner so that he cannot break them: but as Horses or Oxen yoked, and by ropes fastened to a loaden Cart, though at the first unwillingly, yet being used to it, they draw willingly, so the wicked draw willingly the heavy load of sin, being to sin accustomed untill that coming to the bottomless pit their load puls them down into it never to get out again. But the words rendred cart-ropes do properly signifie thicknesse, or wood of a cart, and sin as the wood of a Cart, that is, a cart filled or thickned with a great weight of wood, for which the word signifying thicknesse is put in the plural number מִצָּדִים: Here by iniquity and sinne, Cyril understands the punishments of sin, which the wicked draw upon themselves, and indeed both may be understood, 1. Sin, which is heavy, but that by being accustomed to it, the sinner feels it not, for so it is set forth, Matth. 11. 28. Heb. 12. 1. Zech. 5. 7. Psalm. 38. 5. At the first the conscience is against it, but having yielded and often done it, the sense of the weight goeth away, except the conscience by some means being awakened, it becomes again intollerably heavy, as in those that despair: and sin is drawn as with a rope, when either it being committed, more sins are added, as thred to thred in a cord, 1. Denying. 2. Refusing correction. 3. Apostatizing to a false religion to avoid it: Or to make way unto it, as to adultery, 1. Curiosity in apparel. 2. Wanton dalliance. 3. Wastefull expences are premised; or it is drawn into a great length like a rope by continuance in it. For the punishment of sin, that is certainly most heavy, as being the wrath of God, and necessarily is drawn by sin, as a cart by a rope, sith he will be avenged upon the wicked, although he be most mercifull. Of sinne drawn by cords S<sup>t</sup> Augustine before his conversion saith, I was bound, not with the chain of another, but with my own iron will. The enemy made a chain of my will, and therewith bound me : for of my perverse will was made lust, and whilst I served lust a custom was made, and whilst custom was not resisted, necessity was made, whereby as by links put one into another an hard servitude held me fast.

Which say, Let him hasten his work, let us see, &c. Here the wicked who draw on iniquity with cords, are described, viz. They are grown to that height of wickedness, that they mock at his threatnings of judgements by his Prophets, because that being threatned from time to time, they yet come not : As if they had said, we have heard thee enough threatning us in the name of the Lord, but know, that we lightly account of thy words, if he hath any thing to bring upon us, let us see it done, and tell us no more what the counsel of the holy one, as you call him, is against us, but let us feel and so know it, if he can do any thing. So that here is also intimated those Idolaters derision of the name, whereby the Prophets for more reverence commonly called the Lord, The holy One of Israel. And thus wicked men are brought in mocking, Jer. 17. 15. Ch. 20. 8. 2 Pet. 3. but the godly contrariwise believe and tremble at the hearing of Gods judgements to come. Thus Calvin and Musculus. And some wicked there are, who contemn all Gods threatnings because they think he careth not for things here below, but that herein his chief felicity lieth, that he is at continual ease, and is free from all businesses, as Epicureus ; See *Job 22. 14. It may be taken, as it is by Jerom, both wayes either of things or persons. Of things, Woe to you that say good of evil, that is, of your sins, that they are no sins but vertues, and that you are to be thought the better of therefore : for this is one thred, that comes into the cord of sinne, as vers. 18. that the wicked is not only senseless of it, and the evil thereof through a custom of sinning, but also glories in it, as thinking himself the better. So Gregory saith, The enemy palliates himself with such arts, that he feigns our faults to be vertues, so that thence a man expects rewards from whence he is worthy to endure eternal torments ; thus cruelty in taking revenge upon vice is thought justice, and the immoderate anger of just zeal merit, likewise profuseness is held mercy, senacity frugality, pertinacy constancy. And as Maximus hath it, Swearing is counted a grace to ones speech, and the angry contragious, darknesse light, and sour sweet, that is, the darknesse of errour light of truth, and sour heresies sweet truths, because nothing is sweet but truth ; or a life lead in sin, sweet and pleasant, but in the fear of God, and exactly, sour. And herein it is alluded to the sweet and four grapes before spoken of, the wicked called the sweet sour, and the sour sweet, or bitter, as the Hebrew word here signifieth.

It may also be understood of persons, so they that justify the wicked and condemn the righteous are alike abominable, and Woe is to them also, vers. 23. This, saith Musculus, is the cunning of the devil, when the wicked cannot otherwise plead for their wickednesses, to confound good and evil together : and some say of evil that it is good through errour and simple ignorance, which shall be pardoned, some that good is evil out of malice. Likewise of men, the Papists say, That a Priest is good who liveth single, although a fornicatour, but the married evil and wicked, although keeping him to his own wife only, &c. and Calvin applieth this to men of dignity who account them good, that flatter with them, but them evil that reprove their vices. Who put darknesse for light, so Hebr. by a word implying great men, by whose will as by a Law it is made so.

1 Cor. 3. 18.

Woe to them that are wise in their own eyes, &c. Here, saith Calvin, Isaiah inveigheth against them, that elude all the teaching of the Prophets by this, that they think themselves so wise, that they know what they have to do better then the Prophets can teach them, and therefore despise all their denunciations of judgements, and be with whom it is thus, goes on inevitably to destruction, because the way of becoming wise is to him dammed up, which is to become a fool, that he may be wise. Therefore a caveat is also given here-against, Prov. 3.7. Here are two words used, wise and intelligent, or prudent before your selves. Which according to Musculus, set forth one and the same thing, according to Jerom, who follows the Stoicks herein, Wisdom is in respect of divine and humane things, Prudence of humane only. But by the first may better be understood Wildom, as is opposed to foolishness in the Scripture phrase, that is righteousness, for they thought themselves righteous enough, and therefore his threatenings of them vain, and by the second, subtilty and wit not like children to be terrified by such scare-Crows as they counted them.

Woe to them that are mighty to drink wine and strong, &c. The sin of drunkennes was taxed before vers. 11. but because they were not moved against it, but lived still therein, it is again declaimed against in this verse, and likewise vers. 23 justifying the wicked, &c. which in other words is spoken against vers. 20. a ground for Preachers to inveigh against the same sins again and again, being yet unrepented of. But a new Argument is implicitly brought against this sin, viz. in that he calls them mighty to drink wine, and 7. MEN men of valour to mingle strong drink. For by thus saying he intimates to their shame, that they had no courage to fight against the enemy, but like bruit beasts all their strength was put out in drinking and quaffing; whereas meat and drink is not given us by God to go as far as we are able in filling the belly herewith, but with such moderation to use them, as that our strength may not be impaired, but increased hereby. For the last words, by strong or valiant to mingle strong drink; that mingling, saith Musculus, is not to be understood, which is of water with wine, which was the usual manner of drinking, but by mingling, pouring in of strong and inebriating liquor, use causing, mingling to be put for pouring, only he thinketh them hereby taxed that give inebriating drink to others, & so indeed it is to be thought, because Hab. 2. 14. it is expressed.
But by mingling may also be understood, mingling divers strong things together, the sooner to intoxicate others, as is the manner of some monsters, unless we take it for putting in somewhat to keep from drunkenness, although the drinking be excessive, and so a woe is to them that are not plainly drunken, yet drink to excess. For this see enough before v. 20. Only it may be added, That this is properly against Judges, who pervert Justice for bribes, giving sentence on the side of the wicked and against the good, for this is justifying the wicked here meant, and is a most damnable sin, because the Judge being lead by covetous-nes doth wittingly judge unjustly, neither can any bribe-taker be free from this corruption, Exod. 23. 8. Dent. 16. 19. whatsoever some think. Yet to take the righteousness of the Just from him is more damnable, for this is to condemn the innocent sometimes to death, and so to be guilty of blood.

By the root here Jerom will have evil thoughts meant, and by the Branch springing herefrom, the evil of speech and action, the one shall be as muck or rottenness, the other shall arise as the dust, that is, their thoughts of impunity and speeches of derision against the judgements threatned, and all their riches unjustly gotten. Their covetous thoughts, called by the Apostle, The root of all evil, shall be as rottenness within their bowels, and the fruits hereof as dust without, being ready to put out the eyes. Calvin takes it, as a Metaphor, wherein by the root of a tree rotten, all that whereupon they stood, and did bear themselves, is shewed to be of no force, but the tree of their Commonwealth must needs fall, as that tree, the root whereof is all rotten. And he saith, the same is before set forth by similitudes of stubble devoured by the tongue of the fire, &c. it being hereby meant, that they should have no more power to stand against Gods judgements, then the stubble hath against the fire: and the tongue of the fire, saith Zwinglius, is spoken of, because it lick-

Therefore the fury of the Lord hath burnt against his people, and when he stretched out his hand the mountains trembled, &c. He speaks of his stupendious Judgements as past, they being yet to come, for the certainty thereof, and he nowhere speaks more terribly, then in this case of rejecting his Word, which sheweth, that such sinners as do so, are of all others most desperate, that every one may take heed of it. Jerom applieth this to those that rejected Christ and his teaching: and he saith, That fury is ascribed to God, not that he is subject to passions, as man is, but to terrifie the wicked the more, who know how dangerous it is; if but a man great upon earth be full of fury against a poor man. Wherefore David saith, Correct me Lord, yet in judgement, not in fury. By the mountains trembling, he saith indeed, that some understand contrary powers, to whom the wicked are delivered to be punished, but he takes it as spoken hyperbolically to shew the wonderful greatness of the judgments. And not: th that this threatening is not for Idolatry, but for rejecting the Gospel, the word of promise touching the new Covenant spoken of Jer. 31. and it was fulfilled in the time of Titus and Vespasian, when his judgements against them were most terrible, and yet his hand is stretched out by continuing the Jews miseries from age to age, even unto this day; and this desolation, as Daniel prophesieth, shall continue to the end. For their carcasses lying as dung in the streets, this was never more then at the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans.

And he shall lift up a sign to the Nations afar off, &c. This, saith Jerom, is expounded by some as spoken of the Gentiles conversion, the sign lifted up being expounded of the sign of the Crosse: By the Rabbins, of the Babylonians brought against the Jews by Nehuchadnezzar. But he makes it to cohere with the former words, as shewing how the Romans should be brought to work the great destruction before spoken of for their rejecting of the Gospel: God would as a Captain set up a Standard, to which they should flock to execute his Judgements upon this rebellious Nation, and in stead of blowing with a Trumpet, he saith, he should hiss unto them, to denote his easie calling his Armies together for this execution. Because he speaks of them as Nations most remote that should come; so as the Assyrians and Babylonians were not but about six hundred miles off, and when they are spoken of, they are commonly described by the North. Yet Musculus, Calvin and others of our new Writers are for the Babylonians here meant; so likewise Lyranus. Cyril, Hissing is here taken from the Bee, as also Chap. 7. 18. who going out of the Hive, calls all the Bees of his train after him, or from the master of a ship, who thus calls the Mariners about him to do what he commands. Whether the Babylonians or Romans be here meant, I leave to the judgement of the Reader, but because they are said to be called from the ends of the earth, I prefer that of the Roman forces out of Italy, France and Spain, and the rather, because these properly were brought against them to punish the contempt of Gods Word without Idolatry, according to vers. 24. the Babylonians, their gross Idolatries, because after their return from the Babylonish Captivity, they never sinned by Idolatry more, but were most strict impugnors of it.

look to the earth, and darkness, and the light in heaven shall be darkned; That is, calamity and misery without comfort or end, such is the case of those, whom God pursues in wrath. And here, according to Jerom, ends the second Vision, begun Chap.2. Now follows the third.

CHAP. VI.

IN the year of the death of Uzziah, I saw the Lord sitting, &c. Some, saith Calvin, conjecture the Prophecy to begin here, because the Lord now first shewed himself unto him, which in reason should be at the first to prepare the Prophet the better to the execution of his office, and because he now first begins to tremble at his Prophetical calling, being so unclean, and God so pure vers. 5. which he would doubtless have done before, had the Lord before employed him in this work. Therefore they think, that the Prophecies preceding are set out of order. But he answereth, that Isaiah might at the first be only spoken to, and not till afterwards have a Vision, as the Apostles did see more afterwards than at the first: and having no Vision before of such astonishing glory, no marvel, though he were now first stricken. And that the Prophecies began before appears, because Chap. 1.1. he began to prophesie in the dayes of Uzziah, but this was after his death, a new King coming on, against the fear of whom he might be confirmed hereby to go on with courage. But how is he said to have seen the Lord, seeing he is invisible? Sol. He saw a sign of his divine Majesty, whereby he knew certainly, that God was in a special manner there: because he never sheweth any fallacious signs, as Image-makers do: his sitting upon a Throne and on high, was to set forth his royal Dignity, excelling farre that of earthly Kings. His hinder parts filled the Temple, to shew him to be that God, to whose honour the Temple was built, to cause the more awfull regard in the people to this Prophecies. Jerom here notes, that Uzziah was a Leper, and smitten with the leprosie in the Temple, whereby it was polluted. Therefore till he was dead God appeared not there any more, but now he shews himself in such manner as best pleased him, to intimate, that a polluted King is so displeasing to God, that Gods favour is not towards his Church where he reigneth, till that by death he hath taken him away. The word וְיָוִם sim-brie ejus, is by the LXX rendred, His glory; by Theodotion and Symmachus, Qua sub pedibus ejus erant; by Jerom, Qua sub ipso erant; he appeared then on high, and the skirts of his garments only in the Temple filling it. And this Lord was God the Son, for to him this is by John applied, saying, Isaiah spake of him, when he saw his glory. Thus most of the Ancients, holding that all times when God is said to appear, God the Son is meant, and those Apparitions were a Preludium of his Incarnation. Yet some understand God the Father, and some the whole Trinity, but the first is most probable. Touching the year wherein Uzziah died, some understand hereby the year, in which he was smitten with Leprosie, because then he was dead civilly; some granting his natural death to be meant, hold yet that he was not dead when Isaiah had this Vision, but that he died in that year; but the first is best for the reason before-going; the leprous King was dead, and so Gods anger, whereunto he was stirred by him, as the head of that people, was over, and he began again to shew some token of his favour. And he appears as need then required in kingly Majesty, that the wicked who contemned his judgements might hereby be stricken with the more terrour, and so be reduced to obedience.

And Seraphims standing above, W<sup>o</sup> from above; that is, somewhat lower as he appointed to minister to him. Those translations therefore, which have it, above him, or above it, as the vulgar Latine, give needlesly occasion to enquire how it can be so said, sith the servant is not in station above his Lord or his Throne: for being rendred word for word according to the Hebrew, the sense is good and without all question, as it is here given. pears not without his attendants standing before him ready at his beck to execute his will. And they are spoken of here onely as many in the Plural, but Dan. 7. and 1c. they are said to be thousand thousands that minister to him, yet not Seraphims, but Angels. The Seraphims have their name from burning, 1. Because they burn with the love of God. 2. Are swift as fire to do his will. 3. Shine as fire, so Oecolampadius: And the same are sometime called Angels, that is, Messengers, sometime Seraphims, that is, burning ones, although Dionysius distinguisheth them from other Angels, as being more inflamed through their nearness to the throne of God. Some think that these Seraphims were only two, and will have the Son and holy Ghost set forth hereby, as in the Sanctum Sanctorum were two Cherubims: but this is a vain conjecture, and because it puts an inequality betwixt the persons of the Trinity, to be abhorred, Ezek. 1. 5. Four Animals or living creatures appear, to represent the Angels attending upon God, and these are held to be the Cherubims, another order of heavenly Angels, and Ezek. 10. 1, 2. they are so called. And it is to be noted, That the Seraphims stand, God sitting, whereupon Bernard censures Lucifer, noting it to be the cause of his ejection out of Heaven, that he would set his throne besides the throne of God, telling him, that he had only one property of the Seraphims, viz. to shine, but not that of burning with the love of God, and therefore now he burns in hell, and is foul and ugly, and without all shining. Six wings had one, the wings of the Angels serve to shew their swiftness in executing Gods will. But yet they have each one two only for this end, and two to cover their face, to shew the brightness of Gods glory to be such, that they cannot with open face behold it: yet it is not to be conceived that they cover the whole face with their wings, but so much as that the dazzling lustre of that excessive brightness might not confound them, but yet they may see their Lord, and be ready at his beck. A notable Embleme of a right Minister of God, who must be prompt and ready, and flie as with wings about the work of his Ministry, burning alwayes with holy zeale through the love of God. Yet his carriage must be reverent towards the Lord, and he must be content to acknowledge his ignorance of many things, and that they are covered from him, meddling only with those that are revealed. The two wings to cover the Seraphs, are from such as are under them, viz. mortal men, and serve to shew, That we are as unable to behold the brightness of an Angel, as an Angel that infinite glory of the Lord. Wherefore both Daniel and John were so stricken at such an appearance, that they fell down as dead, all their strength being dissolved through fear. Wherefore the best amongst men ought to think themselves poor, infirm creatures, and behave themselves accordingly towards God, who is so glorious: thus almost Calvin. But in a far different manner Jerom, Illi sex ala, & sex ala alteri, is not being expounded with וְשֵׁשׁ but to the six wings, as in the translation mentioned; wherefore I marvel why Jerom hath it super illud, when as the word signifieth nothing but desuper, and the Septuagint, in circuitu ejus; if the particle signifying illi be left to go with six wings, as it must, or else the sense will be imperfect. Jerom, I say, expounds the Seraphs covering his face with two of his wings, and with two his feet, as spoken of his covering Gods face and feet, because the Hebrew particle וְ may as well have reference to God, as to the Cherub. And hereof he makes an excellent Allegory thus, The face of God setteth forth things past before the beginning of the world, his feet things to come after this world ended: both these covered then serve to shew the concealing of such things from us, those only being set forth for us to know, which shall, or have come to passe within the compasse of the time of this world, which was made in six dayes, to signifie which either of them hath six wings, the two to flie with do not only serve to set forth their readines, but their abode in Heaven above, as the proper place of their residence. Cyril agreeing with Jerom in their covering of Gods face and feet, expounds it as shewing Gods eternity both à parte ante, and à parte post, to be incomprehensible. Rupertus the conjunction or union of Christs

Christs Divinity and humanity to be a most hidden Mystery. Chrysostom differs not from Calvin, saying that, whereas Calvin by their covering their feet, understands the inability of men upon earth to endure the sight of their glory, he, their being ashamed, that God should see the imperfection of their affections, (set forth by their feet) towards him. And to me this of Chrysostom seems to be best, because if there were many Seraphims about Gods throne, as doubtless there were thousands, it cannot be conceived, how each one with his two wings should cover his face alike, and with two his feet, unless by covering their own faces, his face being hid from them, and his feet also not being open to theirs, because theirs were covered. And if covering be referred to both this way, none of these Allegories are impertinent, but may well stand together. By covering their feet the Hebrews use to set forth not properly or particularly the feet, but the nether parts, which we are ashamed should be seen, being for this called Pudenda, this therefore sheweth, That the very Angels, which are so glorious, are not without all blemish before the most High, or at the least in humility acknowledge it, how much more then should the holiest amongst men? Moses by Gods direction made two Cherubims in the most holy place, the sign of Gods presence, extending their wings over his Mercy-seat, for which it is said, God dwells between the Cherubims; here the Seraphims, which may be conceived to be an higher order of Angels, and those many, appear, not with two wings, as they were figured, but with six, which plainly intimates a distinction according to Dionysius, who makes nine orders of holy Angels. Some following this reading, Six and six wings were to one, think that each one had twelve, but it is illis sex, & sex alteri, as was said before. Six wings might set forth a six-fold motion upward, downward, backward, forward, to the right hand and to the left, any way were they ready to flie, when God would. If it be demanded, How did they flie, and yet are said to stand? Sol. It is said with two he did flie, because he was alwayes ready so to do. But it is to be understood, that this was but a representation, the Angels have no wings indeed, but are spirits swifter then any thing that hath wing, sent out for the good of those that are chosen to life at the good pleasure of God.

And they cried one to another holy, holy, holy Lord God of hosts, &c. After their description here followeth their Hymn sung unto God, their crying to one another was their exciting of one another, and they praise God by his holinesse, one first beginning, and then the second to the third, and he to the fourth, &c. The thrice iterating of the word holy, both intimates the Trinity, and that the Lord only is holy, the authour of all holinesse, and most excellent for holinesse; and lastly with what intention and perseverance the Angels praise him hereby, that we may imitate them herein, and be enamoured with holinesse, as the most excellent of all the Divine Attributes, as without which none shall see God, and abhor from prophanenesse and all filchinesse of sinne, as most debasing and vilifying. The earth is full of thy glory, that is, the glory of thy wisdom and power shineth all over it, in the making, ordering and governing thereof and all things therein. Or the earth is spoken of as full of his glory, according to some in admiration of the sons incarnation; so Jerom, who also saith, that the earth in general is spoken of, as full of his glory, in opposition to the Jews brags, who confined all his glory to the Temple. It is spoken also to shew, that all Nations should be converted, which should be to Gods great Glory. Thus also Calvin, wherefore when a Nation imbraceth the true Faith, it is full of Glory divine, so as none besides is. Whereas this cry is referred by some, as Jerom hath it, to two only Cherubims setting forth the Old and New Testament, because therein the holinesse and Glory of God is continually set forth, I leave it to the judicious Reader. There is a like saying to this Numb. 14.21. All the earth shall be filled with my Glory; so likewise Psal. 70. This angelical Hymn hath been wonderful in the use of it amongst men, if it be true, which is related by Baronius an. 1055. Vittor 2. understanding

He therefore understanding that the Arch-bishop was Simoniackal, required him to say, Gloria Patri, Filio, & Spiritu Sancto: then he said the two first, but the third he could by no means bring forth, assaying to do it again and again; whereupon he was so confounded, that he fell at the Arch-deacons feet, and confessed his simony, and being for this degraded and deposed he could say all most freely, which other simoniackal Prelats seeing, they came and confessed theirs also, and voluntarily left their dignities: this and more like it which savour of fabulous legendar hath Cornelia Lapide.

And the posts of the superliminaries were moved when they cried, and the whole house was filled with smoke. Jerom understands this as a figure of the destruction of the Temple, when once the earth should be filled with Christs Glory, that is, the faith of him suffering, incarnate rising, and ascending into heaven with his body, and of the burning of the Temple, and blinding the Jews eyes, whereof the smoke filling the Temple was a sign. The Jews will have the fume to be that of incense, and a sign of the presence of the divine Majesty. Cyril and Thomas Aquinas follow Jerom; Calvin will have the moving of the door-posts to shew, that this was not the voice of man, but of a greater power, which should alwayes much more, when he speaketh, move our hearts, if the senseless creature were hereby moved and shook. The smoke filling the Temple, an usual sign of Gods presence; here he saith sets forth both, that man should not pry too far into Gods secrets, and his wrath against the Jews being ready to burn like fire, for in this sense smoking is ascribed to him, Psal. 18. 9. 1 Sam. 11. 9. Apoc. 15. 8. The Septuagint say, The door-posts were lifted up, as if to make more room for the Lord to go out and depart from the Temple. That of Jerom seemeth to me to agree best, neither do I exclude that of Calvin, intimating a curbing of mans curiosity about things not revealed, because filling the house with fume when God appeared, was a thing often used.

Calvin.

And I said, Woe is me, because I am cut off, for I am a man of polluted lips, &c. Jerom renders it, Quia taceui, because I held my peace, as being of polluted lips, and so unworthy with the holy Seraphims to praise God, and he speaks of this as the cause thereof, that he dwelt amongst a people of polluted lips, to shew, how dangerous it is to contract pollution to converse amongst corrupt speakers, and yet well did Isaiah acquit himself, that contracted hereby none other corruption but of his lips. The Hebrew word signifieth either to be silent, or to be cut off; but it may rather be taken thus here, because the word is in Niphal נִפְלַח, which cannot agree to being silent, and it is plainly the voice of one lamenting his death, as seeing it at hand, because he had seen the Lord, as Manoah sometime did; so Calvin and Musculus. He makes this moan, to shew, that when God appears, the most pure are impure, and therefore cannot stand, but must needs be consumed and brought to nothing. But why doth he complain of the pollution of his lips only, was he free from all other pollution? Sol. No, but being a Prophet his lips were of special use to declare Gods holy will to the people; and therefore this smote him most, that they were polluted, whereby God might be most provoked. This troubled him not before, but when the Lord approached; to shew, that when he comes near to any heart, he straitway seeth all vileness in himself, who before thought himself somebody, and his righteousness now seems to him to be nothing. For his dwelling amongst a people of polluted lips, he hereby intimates, that he was no better then one of the common sort; Because I have seen God, that is, the sight of God, who is life, hath shewed me that which before I saw not, viz. my self to be a dead man, so I was before, but was not sensible of it, now I am. So Calvin. Or it may be rendred, I was smitten and made dumb through astonishment at this glorious apparition. How his lips were polluted, Jerom, Cyril and Haimo conjecture, viz. by his taciturnity at the sinne of Uzziah, when he presumed to go to the Temple to offer incense: but of this pollu-

Note.

pollution enough before, his dwelling amongst such is spoken of, to intimate corruption thus more contracted, and as that which is excellent, and that which is vile being placed near one another, the vile sheweth more vile, so fared it with the Prophet, when the Lord appeared; he then seemed to himself more polluted then before, and this made him so lamentably to cry out.

Then one of the Seraphims flew unto me, and had in his hand a burning Coal, &c. Verf. 6.

And applying it to my mouth, said, Behold this hath touched thy lips, thou art purged from thy uncleanness. In the house of God, where Isaiah saw this Vision, was an Altar, and thereupon fire, which first came down from Heaven, a coal of this fire therefore is taken, to shew, that the purging away of sinfull pollution is from God in Heaven, and that nothing is to be found upon earth that can do it. But seeing Isaiah prophesied before, why was he not prepared to this holy work, by purging at the first, or did the former part of his Prophecie come out of his lips being polluted? Sol. He was doubtles sanctified at the first to this office, but because no sanctification of man here is perfect, hereby is shewed only, that he was now more sanctified, to purchase unto him yet more authority amongst the people, and to encourage him the more from thence forward; so Calvin. And whereas a fire-coal is used, he saith, this was but for a sign, as something outward is taken in the Sacrament, but the vertue is wholly in God, which hereby worketh good to us. And the outward thing is used only for mans confirmation, who is not a meer spirit, but a body also, and therefore must receive sanctification from God, not immediately as the Angels, but by corporeal means. And a fire-coal is used to shew, that corruption is so grounded in man, that there needs burning fire to purge it out, for which the Lord puts his into the fiery furnace of adversity to purge out all their dross as from silver and gold. And to the sign words are used to make a perfect Sacrament, as be the Sacraments of the New Testament: under the Old indeed no words were used, or at the least no form prescribed, as we may see in Circumcision and the Passeeover, only there was a word requiring them to be done, and the words of institution were doubtlesse recited every time, according to Gen. 17. and Exod. 13. But to the signs in Baptism and the Lords Supper, words are annexed, without which it is no Sacrament. So here for Isaiah his assurance, it is said, Behold this Coal hath touched thy lips, &c. wherein the cautelousnesse of the Angel is to be noted, to speak so as that nothing in this work of cleansing might be ascribed to him, but all to God. He saith not therefore, I have touched, but this Coal, brought by me only, as Gods Minister, and yet as the Coal was fiery or burning, so he had his name Seraphim from burning, much lesse then is there any vertue sanctificative in any man minister, when he gives the bread, or washeth with water, but in God only. He makes the sign effectual to that end for which he gives it, and excludes no faithfull person with an empty sign, neither shall the wicked finde it such, when they shall another day be judged for not discerning the Lords body. Jerom in stead of carbo, a burning coal, hath it lapillum, a stone, a carbuncle, which shews like a burning Coal, with many of which the Altar was beset about. But the word here used doth not signifie any precious stone, but carbo, and why else should he take it with tongs? Yet some stand for a Carbuncle, which is the most precious of all stones, yet not an earthly but heavenly, because things in Heaven were here represented, and so although an earthly Carbuncle is without heat, although it be put into a most hot burning fire, yet the heavenly may be the burning Coals of the Altar there. If it had been a burning Coal made of wood, it would have burnt the Prophets lips, and so made him in stead of speaking better, to lisp. But who knoweth not that here was nothing really done, but in a figure? Isaiah was thus made a Preacher of the Gospel, because inaugurated to his office by a fire-coal, as the Apostles to theirs by Cloven Tongues of fire. And as they before timorous, after this grew courageous and free to speak without all fear, so he, as the next words declare, where he saith, Send me] The Seraphims taking of the Coal with tongs, shewed timoroufness in Gods Ministers at the first, in going about the preaching of the Word, which hath a purging quality, as fire, but when this fiery coal of the Word hath once touched their lips, that is, they have by the spirit been made to enter upon the work, all fearfulness vanissheth, and courage not troubled at any presence of Kings and counsels, is put on. Jer. 1.9. The lips of Jeremy are otherwise touched by Gods finger, the Lord proceeds not alwayes alike, but sometime one way, then another, as he pleaseth.

Verf.8.

Afterwards I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send, and who shall go for us, &c. Hebr. And I heard, and so the vulgar Latine without the word (postea) in Marlorat. The Lord makes not this enquiry, as if he knew not, but to shew that he is not a vulgar, but choice man, whom he sendeth, a very sanctified and special instrument of the spirit, so that if any of the vulgar sort takes upon him this office, or any having a blemish contrary to Levit. 21. 18. he is censured as running before he is sent, Jer. 23. 21. He that is sent hath his lips touched to speak wisely as the word of God, which the illiterate now adayes cannot, because they cannot interpret it for want of skill in the tongues. Who shall go for us? this is spoken in the Plural to intimate more persons in the Deity, and it is said [for us] to shew that a Prophet must not go for himself, or seek his own ends, but for God. This enquiry also intimates it to be an hard task in regard of the hatred and enmity of men, which the Prophet incurs. Yet Isaiah being now purged from his sins, is nothing afraid to set upon it, and the assurance of this makes any man courageous, For the righteous is bold as a Lion, but such as are still in their sins timorous and fearful, for which it is necessary that a Preacher should live clear from sin.

Hieronym.

Jerom notes, That he saith, Whom shall I send, and commands not Isaiah to go, so that, will he, nill he, he must go, because he loves a willing minde, if he doth but intimate his pleasure a preparing to do it with all readines. The Jesuite draws this to the Præfatus of any religious order, but absurdly, unlesse he will make a god of him. Neither was it arrogancy in him to offer, but confidence that he was purged. Moses being bidden refused, yet not out of obstinacy, but because he was not yet confirmed, neither heard he, This coal hath touched thy lips, for they were not touched thus by all the learning of Aegypt which he had. The Hebrews say, that Isaiah thought he should go to speak comfort to the people, and therefore he was so forward, and when he saw the contrary being bidden afterwards to cry, he did not forthwith cry, but said first, What shall I cry? and Jeremy being bidden to offer the cup of Gods wrath to all adversary Nations to drink and be drunken and fall, doth it willingly, but when he was bidden to offer it to Jerusalem, being displeased hereat, he cried out, Lord, thou hast deceived me. But this is over-curious, and too derogatory to the holy Prophets, yet they were men, and as Elias subject to like passions.

Verf.9.

Go and say to this people, hearing ye shall hear, but not understand, &c. The Prophet having offered himself, is now bidden to go about a most unpleasant and harsh service, so that he had need to be so prepared to it as he was: for what more grievous to a Prophet, then to prophesie to make his hearers worse, not only in regard of the hurt thus done to them, but of the scandall to others, enemies of all goodness, who are hereupon ready to disgrace prophesying as being the cause of making a people worse, as the wicked have lately objected against often preaching in our reformed Churches. No servant of God must therefore be dismayed or discouraged at this, that his labours in the work of God succeed no better, but looking at his sovereign who implies him, go on constantly and declare his will, exhort and rebuke with all freeness. But if this be the effect of prophesying or preaching, because he saith,

Verf.10.

Make the heart of this people fat or obdurate, lest they should be converted, Doth the

the Lord well in sending out Prophets amongst those, in whom such dreadful effects are wrought? Ans. He doth well because it is not through any default in his sending, but their own corruption; prophesying is as the giving of the Law, which is good and holy, a light and direction, better then the sweetest meat or greatest treasure, yet through the corruption of mans heart causing all manner of sin and death, as good meat to an evil stomach, and treasure to a riotour. 2. Amongst the wicked, whose hearts are made obstinate, some few are hereby stricken and made penitent. 3. In Gods sending mercy, shineth to aggravate the damnation of the wicked, seeing he vouchsafes them means, and so they are without excuse. 4. He thus judgeth them spiritually with stupidity and blindness, and incapability of light, as they are well worthy for the abuse of that, which they formerly had, being bred and brought up alwayes where the light was, and peculiarly chosen to walk in it, and obliged by singular blessings above other peoples. Jerom renders it, Blinde the heart of this people, taking it as a prayer of the Prophet, and the former words, By hearing hear but understand not; &c. As if God had given it in charge to Isaiah to say thus, whereupon he makes a great Question, How this can be justified, to forbid that, for want of doing which they shall be destroyed, or for the Prophet to pray for it? And he answers, That thus God would have it come for a time to the Jews for a greater good to the Gentiles, who were very many Nations, but the Nation of the Jews only one, and accordingly Isaiah prayeth, because the conversion and salvation of innumerable peoples, which could not without this judgement falling upon the Jews have been, is brought to passe to Gods greater glory, one people only being but for a time suspended from this benefit, and yet not all neither, for a remnant of Apostles and Ministers of the Gospel were enlightened and made lights to the rest of the world, and the time shall come, when a deliverer shall come out of Zion, to turn away iniquity from Jacob, and so all Israel shall be saved. And thus he also understands the prayer of David, cited Rom. 11. 10. Let their eyes be darkened, and bow down their backs alwayes. And that in John, They could not believe, because the holy Ghost spake thus by the Prophet Isaiah, and whom he will he hath mercy upon, and whom he will he hardeneth. Thus he, following the Hebrew letter, wherein the word is imperative, but the Septuagint render it according to the true meaning, Hearing ye shall hear but not understand, taking the imperative for the future, an Enallage usual amongst the Hebrews, and this is also confirmed Act. 28. 26. where the Septuagint translation is followed. And thus here is no cause of such a Question, it being not here commanded unto them not to understand or perceive, but prophesied, that they should do thus through their own corruption, as one that wilfully shuts his eyes against the light, and through Gods just judgement following hereupon, so that they could now do no otherwise, being denied the grace whereby to be made capable of the light to be enlightened hereby. And whereas he makes this a prayer of the Prophet against them, Make blinde their eyes, or their heart fat, it is plainly the saying of the Lord to the Prophet; and it is likewise nothing but a command to Isaiah to prophecy, that their heart should be made fat by means of him, and such as he was in those times, and afterwards by Christ and his Apostles, they first winking with their eyes through their own malice against them, and so being blinded, then left by God, as was said before, and so becoming irrecoverably blinde to their destruction. In all which no fault can be laid upon God, although sometime he be spoken of as blinding and hardening, for it is not so spoken properly, but because he enlighteneth not, neither mollifieth the hearts of such, who harden themselves, and then they cannot but persist in blindness, see upon Rom. 9.

And I said, how long (Lord) and he said, whilst the Cities are wasted without inhabitant, &c. That is, saith Jerom, how long shall they be thus blinded? for Isaiah was solicitous for his people, although he were set to denounce this heavy Judgement against them, and therefore enquires anxiously, How long?

Untill there be a tithe, and a returning, and it be cut down as an Holm-tree, and an Oak; in the removall whereof there is a subsistence, so in this there shall be an holy seed, a subsistence. Jerom, Yet there shall be in it a decimation, and again it shall become a prey as a terebinth or an Oak, which hath cast her fruits, there shall be an holy seed, which shall stand in her; That is, when the people shall be carried far off into Captivity, and they shall be multiplied in the midst of the earth, as was said vers. 12. all this multiplication shall not reach to above the tenth part of that which they were before; and again, fifty years after, when Adrian the Emperour shall come, he shall make the Land utterly desolate, forbidding all Jews to inhabit there any more, but such as shall believe in Christ, that is, the Apostles and others lead by them shall be an holy seed established to continue and multiply. Calvin by the tithe understands ten Kings to come after this Prophecie before that Judea should go into desolation, Jorham, Ahaz, Hezekiah, Manasses, Ammon, Josiah, Joachaz, Jehoiachim, Jehoiachin, Zedekiah, in whose time it was made desolate; yet it may be understood, saith he, of the tenth part of the people remaining, ten of a hundred, or a hundred of a thousand. But what comfort is in this, after returning to speak of cutting down again? Vatablus and Calvin answer, the cutting down shall be but as of a Tree, which when it casts the fruits and leaves in Autumn, yet it springs again in the rising of the year; which declares, that although it lookt as a dead Tree, yet it had substance and life in it all the while, how ever it appeared not. And in the Nation of the Jews this subsistence was an holy seed, a little company of faithful persons in all ages, till the conversion of the Nation shall be to the faith of Christ. But before they suffered not only by destruction and desolation, but were carried afar off, viz. to Babylon, according to v. 12. Besides the two expositions before-going touching the tithe, that shall be, another is brought by some thus, there shall be a carrying away of the ten Tribes. 4. #### CHAP. VII.

Verf. 1.

Hieronym.

And it came to passe in the daies of Ahaz, that Rezin King of Syria, and Pekah son of Remaliah King of Israel came up to fight against Jerusalem, &c. Ahaz the son of Jorham (who reigned when Isaiah had the vision of chap. 6.) was a most wicked idolater, 2 Chron. 28. 2 King. 16. although his father Jorham did right; and therefore God vouchsafed in his time to shew himself in royall Majesty, Uzziah who was smitten with leprosie for his pride being dead. But Ahaz the son of Jorham, the son of Uzziah reigning was for his abominable wickedness diversly judged: First, By the Syrians and their King Rezin, then by Pekah King of Israel, and by the Edomites and Philistines, 2 Chron. 28. whereof no mention is made here, although the blow given him by Pekah and his Ephraimites were exceeding great, a hundred and twenty thousand being slain in one day, and two hundred thousand women and children carried away captive.

captivē. And upon the next coming of those two Kings against him only, Isaiah toucheth, because of the Prophetic upon occasion of deliverance from them, touching our deliverance by Jesū the son of a Virgin here following, v. 14. And of this their coming up only it is spoken, 2 King. 16. and that they could not prevail, the reason being left to be shewed here, viz. Gods mercy to Judah and to David moving him yet to preserve that Kingdom to his seed, to promise which in his name Isaiah is here sent. The circumstances of this expedition, saith Calvin, are to be considered, that the miraculous deliverance of Judah may be the more magnified. The King of Syria had before prevailed against Judah, and the King of Israel more; thus weakening the state of Judah so much, that they made account now joyning together without doubt to take Jerusalem, and to dispose of the whole Kingdom at their pleasure, making such a King over it as they pleased, v. 6. the seed of David, of which Christ was to come, being extinct, and the hearts of the house of David also faint; being moved, as leaves shaken with the winde, v. 2. that is, the heart of Ahaz and all of the bloud royall, counting their case now desperate, as of men for whom there was no help; and not without cause, for so much as sin makes timorousness, and righteousness boldness and courage: Levit. 26.36. They shall flee at the shaking of a leaf, and contrariwise, Prov. 28.1. The righteous is bold as a lion. And all this is thus set forth, that the deliverance following might be ascribed wholly to God, and in no part to man, which the hard-hearted unbelieving Jews were unwilling to do, being rather ready to impute it to themselves or to fortune, and thus to rob God of his glory.

Calvin.

But they could not prevail. This is spoken by a Prolepsis, this thing remaining to be declared in the verses next following. They prevailed before, Judah being in the full strength, but now the strength thereof being so much broken by the slaughter of so many men, they could not prevail; see the marvellous works of God, that we may seek to him, and having his word, trust to it, in how desperate a condition soever we may seem to be, for all things are possible to him.

Note.

Then said the Lord to Isaiah, Go out to meet Ahaz, &c. He must go out to him into the field, for when the wicked King should have gone to the Temple to seek to the Lord, he went into the field to study with himself what to do in this extremity, or as men that are troubled, go sometime into one place, sometime into another, or he was fleeing away to some other City for fear, thinking to be safer there. The Prophet is bidden to go out to meet him; to shew the goodness of God even towards the wicked, who seek not to him, to their more just condemnation, because their hearts are hardened against all his goodness. He is bidden to go and take with him his son Shear-jashub: Vulgar Lat. and Septuagint, him that was left Jashub, respecting rather the signification of Shear, Left, as Jashub signifies, shall return. But we take altogether, as his sons name, which doubtless had been given him by a prophetical spirit, as Abah-shalah-habbaz, ch. 8. By this very name Shear-jashub, the remnant shall return, God would set forth the return of some of the captivity to Jerusalem again, although but a remnant in comparison. The Rabbins following the Septuagint, say that one son of Isaiah called Rabshakeh, was fled now to the Assyrians, and came again in Hezekiah's time, to persuade them to turn to the Assyrians: Therefore this son Jashub is said to be left: But to passe this over as an invention; his son must go with him, who carried a prophetic in his name, that though the two Kings, that now came against Jerusalem had slain very many before, yet the people now remaining should be converted and saved, so that by taking this son with him, he made a demonstration in the name of that in part, which he promised by the spirit of Prophecy. Some doubt, whether the Prophets natural son, or a disciple of his so called, be here meant; because young men trained up by Prophets, were called then, Sons of the Prophets: But surely, as most hold, he was his natural son, and therefore Isaiah was a married man, contrary to the tenet of some Popish Expofitors, who seek seek every where to press out what they can for the magnifying of a vowed single life: But neither was Elisabab called the son of Elijah, although his son most notably in that sense, nor Sebezi his son, but his servant. To the end of the Conduit of the upper pool, &c. Of this and the neather pool, see before, upon 2 King. 18.17.

Verf. 4.

And thou shalt say to him, Be quiet and fear not, &c. The Prophet is sent to him, though a most wicked King, with words of comfort, telling him what consultations the two Kings had, viz. to take the City, and putting him down, to set up the son of Tabcal for King; concerning whom Jerom saith, either they meant a good God, viz. their own God, so called according to the signification of the word, or some man so called, who was both fit for his valour to make a King of, and for his complying with them such an one as they might have to rule there according to their own hearts desire, as acknowledging to have received his Kingdom from them. Others follow, some one of these, and some another; but most probably a man is meant, who was called by this name, and not an Heathen god or idol, because it is said, the son of Tabcal. Neither doth al, the last syllable, signifie a God, but el: It was therefore some great man of that Kingdom, unknown to us, because no more is elsewhere spoken of him, known to them to be an enemy to the house of David, and a friend to them, and therefore good for them, as the first syllable of the word may signifie: Thus also almost Musculus, who mentioneth his Tribe in particular, Benjamin. But Sasbont saith, some take him to be the son of the King of Syria, and some again will have him the son of Remaliah otherwise thus called. But all are conjectures, and so to be left for every one to judge of. Whereas it is said [In the midst of it] the meaning is, over the whole in full power, so that they had no purpose to destroy this Kingdom, but the seed of David; another King being set up, and the Kingdom so remaining still as a confederate of theirs, but this is all soon dashed in a word, It shall not stand, it shall not be saith the Lord; that is, this counsel shall not stand now, neither shall it be hereafter thus brought about, but shall be in vain, as if nothing had ever been consulted or attempted to this purpose.

Verf. 10, 11.
Hieronym.

And the Lord added, Ask for thee a sign, either in the depth or above on high. Jerom, when Abaz was not moved by the speech of the Prophet, the Lord vouchsafed vouchsafed to speak himself unto him, if haply he would be moved, hearing the voice of his Majesty. And he biddeth him ask a sign of the Lord, not of any idol or false god, to which he was addicted, and that either from hell, to have the earth cleaved asunder to see into that place of torment, or from heaven to see a way opened for the Son of man to ascend, for so in due time he both descended and ascended, as it is said Eph. 4.10. From the earth by Moses a sign was shewed in Egypt, when lice and frogs were brought forth out of the earth; and from heaven, when hail and lightening came from thence: But here he is permitted to ask a sign further stretching, that he might be confirmed touching the deliverance promised and the destruction of their enemies threatned. And to this of places deeper and more low then the earth, Calvin seemeth to assent; although Musculus and some others, by the depth, understand the earth: But though the earth be beneath, yet because this word is not used to set forth the earth, but the sea or hell, it is best understood of hell; in opening a way to which, that it might be seen, God could as easily shew a sign, as in the earth. And whereas Jerom understands these words, The Lord added, of the speaking of the Lord himself, Musculus, Oecolampadius, &c. take it for the Prophets speaking in his Name; as if it had been said, The Lord hath further given me in charge to say unto thee, &c. which is rather to be held, because the next words after Abaz his answer, are certainly the words of the Prophet in the Lords Name. And it was a wonderfull favour to a wicked man, that God should condescend so far as to give him what sign soever he would ask, seeing God is to be believed without signs; and sometimes they that ask signs, who were of Abaz his condition, are upbraided hereby and denied, as the Pharisees.

Calvin.

And Abaz said, I will not ask a sign, neither will I tempt the Lord. He seemeth to give such credit to the Word of God, that he would believe without a sign; the asking of a sign being in some case judged a tempting of the Lord, as appears by that saying, Matth. 4. Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God. But this was feigned piety in Abaz, and manifest disobedience, when he was bidden to ask a sign, to deny so to do. And so it is, saith Calvin, in a Christian now to neglect the holy Sacraments, Baptisme or the Supper of the Lord, because he believes without these signs, and accounts them but superfluous to salvation; but this they cannot do without rejecting also the whole Gospel. And Luther speaks also to the same effect. For God knows better then our selves, what we stand in need of; and therefore, as it is a point of impiety not to believe without signs, when God will give none, as Dives and his brethren, or without new signs according to their own will, when there be signs enough shewed without asking, as the Pharisees; so it is to refuse signs offered, as is the case of non-Communicants. Yet sometime a sign in particular hath been asked without offence, as by Gideon; yet, as Calvin hath it, not without the instinct of the Spirit. Jerom and other Ancients think, that Abaz spake thus, as meaning to consult with his gods, not regarding what the Prophet said to him in the Lords Name: And some, that he would provide for his deliverance by his gifts to the King of Affyria, and needed no help or sign from the Lord in his present strait. Therefore Ambrose was mistaken, who thought, that in modesty and humility he asked a sign; for both his condition being an Idolater, and the Prophets reply declare the contrary.

And he said, Hear ye house of David, is it a smal matter for you to be troublesome to men, but ye will be troublesome to my God? The word מְעִיב rendred by troubling, signifieth wearying; and it is as if he had said (O Abaz, and ye his kinsmen and Counsellours) Is it not enough for you to weary and vex me, by giving so little heed to my words, and other Prophets of God, but ye will so manifestly sleight God also, when he so graciously offers, to confirm by sign, deliverance unto you out of your great danger, as desperately incredulous and not believing him to be able to do this? Certainly this obtnacy in you is intolerable, and ye shall one day suffer for it at the hands of God, whom ye thus incense and provoke. Ye house of David. He calls them, not for honour in this place, but to their greater reproach, saith Calvin; it being more hainous for the seed of so worthy a King or man, to be desperately wicked, then for other men. In saying, Weary men, he speaks according to their conceit, because they thought the Prophets but men like themselves, and so contemned their threatnings, as many also now adaies do: For they are indeed Gods instruments, by whom he worketh, and therefore to despise them, is to despise God. But granting that they were but men, and so in other offices they might be sleighted, yet when they come to offer so great a favour from God, and extraordinary, of giving a sign, to be sleighted, is a most intollerable wearying of God of all others, yet such wearers do the Prophets meet withall even in the family of David, in the holy Church of God. And it is to be noted, that he changeth the Pronoun here, saying [My God] whereas before he had him, Ask a sign of the Lord thy God Intimating, that the wicked have nothing to do with God, he is not theirs, but the God of the righteous only; they are therefore said to be without God in the world; and of the god of this world we reade, 2 Cor. 4. 4. Jerom supposing, that the offer of a sign came immediately from God, understands a change of the person speaking in this verse, viz. from God to the Prophet: And for trouble or wearying, he saith, the Septuagint and Theodorion have it agonem, striving, as a Physitian is made to strive with an unruly patient, and finally to lose his labour, the disease not being cured, but continuing to his destruction. And by the house of David, he will have his Tribe, the Tribe of Judah meant. Ahaz and others of the royall Family like minded to him being reproved thus, but the rest of that Tribe spoken to so many as beleevd to their exceeding great comfort, v. 14.

Therefore the Lord himself will give you a sign, a Virgin shall conceive, &c. The word Virginitas rendered a Virgin, is by all Expositours, except the Septuagint, of old, rendered a young woman (saith Jerom) But it signifieth a young one hidden or kept close from the view of men, by the care of her parents; neither is the word used in any place, to set forth a young woman, without this addition, hidden. Moreover it is absurd so to render it, sith it is no sign or wonder for a young woman to bring forth a son, but for a Virgin: And in the Punick tongue, which comes from the Hebrew, Alma doth alwaies signifie a Virgin. The blessed Virgin Maries bringing forth then, is here prophesied of, although it may seem impertinent to the present purpose, as happening many hundreds of years after, and the destruction of those two Kingdoms, Syria and Israel, was then at hand. But it is inserted per raptum Propheticum, as is usual amongst the Prophets, to bring in sometimes a spiritual rapture, to which the Spirit carries them upon a sudden, and then to return to that, of which they were speaking before. But how is it pertinent to the thing in hand, to foretell of the birth of Jesus, when a sign should be given of their deliverance from those two Kings? Sasbont answers well, that this sign is not unaptly now given, because of the similitude betwixt the deliverance by Jesus, and that presently promised. For as they were unworthy to be saved from those two Kings, and yet God out of his meer mercy promised it; so both they and all men are most unworthy of salvation by Jesus, yet God out of his grace and mercy promiseth this also. Calvin will have this the sense, Because ye (O house of David) and thou (O Ahaz) in particular dost reject my offer of a sign, which might, if any thing in the world, make me break my Covenant with Abraham and his posterity, viz. the greatest and most blessed-making Covenant, that in his seed all the Nations of the earth shall be blessed: yet I will not hereupon take occasion so to do, but will in due time give a sign, that I am mindfull of keeping it, for that a Virgin ever carefully kept from man, shall by the power of the most high bring forth a Son: For such a Virgin, and not an old, but a young one, and a very young one doth the word Almah alwaies signifie. And thus Matthew, guided by the Spirit, applieth this Prophecy, when Jesus was born. Either of these waies this doubt is fully cleared, and whereas it is said, Will give you a sign, It is not to be understood, as restrained to the house of David, as if Jesus were given to none but the Jewish Nation; but to those of David's house he saith he will give it, because it should be wrought upon one of his house, that is, the Virgin Mary, the benefit redounding to the faithfull of all Countries and Nations to the worlds end. Or by the sign, which the Prophet saith, the Lord will give, understand a wonder that he would work, a new thing, as it is called, Jer. 31. 22. For Abaz being offered a sign of deliverance at this time refused it: therefore the Lord will give a sign, not of the deliverance then at hand, so much as of a deliverance farre exceeding it, viz. that by Christ from all spirituall enemies; a Virgins conception shall be the sign hereof, the like unto which was never before done in any age; so that when this shall come to passe, it shall assuredly be known, that the Messiah, our Redeemer is come. Of this Virgins bringing forth a Son, the *Sybil*s also prophesied. The Phrygian, Virginis in corpus voluit dimittere caelo, Deus prolem, cum nuntiat Angelus almae Matris, quae miseris contracta sorde levabit. God would send an offspring from heaven into the body of the Virgin, when the Angel tells the Virgin Mother, which shall ease miserable men of their contracted filthiness. Of other *Sybil*s see August. de Civit. l. 10. c. 27. Ensch. lib. 4. de Vita Constantini. The Jews, saith Jerom, by this Son understand Hezekiah the son of Abaz; and by a Virgin a young woman, the wife of Abaz, who bare him, being before barren: But herein they are too grosse, because Hezekiah his birth was past nine years before, although this Prophecy were uttered in the beginning of Abaz his reign, as he must needs yield that considers the age of Hezekiah, when he began to reign, for he was twenty five, and the time of Abaz his fathers reign, which was sixteen. One therefore, saith he, holdeth that Emanuel here spoken of, was another son of Isaiah, which his wife bare him, in a figure of Jesus, as she had before born him Shear-jashub, in a figure of the Jews returning from Captivity: But how then is it said, not a woman, but a Virgin, &c. The Son here prophesied of, without all doubt, is the seed of the woman, which should break the serpents head, prophesied of, Gen. 3. But instead of this name Emanuel, the Virgin Maries Son was called Jesus. To reconcile this, it is to be understood, that these two names are all one, because who so is Jesus, which saves from sin, is Emanuel, that is, God with us, or in one nature, God and man in one person, none other being ever able to work this great work; nor God, because he cannot suffer; nor man, because his suffering cannot be of extent sufficient to reach to all men, neither can he by any power in himself rise from death to life again. 2. Chap. 9. It is said, He shall be called Counsellour, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, &c. yet none of these were his proper Names, but his Elogies or Epithetes, further to set forth the virtues in him. 3. Emanuel is his Name which the Latines call agnomen, added to his proper Name to set him forth by something most remarkable and peculiar to him. As Trajan the Emperour having subdued Dacia, was called Dacius. Scipio, who overcame Aphrica, Aphricanus; for none else can be called Emanuel but our Lord Jesus. Lastly it is to be noted, that the word rendred, Shall call, וְקָרָא in the feminine gender, to intimate a woman bringing forth this son without generation by man; because, as appears in the example of Zachary, the father hath the power to name his childe; therefore hereby is shewed, that this Son should have no father, but a mother only, a pure Virgin.

Butter and honey shall he eat, till he knoweth to refuse the evil and to chuse the good. This is spoken, saith Jerom, to shew, that however he be called Emmanuel, yet he shall have a true humane body, for he shall be fed in his infancy as other children, with butter and honey, for that land flowed with milk and honey. He shall not therefore be a man-childe in appearance only, as Marcion and the Valentinians have held, having an aerean or heavenly body, but like unto ours, only pure and free from sin. And after the manner of other children he shall be ignorant at the first, as man new-born, but grow, as in age and stature, in wisdom, as Luke saith that he did. Cornel. a lapis reasons diversly against this being Calvins and Bucers, both from Scriptures and fathers, holding that he was full of wisdom being an infant, by reason of his hypostaticall Union with the Deity, which I spare to insert here because the word יָדָע until he knows, is so express against this fulness of knowledge in the childe Jesum as he was man at the first.

For before the childe shall have knowledge to refuse the evil, &c. that is, before he be grown up past the age of a childe, the Land which thou abhorrest shall be forsaken of both her Kings. Here Ephraim and Samaria are spoken of together as one Land, because the Kings of both Pekah and Rezin, were so nearly united together with both their peoples by a confederacy, that they were all as one Nation, and this Nation is described thus, The Land which thou abhorrest, because Abaz his hatred was exceeding great against them, for their combining against him, and the great destructions which they had made in his country. And this began soon to be fulfilled in Rezin, the King of Syria, by the Assyrians coming at Abaz his request, and slaying him, and then in Pekah slain by Hoshea, who reigned in his stead. But how this agrees with the sign here given, whenas the sign was not till five hundred years after, is a doubt not so easily resolved. Some say, that it is no unu'suall thing amongst the Prophets to give that for a sign which is not fulfilled till after the thing, whereof it is a sign, as the eating of those things which should grow of themselves the first and second year, and sowing and reaping the third year, was given for a sign to Hezekiah, and Samuel gave Saul signs to come of his being chosen king by God, and Christ gave his being in the grave to the third day, as Jonah in the Whales belly for a sign, and Exod. 3.12 is another like sign: But what is a delaying for a year or two to five hundred years? Some say, that it is meant, this son shall save you and destroy the two kings your enemies, which declares him to be to be God with us, that is, God and man, and consequently of all power, although like another in appearance at the first: but this is nothing to the purpose, sith this childe must be in his minority, at the time of these two kings perishing. The best resolution is, that the prophecy touching Jesum is fully ended vers. 15. and vers. 16. another childe is spoken of, as Calvin well observes, and therefore it is not said before, this son shall have knowledge, but this childe יָדָע, meaning (as Junius hath it) Sbearjashub, his son whom he brought with him vers. 3. for if he were then an Infant, or two or three years old, yet he attained not to years of discretion, till the destruction both of Pekah and Rezin. For Abaz began to reign anno 17. of Pekah, and if he and the king of Syria had come immediatly after that he was settled in his kingdom: Pekah lived but to the third year after, at what time if this childe were but five or six years old, he had not attained to years of discretion, much lesse if he were not now a year old. But if we consider 2 Chron. 28.5,6, the wars made by these two kings severally against Abaz before this, which could not be done in lesse then two years: Pekah his destruction was within one year after this Prophecy, and so it was a very short time before it was accomplished. If the particle כִּי because, seems to make against this exposition, because or for before the childe shall have knowledge, seeing it connects this verse as a reason to the former, it is to be understood, that it hath also other significations, as & etiam, followed by Marlorat, and also, ut, according to Pagnin, that before the childe shall have knowledge, &c. yet Calvin stands against expounding it of any particular childe, because the particle כִּי would have been added, if it had meant so, that it might have gone thus, this childe: wherefore by a childe he understands collectively all children of that time: but I prefer the former, the childe which I have here brought with me, that is, within a year or two at the most: or if Chi be rendred by ut, that we may joyn this to vers. 14. the Lord himself shall give you a sign of Israels ceasing to be a Kingdom, of which he had spoken before, that before the childe shall have knowledge, both these kings shall perish, and then the intervening prophecy of the Virgins conceiving, &c. was a sudden rapture of the Spirit to another most wonderfull thing, a more universall deliverance from a far greater danger, when a like thing should happen to two kings that then should be in the same Lands, before that Virgins sons coming to years of discretion, or soon after his birth.

birth. For as one notes it out of Josephus, Herod was then king of the Jews, and was commonly called by them King of Samarita, because he was a stranger and not of the Jewish stock, and Obodas king of Damascus, the chief city of Syria, and Herod died miserably 15 moneths after the birth of Emmanuel, and Obodas a few moneths before him. And these two, especially Herod, endeavoured quite to extirp the stock of David, as these two had done touching his kingdom.

And the Lord will bring upon thee &c. the daies that have not come since the falling of Ephraim from Judab, even the king of Assur. The Lord who promised deliverance from the two kings, at this time knew that Abaz would lend for help against them to the king of Assur, and that by this means he should for the present be out of their danger. Therefore he here threatneth a greater, because he trusted to an arm of flesh, and not in God, viz. that the king of Assur should prove a greater plague to him then these two kings, or any enemies which David's house whereof he was, had had since the division of the kingdom into two in the time of Rehoboam. How this was fulfilled in part, see 2 Chron. 28, 20, 21. in the daies of Abaz by Tiglath pileser, and afterwards against his people, and David's house by Nebuchadnezzar, chap. 36. See here the danger of trusting in an arm of flesh, and not in God, it is turned to the destruction of those that trust therein, when they think to have help hereby, especially the help of Idolaters.

If the things done by Nebuchadnezzar shall seem not to agree to this prophecy, because he was king of Babylon, he was also king of Assur now joyned by him to Babylon. Ierom rendering it with the king of Assur, making this the sense, I will bring judgements upon thee, and afterwards upon the king of Assur, whose people shall also be overcome and destroyed, and then thou shalt be delivered by the help of this Emmanuel. But the first is most genuine, and therefore he next shewing the Septuagint translation, concludes with the sense before brought.

And in that day the Lord shall hisse for the fly that is in the uttermost parts of the river of Egypt, and for the Bee of Assyria. The metaphor of hissing was also used before chap. 5. 26. where the reason thereof hath been shewed. The forces that should come out of Egypt, saith Ierom, are set forth by flies, because of the sor-des or filth of their idolatrous sacrifices, and the imbecillity of that people, those of Assyria to Bees, because they and the Perfians went to war with bow and arrows represented by the bees strings, and this was fulfilled as touching the Egyptians when Iosiah being slain by Pharaoh Necho, he placed a king over Judab as he pleased, and as touching the Assyrians when Nebuchadnezzar destroyed their city. Calvin will have the Egyptians set forth by flies, because Egypt by reason of the great moisture of the place, abounded greatly with flies, and the Assyrians by bees, because in Assur bees abounded. Musculus will neither have the Egyptians meant by the flies, because it is said in the uttermost parts of the river: nor Ethiopians who are beyond Egypt, as some, but the Lybians at one end of Nilus the Egyptian river, viz. where it begins: Enemies are also compared to Bees, Ps. 118. I prefer that of Ierom, because the event so aptly answered the prophecy, the Egyptians subduing Judab first, and then the Assyrians; and this doth better agree to the words of the Text, which are not beyond the river, as the Ethiopians and Lybians were, but from the uttermost parts, that is, one end of Egypt to the other, for it extended all along by the river Nilus, and was all watered by it, so that the inhabitants at the times of overflowing were forced to keep in higher rooms, till the ground was dry again. The reasons of the allegories brought by Ierom and Calvin may well stand both. But I cannot think with Ierom that the imbecillity of the Egyptians is set forth by flies, but their numerosity making them formidable, though imbecill.

they were, being carried to Babylon; and not like the flies once sent in judgement to Egypt, suddenly come and suddenly gone: but these with their multitudes filling all places should eat up and consume all the good in every corner of the Land. Desert valleys are mentioned, saith Calvin, and bushy places, to shew, that in no lurking place any of the Jews shall be safe from these enemies, but that they shall range about and rage every where throughout the whole Land, And because this is at an hiss, that these heathens come so readily to execute Gods judgements, the backwardnesse of Christians is condemned, who cannot by most earnest preaching of long continuance be brought to doe as God requires them.

In that day the Lord shall shave With a razor that is hired, by those that are beyond the river, by the king of Ashur, the head, the hairs of the feet, and the beard. Here by another metaphor from a razor, the greatnesse of the judgement to come is set forth: for even as a razor takes all the hairs away to the very skin, no stumps being left, as in cutting with scissers, so all wherein the comelineffe of that Nation lay, he threatens should be quite taken away, the hairs of the head in the captivity of the Princes and Nobles, of the feet in the captivity of the artificers, and the beard is all taken away when the wise and the counsellours are destroyed or captived. For the beard amongst the Jews was so highly esteemed of, that it was never so much as cut, and when David's Embassadors had their beards half cut off, they were greatly ashamed, but now it should be all taken away by shaving with a razor, when no counsellour or wise man should be left in the Land, so Calvin and Musculus: who also as Vatablus upon the word hired say, either a most sharp razor, because when a man hires for his money, he will have of the best; or a razor that he will not spare, but make use enough of it, as paying well for it: and to an hired razor is the king of Ashur compared, because God paid him for his hire, the Land of Syria and of Israel, and the spoils of Judah. And hereby is implied, that this king in his expedition against the Jews did but serve God as an instrument wherewith a man worketh his own will. The godly are his instruments also, but they know for what end God useth them, and aim in their endeavours hereat, viz. Gods glory: but the wicked know not, and therefore work for their ambition and malice, and in the end it shall come to them accordingly. The Septuagint for a razor that is hired, have novacula inebriata, because the word שכר signifyeth to make drunken, but it is שכר with Sin not Shin, and this signifyeth hired. According to the word hired here used, Nebuchadnezzar is said to have been paid with the land of Egypt for destroying Tyrus, Isa. 29. 18, 19. and Gods judging them by a razor hired, implies the work of judgement to be the work of another, and not his work, Isa. 28. 23. because God delights not in destroying, but in his mercy is most averse herefrom, being desirous that the wicked should turn and not die. Lastly, By shaving with a razor, the servitude of the Jews in a strange Land is set forth, because shaving was anciently of servants and slaves, so Pomponius Letus saith of Dioclesians triumph, that the custom was for such as had been slaves to enemies, but delivered, to follow the chariot of the triumpher with their heads shaven: so two thousands Romans brought out of servitude by F. Flaminius, when he triumphed for Macedonia subdued, followed his chariot. Ierom saith, that some think, that the Assyrian was he whom the Lord threatens to shave, that is, to spoil by, Persians a long time after, but this he rejects and that worthily, because it is שכר by the king of Ashur, he is this sharp razor: and as absurd is that of the Rabbins applying it to Sennacherib, who, they say, was shaven by the Angel to his ignominy in the night that his men were killed. It is meant, that all the decorum and virility of the Jewish Nation, should be taken away, for the beard is a sign of a man, and none but women and other poor weak effeminate creatures should be left by those beyond the river, the Assyrians are set forth because beyond Euphrates.

In that day a man shall nourish a Cow and two sheep, and for the plenty of milk he shall eat Butter. Here is shewed in what desolation the whole Land of Judea should should be, there should be but here and there a man left, and he that was left should not keep herds of cattel and flocks of sheep as in times past many men had done, but be so poor as that he should keep a cow and two sheep only, this being all his substance, and then by reason of the few cattel to eat the pasture, it should so abound, that a cow should give plenty of milk, so that thereof he might have therewith to make butter for his eating, for indeed he should have nothing else to eat but butter and honey. Besides some went to make a little bread, as is intimated, ver. 25, for to what end else should mountainous places be filled by digging, but to sow corn there?

And in that day where a thousand vines were at a thousand pieces of silver, it shall be to briars and thorns: That is, such a desolation shall be in all the Land, that Gardens, Vineyards, and Olive-yards for want of pruning and husbanding shall be overgrown with briars and thorns, and so there shall be no vines or other delightful things for the comfort of mans life as in times past, for the most fruitful places formerly most frequented shall be forsaken, the few that remain, not daring to keep there for fear of the enemy, but betaking themselves to desolate places formerly incult, as thinking in them to be more out of danger, because men used to come little into them, as being hitherto void of inhabitants, and so without prey to be gotten in them, so that their life now should be most miserable, changing their habitations for incult and horrid deserts, where wilde beasts only were wont to live.

With arrow and bow they shall come thither, because briars and thorns shall be in all the Land. That is, to these places thus for fear forsaken and overgrown with briars, if any will come they shall come armed for the danger that now will be by wilde beasts, lurking and breeding there instead of living in the mountainous places and deserts, to which they were confined before. And it is said briars and thorns shall be in all the Land, meaning all the parts before inhabited, and tilled, and dressed to bear fruits. For ver. 25. the mountainous places digged with the spade and mattock, shall not be so, the fear of briars and thorns shall not come thither: for men making those now the only places of their habitation, shall clear them from thorns and briars, by rubbing them up and making some of the ground fit to bear corn: and it shall be for the sending out of the Oxe, and the concubating of the sheep or smaller cattell, that is, the other part of the ground thus cleansed, shall be to feed their beasts upon for their necessary sustenance, the cow being here set forth by וַיִּשׁ before by וַיִּקַּח a word of the same signification: and in this exposition almost all expositors agree.

CHAP. VIII.

And the Lord said unto me, Take to thee a great roll, and write therein with the stile of a man, Make haste to the prey, hasten to the spoil, &c. This chapter tends by the consent of all Expositors to the same with the former, viz. to shew that destruction was at hand to the kings of Syria and Samaria, and after that to Judah by the king of Ashur, and yet here is comfort propounded in Christ to all the faithfull. But because here a son is said to be brought forth by the propheticke, in whose tender age it is said, that Damascus and Samaria shall be spoiled, as Chap. 7, a promise was made that a virgin should conceive and bring forth a Son, a Question ariseth, Whether this be not the son before prophesied of? and if so, that before-going touching the land of Syria and Israel forsaken in the infancy of that childe, and the like spoken here, will excellently agree to the judgement threatned, without any new invention to make out the sense of those words, Chap. 7. 15, 16. Only Matthew may be to this interpretation opposed, because he applyeth the prophecy Chap. 7. 14. to Iesus the Son of the Virgin Mary, as being then only fulfilled. But his words do not imply so much, but that it was then fulfilled, which no Christian will deny, but consent unto, as most firmly believing it. Now that his words imply not the fulfilling of it solely at that time, appears by other the like applications made by him in other cases, as Mat. 2.15; 27. Ob. It is said, a Virgin shall conceive, &c. here the Prophet went in to the Prophetesse, and she conceived, who was no Virgin, but a Wife, for so Iunius renders it, me congresso cum prophetissa, i. Uxore mea, neither doth Calvin deny but that it may so be taken, Sol. This being granted (although not the word Chereb to draw nigh, but the word יָנַח to go in, is used Ge. 26.3,4. to set forth the carnall knowledge which a man hath of his wife, it makes not against this Exposition, because not only single persons are set forth in the language of the H.G. by the name of virgins, but also all that are carnally undefiled: therefore although it were no wonder for Isaias's wife to bring forth a son, and so may seem impertinent to the prophecy afore-going, yet it is not, for so much as this was a sign of Israels destruction shortly to come, that she not being at that time haply with childe, yet now conceived and brought forth as soon as might be, and before that childe so brought forth, and grown up to be able to speak, the kings of Syria and Israel were both slain. And then this puerpery was but a figure of that to come principally aimed at, as wherein our greatest comfort lies about the destruction of the devils kingdom figured out in the kingdom of Ephraim, which kingdom that the Virgins son by his incarnation destroyed, see Heb. 2.15. It was then fulfilled in a figure here, which was sufficient to confirm the faithfull for the present, touching a temporall deliverance, and it was the second time, and chiefly fulfilled in the Virgin Mary. And if it be thus taken, ver. 18. the children that thou hast given me are set for signs: that is, Shear-jashub, and Mahar-shalal-hash-baz will well answer to the relations preceding, chap. 7.3. and here ver. 4. whereas I have before followed Iunius applying this word the childe to Shear-jashub, I have not so done, but being ready upon new light discovered to be guided by it: whereas the word Alma never signifies but a young woman hidden from man, this is controverted by the Hebrews, and therefore here by more rendred, adolescentula then virgo: but for the principall thing in this prophecy intended, the Septuagint rendering of it virgo is to be preferred, admitting the double sense before-going, and this may be without prejudice to our cause, seeing Jesus born of the Virgin Mary, who knew no man, was the wonderfull accomplishing of the prophecy so as it never was before, but only in some sort precursory: and the prophecy of the seed of the woman, Gen. 3. and of a womans compassing a man, Ier. 31.22. make it plain that such a puerpery was to be expected. Ob. But he is not called Emmanuel, but Mahar-shalal-hash-baz, neither can any son be called so, but the son of the Virgin Mary only. Sol. The son of the blessed Virgin was not expressly called by this name neither, when he was born, yet this argueth not, but that he was meant, as hath been shewed before: again although it can not be said of any but Jesus being born Emmanuel in that sense, God and man in one person, yet now it might also be said so in this sense, God is with us in performing of his promise of delivering us from these two kings so earnestly without his help bent to destroy us especially which be of the house of David. Ierom who saith that the childe here spoken of is the same with that Chap. 7.14. only he hath another name, Make haste to the spoil, &c. to shew that he should take away the spoils before taken by the devil, according to that saying of his, When a strong man armed keeps the house, all is quiet, but when a Stronger then he cometh, he disarms him and divides the spoils. But he will not have a thing really done set forth here, but only in imagination and vision: for in vision only the prophetesse brings forth a son, a sign of the hasty destruction of Syria and Samarina, and this was really after fulfilled, when the blessed Virgin conceived and brought forth her son Jesus, And he saith, he must write in a roll, and take witness to it, because it should not suddenly be done according to this vision, but many hundred years after, for which it had need to be written in a great roll that might last long: and whereas before Chap. 7. he spake the same to the house of David, now he must speak no more to the people in generall, but write it in a roll, to intimate that it should be as a mystery or thing hidden, the Virgins conception, for a long time from the generality of the people. And indeed, because the

the circumstances of taking a roll to write in, and witnesses to it, imply a matter of great moment, not only touching the present or things near at hand, but also things of greatest concernment to come long after, or else what need was there of providing thus for the durability of it throughout many ages, it must needs be yielded, that as Chap. 7. the birth of Jesus was prophesied of, so it was here further represented and figured out together with the sudden destruction of the devils kingdom ensuing hereupon, of his spoiling whereof, see also Heb. 2. 15. Col. 2. 14. And if this be taken as done in a vision, then the meaning must be this, Isaiab having a roll presented unto him, wherein it seemed to him that he wrote these words, Mahar-shalal-hash-baz, he went in the spirit to the Virgin Mary, in vision presented unto him, and saw her bringing forth this son, and then spake as if he had been born indeed at that time, that before he should have knowledge to cry My father or mother, the riches of Damascus, &c. should be carried away. And to this agree Cyrl. Basil, Caldeus, Procopius, Rupert, August. de civitas. 17. c. ult. Epiphanius. hares. 78. Euseb. lib. 7. cap. 2. Demonstr. Evang. Ambrosius. &c. wherefore to shew that this son is the same, ver. 8. he is also called Emmanuel. And for the other are many grave authours also, as the Rabbins, Cbryst. Richardus Victor, Tho. Aquinas, Vambles, Calvin, Junius, &c. But it is excepted against this, that if a son about this time really born had been meant, that which followeth cannot be approved for truth, vers. 4. because the spoils of Samaria were not carried away by the King of Assur, till the 9. of Hoshea, and this was but the 4. or 5. of Abaz, in whose 12. year he began to reign, so that a child then born might be at that time 16. years old. Ans. The riches of Damascus were carried away within 2. or 3. years, and then the thing spoken of began to be fulfilled, the other following soon after in part, when in the beginning of the reign of Hoshea some 7. years after this, he became Salmanassar's servant, and he gave him gifts: Moreover, the same exception may be made, if it be understood the other way also. Only I grant taking it that way, we shall not be forced to flee to the understanding of a Virgin in conditions, and therefore both being weighed well together, that of understanding it done in a vision will prove the most solid. But whereas Jerom by the prophetesse another while understands the holy Ghost, because the holy Ghost in Hebrew Ruah is of the feminine gender: I cannot see how it should stand, because not the holy Ghost but the Virgin Mary by the overshadowing of the holy Ghost, brought forth her son. And she may well according to Jerom be understood by the prophetesse, because she prophesied when she said, all generations shall call me blessed, for she is called so to this day. For the name Mahar-shalal-hash-baz, it is not meant that he should be called by this as a proper name, no more then by the name Emmanuel, but that he should be such an one that he might well be thus called for spoiling principalities and powers, as was partly touched before. The main thing here being thus cleared, I come to the particulars. To write in the stile of a man is by the consent of all, so as any may read it, and that in great letters, as Hab. 2. 2. because God would have all the people know it, and that he would accomplish that which he promised touching Damascus and Samaria very speedily, to be confirmed against their present fears, and the rather, for that it was so improbable, that so great forces now joyned together should not prevail against Jerusalem, whereas either of them severally was unresistible before. And that this being written in a roll might be obvious to every ones sight, it is not improbably thought by some, that it was fastened upon the door of the Temple, as that of Habakkuk, that a man running might read it. The words are but few, Lemahar to hasten, Shalal the spoil, Chash chaffe or huske, Baz the prey: thus the words signifie, but I cannot finde them so expounded by any Expofitor, but either passed over as a name, as Junius pro Mahar-shalal-hash-bazo, or as he also in his notes explains it, accelera ad spolia, festina pradam, whereas of Chash there is none other signification, but as hath been said, and so no second word to signifie hasten. Wherefore this name may rather be resolved thus, he hath hastened the spoil, the huske or chaffe prey; so lightly flying from Damascus and Samaria, maria, as the chaff before the winde, when the Assyrian comes, and his coming will not be long deferred, for he hastens to this, as the end whereat he aimeth.

Verf. 2.

And I took to me faithfull witnesses, Uriah the Priest, and Zechariah. This was done for more confirmation of the Prophecie, because by the testimony of two witnesses all things are confirmed: and witnesses of great note especially as these two men were; Uriah the high-Priest at that time, for to him it is said, that Abaz sent a patern of the Altar at Damascus, to have one made like it at Jerusalem, which was a thing indeed, that made against his credit, but that was after this, and his credit held good hitherto. Zechariah was a man of great eminency, as being father to the mother of King Hezekiah. These two were taken for witnesses of these words written by the Prophet in a roll, as importing the spoiling of Damascus and Samaria with all speed.

Verf. 3.

And I went to the Prophets, who conceived and bare a son, &c. This was done in the spirit, wherein the incarnation of Christ to come long after, was now represented to the Prophet, as things to come were represented to John in the Revelation. But whether these two men were also present in the spirit with Isaiah to see this son, is uncertain: it seems that they were to be witnesses of the thing, that the more credit and heed might be given unto it by all men. And this is by some brought for a ground of witnesses used of old, when names were given at the time of Circumcision; but I must needs confesse, that although I have sometime followed this, yet it is no good ground for it. For witnesses or rather sureties are used in Baptisme for more assurance to the Church, these only to testifie this wonderfull Vision and propheticall writing and name, that all might be assured of the thing here prophesied of.

Verf. 4.

Before the childe shall know to cry, my father and my mother, the riches of Damascus and spoils of Samaria shall be taken away before the King of Asshur. That is, counting from this time, before an Infant new born now shall be able to speak, the pride of the two enemies of the house of David, Damascus and Samaria shall be taken down, they that have spoiled Judah, and had thought to have spoiled her more, being spoiled by the Assyrian King. The phrase is, Shall be taken away before the King of Asshur, haply because, as amongst the Romans, so amongst the Assyrians the spoils taken from the enemy were carried before the Conqueror in triumph.

Verf. 6.

Because this people despiseth the waters of Siloe, which run softly, and there is joy to Rezin, and the son of Remaliah. Verf. 7. Therefore the Lord brings upon them the waters of the river, &c. Verf. 8. And passing into Judah, he shall overflow, &c. The Lord having hitherto comforted the faithfull by exhibiting after a sort his Son unto them, and promising speedy deliverance from their two great enemies, now threatneth the common sort, or multitude of unbelievers in Judea for their sleighting and contempt of his help thus offered, and amongst them Ahaz, as the chief; for he, as it is likely with their consent, not relying upon Gods Promises, but sending for help to Asshur, against these two Kings, thus shewed, that he despised the waters of Siloe, that ran softly, the promise of deliverance being called so in opposition to the Assyrian Army expected, which came with the sound of Drum and Trumpet, neighing of horses, clattering of Armour, shouting and a great noise: but the Promise of God made by the Prophet was without all external shew of vigour or force to help, a very poor thing to trust to, even as the little creeping river of Siloe, so called Nehem. 2. 13. Fons serpentis. It is also mentioned Joh. 9. for it ran slowly, and so was without force to gull and wash down the soil where it ran, or to carry any burden thereof before it. And this is that which God had against the unbelieving in Judah: now against the two Kings, Rezin and Remaliahs son, not vouchsafing to call them Kings, he layes to their charge, that they had joy, that is, in the spoils by them already taken, and which they made account to take at their pleasure in Jerusalem, and to domineer there. And upon this expedition they put themselves, meerly out of a delight which they took in wasting and and taking spoils, and destroying the Jews, they giving them no just cause so to doe.

Therefore the Lord will make the mightiest and most abounding Waters of a flood to come up against them, even the King of Assur and all his glory. Here after the sin of the Syrian and Israelitish King laid open vers. 7. followeth their punishment, the King of Assur, as an overflowing and irresistible flood with his Army, that is, his glory shall come and destroy their lands, as by a deluge. Vers. 7.

And he shall ascend above all his strong Waters, and above all his banks, and shall passe through Judah, and overflow till he passeth to the neck, and the stretching out of his wings shall be the breadth of thy Land, O Emmanuel. Here the judgement to come after the other upon the Kingdom of Judah by the same King of Assur is set forth; as their sin was also shewed before, yet their punishment is put in order after Rexins and Pekabs, as indeed it followed. And because he had begun with an Allegory of a river, he continues by the like to set forth these judgements. He shall passe over all his strong waters and banks, that is, the strong ties of his oaths and covenant with Ahaz for his great gifts, and notwithstanding these shall come against Judah even to the head City, as he did in Hezekiah's time, for which he saith, Till he comes to the neck, which is next the head, for he was not permitted to come close up to Jerusalem, but near it, and he stretcht his wings over all the Land, when in the time of Manasseh, and afterwards of Zedekiah he destroyed and wasted all; and he saith, Of thy Land, O Emmanuel, alluding to the name Emmanuel, Chap. 7. 14. setting forth Christ Jesus to come, as at whom he lookt by the eye of faith, expecting that he should take vengeance for this upon the proud King of Assur, when he had made him first an instrument to execute his judgements upon his own Land or Church, which Mount Zion was allegorically. For so indeed the Lord did to the King of Babylon and Assur finally, when he gave him and his Land into the hands of Cyrus and Darius. Vers. 8.

Thus for the most part Junius and Tremellius. Jerom, who saw the brook of Siloe, for he lived sometime there, saith, That it begins at a fountain at the foot of Mount Zion, and runneth not continually, but at certain times through most hard passages of rocks with a great noise. And by their despising the waters of Siloe, is allegorically shewed the ten Tribes rejecting of the posterity of David, which God had set up; and their preferring to be under other Kings: but for this he sheweth, that they shall be subdued and brought under the King they would not, even the Assyrian. But because this is no where laid to the charge of Israel; yet contrariwise it is said to have come of God for a punishment upon Solomon, That they revolted from Rehoboam, I cannot subscribe to this. And as far wide is Musculus, who will have the Kingdoms of Judah compared to these waters, because it was now in a poor condition; as if he had said, because Judah sets light by her own condition, and preferreth that of Israel and Syria, being now far more potent and opulent; for neither had it been so hainous a fault to be thus dejected in the sense of their own misery; and the last clause is, joy to Rexin and Remaliahs son, not in them. Calvin comes nearest to that which hath been already said, despising their own weak estate, they desired greater forces for their defence; but neither doth this agree to joy in any relation to Rexin or Remaliahs son, because the forces desired by them were not theirs, but the King of Assurs, neither was it so great a sin, or a sin at all to be cast down for their own tenuity, unlesse with a conceit, that being so weak, God could not, or would not help them, whatsoever he promised by his Prophet. Cyril and Procopius, because they being so low, believed not that God could help them, and thought of revolting from Ahaz to Rexin and Pekab, and submitting themselves to the King, whom they would set over them, even the son of Tabeal, they are thus threatened. But this is a conjecture without ground, because we read nothing of any intention in them to revolt; but it is certain, that in diffidence of aid from God they sought for aid to the King of Assur. Now whereas Jerom saith, That the waters of Siloe Dan. 5.

run with a noise thorow hollow places of the Rocks, whereby this Allegory may seem not to agree; it is to be understood, that although they run with a noise at the first, yet passing further they run without all noise in silence, and easily, till they come into the Kings Gardens. Siloe for this might well set forth the King of Dauids line, and the Lord Jesus, who was to come of David, and was missus or sent, according to the interpretation of the word Siloe, because these were the waters, which watered his Gardens, and he was milde and cried not, nor lifted up his voice. For when his help promised was despised, he was despised, and afterwards when he came, being of the Jews rejected, saying, We will have no King but Caesar. For the spreading of his wings over the whole Land, this is spoken by another Allegory comparing the Assyrian King to an Eagle, spreading his immense forces as wings.

Verf.9.

Associate your selves together (O peoples) and ye shall be broken, give ear ye that dwell in the farthest parts of the earth, Gird your selves, and ye shall be broken, &c.

Verf.10.

Take counsel together, it shall be in vain, &c. After the judgement hitherto threatned, the Prophet now derideth their confederating together to strengthen them the more against all enemies. That this which the Lord hath threatned might not come upon them. For notwithstanding the Associations made betwixt Syrians, and Israelites, and Jews and Assyrians on the contrary side, who are all meant by peoples; destruction shall come both upon Syria and Israel, and afterwards upon Judah also, being for the present rather weakened, then holpen by the King of Asshur, as the sacred History sheweth. And in calling upon most remote dwellers to hearken, threatning them also with contrition or tearing in peeces, though they courageously girded themselves to the battel, he means the Assyrians who should after this be destroyed also, as they were indeed by a mighty destruction in one night under their proud King Sennacherib, and after that being subdued by the King of Babylon, who joyned the Kingdom of Assyria to his own, making both one. Then verf. 10. he derides their consultations as vain, because, saith he, God is with us: Iunius, The word of Emmanuel shall stand; rather respecting the sense then the exposition of the word Emmanuel. But the sense will be good also thus, For God is with us his Prophets, to confirm what we threaten in his name and by his direction; neither can all the strength in the world frustrate or prevent it. Ierom extends this no further then to the Syrians and Israel, to whose consulting to take Ierusalem, Chap:7. he alludeth, and then he applieth this to Persecutours and Hereticks, the one sort may band together to root out Christian people, but they shall themselves be destroyed in the end, and Christs Church shall continue, and the other may beat their brains, and use all means to suppress the truth, but they shall be in vain, for God is the authour and protectour of the truth to make it stand, when all errors shall vanish. Calvin and Musculus expound it only of the Assyrians, who were now coming against Israel, and were afterwards to come against Judah. But forsomuch as the purpose of the Lord was to comfort and confirm the Kingdome of Judah against the fear of Syria and Israel then joyning together against it, reason requires that it should be taken as a threatning against them, and that the Assyrians more remote dwellers are next spoken, as who should finally perish also, to abate their pride coming upon them for their great and continual victories, for which they thought so highly of themselves, that none should ever be able to bring them down. But to shew certainly, that thus it should be, he doubles the threatning, and to confirm the faithfull, although the enemy being put back once should make the like attempt again, that he shall arm but to his own destruction. And all this shall be brought to passe by the power of Emmanuel, the reciting of which name brought this life and courage into the Prophet, as in the midst of greatest danger to conclude with an irony against the enemies of the Church.

Verf.11.

For thus hath the Lord said unto me, when he laid hold on my hand, and put me back back from walking in the way of this people. This is word for word according to the Hebrew, and herein is shewed the cause why Isaiah was so bold to deride all enemies so contrary to others in these dangerous times, the Lord took him by his Spirit, as it were, by the hand, and suffered him not to walk in the way of distrust, wherein others walked, so that he contrariwise was full of confidence through Gods help, that it should be so as he had prophesied. There was cause indeed, as Calvin saith, to fear; both outward, their enemies so strongly combining; and inward, the wicked and unbelieving hearts of the people: yet God made the Prophet, as by strength of hand to go this way so contrary to them; and hereby it is intimated, that it is by the hand of God guiding them, that some few go not in the common way of the multitude, but in another way of doing their diligence to make their election sure and certain.

Calvin.

Note.

Say not A conspiracy whereinsoever this people saith a conspiracy, or in all wherein this people saith it, &c. That is, as thou hast by Gods especial grace been kept from doing wickedly, as they have done, as was said vers. 11. so speak not, and bid other faithfull persons not to speak despairingly, saying Rezin and Pekah have conspired together to subdue our City Jerusalem, and we shall never be able to withstand so great a power; whatsoever fair promises the Lord makes us by his Prophet, Fear not their fear.

Vers. 12.

But sanctifie the Lord of hosts, and let him be your fear. That is, acknowledge him to be holy, and true, and almighty, which redounds greatly to his glory, by nothing doubting of his help against your enemies. Sanctifying is here put for glorifying, as also in the Lords-Prayer, Hallowed be thy Name. For fearing him and nothing else, see also Matth. 10. 28. Let this be all that ye are afraid of, to offend him, and then ye shall have his love, and care not what wrath men have against you.

Vers. 13.

And he shall be for a sanctuary, a stumbling stone and a rock of falling to both the houses of Israel, &c. The word signifieth either Sanctuary or Sanctification, the meaning is, to you that glorifie him by believing he shall be as a place of safety, your enemies being never able to hurt you, as those that fled of old to a City of refuge, or he shall make you glorious through his miraculous working for your safety and preservation in greatest Straights. The words following are again used, Chap. 28. 16. yet not all, but the first only, a stone, and there it goeth thus, I lay in Zion a stone of probation, a corner stone and precious, a stone of foundation. But Rom. 9. 33. both these places are put together and applied to our Lord Jesus, 1 Pet. 2. 4. That only of Chap. 28. comparing the preciousness of this stone before God, with the vile account in which it was had amongst men, according to Psal. 118. 22. and Matth. 21. 42. Having in the former words comforted the faithfull, by saying, That God would be to them a Sanctuary; here he turns to the unbelieving of both houses or Kingdoms, threatening that he should be a stumbling stone, because when they should see themselves brought into misery and servitude by their common enemies the Assyrians, they should fall more and more into infidelity, to say, that the Lord was not so mighty as they thought formerly he had been. And allegorically our Lord Jesus is here also pointed at, because he is sanctification and safety to all the faithfull, but to the children of Israel especially a stumbling block or stone, for his poverty and cursed death, making them to fall into the highest degree of contempt and enmity against him, and so to ruine by the Romans, but all through their own corruption. And to the inhabitants of Jerusalem: This is added, because Jerusalem was the chief place of the principal Kingdom, that it might not be thought, that they of that place should be better then the rest, but be involved in the same spiritual judgement, and consequently in the same misery, although they had this advantage above other parts, that they had the Priests and many other learned ones amongst them. But in speaking of Jerusalem he varieth the phrase, saying, For a snare and a net to the inhabitant of Jerusalem, denoting their ensnaring or being unawares taken by that erroneous opinion of Justification by works, and not by faith only in Christ Jesus, as Paul argueth Rom. 9. 30. 31. 32. applying the words of this place; whereby it appears, that although it were fulfilled long before, yet it was chiefly fulfilled in the time of the Gospel, as Oecolampadius well noteth. But it is to be observed vers. 15. that he saith,

Many shall fall amongst them. Intimating, that in all times there is a remnant of the faithful, even when the times are most corrupt, as in the dayes of Elijah, and this is the true Church of God, to which this stone is precious to build their faith upon as a most sure foundation. But the multitude shall fall, be broken in pieces, be intangled, and taken; fall by not believing, be broken by accustomed themselves to sin, be intangled by ones drawing of another, and taken by suffering the just punishments of their sins; thus also Oecolampadius. Or if we take falling or intangling for two Metaphors, expressing one and the same thing, viz. by unbelief and breaking in pieces and taking, likewise for the punishment, the sense will be lesse forced, then if by breaking in pieces be understood a being addicted or accustomed to divers sins. Contrariwise four Epithetes are given to the Lord tending all to comfort and confirmation in respect of the faithful, 1. A stone of probation. 2. A corner stone. 3. Precious. 4. A sure foundation, Chap. 28. 16.

Binde the Testimony, seal the Law amongst my Disciples. Here because the Jews stumbled at Christ through unbelief, and so fell into great miseries, the Lord bids the Prophet binde up the Testimony to them, that when they read it, they may not see into the end thereof, Christ Jesus, through a spiritual judgement upon them for their malice and grosse unbelief in the midst of so many signs, and to seal it over to the Gentiles, who should now become his Disciples, and know that, touching the Mosaical Laws, which the Jews should not, even the Doctrine of the true faith to their salvation, because both the moral Law was a Schoolmaster to bring us to Christ, by shewing the curse of God to be our due for our sins thereagainst, and the carnal rites of the ceremonial served to figure out Christ and his Kingdom, to whom we must flee, that we may be delivered from the curse. To this effect almost Jerom, and touching the Jews Tremellius, who will have the Roll spoken of vers. 1. meant by the Testimony, and that the Lord would have him fold it up, that it might not be in the sight of this wicked people, as most unworthy: but then this judgement must be understood as taking place in the time of the Gospel, for now it was written for their reading, and according to some set up upon the doors of the Temple. Calvin understands no more hereby, but doing by the written Law, as a man useth to do by a letter, binding a thred about it, and then sealing it, that every one may not read it, but they to whom it is sent: Others may have it in their hands, but have no knowledge of that which is in it, but onely they to whom it belongeth. For the word is in all mens hands, but it is as a sealed letter to most, onely they that are taught of God, to whom it is specially written, see into it and have benefit and comfort thereby. Thus also Musculus, who draweth matter of encouragement from hence to the Prophets of God. When they preach to many, but few are wrought upon by their preaching; the word is as a sealed letter to most. Adam Sarbond differing from all these, saith, that no concealing or hiding of the counsel of God from any is here meant, but as a man that would remember a thing, binds somewhat about his finger to put him in minde of it, so would the Lord have Isaiah do to his Disciples, not really taking and binding this roll to their hands or arms, but requiring them to have it alwayes in such remembrance, as if it were bound there; a like phrase see Deut. 6. 8. and Prov. 7. 3. And this is the most plain sense of all others, and agreeth best, because one part of the speech doth not touch one, and the other another sort of men, as Jerom saith, But Binde the testimony and seal the Law are both spoken to the same Disciples, and binding and sealing are Metaphors to set forth one and the same thing, for as we make fast by binding, so more by sealing. Yet if any shall like better of sealing, that the Disciples onely might know and not others, I confesse, that the word sealing seems to imply so much, and not remembering only as doth binding alone. To conclude, the meaning is, Charge the Disciples, so as if it were bound to their hands for a remembrance to think upon it, and yet by a spiritual judgement let it come thorough the eyes and hands of others as a letter sealed to my Disciples view and reading, that they may know it, and have comfort hereby; and by the Testimony may be understood both this roll for the tests or witnesses used to it, and the Law or Testimony at large.

And I have waited for the Lord, who hath hid his face from the house of Jacob, and have expected him. Septuagint, And I will trust in him. Thus to the Lords Disciples, I was bidden to do, as vers. 16. and I for my part believe without all doubting, that the Lord will now shew the mercy promised to his people in delivering them from their enemies, as I have before said, and by a farre greater deliverance through that Emmanuel to come, although his face be so turned away for the intervening time from Judah and Israel, both, as that no shew be a long time made of any such favour to come. It is the voice, faith Sabon of the faithfull, when all things seem to go contrary, I will yet believe, and will not cast away my hope. True faith never ceaseth waiting upon God, although he deferreth long his coming to help, and no sign hereof be seen. Calvin and Vatablus for, And I have waited, render it, Therefore I have waited, as if he had said, because the Lord said unto me, that I should not go in the way of this people, vers. 11. Therefore though they despair of help, I have faith to believe, and hope certainly to expect it in Gods good time.

Behold I and the children which the Lord hath given me, are for signs and wonders, &c. Some, faith Jerom, understand the natural children of Isaiah, Shearjashub and Emmanuel, and these, they say, were set for signs, because the one did set forth the abjection of the Jews, the other the receiving of the Gentiles, but, faith he, they may as well hold, that Hosea married an harlot indeed, and begat children of her, as this. Therefore he by his children understands rather Prophets, who after him were sent to prophesie of the like things, who at first were by him begotten to God, as Paul saith, My little children, of whom I travel again till Christ be formed in you. Or take a more apt place, Though ye have ten thousand instructors, ye have but one father, for I have begotten you to Christ. So God tels Ezekiel, That he should be a sign unto them. And allegorically he understands it, as spoken in the person or Christ, to whom it is applied Heb. 2.13. for he and his Disciples, whom he tels, that they must be as little children, and sometime calls little ones, were as signs and wonders to the unbelieving Jews, when they shewed many signs amongst them, which they flockt to see with admiration, 1 Cor. 4.9. God hath set us forth as spectacles to the world.

Calvin and Musculus, and the rest of our new Writers understand not only Prophets, but any converted by Isaiah his teaching, and afterwards by Christ. The meaning is, that such as in whose hearts the Lord doth work by the Ministry of his servants the Prophets, to live by faith in the most dangerous times, when nothing appears but ruine and misery, are by the wicked world abhorred as monsters and abominable creatures for their singular walking in a way by themselves, that is, of Faith, Obedience, Love, Patience and Humility, and not in the wayes of sin and wickedness, that others walk in. But they come not to be thus contemned, and abhorred through the will of their enemies, but of God, who had fore-determined that it should be so, yea even of that God, who dwells in Mount Zion, in whom, and whose house there, these wicked despisers much gloried, as if because he dwelt amongst them, they were in great grace and favour with him, whatsoever abominations they committed, for which he saith, Set for signs and wonders from the Lord who dwelleth in Mount Zion. This sheweth, 1. That it is by God, that children are given to Prophets; it is not by any vertue in them, that they are converted, neither come they to be such of themselves when they have means. 2. The common condition of the godly both Prophets and people is to be contemned and wondered at by the wicked world. 3. This is not without the Divine Providence. 4. Even such as glory in the Lord and in his Religion are sometimes thus spitefull against his servants, for which he is highly displeased with them, but they flatter themselves with a conceit, that they only are his true Church, as the Papists who are so malicious to poor Protestants that be most godly at this day. 5. Teachers ought to go before their children in Faith, Patience, and all other vertues; for he saith, He hath set me and the children. 6. Because this is applied to Christ and all his; we must not make account, that he alone was exposed to contempt and sufferings for us (as he was indeed, that by the merit of his sufferings we might be saved) but as we would have true comfort, that we are children by God given unto him, we must frame our selves likewise to suffer with him, that we may be glorified with him, for he and his are set for signs, &c. and not he alone. One shewing how the Prophets were made signs and wonders, applieth it to Isaiab going in sackcloth, and then naked for a sign three years together, Chap. 20. and to Ezekiel and Jeremy, and since to Paulus the first Eremitte, who shut up himself from the sight of men sixty years together; and Antoninus the next, who lived an Eremitical life also in abstinence and rigidity, till he was above an hundred years old. And Paula a noble woman of Rome, who went to Bethlehem and spent all her substance in building Monasteries there, living in continual fastings and prayers, and so poor at her death, that she was not worth a winding-sheet, but her daughter Eustochium begged for one to bury her in. And Alexius a young most noble man of Rome, when his marriage was solemnized in the presence of many great persons, at night stole from his Spouse, and went far and wide a begging, and so continued seventeen years in misery, and died. And Simcon who went about the streets as a fool or a mad man, making himself a laughing stock and derision to Boyes and Girls, because it is said, God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise. And Francis the first of the order of the Franciscans, who put on a Cap and an Hood like a fool, and blessed such as called him fool and clown, and all that nought was, and preferred to be poor as much as others to be rich. And Simcon Stylites, who being a shepherd, came into a Church and heard, Blessed are ye that weep and mourn, and woe to you that laugh, &c. prayed to God that he might be such, and then began to fast an whole week together, and girded his body with an harsh rope till it blistered again and mattered, fasted fourty dayes together in Lent and ate nothing, went up unto a beam, and hanged himself thereupon by a cord by the foot, till his foot rotted as far as the ankle, stood alwayes in the day in the greatest heat and cold, and watched to prayer all night, continuing thus eighty years and then dying when he was above an hundred. And of these the Jesuite makes great boasts, as of the rarest men in the world, applying that unto them, They went about in Goats skins, and Sheeps skins, and kept in caves of the earth being destitute and naked. But he must understand, that those Worthies were enforced by the violence of enemies to such shifts, and did not voluntarily forsake all humane society, and expose themselves to such miseries. And the Prophets by doing and going so, as hath been said, wherein they were set for signs and wonders, had expresse command from God therefore. But what command had these, That for their grosse superstitions they should be likened unto them? verily none, but an affectation of singularity and shewing humility, which is plainly condemned, Col. 2. 16. and of singular righteousness condemned Eccles. 7. 16. And such wonders do all Anchorites, Eremites, Cappachins and whippers of their own bodies (going at some times through streets in Italy all naked to the middle, and whipping their bodies till streams of blood run out, so that some have died the night following of their wounds) shew themselves, but they are not set for signs by God, as Isaiah and his children. The godly, and temperate, and humble, and meek, are truly set by God for signs and wonders to the wicked world, abiding if they may, each one in his cal-calling, as is commanded 1 Cor. 7.20. And such signs are they that have all Idolatry in abomination, so as that they will rather die, then yield to pollute themselves hereby, as Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego.

And because they will say unto you, seek to Wizzards and soothsayers, &c. should a people go from their God? or should not a people enquire of their God? For the living to the dead? Here the Prophet gives the faithfull to understand, that many amongst them rejecting the predictions of Isaiah in this time of danger would say, Come let us go and consult with other Divines, such as other Nations use to consult with, who have familiar spirits, or in whom these spirits speak, and he enformeth them how to make answer, The Lord is our God, and each people should seek to its God, therefore we to the Lord, who answers by his Prophets, Shall not any be ashamed to go for the living, that is, such as live only where true life is, that is, the true Religion, to dumb and dead Idols, or to Necromancers, who seek answers from dead men, or other creatures, for thus the Heathens do. Calvin prefers this reading of the last clause, From the living to the dead; as if it had been said, Look amongst the living and the dead in all places, and ye shall finde, that God alone is all-sufficient to be sought unto. Wizzards are called Pythons, that is, such as speak, as it were, out of their inward parts, as it were by a spirit speaking within them in a most submisse and low manner; Diviners are such as foretell by Chiromancy, or by looking into the entrails of birds or beasts, &c. This is straightly forbidden Deut. 18.10. and therefore warning is given here against it to all that fear God. To conclude with Jerom, it is as if he had said, when ye shall be moved to enquire of Wizzards, &c. answer thus; Doth not any people commonly enquire of their God, though in truth they be no Gods, and for the living seek to Idols, which are nothing else but images of dead men? Do ye grant all this to be so, and would ye take us the people of the only true God off from enquiring of him at the mouth of his Prophets, to go after such wicked instruments of the devil, and foul impostours, as Wizzards and Heathen Diviners be? rather let us, as they seek to their Gods, go to ours: and because his will is made known in his Word,

To the Law and the Testimony, &c. And there ye shall finde that Gods people must not consult with Wizzards, but with the Prophet whom he should raise up unto them from time to time, If they shall not speak according to this word, because there is no morning light in him; for so אין לו שחר signifie, or Who, that is, Who so doth thus there is no light in him. That people then is hereby condemned to be in darkness, and such as to whom no morning light hath yet appeared, which acknowledg not the word of God to be our only direction in all difficult cases, but contrary to it, will seek or move others to seek in any extremity to Wizzards; now the Wizzards or Pythons of these times are said by Musculus to be the Mafs-Priests, because they in consecrating mutter with a low voice, & they stir up to other means of being resolved and holpen in time of danger, even by going to the reliques of the dead, of the miracles wrought by whom they much boast. But by the determination of the Prophet they are for this, and their own written traditions, in darkness, and without all light; and so be all that seek to cunning men, and utter darkness must be their portion for ever, as they have loved darkness more then the light. Calvin saith, That some taking this for an oath, render it. By the Law and the Testimony, but he rather consents to the exposition before-going, saying, That the Law is called the Testimony, because therein is testified unto us what the will of God is, so sufficiently, that we need not, yea we ought not to seek to any other means, the decrees of Councils and Roman Bishops, to know it.

And he shall passe in it. So verbatim according to the Hebrew כִּי בָּהּ in it, being the Feminine gender, and setting forth the Land that they lived in. He said before, There is no morning light in him; therefore he is in darkness of the night; and because he hath brought himself to this evil condition of wandering from the light of Gods Word in the way of error, this shall be his punishment,

But because passing is in it, for so the word signifies, not out of it: I with other Expositours rather understand the passer or wanderer in the land. For his looking upward and downward, yet seeing nothing but oppression and misery, they are words tending to aggravate their calamity, as of one that looks every way for help, but none cometh till he perish. ## CHAP. IX.

YET the darkness shall not be according to the straightning to it in the first time, he lightly afflicted the land of Zabulon and land of Nephthali, and afterwards burthened the way of the sea beyond Jordan, Galilee of the Gentiles. Thus the Hebrew word for word, and it is annexed to chap. 8. but all Translatours make it the first verse of chap. 9. Here after darkness and straights threatned, vers. 22. the Prophet begins to adde something more comfortable, by comparing the darkness and straights wherein they should see themselves to be, with the miseries suffered by Tiglath Pileser, when he took so many places in the land of Nephthali, 2 King. 15. 29. and more grievous miseries by Salmanasar, who subdued all the ten Tribes, 2 King. 17. Now for the comfort of the faithfull, lest they should be overwhelmed with despair, when they heard of nothing but miseries and straights, he saith, that it should not be, as at any of these two times, when they should suffer by the Romans, in the time of the Gospel, which is threatned chap. 8. 14. because a great light should rise unto them, as followeth here, v. 2. viz. the light of Jesus his preaching, which to the faithfull should be such a comfort, as that they should be able better to bear the destruction of their City and Temple then, although it were the greatest blow that ever they had; then either of both those sufferings by the Assyrians, because then they wanted the comfort of this light, so full of joy to the beleaving soul. And the miseries suffered in Zabulon and Nephthali, and Galilee, are rather brought in by way of comparison then any other, to make way to the Prophecie of this comfortable light shining first in those parts, because Jesus began to preach here first, and to do his miracles, and called the twelve. It was the way of the sea, because near the sea, and through these parts lading was carried to be, by sea, transported to other places: so Adricomius, who saith, there was a way from Syria to the Lake of Genesareth, here called, the Sea; which went under this generall name, of the way to the sea, from the beginning to the end. Galilee of the Gentiles was so called, because ever since Solo- men gave twenty Towns therein to Hiram King of Tyrus, the Gentiles inhabited there. That this is a Prophecy of comfort through the light by Jesus brought first to these parts, see Matth. 4.15. and also the exposition and the apt application of it made by the Evangelist. As those parts tasted first of misery, so they were first made partakers of the light of Evangelicall comfort; as they first came into the hands of their cruel enemies, so they were first by this Mahar-shalal-bashebz, hastily taken out of the hands of the spoiler, especially some of them, whom he particularly called here to follow him. Some, saith Calvin, expound this, as if the Prophet meant, that the misery to come after those afflictions in Tiglath Pilears and Salmansars times, should be greater then those, that the wicked might have no comfort by hoping that it would be but as a storm, which although it be violent for the time, yet after a while it is blown over again; thus Luther: But he contrariwise, as hath been already said, takes it as spoken for consolation to the faithfull, that they might with the better courage bear the greatest miseries that should befall them, in regard of the light of the Gospel then shining, which should make all outward sufferings to seem nothing: As a man suffering shipwrack at sea, if he hath a piece of the ship to swim upon, and keep him from sinking, till he comes at the shoar, is in a better condition then one in a pond, who seeth no help but he must needs be drowned, though the waters be farre less and less raging.

Calvin.

Luther.

Thou hast multiplied the Nation, not made greater the joy, they rejoyce before thee, &c. Because here seemeth to be a contradiction, saith Calvin: The Hebrews say, that אין not, is put here for אין to it. But this word is never any where thus used. Some therefore expound it by Sennacheribs Army, thus, Thou hast increased the Nation, which came against Jerusalem in Hezekiahs time, for by Gods providence was that numerous Army brought together, not the joy, for he had no joy of his great multitudes brought into the field, for they perished to the number of one hundred eighty five thousand in one night, and then the Jews rejoyced as in harvest, or when souldiers are dividing the spoils of the enemies. Some either of the Church increased under the Gospel, but by reason of their calamities and miseries, not their joy, or of the Church increased by the conversion of the Gentiles, but not the Jews joy, who envied it. But the true sense is, that the Prophet here comparing the state of the Church, whilst the Kingdom of Judah flourished and was most prosperous under some noble Kings, with that it was after their return from Captivity, meaneth, that even in those daies, when the people were so many and lived in greater outward glory by farre, their joy was not so great, as in the times after their return; although now they were but few and miserable in comparison of them in outward respects, for they were tributaries to the Persians, and at their dispose, and after, under the Romans. For the coming of Christ now brought more joy and glory to the state, then when in times past they had flourished most; for which it is said, Hag. 2.2. that the glory of the second house should be greater then that of the house built by Solomon. But I cannot herein subscribe to Calvin, but rather to the exposition by him rejected, viz. the Nation of the faithfull, or Gods Church increasing in the time of the Gospel, by the accession of beleivers of all Countries and Nations to the beleiving amongst the Jews. There was yet no joy to the generality of that people, being hardened in unbelief to their destruction. So God increased his Church wonderfully, but not the Jews joy, who suffered by many miseries, and finally were rooted out by the Romans. Yet the faithfull, both Jews and Gentiles had exceeding great joy, as men have in harvest of a plentiful crop seasonably reaped and gathered in. For so our Lord compares the time of the Gospel, Job. 4. saying, Behold the fields are already white unto the harvest, and he that soweth, and he that reapeth rejoyce together: or, as they that divide the spoils; another comparison being added, as if one were not sufficient to set it forth; and Jesus who brought this joyfull light, saith of himself, that he was the stronger man coming upon the strong man armed, and dividing the spoils. For why we should go from this so excellently agreeing to the Prophecie in all things, I see not; nor why so learned an Interpreter, leaving this, should expound it in part by things past, when as it is usuall with the Prophets to speak of things to come in the Perfect tense: and although there be a comparison with things formerly done, v.1. yet here is none, neither note of any. And that which I follow agreeth with Jeroms, who speaks to the same effect, applying the joy not increased, to S<sup>t</sup> Pauls sorrowing for his kinsmen according to the flesh: And to Christs, when he prayed, Father if it be possible let this cup pass from me; that is, If the Gentiles may be saved without the Jews destruction; but if not, Thy will be done: Let me drink it and suffer extremity of sorrow for my Jews ruine, so that a greater increase by all Nations may come in to thy Kingdom. So likewise Haimo, but they expound the not joying, but sorrowing, so as if Christ and his Apostles should be grieved for their infidelity and destruction following, not as if the wicked Jews lamentable case were here set forth; but we may well understand it of both.

Vers. 4.

Adam Sæbont.

For the yoke of his burthen, the rod of his shoulder, and sceptor of his oppressour thou hast broken, as in the day of Midian. This is again applied by some to Sennacheribs overthrow, expounding his yoke, of the servitude whereinto he brought all Nations; the rod of his shoulder, of his sword, so terribly striking where he came; and the sceptor of the oppressour of tributes, imposes by him.

Hieronym.

But Jerom better, by the oppressour, understands the devil, who laid a tribute of sins upon all the world, and swayed the sceptor of government over them, and laid upon them the yoke of spiritual servitude, when he ruled in them; but by Christ, his power and strength is all broken to the faithfull, and they are delivered and brought into the liberty of serving God, which is the best freedom; and all this without material arms, as Gideon sometime sounding with trumpets, with his three hundred men, and breaking pitchers, overthrew the Midianites, who had before mightily oppressed Israel. Calvin and Muscullus expound it of the Jews deliverance out of their Babylonish Captivity, so many words being used to set forth the greatness of the benefit whereby they were freed from all these evils of Oppressours and Tyrants, being again set at liberty, that they might never forget it. But chiefly was this fulfilled in Christ, by whose death, the devil, who had the power of death, was destroyed; and the spiritual oppression is the greatest of all others, and therefore deliverance here-from, not unworthily by such variety set forth.

Heb. 2. 15.

Vers. 5.

For every warre of the Warriour is with noise, and garment rolled in blood, but this in burning, food for the fire. Here the manner of Christs delivering us from our spiritual enemies is shewed, viz. not as by battels fought amongst men, wherein there is great noise of trumpets, drums, and mens shouting and clattering of arms, and much bloodshed, staining the garments of those that fall by the sword: but to Christ, corruptions, which are as the devils strong holds in men, shall be but as fæwel to the fire, being burnt and consumed by his Word and Spirit, as any combustible matter by fire, in all that are converted, there being no visible violence offered, as in every warre there is. And accordingly the Apostle comparing the preaching of the word to weapons of warre, saith, The Weapons of our Warfare are mighty through God, &c. And it is said of Christ, He shall baptize you with the holy Ghost and with fire; and so it was fulfilled, when the Spirit came down like cloven tongues of fire; and S<sup>t</sup> Paul having this fire in him, burnt in the Spirit; and faith which comes by this Spirit, purifieth the heart, Act. 15. 9. even as gold is purified from dross by the fire. Jerom upon this faith little to the purpose, for he speaks only of garments rolled in blood, food for the fire, because the stein of blood cannot be washed out, but the garments so steined must be burnt; applying this to the devil, who shall burn in hell. But he reades not this as a comparison, but as one continued sentence, Every battel is with noise, and garments rolled in blood and burning, &c. but the particle 1 although most commonly it signifieth and, yet here it is adverbative, saith Calvin, signifying but; or take the particle 2 here rendered rendred for, for although, as some do; and then the sense will be the same: Although every battel be with noise, and garments rolled in blood, this shall be with fire, &c. But thus will be redundant before וְיָהִי: but rendring it but, and וְיָהִי for, the sense is best: For to what end should Isaiah, after a victory promised like that in the day of Midian, which was not by any secular power, use such an expression, as if Christs over coming, and mens overcoming in battel were alike; but that the one sort should be with noise and outward violence, and the other as a fire burning within, without all noise; it stands with good reason that he should shew, according to the exposition before going.

For to us a Childe is born, to us a Son is given, and the principality shall be upon his shoulders, and his Name shall be called Wonderful. Having spoken hitherto in general of the joyfull time to come to the faithfull; now he more particularly describes the Author of all this our happiness, viz. The Son of God born of a woman, as other children be. For by a Son, as Calvin well notes, the Son of God is to be understood; because when any mans son is meant, the word son goeth not without an addition of the fathers name, as Exr. 1. and Luc. 3. And if it be the issue of any other creature, as it is usual with the Hebrews, by the word son, to set forth the young of any creature, beast or fowl, this word hath alwaies some other added to it, to shew whereof it is the issue. By Childe born, Oecolampadius understands not amiss the humane nature of Jesus; by Son given, the Divine. And this giving intimates the free grace of God, and singular love herein shewed, not any merit of man, as is more fully expressed, Joh. 3. 16. And this is the same Son prophesied of, chap. 7. A Virgin shall bear a Son. And because this birth was in imagination represented soon after, as if the Prophecie had been fulfilled chap. 8. in the birth of Mahar-shalal-hazbazz, He speaks here in the Present tense, *To us a Childe is born*, &c.* And because it should so certainly be done, as if it had been at that present. The principality shall be upon his shoulder. A phrase usual amongst the Hebrews to set forth sovereign power, chap. 22. 22. The key upon his shoulders. chap. 9. 4. The rod of his shoulder ] Because a rod was of old born in some Kingdoms in token of Sovereignty: Amongst the Romans, fasces or faggots, since the sword, as Rom. 13. And this phrase is here in opposition to that, v. 4. where the rod of his shoulder, that is the devils power is said to be broken, it being here shewed who shall break it, even this Childe of the blessed Virgin, the Son of God, by the Sovereign power that he should have so soon as he was born, whereby he is declared to be born a King, subduing and bringing under all Kings and Potentates, and principalities in high places: And therefore the Magi, who came out of the East, enquired where he was that was born King of the Jews. And he shall call his Name Wonderful. The word used is an impersonall, It shall call, for it is in Cal, and therefore according to our manner of speaking best rendred, His Name shall be called. He had two Names before, Emanuel, and Mahar-shalal-hazbazz, but here six more, that by this variety of Names we may know him. It makes not then against the blessed Virgins sons, being the Son promised, because his Name is said to be Emanuel, the Name of her Son, Jesus, for he hath many Names for the manifold virtues and excellencies in him: As his Father is sometime called El, Adonai, Jehovah, Guelion, Jah, &c. Wonderful he is called for his two natures in one person, and for the wonders which he wrought*. God, this is another Name by it self, and not The mighty God, as it is commonly rendred, the next word וְיָהִי Mighty or strong, being another of his Names, as the two pricks upon the top for a note of distinction shew. The word וְיָהִי signifying God, doth also signifie strong; but because it is most commonly used when God is spoken of, it is every where rendred God: He is so strong, that he is Almighty, one to whom nothing is impossible. Christs Name is God, for he is the same Essence with God the Father. Kings and Judges have also the name of Gods, for their Sovereign power; therefore much more he, the naturall Son of God, as he sometime reasoned. Yet from this we cannot firmly prove him

Hebr. אבנ The Father forth on, that is, without end, therefore well rendered Everlasting: He is a Father providing for and governing his for ever <sup>d</sup>. The Prince of peace: That is, Making peace betwixt God and man; our sins, which cause enmity, being expiated by the sacrifice of his death: So Rom. 5.1. We have peace with God. He was also the true antitype of Solomon for external peace or cessation from warres, in that at his birth there was peace all over the world; Augustus Caesar then reigning over all in peace. The Jews, as Calvin noteth, labour two waies to obscure this Prophecie: 1. By expounding it of Hezekiah, but, as hath been before shewed, Hezekiah was born eleven or twelve years before this, for he was twenty five when he began to reign, 2 King. 18.2. therefore nine when Abaz began his reign; two or three years after which, this Prophecie was uttered; and this hath plainly reference to the son of the Prophetes, said to be born, chap. 8. Neither do these Names agree to him, or to any meer man, nor the everdureing Kingdom spoken of, v. 7. 2. By applying these Names to God; but this is without all sense or reason, because the Prophet is speaking here of the childe born, and no reason can be yielded, why he should immediatly from his Prophecie touching him, go to enumerating of the Names of God.

Vers. 7. Of the increase of his Kingdom and peace there shall be no end, &c. The word signifying of the increase, is לברכה with the letter Mem shut, which is never so written in the beginning or midst, but only at the end of a word, and therefore not without a mystery: But what the mystery is, divers conjecture diversly. Galatinus, that hereby is intimated the 600 year after this Prophecy, when it should be fulfilled, this childe being then born: But because this was about Anno mundi 3210, his birth Anno 3960, that cannot stand. Some that the perpetual Virginitie of Mary his mother was set forth: Some that his Kingdom should be spread into four quarters of the earth, according to the figure of a final Mem: And Calvin, the close and secret way, whereby he should come to reign and set up his Kingdom, viz. by his Spirit in mens hearts, in the midst of many pressures, that none might expect of it a Kingdom outwardly glorious, but obscure. He also mentioneth the conjectures of others, either Jews being in servitude till this birth, or their exclusion out of this Kingdom for their infidelity: I see nothing against any of these, and therefore leave them all in medio to be considered by the judicious Reader. Of this Kingdom there shall be no limits, and therefore it is said, Of the increase thereof no end; for it shall be from sea to sea, and to the worlds end, as also Pf. Dan. 7.17. And as it shall extend into all parts, so it shall endure for ever, and not like other Kingdoms of this world in time come to ruine; which shews that this Kingdom should be spiritual; and likewise the peace here spoken of, peace of conscience, by reason of the forgiveness of sins and reconciliation with God, to whom sin makes us as enemies. Upon the Throne of David, &c. Here is shewed, where and over what Kingdom this Son of God should reign, viz. the Kingdom of David, that is, the Kingdom whereof Dauids was a figure, and wherein this was begun, but much more enlarged and perfected in his Sonne Christ Jesus, who adds to that of the Jews all other Kingdoms and Nations, wherein the Gospel is propagated. Now it is called the Kingdom of David, because it was promised to him, that his Throne should endure for ever, and that his Kingdom should be everlasting, 1 Sam. 7. Psal. 89. And this is not fulfilled but in Jesus; for the Lord spake of this everlasting Kingdom, as his Kingdom; and by the name of David, sets forth the eternal King, who should sway this Scepter; see also Ezek. 37.24. The zeal of the Lord will do this. He saith faith, not, his power or wisdom, but that which includes both, a most earnest affection of the Almighty towards his chosen: So that although it may seem to us impossible, yet he to whom all things are possible, hath most earnestly set his minde to do it, and therefore it shall be done against all the world, relucting and endeavouring the contrary. Chrysostom saith, that this peace is four-fold; 1. With God, 2. In our selves, the flesh being subdued to the spirit: 3. Betwixt Jews and Gentiles at the last: 4. That peace, which is everlasting in heaven, no warre at all being any more; whereas in this world there be alwaies warres and troubles. The zeal, saith Cyrril, is his indignation against his enemies, and exceeding great love to his Church will make him do as hath been said, against the one and for the other.

The Lord sent a word unto Jacob, and it fell upon Israel. Verf. 9. And all the people of Ephraim shall know, &c. The Prophet having from chap. 7. 7. hitherto, spoken much of the birth of Emanuel, whereunto he was carried by a Prophecetical rapture, when he was speaking, as the present occasion required, of the deliverance of Judah from the conspiracy of Israel and Syria, and the judgements to come upon them both: Now he returneth to threaten Syria and Israel again, by a new Prophecy. The Septuagint, for A word fell upon Israel,] have, death or plague, as the word מָוֶת with other Pricks signifieth, so saith Jerom: But with better reason he renders it word, seeing it is a Prophecy or Prophecetical word, as Prophecies be often called. It was now sent to Jacob, and fell soon after upon Israel, that is, the Kingdom of the ten Tribes, when it was done accordingly, for Jacob and Israel here are two words to expresse one and the same thing. But whereas he expounds it thus, The word or command to make a King of the Tribe of Judah, came to the twelve Tribes, set forth by the word Jacob; according to the Prophecy of Jacob, The Scepter shall not depart from Judah, till Shiloh come; fell upon Israel; that is, the wicked of the ten Tribes, when they made themselves a King; of whom the Lord saith, They have made them a King, but not by me: This agreeth not here, because he doth not here set himself to repeat what had been done, as if that were the cause of the judgements, which he now proceeds to threaten. For there was a more propinque cause mentioned, chap. 7. 1. 2. viz. Israels joyning with the heathen Syrians, to overthrow the Counsel of God touching Dauids house, by putting down the King which came of him, and setting up another: For this and not for casting off Rehoboam to follow Jeroboam, came this judgement, because that was by the Lords own appointment for a punishment of Solomons Idolatry. Greg. Mor. 3. By Jacob understands the Jewish Nation, by Israel the Church of the Gentiles; for the Word, that is, the Gospel came to them, but fell to the Gentiles lot, when they embraced it, being by the Jews rejected.

And all the people shall know Ephraim and the inhabitant of Samaria, &c. Those whom he called Jacob and Israel before, he now calleth Ephraim, because that was the most populous Tribe of the ten, and therefore that Kingdom went often under the name of Ephraim; and Samaria, because it was the chief City of that Kingdom. Now they are first set forth as deriding and setting light by Gods judgements through their pride, when as they said, The buildings made with Bricks which were fallen they would turn into square Stones, and the Sycamores a soft corruptible wood, into Cedars, which were most durable, and their pride was alwaies great in respect of Judah, because they were the farre greater Kingdom.

And the Lord shall lift up the enemies of Rezin against him, and shall mingle his enemies. Verf. 12. Syria before, and the Philistims behinde, and they shall devour Israel, &c. The judgement first began at Rezin the King of Syria, for him the Lord first cut off by the King of Assur; and this was a great blow to Israel, when their confederate, in whose forces, united with their own, they so much trusted, was taken away; and this was fulfilled, 2 King. 16. 9. Then many enemies, and some amongst them, who before had been their friends, viz. the Syrians, joyning together, overthrew the Kingdom of Israel. For Rezin being dead,

- dead, and Syria coming to be under the King of Assur, he employed them in his warres against Israel, together with the Philistims and other peoples under his dominion, till he had destroyed that Kingdom and depopulated it, 2 King. 17.6. Therefore in saying, He shall mingle his enemies, he meaneth not Rezin, whose judgement went before, but Israel to his destruction. For Syria before] The Hebrew is, Syria from the East, and the Philistims West, or behinde; and so Jerom renders it, and they shall eat up Israel with every month; a Metaphor to set forth Israel's destruction by them together, all helping it forward. For all this his anger is not turned away, &c. After the judgement threatned in general, from hence to the end of the Chapter it is aggravated, these words being thrice repeated, and their intollerable miseries variously deciphered, the cause being first shewed, vers.13. that is, This people turns not to him that smiteth them, neither have sought the Lord of beasts. For God smiteth to make us by repentance to turn to him from our sins, and of prophane condemners of duties of piety, to become devout seekers to him by prayer, but when mens hearts are hardened so in sin, as that neither threatnings nor judgements will make them cease from sinning, but they still go on herein even in the midst of many grievous miseries, there is no expectation that there should be a cessation from judgement but a fearfull aggravation thereof.
- Verf*.14. For the Lord will cut off the head and the tail, the bough and the rush in one day. Here they are distinguished into certain sorts, who shall suffer. The first distinction is explained, vers.15. The ancient and the honourable is the head, the false prophet the tail: So called, because as a dog fauneth with his tail, so the false prophet upon the people, speaking nothing but pleasing things. 2. Because, as the tail hides the filthiest part of the body, so the false prophet, both his own and the filthiness of the peoples sins. 3. As the tail is the basest part, placed behinde all others; so many false prophets do arise from amongst the most infim sort of men, Weavers, Taylors, Coblers, &c. teaching falsely because they know not how to teach truly through their ignorance; and feigning many things to purchase to themselves credit, as some Anabaptist teachers have done; as John Leydon and Cocke, &c. Touching the rush, some render it the reed, but this is the principal signification of the word; neither doth the Prophet so expressly shew who the bough and rush are: But vers.17. he saith, that The Lord will take no pleasure in their young men, nor pity the fatherless and Widows. Whereby he sheweth, that by the bough is meant lusty youth, by rush these feeble persons. Jerom for bough and rush, hath it incurvantem & depravantem, which Sasbont expounds, making crooked right things, and perverting true, as if these two belonged to Princes and false prophets also. But Calvin better, and more near to that which hath been said, the strong and the weak: And Cornel. a Lapide herein going from the Vulgar Latine, saith the same: They are two phrases to express the same things, Head and tail, borrowed from beasts, Bough and rush, from plants. The Septuagint have it, Great and small: But because others were to be cut off besides the Ancient, Honourable and false prophets, no age or sex being spared, I take the Prophets own expression, vers.17. to be the best exposition of the last Metaphor. The word rendred bough indeed cometh of ῥαβδος Chaphaph to bow or bend, but it is commonly put for a bough, which because it is stronger then a rush by far, may well signifie young men; the rush a weak thing, fatherless, widows, little children, and such as be of weak and poor estate.
- Verf*.16. For the Governours of this people are seducers, &c. Here is a reason why the Princes and false prophets should be cut off: But for Governours, Hebr. is Blessers; and so the Vulgar Latine hath it, and for the governed, the blessed ones of it, because they spake good words to the people, tending to security, and to put away all fear of danger, and to make them hope for victory over Judah; whereby they should be more enriched: They are thus called, therefore in rendring it Governours, the sense is more respected then the meaning of the Hebrew words: The word also rendred seducers, signifieth makers of them them to erre, that is, whilst by promising them all good they animated them to go on in their idolatry and other abominable sins, but he saith, that they of that people thus led into a fools paradise, are destroyed.

Whereas ver. 17. in setting forth the destruction of their young men, he saith, the Lord will not rejoyce in them, it is so spoken by way of opposition to his rejoycing in his people elsewhere spoken of, when their prosperous condition is here spoken of, when their prosperous condition is set forth, contrariwise he will now do as one grieved with them, as Psa. 95. Forty years long was I grieved with this generation, viz. execute his judgements upon them, because all are hypocrites and wicked, &c. here is the cause why bough and rush shall be cut off also by the same judgement, though some made a shew of religion, yet there was no true fear of God in them, and in speaking otherwise, forso much as they did it not from the heart, this was a wickedness in them, for which he saith, every mouth speaks wickedness. Calvin indeed understands their boasting in speech of their wickedness, as the height of sinning, but because all are said before to be hypocrites, the sense given doth better agree. Now the cause of so great judgements is set down that none might exclaim against God as tyrannicall for being so severe.

Because iniquity is kindled as fire, it shall devour the briars and thorns, &c. That is, the wicked by their sins kindle the fire of Gods wrath, and being kindled as a fire with straw or some other light matter at the first, the briars and thorns growing in the fields are afterwards taken by it, and then the thick places of the wood, the trees which are great and tall not escaping the fury hereof, and this not without a great smoak overspreading the air on high, to the darkning of all the earth about, as ver. 19 speaketh, and sheweth who shall be the fuel of this fire, even the people, helping to destroy one another, Manasseh Ephraim, and Ephraim Manasseh, and they both Judah, as followeth, ver. 20, 21. Thus by other metaphors the prophet both setteth forth the cause of these grievous judgements in generall, viz. their sinnes, as being of the nature of fire, which at the first kindling is little, but soon after it rageth and rangeth far and wide, that the thickest and greatest woods are burnt down hereby, that is, the most populous places of the kingdom, and such as are of greatest wealth and power, whereas this fire at the first took but the briars and thorns, that is, some of the meaner sort of people, and dwelling in villages scattered here and there. Then more particularly shewing by what means this judgement was first brought upon them, he saith, that brother should be against brother, they should by intestine wars one bite at and devour another, and one tribe another, as the hungry wilde beasts catching on every side at his prey being never satisfied, but still going on to devour, as if he had yet eaten nothing. And he doth instance in Manasseh and Ephraim, because they came of two brothers, sons to one father Joseph, and should therefore have been most loving together, as if all one tribe, and when they had by civill stirrs and tumults waited one another, they should joyn against Judah, but in the end the common enemy should come upon them by this means weakened, and be their utter ruine. When this was fulfilled we finde not plainly set forth, but because in the kingdom of Israel, the servant rose against his Master, Hoseab against Pekab and slew him and reigned in his stead, and Pekab before that against Pekabiah (which certainly could not be without part-takings, some tribes being for one and some for the other, and so not without bloodshed, although it be only briefly commemorated, that these things were thus done) it may well be gathered that these dissensions are here by the Prophet pointed at, and Pekab his arming of Ephraim, and all the rest of the tribes under him against Judah, in these words, and they both against Judah, whence note, that it is a dreadfull forerunner of the destruction of a kingdom at hand, when the mutuall hatred of the members thereof is so great against one another, that they fall to bloody wars amongst themselves, and will not be pacified, but brother fights against brother, son against father, and one of the same religion against another. Some take this as implying that when God will destroy a people, ple, if there be no other enemies he can in his just judgement set them one against another to work mutually for their own countreys destruction, which yet God for his mercies sake avert from this our kingdom of England, at this day imbroyled in such bloody wars, by turning the Kings heart to the Parliament, and theirs to him, and so this unhappy dissention into a blessed union never more to be broken.

CHAP. X.

Verf. 1.
Hieronym.

WO to them that decree unjust decrees, and write a wicked writing. Here saith Jerom. the Prophet passeth from Israel to Judab, threatening that kingdom as he had done the other of the ten Tribes. But because there is nothing to expresse so much as is usuall with him when he passeth from one kingdom to another, all our expositors take it for a continuation of his invective against Israel, and the like conclusion vers. 4. sheweth no lesse. Having therefore threatened judgements to all sorts in generall before, he now taxeth Rulers and Judges in particular, as the chief cause of Gods judgements by their mis-government. Their sin was oppressing the poor, as vers. 2. is shewed, and that they might not seem to proceed unjustly, they made decrees and laws that were not just or equall, for the meaner sort of people, and then proceeded to the execution of them, whereby they were oppressed most grievously, and could have no remedy in law hereagainst, for which he saith, They drive away the poor from judgement &c. vers. 2. that is, if by pleading before any judge, they would seek remedy, it was objected to them that they could have none, the decrees and laws which were made being plainly against them. As now in these times of distractions we have Committees, who make orders, laying heavy burthens of charges upon whom they please, and then it is vain for them that are charged to pleade for ease although it be never so unjust.

Verf. 2.

Verf. 3.

What will ye do in the day of visitation, when your desolation shall come from afar, &c. Because the great ones had thus oppressed the poor and mean, a visitation by Gods judgements is here threatened, when they shall not know what to do nor whether to turn them: and it is called a visitation, because in visitations the visiter comes amongst the visited apparently, being seen by all men, and all delinquents feel his coming to their smart; so when God visiteth in wrath to punish, when in mercy the miserable feel it to their joy and comfort from afarre, he saith, their desolation shall come, because they should be destroyed and carried captive by the Assyrians, a people dwelling far North from them. They thought themselves safe, because they were in amity with the neighbour nations, especially with Syria their confederate, but hereby God sheweth, that he can bring enemies against a wicked people most remote, that they think least of, and of whom they have no fear. To whom will ye flee for help? he speaks of their ease as most desperate, but justly were they brought to this, because they should have been a refuge for the poor, but contrariwise they were their ruining by their unjust proceedings, so now they should study to whom to flee for succour when they were oppressed by the Assyrians, but none to flee unto, and Where will ye trust your glory? ye have joyed in honours and worldly pomp, lifting your selves up as demigods above the people, not being spoken to but with such words, your Excellency, Majesty, Holiness, Lordship, and other-like bubbles of vanity; but who shall then give such titles or have any regard unto you? the enemies sword will put no difference betwixt you and the meanest in that day.

Musculus.

Verf. 4.

Not to bow with the bound, or fall with the slain. Here he sheweth why he had spoken of their glory as being at an end, for who will preserve so you, that ye who have been proud of your Worships and Honours, should not come down and be made to stoop to the enemies bands, many of you when ye shall be led away captive, and many to fall by the sword as well as the poorest of all, yea, when

when the poor people of the Land were left to be vine-dressers and husbandmen, they were carried away, as the history sheweth, and to this effect Jerom. Vatablus saith, some understanding here nemo shall escape, make this the sense, none shall escape but he that croucheth amongst the bound or slain, feigning himself to be one of them, but there needs no understanding of more words, the sense being better, as hath been said. Calvin saith that some expound וְאֵין which I have rendred nos, and so it commonly signifyeth nuntium, only, or sine me without me, making this the sense, He that hath not put his trust in me, but fallen from me, shall be bound or slain, or only they shall fall amongst the bound or slain, for this all of them shall come to: or lastly, he takes it for an oath, as if the Lord in indignation did swear, that all should either be slain, or carried away bound. But I still prefer the first as most genuine, To whom will ye commit your glory, that ye should not be bound or be slain? surely there will be none to save you herefrom. To this pride and oppression brings even the greatest in the day of Gods wrath, when he executeth judgement.

Wo to Ashur the rod of my fury, he is the staff, in their hand is my indignation. After the threatnings against Israel, here followed somewhat against Ashur, whereby both Israel and Judah by Gods just judgement should be destroyed. Calvin and other new writers for wo to Ashur, have O Ashur, as if the Lord did here only call to Ashur to go against Israel with some expression of grief, that he was constrained to this: But because ver. 7. he begins to tax, and proceeds to threaten him, I rather follow Jerom rendring וְאֵין as indeed it signifyeth, wo, and because he began ver. 1. in like manner, yet he first commemorates what he had set the Assyrians a work to do. And he calleth Ashur his rod for the comfort of the faithful, intimating that he could do nothing of himself against Israel, as a rod cannot but by the hand of him that useth it to correct wickedness, and it is to the terror of the wicked, against whom savage enemies come not to fight of themselves, for then they might have some hope that they should not prevail, but by God in his wrath secretly stirring them up, although they themselves think nothing less. Yet as Calvin saith, we must wisely distinguish between Gods actions and mens. 1. God doth give power to every one to move or do, neither can we do any thing of our selves, according to Act. 17. 2. He specially moveth the elect unto good by his spirit, and works all their works by them. 3. He moveth the wicked in his judgement by a secret instinct to destroy one another, or to execute his wrath against his own peculiar people for their sinnes, and when they are thus carried on to slaughter and bloodshed, it is malice in them who unwittingly do Gods will, but justice in him, and so it was in the case of Ashur. The staff he is also called, to beat the greater ones as before, the rod to beat the little, in Oecolampadius: and both these are Gods indignation in their hand, that is, the Assyrians, because in indignation brought by him.

To an hypocritical Nation I will send him, and command him to take the prey. This is spoken by way of meeting with an objection: Israel is thy people, wilt thou then send him against them? Ans. They do but feign themselves to be the people of the Lord, all their religion is but hypocrisie, then which God hates nothing more, see chap. 9. 17. for this he threatens that they shall be made a prey of, and troden under as the dirt in the streets, that is, as most base and vile, every Assyrian insulting over the proudest of them, when they should be carried away captive, and made slaves in a strange Land. If it be said, he sinned not then in exercising such cruelty against Israel, if God sent and commanded him to do so, and why then is this complained of, Psa. 137. and Babylon therefore threatened. It is to be understood, that it is not meant, he gave him any expresse command to do thus, but he out of pride and malice tyrannizing so, did it not, but according to Gods secret counsell, being herein though unwittingly the scourge of God, as Assur king of the Goths called himself afterwards, because God useth the evil affections and bloody proceedings of such men to chastise the sinfull and rebellious against him.

Therefore ver. 7. it is added, But he will not think so, neither will his heart think so.

So, because it will be in his heart to root out many nations. He will do that which God in his secret counsell hath determined that he shall do for a punishment to Israel, but not with any reference to God in his thoughts, but to make himself great, and to get him dominion far and wide.

For he shall say, are not my Princes together Kings? vers. 9. Is not Calno as Carchemis, Armad as Arphad? &c. These are Cities subdued by him and his progenitors upon the river Euphrates, and the scope of his speech is to shew, that it is vain for the people of any place to resist him, sith these cities so potent could not, but some of them more lately, some longer ago had been subdued by the Assyrian Empire.

Vers. 10.

Vers. 11.

As my hand hath found the Kingdoms of Idols, and yet their graven Images were beyond those of Jerusalem. vers. 11. Shall I not do to Jerusalem and the Idols thereof as to Samaria, &c. Here the Assyrian king is shewed to be insolent not only towards men, but also towards God. His hand, he saith, had found the means to subdue kingdoms, where gods more worthy were worshipped than at Jerusalem, yea Samaria with the gods thereof had already fallen before him, therefore he doubted not but Jerusalem should do likewise: thus the heathen man bewrayed his grosse ignorance of him by whom he obtained all his victories, blasphemously insulting over him, as if he were of no more strength then dumb idols, yea, not so potent as some of them. For this was the sottishness of Heathens that they thought there were many gods, and that of these some had more power then others, not acknowledging at all one God almighty, who made and governs over all things both in heaven and earth, yea, and the gods whom they worshipped and thought to be Gods, but chiefly such as took this or that countrey into their patronage, but not their own, they slighted and insulted over, as not being of so great power as themselves when they were able to come forth in great multitudes to battell. This was after verified in Sennacherib, who did thus vaunt himself against the true God, Chap. 38. and is here brought in prophetically speaking thus, as if he had already said so.

Vers. 12.

But it shall come to passe when the Lord hath fulfilled all his work in mount Sion and Jerusalem, I will visit upon the fruit of the great or haughty heart of the King of Assur, &c. After the pride and blasphemy of the Assyrian King set forth, now followeth his punishment and the time when it shall come, viz. when he hath fulfilled all his work, whereby is intimated both that the cruelty exercised by him against Israel and Judah was Gods work, although wrought by his hand, because without God he could not have so prevailed; and that when God is about the work of chastisement, he will not cease till he hath done it to the full, but then he will, that the faithful may have patience although they think the time of their suffering too long, when this work is fulfilled: as a father having corrected his childe, casteth the rod wherewith, into the fire, so the Lord visits the instrument the wicked King of Assur, that is, with judgement to his destruction, and specially for his intollerable pride of heart, and he calls it the fruit of his haughty heart, because herefrom as from a most corrupt tree, came the fruit of blasphemous and most insolent speeches against God and his people.

Vers. 13.

Because he hath said, in the fortitude of my hand I have done it, &c. Here the Prophet returns again further to set forth the King of Assurs proud thoughts, for whereas he was able to do nothing, but God did all by him, he ascribes all his victories to himself in a most vain-glorious boasting manner in this and vers. 14.

Vers. 15.

Shall an hatchet, &c. a saw boast it self against him that cutteth therewith? Hieronym. Shall these tools vauntingly say, when any thing hath been cut or sawn down by them, or any work wrought by smoothing and carving, we have done it, as if the rod should lift up it self against him that lifts it up, as the chaff lifting up as if it were not wood, to be understood in the same manner, as if they should boastingly say when any have been smitten by them, We have done it, which is absurd. For so the Assyrian kings who were but Gods rod or staff, his hatchet or saw, in themselves all dead things and without motion, yet vaunted themselves themselves of the mighty works which God wrought by them, and which they could not without him by any means have done. For as Musculus hath it, if one Hatchet should boast it self against another, because it is better mettald and sharper, it were absurd; so for one man to insult over another, because the workman hath made it so, much more for man to lift up himself against God; And thus doth every one who ascribes his prevailings and deeds to himself. Yet however man be here compared to a dead tool, that hath no motion in it self, saith Calvin, he is not to be thought in every respect like it. For he by reason of that life and spirit which God hath put into him, can stirre and attempt this or that, but he can effect nothing without God.

Musculus.

Calvin.

Therefore the Lord, the Lord of hosts will send to his fat ones leanness, and a fire, &c. Jerom. He will send his Angel, who in one night shall slay of his host a thousand eighty five thousand, and that by fire burning their bodies, their garments being untoucht, as the Hebrews say it was done in Sennacherib's host, for which he here speaketh of a fire burning under his glory, and because then his Captains and principal men were consumed, he speaks of this judgement as coming upon the fat ones, to the wasting at once of all the fat of their strength and military valour. To this also doth Musculus agree. Calvin by his fat ones understandeth prosperity, wealth, and all manner of strength for warre, which is attenuated when this strength is taken away. Deut. 32. 15. Thus Jeshurun is said to have waxed fat. The Metaphor of burning is taken from the burning of a stately building, whereby all the glory and grace of it ceaseth, and it is brought to nothing being thenceforth but a ruinous heap.

Hieronym.

And the glory of his forest, and of his Carmel from the soul to the flesh shall be consumed, and he shall be as one fleeing a sight. That is, hastily for fear. Some for Carmel have his fruitfull field, and for fleeing, as the dissolution of an Ensign-bearer; and so the words according to the Hebrew signifie, The glory of his forest, and of his Carmel, that is, even as fire being put to a thick wood, and a place full of trees as Carmel in Galile, till it groweth into a great flame in all parts, soon consumeth and burneth down to the ground all such goodly trees, wherein the glory of it stood: so shall it be with the Assyrian host, wherein he so much gloried through his invisible fire of Gods wrath burning in his Camp.

Verf. 18.

And the rest of the trees of this forest shall be numbred, a childe shall write them. That is, of his Army a very few shall escape this burning; the Hebrews say, not above ten. Thus Jerom, who also allegorically will have Hereticks set forth hereby, who shall sometimes abound, but afterwards through the power of the holy one of Israel, that is, God, shall be reduced to very few through the truth, as a fiery Law coming out of his mouth. Calvin and the rest of our new Writers by the light and holy One of Israel understand God, who sanctifieth and enlighteneth his people with the comfort of his help in extremity, and the same, who is light to them, is fire, and a devouring flame to their adversaries, who have no more power to withstand his judgements, when they come to cut them off, then thorns and briars the force of the fire, as it was proved in Hezekiah's time. And to thorns and briars are the wicked enemies of the Church compared for their barbarous cruelty. By Carmel, Vatablus will not have the proper place so called meant, for Assur was not owner thereof, so that it could not be called his, therefore he renders it, His fruitfull field, as the word signifieth, noting, that Gods wrath as fire should pierce into his very Land, and not destroy the trees only and briars. But if we take his Carmel here allegorically, there will be no absurdity in following Jerom, his Carmel being put for that wherein he gloried, as the Jews did in their Carmel for the great fruitfulness thereof. From the soul to the flesh. Here, saith Calvin, is another comparison taken from a man, whose destruction is then most lamentable, when his body is destroyed, and his soul lies under the wrath of God also. Musculus saith, it is not vainly said, From the soul to the flesh, but to shew, That this fire should not be like ours, which first burneth the flesh outwardly, and then takes life away by piercing more inwardly; this contrariwise destroyes the life or soul first, then the body lies upon the ground and consumeth. For the last words, wherein he compares their overthrow to the dissolution of an Ensign-bearer, this is to shew the utter ruine of the whole Army, whereof this is a sign, that their Banners be all taken, for when it comes to this, there is no hope for that Army more.

Vers. 20.

And in that day the remainders of the people of Israel shall no more lean upon their smiter, but upon the Lord, &c. That is, After the Assyrian subdued, they shall see into their wickedness of seeking aid from Assur, as Ahaz did, and doe so no more, but seek it at Gods hand onely, as indeed they did when they returned out of their Babylonish Captivity.

Vers. 21.

For a remnant shall return. As was prophetically set forth in the name Shear-jashub. Chap. 7.

Vers. 22.

For if the people Israel were as the sands of the sea, a remnant should return. If thy people (O Israel) Hebr. He turns as it were to speak to Israel, who was dead long ago, because a promise was in those times made, That his seed should be as the sands of the seashore; but now for their sins they should be brought to a small number, The consumption decreed overflowing righteousness, or justice; that is, the reducing of the people of Israel to such a paucity, infinite numbers of them being destroyed, is nothing else but overflowing justice, and not to be censured as cruelty in God, for he could not in justice but thus rigorously deal with them, and then for his promise sake to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, reserving a remnant, shew favour to them again. This was partly fulfilled in the Babylonish Captivity, and their return from it, and more fully in the time of the Gospel, when such multitudes were destroyed by the Romans, especially at the siege of Jerusalem; yet a few who imbraced the faith were saved, being called out into Pella. Therefore Paul, saith Jerom, the best Interpreter, expounds and applies it thus, Rom. 9. 28. alledging also the words of Vers. 23. For the Lord makes a consumption and determination in the midst of the whole earth, That is, of the Land of Israel, for so the Hebrew phrase, The whole earth or land, commonly sets forth all that land of which it is spoken, and by the midst is meant in the land, or in any part thereof. Calvin by the consumption determined overflowing in righteousness, for so he thinks it may be read, understands the few Apostles, and other Preachers of the Gospel called out of the Jewish Nation, going forth and overflowing with the flood of truth, that is, the righteousness of faith, all Countreys and Nations. This is good, but a sense, which the word consumption will not so well bear as the proper sense, according to which I have expounded it.

But yet a little while, and his fury shall be consumed, or come to an end, and my indignation in taking them quite away, Hebr. Yet a little modicum, and wrath shall be ended. Having spoken of so general a destruction of the whole Land of Israel, in the former verse, lest the faithful should be quite discouraged hereby, he now comforteth them, both by bidding them not to fear, and calling them his people, and saying, that he shall but smite in the way of Egypt, that is, as Oecolampadius hath it, as the Egyptians sometime smote them by oppression, but were not able utterly to destroy them. Jerom, when he shall be be in the way of Egypt to fight against Tirhachab the King of Ethiopia, he shall write menacing letters to thee, but be able to do no more, and this shall be his smiting thee, as is shewed that he did 2 King. 19.9. Pagnin follows the first, and so doth Junius, rendering it ratione Egypti; and that this is the meaning is further made plain, saith he vers. 26. where the same words, In the way of Egypt, are used again, to shew the manner of the Egyptians destruction, viz. in the night, for so perished the host of Sennacherib the Assyrian*. The Septuagint render it, That he may see the way of Egypt; but herein they go from the Hebrew. Thus shall it be to Zion, but the time shall not be long before Gods wrath ends in the utter destruction of the Assyrian, his cruel enemy, and the consummation or full end of Assurs fury shall come, he being not able to do any more. For thus it was indeed at that time, when Sennacherib with his huge host came against Jerusalem, and greatly straightened it, and terribly threatened it, this storm was soon blown over, his whole Army being by Gods Angel destroyed.

And the Lord shall stir up a scourge against him like the smiting of Midian in the rock of Oreb. That is, as the Midianites were smitten before Gideon and his nine hundred men, when Oreb their Prince perished on a rock, called since by his name, The rock of Oreb, and as his rod upon the sea, and he lifted it up, in the way of Egypt; that is, when he lifted it up by the hand of Moses, and made the red sea come together after it had been divided, upon Pharaoh and all his host to their sudden destruction; so Sennacheribs host shall perish by his rod in the way of Egypt, though not in the same place.

And in that day his burthen shall be taken from thy shoulder, and the yoke shall vanish before the unction, or oil. The burthen was the Tribute which the Jews paid to the King of Assur, three hundred talents of silver, and thirty of gold, 2 King. 18. Before the oil, a Metaphor taken from leather thongs, wherewith yokes are tied not to be loosed again, but being made soft and slippery with oil they are easily dissolved, and so should be the Assyrians yoke upon their neck. Jerom, By the Spirit of God, and the oil of his mercy. Calvin, Through the power of the anointed one Christ Jesus. The best exposition I take it, is, Before the King who was Gods anointed, and dear unto him, that then should reign, which was Hezekiah, because he did but spread Sennacheribs blasphemous letters before the Lord, and the night following that deadly blow was given. Junius brings Jonathan; the Caldee Paraphrast for that exposition understanding it of Christ, and renders it propter oleum, but Hebrew it is לפני השמן Before the face of the oil; yet this, I grant, may signifie, By the power of the Spirit signified by oil, and consequently of Christ who had the Spirit without measure, and this he saith, is here spoken to make way to the Prophecie touching Christ Chap. 11. which is too improbable, because having spoken of the Assyrians under the similitude of the Trees of Libanus, vers. 34. which should be cut down; he begins Chap. 11. with this, as a reason, For a branch shall spring out of the root of Jesse, &c. let the Reader follow which he pleaseth. In the next words he prophesieth of the several places to which the King of Assur should come, and what trouble and perplexity the people in those parts should then be in. Jerom saith, it was at his return from Egypt, where he had been to fight against the Ethiopian. He came in great haste to Ai, and not staying there he passed to Migron, and when he came there, so great was his desire with speed to take the City, that he went immediatly to Michmas, and there leaving his carriages, because he thought the City being taken soon to return to them again; he went to Gibeah, and stayed there a while to refresh his Army. Then Ramah being near is terrified, and out of Gibeah of Saul, which was the Gibrah before spoken of, the people fled at his coming; then the daughter of Gallim lifts up her voice also in lamentation, causing Laiſh to hear it, and poor Anathoth Medmena was moved, to which he came next; then the inhabitants of Gebim, that is, of mountainous places, at whom he could not so easily come, are bidden to be comforted for this. And yet whilst the day lasted, he came to Nob, whence he seeing Jerusalem, stretched out his hand in way of threatening it, or wagged it in way of disdain, that when all other parts in the East were subdued by him, so little a City should stand out and not yield; so Jerom. And this is generally followed, although, as Musculus saith, some have expounded it of his journey, when he fled, his Army being destroyed: But both the terrour stricken into places, whereby he passed, and his coming last near Jerusalem, evince the contrary. For if it had been meant of the way that he fled by, Jerusalem and the place nearest to it would have been spoken of first; and when he fled he was rather contemptible then terrible in all places, to which he came. His coming therefore, and the places, whereby are set forth, that when it should come to passe, the faithfull might be comforted in looking up to God, who had before by his Prophet traced out all the way whereby he should come, as without whom he could do nothing, and be confirmed touching his destruction soon after to follow, whereof it is also prophesied in this place. And again vers. 33, 34. touching the places here mentioned, we shall not need to enquire curiously into them, some of them being to us unknown, but of Ai see Josh. 8. of Mugron, 1 Sam. 14. 3. of Michmas, 1 Sam. 13. 1. Gibeah was right over against Michmas, 1 Sam. 14. 1, 6. Rama was the Town where Samuel dwelt, 1 Sam. 7. 16. and Laiſh in the farthest parts of Benjamin, Judg. 18. 17. Nob was the City of Ahimelech, 1 Sam. 21. Anathoth was the place of which Jeremy was, but of this Madmen and Gebim no more is said by Iunius, but that they were all in the Tribe of Benjamin, which was joined so near to Judah, that they were alwayes inseparable, and within the compasse of this Tribe was part of Jerusalem, to come to which Sennacherib passed all these places.

* But because the word לפני is never used to set forth a like thing, but as v. 28 where his destruction is compared to that of Midian; I subscribe rather to From, holding that the place where he was cut off, is rather noted by this word, vers. 26. and the place where he threatened Hezekiah by his message in this verse; for he was either time in the way of Egypt, for by it he went towards Ethiopia, and returned again being come as farre as Lachish, when his Army perished. Neither was their deliverance from him like that out of Egypt, for there they had been long oppressed, but this is said to be but a little while, and their burthens were heavy, but now nothing but of boasting words.

Iunius.

Behold the Lord shall cut off the bough with terrour. The word AND here rendered a Bough, is by Jerom rendred Lagunculum, a pitcher; By Pagnin, either Glory or a Bough; so by R. Ezra, Chimbi, and all new writers a Bough; By Theodotion and Symmachus, Torcular. Jerom applieth it to Christ, saying, That here is the Prophecy touching him begun, which is continued Chap. 11. as if before the Prophecies of his springing up, his death and cutting off thereby were spoken of; to a pitcher also he saith he is compared, because of his flesh being frail, in which his Divinity so precious was contained. Then that which followeth of those of high stature that should be cut down, he expoundeth of the greatest and mightiest of the Jewish Nation for all their wickednesses, and that especially of being instruments of so bloody a fact of crucifying him. Calvin expounds it also of the Jews, but not as Jerom, as if part belonged to Christ and part to them, but all to the wicked Jews, upon whom God threatens here to bring his terrible judgements before Christs coming, first setting them forth under the Allegory of a Bough, and then of trees of high stature, and the forest of Lebanon, holding, that it cannot agree to the Assyrians, because it were not so proper by Lebanon to set them forth, being not of their Countrey, but of the Countrey of the Jews, and he urgeth the word Behold, as beginning a new Prophecies, and not continuing the old. And he saith, that being thus understood of the Jews great sufferings by the Assyrians, Cha. 11. 1. comes in aptly to comfort the faithfull in the midst of these judgements. Iunius expounds it of the Assyrian, as a conclusion of the Prophecies touching him, when he should with such earnestness bend his course towards Jerusalem, the Lord would suddenly cut him down, as a Bough growing erect a great height before, but now hanging down and withering: And his trees of high stature, that that is, his Princes and mighty men should fall, and the wood of his Army by the magnificent one, that is, the Angel which should smite his host. Vulgar Latine Lebanus with his high ones shall fall. Marlorat, Libanus shall fall violently. The word rendred by Iunius by the magnificent, is Libanus and doth so signifie, or by the mighty or strong one; wherefore the other translations are not so apt, as not agreeing to the word here used. I subscribe to that of Iunius, as also Adam Salsbont, and many more: For the objections of Calvin, they are easily answered; Libanus is here put for any wood full of high trees synecdochically, as Carmel before for any fruitfull field; and metaphorically for the Assyrian Army full of high and mighty men. And for the word [Behold] it might well be used, although no new Prophecie be begun, but the former concluded. For having before shewed the hally march of Sennacherib with his Army against Ierusalem, it was a thing worthy to be attended that immediately followed, viz. his sudden routing, and therefore not amisse is the word Ecce, Behold, prefixed. As for Ieroms conjecture, That the destruction of the Jews should be here meant, it cannot well be thus understood, because the declaration of this pertained to the former part of the Chapter, ver. 5, 6, &c. and then the brags and destruction of the Assyrians, after which the Jews should no more trust in them, in whom Gods fury should end. Therefore it is improbable, that having described his coming by divers places towards Ierusalem, he should so abruptly break off and say no more of them, but conclude in threatning the Jews again; but rather we are to hold, that here in brief after his coming spoken of, as implying a certain perswasion of prevailing in a short time; his downfall is set down, together with his numerous Army, upon a sudden, to the admiration of all men.

CHAP. XI.

And a surcle shall come out of the trunk of Jesse, and a branch shall fructifie out of his roots. The Chaldee Paraphrast, A King shall come of the sons of Jesse, and the Messiah of his sons sons. Ierom saith, That the Jewish Expositors understand this of Christ, but he rendering the first word, Branch, expoundeth it of the Virgin Mary, and the next a flower, and saith, That Christ was the flower of this Branch: and then for fructifying he hath ascending, and a flower shall ascend out of his roots. Yet the Jews, he saith, understand Christ by both, the Rod setting forth his power, the Flower his glory. Others generally with them also understand Christ, as springing out of the stub of Jesse, which stood like the stub of a Tree cut down in the ground, so that none would have thought after so long a discontinuance of Kings coming therefrom, that one so glorious should have sprung to rule and reign. Salsbont saith, the meaning is, One shall spring out of his root with a regal Scepter. Calvin, who expounds the cutting down spoken of at the latter end of the former Chapter, of the Jews, saith, that this is a comfort added immediately after it, that the faithfull might not be discouraged at the hearing of such sad things. But Iunius better, who expounds that of the Assyrians destruction, takes it for a third common place of comfort in Christ against the fear of those things, which the Church of God should suffer by their enemies. For once he comforts them by the Virgins conceiving and bearing a Son, Chap. 7. Secondly, By saying, To us a child is born, Chap. 9. Then ver. 27. of Chap. 10. having made a preparative to speak of the anointed one or Christ, he here sets him forth at large after a little more interlaced about the Assyrians and their ruine. And Ierom who first renders Flower in stead of a Branch, afterwards saith, That hereupon Matthew notes, that a Prophecie was fulfilled when he dwelt in Nazareth, He shall be called a Nazarene, because he is by Isaiah here spoken of by the name of Netzer, whence Netzeranus cometh. Now although this followeth next after the cutting down of the Assyrian, yet it was not fulfilled till a long long time after: But the Prophet being to speak chiefly of things pertaining to Christs Kingdom, for the comfort of the faithfull, makes these from hence forward the chief matter of his discourse, to the end of his book; although many other things of note happened in the interim.

And the Spirit of the Lord rests upon him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and fortitude, the spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord. This further confirmeth, that by the Branch spoken of, v. 1. Christ was meant. For touching him it is said, Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descend and rest upon him, that is he who shall baptize with the holy Ghost. For though the Spirit came upon the Prophets, yet it was but at times; he rested not upon any of them, as he did upon Christ; so that from the Spirit in him, as a Fountain, we all receive grace, according to that Joh. 1.16. Of his fulness we all receive. There is an Hebrew Gospel, saith Jerom, which the Nazarens reade, wherein it is thus written, The whole Fountain of the holy Ghost shall come down upon him: For when he came up out of the water, the voice from heaven said, My Son, in all the Prophets I expected thee, that I might rest upon thee, for thou art my Rest, and my first begotten Son, who reignest for ever. And this Spirit is said to be the spirit of wisdom and understanding, because by it all things were made, and made in wisdom. The word Spirit is not often repeated here, as if this Spirit were more then one, but to shew, that all these gifts come from one and the same Spirit of Christ; without this no man is wise, no man a Counsellour, or valiant, or knoweth, or feareth the Lord: This seven-fold number is the Stone with seven eies in Zechary. But it is to be understood that the fear of the Lord is here spoken of, for them that need this fear, who are little ones; for perfect love expelleth fear: And of beleevers it is said, We have not received the spirit of bondage to fear again, but the Spirit of Adoption, thus Jerom. But whereas he speaks thus of the fear of the Lord, it is not this filial, but a servile fear; of which it is said, We have not received the spirit of bondage to fear again. By this filial fear, Whosoever loveth the Lord feareth him; and herein are all other graces perfected. For 1. It is wisdom and understanding to know how a man should carry himself in all things; then counsel in difficult cases to direct a mans self and others, for thus can he do that is wise and understanding. 4. Fortitude, for if he be a man of counsel and not courageous to do accordingly, it is vain, and valour without counsel is temerity. 5. The spirit of the knowledge of the Lord, for all wisdom and counsel without this, and courage profits not; but when a wise and understanding man, a man of counsel and courage knoweth the only true God aright, he is wise and courageous indeed to his comfort. 6. Of the fear of the Lord, for this must needs follow the knowledge of him; and then is all counsel and courage right, when it is directed by this fear; or make the fear of God the beginning of these graces, as Prov. 1.7. it is said to be the beginning of wisdom, and then wisdom and understanding and counsel, &c. follow this. Whereas he saith, The Spirit of the Lord rests upon Christ, he comes to speak more plainly of him, as v. 1. he spake of him by a metaphor. The Spirit of the Lord is here put for the substantial spirit united unto Christ, as he was man, through his Divinity, for the whole Godhead dwelt in him bodily: Yet if we consider the three Persons distinctly, not the Father or the holy Ghost, but the Son, and the holy Ghost as one Essence together with God the Son. The spirit of wisdom, &c. Here the most eminent gifts of the spirit, but not all are reckoned up; for he is also the spirit of love, peace, joy, meekness, faith, &c. and yet here be not seven, but only six gifts of the spirit recounted, which sheweth their annotation to be groundless that speak of seven; but their ground is the Vulgar Latine, where piety is put for one, between knowledge and the fear of God, which is not in the Hebrew. The Lord had before. chap. 9. by his Prophet set forth Christ as the Prince of peace, and one that had an endless Kingdom; now he declareth the gifts required in a King chiefly, and sheweth them to be in him constantly, fully and alwaies, in comparison of whom the present Kings were fools fools and cowards, and without the knowledge and fear of the Lord; and therefore he only to be esteemed, desired and longed for. And these spirituall gifts, called the spirit of wisdom and understanding, &c. because they come from the spirit, rested not upon Christ for himself only, but for us that be his members; for of his fulness we all receive them in some measure, some man one in more eminency, and some another, but he all without measure; to him therefore must we go, as to the Fountain, for such gifts as these.

And shall make him smell in the fear of the Lord. Thus the Hebrew word וירא signifieth: The Vulgar Latine, The spirit of the fear of the Lord shall fill him; having rendred the same word which is here rendred fear, piety, v.2. thus making up the number of seven gifts of the Spirit, whereas indeed they are but six, as hath been touched before. Some render it, shall make him sagacious, or of a sharp judgement, able to discern the right without outward helps of seeing or hearing, as none else but the Spirit of God can do. And this indeed is the meaning, but it is expressed by a metaphor taken from smelling, as if by this sense, without that of seeing or hearing, he should be able to discern who feared God, to accept of them and to be a patron to them, and who not, to reject them: According to this sense, it is said of many that beleevd in him, Job.2. He knew what was in man; neither needed he that any should testify of him. And Matth.9. He knew their thoughts. And when the Pharisees came, making a fair shew to him, asking a sign, he knowing the wickedness of their hearts, replied, An evil and adulterous generation seeketh a sign, &c. The Jesuite here tels of S<sup>t</sup> Hilarion, and Mary Oigniacensis, that by the very smell they could discern a godly person and an hypocrite asunder, when an hypocrite came near, they smelling a stinking favour. But whether this were so or not, Christ hath such a smell, all the wicked to him being as stinking Goats, and therefore by him accursed to hell, Matth.25. Some understand it, as if it had been said, Shall make him have a sweet favour, because all his speeches and actions shall savour of the fear of the Lord; which is also true, but not so genuine here, where he is spoken of as a King or Judge, as the words following shew: He shall not judge by the sight of the eyes, &c. Here a difference is put betwixt mens judging and Christs; they can go no otherwise but by that which they see and hear from the testimony of other men, and so may be, and often are deceived; because if they see a mans works to be good, they judge him a good man, and by misinformation they judge him evil that is good; or upon whom they see a judgement, as Jobs friends seeing his sufferings, and the people of Melita seeing a little poisonous serpent hang upon Pauls hand, which was called a Viper, they judged him most wicked. Whereas he that doth good works externally, for want of doing them with a good heart is condemned by this Judge, as the Pharisees; and he that suffers, being one that truly fears God, is approved by him and magnified, as both Job and Paul aforesaid were; which is a comfort to those that are unjustly judged by men, and may strike fear into such as are justified and honoured amongst men; and into unjust Judges, that indeavour not by the helps of seeing and hearing which they have, to finde out the truth, or have not acuteness enough to do it, or are not moved so much hereby, as by hatred of the accused, or favour to the accuser or accused, for some worldly end of their own. The first sort shall be censured by this Judge, for doing the work of the Lord negligently: The second, for insufficiencie for this calling, into which they have intruded themselves; the third, for being companions of thieves, aiming more at filthy lucre then justice, and acting partakers with the evil, rather then Judges, to the great infamy and disgrace of their high order. See Psal.58. and 82. and 1 Sam.8.3.

He shall judge the poor in righteousness, and reprove for the meek of the earth. This, saith Jerom, is by the Jews applied unto Christ, as which shall be performed at his second coming, but by us unto his first. For the Apostles, whom he called poor, he censured, saying [O faithless and perverse generation, and to Peter, Get thee behinde me Satan.] And he reprov'd for the sake of the meek, and smote the earth with the rod of his mouth; as here followeth: When having threatned a famine by Agabus, he sent it, and both famine, pestilence and warre by John the Divine, Revel. 6.4,5, &c. for the persecutions raised up against his servants: And it is said, that he shall slay Antichrist by the breath of his mouth, 2 Thes. 2.8. according to the last words of this verse, He shall slay the wicked by the spirit of his mouth. Adam Salsbont, by his judging the poor, understands his delivering poor souls oppressed with sins; so Psal. 72. it is said, Thou shalt give thy judgement to the King, and he shall deliver the poor. The meek of the earth are such sinners as meekly yield themselves to be governed by his Word, repenting them of their former sins; and they are said to be of the earth, because they who received the Gospel, were for the greatest part poor and abject amongst men. And he shall smite the earth, &c. That is, his Word shall so strike the hearts of men, that were before earthly, as if it were with a rod, to make them smart therefore to repentance: As it is said that he taught with authority, and not as the scribes: no Orator ever striking so deep an impression in the minde with all his eloquence, as he by his teaching. The Hebrews say it is meant, that he should smite and destroy them by his Word, bringing down fire from heaven, as Elijah did: but this is sufficiently confuted, where his Disciples asking if they should call for fire from heaven, as Elijah did, he answered, Ye know not of what spirit ye are. And shall slay the wicked, &c. That is, either Antichrist, or the devil and all the wicked, who by the power of his breath shall be commanded into hell fire, there to die eternally. Touching the poor, Calvin saith the same with Salsbont. Touching the meek he also addeth, that none come to this, except they be spiritually poor, and in their own sense destitute of all goodness, and then meekly yielding themselves to be governed by his word, he will take their part and protect them against satan and all other their enemies. For the next words, He shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and slay the wicked with the spirit of his lips. Both he and Musculus sometime say, that one and the same thing is meant, only the last words are an auxesis of the former, because it is more to slay then to smite, and yet by and by again they make a question, whether the same sort of men be meant by both, that is, the wicked, and Calvin in conclusion saith, as Jerom, that by the wicked the Antichrist is meant, yet not excluding any other wicked men or hereticks, who are slain by the breath of his lips, when they are convinced of their sins and errors, and condemned in the preaching of his Word, by any of his faithfull servants. Yet they will have two kindes of slaying intimated in both these sentences, 1. Of sin, in such as are set forth by the Earth, because before hearing they were earthly minded, but now, as if the earthly man were killed in them, they are heavenly and spiritual. 2. Of persons who are incorrigibly wicked; the preaching of the word to them, is the denouncing of the sentence of death, for which it is called the favour of death to them that perish, 2 Cor. 2.14. And accordingly when a Judge gives sentence against a malefactor to be hanged, we commonly say, he hanged him; as also of Joseph but foretelling the hanging of Pharaohs chief Baker, it is said by the chief Butler, he hanged him and restored me to my Office.

And righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins, and truth or faith the girdle of his reins. The girdle is put for a Kingly ensign, Job 12.18. Esa. 14.5. saith Calvin. Now whereas other Kings have girdles of golden and glittering matter, Christs girdle is justice and truth; as if he had said, true justice, or justice, because he shall be glorious for his righteous proceeding before spoken of, both for the poor and meek, and against the wicked of what state or degree soever. And truth or faithfulness, as the word אֱמוּנָה Emunah signifies, for his faithfull performing of all which he promiseth. Jerom by faith understandeth also the faith in us his members, who beleve in him, who are as near to him as a girdle about ones loins. But this is not so proper to this place, as having reference to the things predicated of Christ, v. 4.

And

And the Wolf shall dwell with the Lamb, and the leopard with the kid, &c. These things, saith Jerom, are literally understood by the Jews, and such as Judaize; for they say, that when the Messiah shall come, which shall be towards the end of the world, the enmity, which was not by the first creation, in wilde beasts against others, to prey upon and to devour them, shall cease again, the wolf being as the lamb, the lion as the ox, &c. there being no more any malignity in any of them towards one another, or towards the least of mankind, but all obedience and obsequiousness, as to Adam in the state of innocency. But, saith he, I would ask them, whether other things here spoken by the Prophet be also to be understood literally, as the branch or flower out of the roots of Jesse, or his smiting the earth with the rod of his mouth, &c. and if not, but if these speeches must needs be granted to be metaphoricall, why not this of the wolf, leopard and lion? Is the ceasing of the beasts enmity more to the glory of God, and well-pleasing to him, then of the malignity of men towards one another? if not, then most probably this is not properly to be understood; but by a wolf a man like to a wolf for killing and making havoc of Gods people, who are like poor lambs; by the leopard, which is all spotted, the spotted with foul sins; the lion which devours the plain ox, the man of might unjustly destroying men that are not hurtfull, but profitable to the State. As it was prophesied of Benjamin, that he should be a ravening wolf, Saul persecuting the Church of Christ being meant, but being converted he dwelt with the lamb Ananias, to whom he was sent, and with Peter and other faithfull persons. And Paul saith of Nero, that when he escaped his tyranny, he was delivered out of the lions mouth. And in the sheet let down to Peter, Act. 10. all manner of beasts being represented, men in all parts of the world, of divers qualities and conditions were set forth, being quietly together to set forth this same thing. And to this do all our Expositors generally agree. Such as be true followers of Christ, although many of them have been hurtfull, as being of a wolfish or lion-like nature, yet now are turned to be like the lamb and the ox, that is, innocent, and by labouring in that which is good, getting their own living, and not by rapine. They that are not so, saith Calvin, are not worthy to be counted of the flock of Christ, and if they will not be ruled by his Ministers, who are contemptible to the wicked world, as children for their little strength or power; because it is further added, And a little childe shall lead them: yet he makes this but the anagoge, and for the litterall, following that of the Hebrews, saying, that as before Adam sinned there was no enmity amongst the creatures, so Christ coming and taking away all enmity shall cease again, and the golden age, which was at the first, shall be restored, beasts being reconciled to beasts and returning to their first obedience to man, and no way obnoxious or hurtfull to him. Thus also Lactantius, who held that Christians should reign here with Christ a thousand years, the most savage creatures being then tame and gentle; which opinion many called Chiliasm: then followed, taking it from Papias the Disciple of John: but both Galatinus confuteth this sense out of Rabbins more ancient. And as Jerom, so Chrysost. August. Gregory, &c. understand it metaphorically, either of fierce and savage Countries and Nations of the Heathens, who were as wolves and lions, before the coming of the Gospel amongst them, but now agreeing well with Christians, as being turned to the same faith, or of particular persons in any place thus miraculously changed. Some think this was fulfilled according to the letter, when the Apostles and other faithfull persons had power over lions and scorpions to tread them under foot, and some Martyrs being cast to wilde beasts, they were quietly with them and hurt them not. But they are deceived, because then one word must be understood metaphorically and another properly; and because this is of a thing universally to be done in all the holy mountain of the Lord, that was but by some persons in some places only. And a little childe shall lead amongst them. So it is word for word, the meaning being, that the childe Jesus shall rule amongst them and over them leading them to this by his Spirit, or as was before said, any Minister of his, though but as a childe in power, shall prevail so in their hearts, that they shall yeeld themselves to be lead by him in any virtuous and good way, even as a tame beast by a childe that is farre lesse and weaker then he, and thus shall not wolues only do, that is, the baser sort, but also Kings and Lords set forth by lions, for with God there is no difference of persons: And thus, Hof. 2. 18. the Lord saith, he will make a covenant for them with the beasts of the field and the fowls of the air, &c. Lastly note here that he saith not, the lambs shall dwell with the wolf, but the wolf with the lamb; because by lambs and sheep Christians are set forth, to shew, that cruel idolaters of the Gentiles, that first destroyed Christians, shall be turned to them, and live quietly, and feed with them upon the spiritual food of the Word and Sacraments, and not Christians turned into such. Whereas Calvin here makes a question, whether any be lambs by nature, according to the sense of the word lambs in this place, I think it needless, because by lambs are not meant any that were such from their birth, but some of the Jews first converted and brought into Christs fold, and some of the Gentiles turned first to the faith also, nothing else here being prophesied, but that others, who were even persecutors at the first, should also be turned and then become as they were; and if their fiercest and cruelest enemies, much more it is intimated, that others more moderate should by the Gospel be wrought upon, and attain this grace of coming into the same fold. These seven, the Wolf, Leopard, young Lion, called צב צב Chephir, the Bear, Lion, Asp and Cockatrice, the fiercest and most hurtfull of all others, being named for the magnifying of his power the more, who should cicurate and tame all these by the working of his Spirit.

The cow and bear shall feed together, and the lion eat chaff as the ox. This also is by the Hebrews and Calvin following them, understood literally: but by Jerom, of rude and ignorant persons converted to the faith, who reade the Scriptures, but see not into the meaning of many things therein contained, wherein the wheat lieth; yet by this reading they feed upon the chaff of this wheat, and are nourished. But forsomuch as he is said to eat chaff as the ox, and by the ox, the honest laborious Christian is understood; the meaning rather is, the most noble and mighty being converted, resort to the word and Sacrament, together with the meaner sort, for the feeding of their souls herewith, although to the carnal it seems but as chaff, and to have no more heart in it. Whereas he saith, Their young ones shall lie down together, The meaning is, that children after parents shall do thus, and their children after them from age to age, the faith being once imbraced by the Nations, continuing, and no revolt being made to barbarism any more.

Marc. 16.

And the suckling looks upon the hole of the asp, and the weaned puts his hand upon the den of the cockatrice. The asp is a serpent full of poyson, but it is more latent; the cockatrice more manifestly dangerous for killing all that come near it. But whoso hath been formerly as the one or the other, shall now no more be hurtfull to any, no nor to little children, that cannot defend themselves; for their poisonous qualities shall cease: Thus Musculus, who also will have hereby intimated the courage, even of Christians but newly entred into the first principles, but much more of those that have made further proficiency in divine learning; they fear neither subtle hereticks nor devils. And to unclean spirits and devils, cast out by the Apostles, doth Jerom apply it, according to the promise, They that beleve shall take up serpents, and they shall not hurt them. But because all other savage and hurtfull creatures hitherto spoken of, have set forth men of like qualities, but now changed, I see no cause why the asp and basilisk should not be likewise understood, and no fortitude against danger by them here intimated: So that it is out of place that is brought here by Cornelius a Lapide, of Josaphat a young man, converting his father the King and the whole Kingdom to Christianity: And out of Procopius, touching a childe, who seeing his mother by a Tyrant cast into the fire, bit the thigh thigh of the tyrant, and then run into the fire and burnt with her, I like rather that of Musculus, applying it to simple well-meaning men like children, and suspecting nothing, companying with men before full of the poyson of malice, but now this ceasing in them, they converse together without being cheated or harmed, wherefore it is immediately added,

None shall hurt in all the holy mountain of the Lord, that is, in his Church consisting of men of all sorts, because upon Zion the temple stood, for the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea: There is shewed how it shall come to passe that none shall hurt, viz. because the knowledge and faith of Christ shall fill all parts of the world, and so savagenesse and hurtfullnesse of man towards man shall cease, and this knowledge shall cover the earth as the waters the sea, or as it is heb. the waters in the sea covering, that is, the waters now kept within the bounds of the sea, sometime in the daies of Noah covered the earth, a similitude to set forth the greatest abundance of knowledge, for before it was cooped up within the narrow bounds of Canaan, for the heathen had not the knowledge of his laws, but under the Gospel both the light in that land was greater, as Chap. 9. and thence as the Sun it went out into all parts.

And in that day the root of Jesse shall stand for a sign of peoples, &c. Here he that was called the Branch before, is called the root, even Christ springing out of that stub, which seemed now even dead, and he was an high Ensign or Standard, not for one, but for all people of the world to flow unto. This he himself also foretold, when he said, As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, so shall the Son of man be lifted up, and when I am lifted up I will draw all men to me. He shall be required by the Gentiles, that is, be beleevd in, Heb. they shall seek him: the Septuagint respecting the sense more then the proper meaning, they shall beleeve in him, and his rest shall be glory, that is, faith Calvin, his sepulchre, or because by rest death is set forth, his crosse where his dead body first rested shall be glorious, but he finally understands the Church thus gathered from all parts shall be glorious, because of the Church it is said, here shall be my rest for ever. Psal. 132. 14. this last is most consonant to Chap. 4. 4. where his Church is set forth by this word glory.

And in that day the Lord shall again lift up his hand to possess the remainder of his people, which were left from Assur, from Egypt, &c. God had once delivered all Israel out of Egypt by a mighty hand and stretched out arm, when he sent so many plagues upon Pharaoh and his people: now he promiseth another deliverance under the Gospel, when Christ the root of Jesse should be set up for an Ensign, but this is not of all but of remnants returning from all parts, where before they had been in captivity. He had long before brought them back to their own Land in the daies of King Cyrus the Persian, but now he saith, that he would possess them by turning them to the faith, that they might be Gods peculiar possession, this was fulfilled when Jews and proselytes out of all countreys seeing the miracle of fiery tongues, and the Apostles preaching in all languages, beleevd and were baptized, three thousand being thus added to the Church at that time, so Jerom, who also relates an opinion of some who would have this to be understood of the conversion of the Jews, after the fullness of the Gentiles come in, about the time of Christs second coming. But because this seems to countenance the error of the Jews, who look for the Messiah about the end of the world, he rejecteth this, and saith, that this prophecy was fulfilled, as hath been already shewed. And for the enmity ceasing spoken of, ver. 13. betwixt Judah and Ephraim, he understands it of such of both these kingdoms as at the coming on of the Gospel were converted to the faith, after which all enmity betwixt them ceased. For that they were no small number, and so not unworthy to bear the name of Judah and Ephraim, appears Act. 21. 26. where it is said, that there were in Iudea many myriads or ten thousands which beleevd. For their flying upon the Philistines, &c. ver. 14. this he understands not as to be done in an hostile manner, but to beat down their idolatries and superstitions, and to bring them to the knowledge of one only true God and of his son Jesus Christ for their eternall salvation. For from Indea the word was carried out by them into these neighbouring countreys first, which had been most infest enemies to the Jews, and the faith being by them embraced, they were spiritually subdued, and all enmity from thenceforth ceased. For his destroying of the tongue of the Egyptian sea, spoken of ver. 15. this he also saith was by converting the Egyptians, whereupon they should not with their tongues blasphemie the true God, or magnifie false and base gods any more, as oxen, and birds, and crocodiles, and cats, as they had done, and it is called the Egyptian sea, the land of Egypt being meant, because at some time of the year the land of Egypt was all covered with water as a sea. For his smiting of it in the seven rivers thereof, that the remnant of his people might go over dry-shod, he saith, was meant of Egypt being subjected to the Romans in the daies of Queen Cleopatra, whom Iulius Caesar overcame a little before Christs incarnation, which before was a mighty kingdom, and so inaccessible by the poor Jews, as the great River Nilus impassible: but now as if that river had been divided into seven, each one running very shallow, so that a man might go over; so that Kingdom ruled in times past by one mighty Monarch, should now be divided into divers parts, one being under one governour, another under another, as the conquerour appointed; and opportunity being thus given for those of the Jews who went about preaching the faith, to come thither also, as being now fellow-subjects under one common Lord, and all having none other Kings or Rulers set immediately over them, but such he appointed: To this effect Ierom, who also saith, that in speaking of their going over the River Nilus dry-shod, he alludeth to the Israelites going sometime through the red Sea, not that a like miracle should now be wrought again, but spiritually the like was to be done, that which might hinder the progresse of the Gospel being taken away, viz. the potency of the Egyptian kingdom, it being now in the hands of those that were not so infest but more friendly to the Jews. Of this second deliverance some of the Rabbins understood somewhat, when writing upon the deliverance out of Egypt, the 15. day of the first moneth they say, a greater deliverance at the same time shall come by the Messiah, only they erre in this, that whereas it was performed by Jesus, the son of the Virgin Mary at that very time, for then he by suffering death wrought the work of our redemption, they expect fondly the Messiah still to come to do this great thing, Lyranus, Dionysius, and Haimo say, that Gods second stretching out of his hands to possesse them, was by the Apostles preaching and converting many of the Jews, as the first was by Christs own preaching and converting some. Again, others will have this second meant of them that returned from the Babylonish captivity, which was a stretching out of Gods hand the second time, forsomuch as once before he stretched it out for their deliverance, in the time of Hazekiah by smiting the host of Sennacherib, but because the deliverance by the root of Issa is here spoken of, and the whole prophecy goeth upon things to be done under Christ, this last false and the former seems not to be the meaning, because Gods stretching out his hand to convert, when the Lord himself preached, was not so eminent, seeing so few were then brought unto the faith. For the places from whence he promiseth that they shall return, the 1. is of Assur, whither they were carried by Salmansar, 2. Egypt, whither they were carried by Pharaoh-Necho. 2. King. 23. 33. 3. Patras, by some thought to be Parthia, by some Phetras, the chief city in Arabia petraea, and by some Phasura in Egypt, to which the Jews fled, Ier. 44. 2. 4. Elam, that is, the countrey of the Persians, Modes, and Sogdians, it was the chief city giving the name to all those parts. 5. Sennanar, that is, Babylon, Gen. 11. 6. Amath, which belonged to Libanus, not far distant from Damascus. 7. The Islands of the Sea, Spain, Italy, Greece, and all the Western parts divided from the East by the sea, according to the Jews account, who were wont to call them so. Here Cush hitherto omitted is Ethiopia, beyond Egypt.

Dionys.

Verf. 12.

And he will lift up a sign, and gather together the out-casts of Israel, &c. Here is nothing else but a further explication how he would come to possess this remnant again, viz. by setting up a sign, which is, Christ crucified: as Moses lifted up the Serpent in the wilderness, by which all that were stung with fiery flying serpents were gathered together to be healed, and then he addes more generally, from whence these remnants should come, if he had hitherto omitted any other particular place, by saying, from all the four corners of the earth.

And the envy of Ephraim shall depart, and the enemies of Judab shall be cut off: &c. Heb. חַמַּץ the fierce wrath of Ephraim, that is, of those of the kingdom of Israel, or ten tribes, of which Ephraim was the chief, who alwaies after the division of the Israelites into two under Ieroboam, were at deadly feud with the kingdom of Judab under Dauid's line, seeking to bring it under, and at this time they were confederate with Syria to this end. But in the time of the Gospel this their enmity ceased, and thus the enemies of Judab were destroyed, because they of the ten Tribes, who formerly exercised this hostility against Judab, being taken away, no more of them now rose up in this old quarrell, but all agreed together as one kingdom, which was in part fulfilled in the Apostles, who, as Eusebius saith, were some of Judab, and some of the ten Tribes. and shall be more fully at the time of the Jews conversion to the faith. Then he saith, one shall not envy another, as they alwaies formerly did, one kingdom seeking ambitiously to get all the glory from the other, and this effect, saith Masculus, the Gospel worketh, when it is entertained into the heart, men of divers kingdoms are as one living together in peace and unity, through the power of the same religion binding their hearts together. But how this is fulfilled we see not in other kingdoms, neither did we ever reade: wherefore it is to be understood, not of all, but only of those in whose hearts the word worketh effectually. Such in both the kingdoms were together with one accord, Act. 2. although others who beleeved not, and false brethren, made the times most tumultuous and full of dissention.

They shall fly upon the shoulders of the Philistims of the West, and upon the children of the East. The Jews think that this is to be fulfilled in a carnall manner, all their enemies round about being at length subdued to them by force of arms, as in time of King David. But because Christs kingdom is not of this world, they are certainly deceived, the meaning of this being nothing else but spirituall: they shall fly upon the Philistims, &c. by preaching and working miracles for their conversion, and hereby they shall be subdued unto Christ, and brought under the obedience of the Gospel, who dwelt on every side of them, which he intimates by saying the children of Ammon shall be their obedience, that is, obey their teaching, so Ierom. But Oecolampadius saith, that this was in part fulfilled, when the Jews returning from Babylon prevailed against their old enemies, the Philistims lying upon their shoulders being a phrase to expresse their subjection to them, and partly when we subdue by the Spirit our spirituall enemies, the flesh and the world, by getting the mastery over our corruptions. I prefer the former, and according to it the Jews preaching the Gospel, are said to send out their hand, to intimate their ready obedience to it, so that if the preachers thereof did but by pointing with their hand shew what they would have them to do, they yeelded presently without any delay, and became obedient in all things. And accordingly in the time of the Apostles, Philip is said to have gone to Azotus Act. 8. and Peter to have been at Joppe, which were both in the countrey of Idumaea, as Strabo saith. And in the time of Athanasius and Crisostom, saith Adricomius, there were very flourishing Churches in Gaza and Ascalon, and other cities of the Philistims. Whereas Ierom referres the putting forth of the hand to the subdued, as if a putting forth after the manner of supplicants towards victors were meant, it cannot stand, because it is added to set forth the like case of the Ammonites, that Ammon shall be obedient them, that is, to them, of the extension of whose hands it was before spoken, therefore not the subdued but the subduers. The word rendered in the West heb. is the sea, but because the sea was Westward to the Philistims, it is all one. Their going to convert the Philistims is set forth by fleeing, for their great haste in doing this, and fleeing upon their shoulders for Christs yoke, which which they put upon them, according to Mat. 11.28.

And the Lord shall make to vanish the tongue of the Egyptian sea, and lifting up his hand shall smite her river in the seven streams thereof, so that men in their shoes may passe over. Hieron by the tongue of the Egyptian sea, understands their blasphemous speeches against God, whilst they were idolaters, so that here it is prophesied of their conversion, after which time they should be heard to speak no more as they had done, but to the praise of God, as if they had new tongues. And whereas they were formerly ruled by one potent King or Queen, so that by the greatnesse of their power strangers were kept out from coming to rule over them, now this their power so united, should be divided amongst many, which was accomplished, when Cesar overcoming Anthony and Cleopatra their Queen, set up divers Princes, one at Alexandria, another at Ptolemais, &c. to rule over Egypt under him, at what time of this rule thus divided, the Ministers of Christ came and converted them to the faith. For as when a great river runneth all in one channell, it is by footmen unpassable, yet being derived into many, a man may passe over each one on foot well enough; so although the power of Egypt being united in one king, they that were sent to preach the Gospel, could not have had such a free passage, yet this Monarchy being overthrown, and so that power which might have resisted being taken away, now they had no hinderance; this being one end that God had in reducing all people under one mighty Monarch, that the Jews going out with the glad tidings of salvation might have free entercourse with all other nations to propagate the same every where. Iunius for the tongue hath the bosom, because it is a piece of earth reaching out into the sea, like a bosom hindering the mariners passage, and making him go sometimes a great way about to come to the place which he intends. It being meant by the striking hereof, that all impediments of the Gospels passage should be taken away, that it might freely go on to all countreys and nations, one river Nilus being spoken of, and the like being understood of all other broad and deep waters, whereby men cannot passe without ships with great labour and cost prepared. And thus Oecolampadius understands it, and Sasbon, but that he erreth about the river, saying, it is Euphrates: yet it may here be alluded unto that river also, the waters whereof ran about Babylon, making it impregnable, as the Babylonians thought; but by Cyrus the King of Persia many large and deep dreins were made, into which the river being let out soon became dry, and his souldiers went on foot into the city through the river, and took it. But because Egypt is here spoken of, and Nilus is well known to be the river of Egypt running into the sea in seven Channels, as great doors, called seven Ostia Nili, and the present prophesying is not of a way making for Israel to come again into their own land from their Babylonish captivity, but of that which should be done in the time of the Gospel, which was long after, I assent to that which hath been said, wherein also Cyril, Procopius, and Theodoret agree, rather then to Calvin, understanding it as a prophecy of their returning from Babylon, wherein nothing should hinder them, a way whereunto was made, when Cyrus their deliverer had done that exploit about Euphrates, because the subduing of Babylon was the translating of the Monarchy to him, who so greatly favoured them. The meaning then is nothing else, but that as Israel going out of Egypt towards Canaan, went through the red sea miraculously divided, which would otherwise have been an insuperable impediment unto them, and when they came nearer to the promised land, the greatest rivers could be no hinderance to them, but Jordan was likewise divided, that they might passe through: so in the daies of the Gospel God would by his almighty power make a way for his servants, to go by waies that might seem most impassable, to preach it in Egypt and other parts of the world, that being named in stead of more, because it might seem hardest, as the state of it then stood, to be entred by any of Gods people, to work so famous a work there, both by reason of their most notorious superstition and great power. But their power was broken even a little before by Augustus Cesar, who entred by Pelusium in the midst of mory and fen grounds, seeming therefore inaccessible, inaccessible, but at that time, as if it had been done purposely, dried extraordinarily. Whereas the Jews ground upon this place their expectation of the Messiah yet to come, when seas and rivers shall again be dried up according to the letter, that they may again passe home to their own countrey under his conduct, as before they went through the red sea under the conduct of Moses, it is ridiculous, and it will not hold for their being brought thus to their own land, when they shall be converted to the faith, as some coming too near the Jews have lately taught. That which is added here is but further to declare the same thing which was before said. Thus there shall be a path as it were paved with stone, for so the word signifyeth, for the residue of Israel out of Ashur, that is, a plain way all impediments being removed, as when they came long before out of Egypt. And whereas ver. 11. both the residue in Ashur were spoken of, and in other countreys; here they only in Ashur are mentioned, saith Musculus, who were carried away by Salmansar, and that furthest of all other, and to remain longer then those, that were carried to Babylon, lest they should despair of any return, for even of the ten tribes many as well as of Judah returned to the Lord at the preaching of the Gospel, and more shall return before the end of the world.

After deliverance from sin and death by Christ Jesus here it is shewed, how joyful the Church should be for this, and break out into singing to the praise of God, as Moses and the Israelites did, Exod. 15. when they were brought out of Egypt, and through the red sea. I will confesse that thou hast been angry with me, thy wrath hath been turned away, &c. Such as God is angry with and judgeth for a time, shall have the more cause afterwards to praise God in remembrance of that which they have justly suffered; if they be his people: for his anger is but for a time, and then comes the comfort of his mercy for ever. And the confession is in the singular number, to shew that all the people of God are as one in their sufferings, and being delivered, God proceeds with them alike, first putting them to grievous sufferings, and then comforting them, and they are as one in being like affected to one another, and towards God in praising him.

After the prophecy touching Christ began, Cha. 7. and ending, Cha. 12. Here follows ten particular visions of judgements to come upon divers countreys, which were then most infest enemies to the people of God, as Jerom distinguisheth them, 1. Babylon, chap. 13, 14. 2. Palestine, chap. 14. 28. 3. Moab, cha. 15. 4. Damascus, chap. 17, 18. 5. Egypt, chap. 19, 20. 6. The Desert of the Sea, chap. 21. 7. Idumea, vers. 11, 12. 8. Arabia, vers. 13. 9. The valley of vision, chap. 22. 10. Tyrus, chap. 23. Junius makes chap. 13, 14. to cohere with the 5. and 6. thus: there judgement is threatened by people of a far countrey, which could not but be understood of the Caldees or Babylonians. Now prophecies touching Christ and his kingdom coming between, chap. 7, 8, 9, 11, 12. here for the comfort of Gods people by these enemies oppressed, the destruction of Babylon is threatened, Chap. 13. and joy and a song of praise and thanksgiving for it promised, chap. 14. But it is to be noted that both chap. 7. 8. 9. and 10. contain as manifest prophecies of judgements against Israel and Judab, both by Assyrians and Caldeans, as the 5. and 6. and therefore the present prophecy relates alike to them all. And the Lord having begun by his prophet to threaten Babylon, proceeds in the same kinde of argument, till he hath run through all neighbour-countreys with the like threatnings, and the wicked in Ierusalem also to the end of Chap. 23. But whereas Jerom makes Egypt the 5. and so but 10. in all, Junius makes Ethiopia the 5. Egypt the 6. But to return to Babylon in particular.

The Burthen of Babylon, &c. the Septuagint improperly the vision, saith Jerom, because when heavy and sad things only are foretold, the prophecy touching them is commonly called a burthen. Now Babylon here threatened was the Metropolis of the Caldees, as Nineveh of the Assyrians, the Kings whereof Phul, Tiglath Pileser, Salmanassar, and Sennacherib, reigned as Monarchs of the world before, and destroyed the kingdom of Israel, but their City Nineveh was destroyed likewise, and their Empire, by the King of Babylon, and now the city of Babylon is threatened with destruction by the Medes and Persians, when they had first under Nebuchadnezzar destroyed Ierusalem and the kingdom of Judab, in the 11 year of Zedekiah. Now the Lord foretels by his Prophets heavy things to come for grievous sins, that all may know that they come from the Lord, and not by chance, and calls them burthens, yet Ier. 23. 36. he reproves the people for calling prophecies burthen, as who did hereby seek to render them odious, and consequently all prophesying, because for the most parts by reason of sin abounding prophesying was a terrible threatening against the wicked, such as the far greater part alwaies were, yet forso much as they tended to move to repentance, and so to prevent those judgements, they ought willingly to have heard them.

Lift up a sign upon the high mountain, &c. Junius, super montem eminentem, Jerom, super montem caliginosum, a dark mountain according to the most proper signification of the word תִּבְיָא here used, for it signifyeth the twilight, and Babylon is so called for the judgements to come upon her, which should make her as obscure, as now she was for her power and wealth glorious. This was not, saith Oecolampadius, the Babylon that now is, but that which was first built by Queen Semiramis, of the greatnesse whereof see in my Exposition upon Ezra, which was destroyed by the Medes and Persians, lying ever since in obscurity, and re-built no more. But seeing Babylon stood in a plain, why doth he call it a mountain? Calvin answers well, because it was like a mountain in power, and a state which might be thought unmoveable as a mountain. By bidding to lift up a sign, he means a standard, as is used for the gathering together of souldiers, for the destruction of Babylon, so chap. 5. 26. and who were they that should do it but the

Medes and Persians, as is shewed plainly vers. 17. In that the Prophet therefore who had no power over them to call them together, saith thus, we must look to God, in whose name he doth it, at whose command all hosts are. And he speaks as if it were now in doing for the more assurance to the faithfull, and for their comfort against their sufferings by the Caldees, which should be before. Enter the gates of the munificent; That is, of the Babylonish Princes, who were many inhabiting there, for so our Lord saith, That they who rule amongst the Gentiles are called Benefactors, as having abundance of wealth, wherewith they might well be so. And this implieth, that they were of great might, yet even their gates these enemies should enter and prevail, notwithstanding all their great power and glory. For the title given to Babylon, A dark mountain; there may be other reasons also given, as that the high buildings and many Towers made it seem like a Mountain, though it stood upon a Plain, and by reason of Fens about it, from whence fogs arose, it was dark. But specially for an admirable Garden, the ground whereof was raised so high, that it darkened the City. Of this Josephus saith, Nebuchadnezzar hung heaps of stones upon iron-arches like Mountains, being above set with many kinds of trees for his wives sake, who was a Mede, that she might behold some resemblance of her own Countrey therein.

I have commanded my sanctified ones, &c. The Septuagint, saith Jerom, have it, Princes and Giants. Eusebius, Angelical Powers, because they thought it strange, that the Heathen Medes should be called sanctified ones, but why not as well as Nebuchadnezzar his servant, and done by Jeremy. Calvin renders it, My prepared ones, as the word שׂוֹמְרִים sometime signifieth; the Syriack, my sanctification. It is nothing absurd to call the men whom God set apart to this holy warre, to punish a wicked people, his sanctified ones; and Cyrus the chief of them seemed to have some sanctifying grace in him, by whom haply more of his Army were drawn to worship and acknowledge the true God. And he calleth the same his valiant ones rejoicing in his glory, because their strength, whereby they gat them such glory by subduing Babylon, was the strength of the Almighty, and not their own.

A voice of a multitude in the Mountains, &c. The Lord commanded to destroy the whole earth. Here he sheweth, That the Persian Army should consist of very many of divers Nations; But by the whole earth he meaneth nothing else, but the Babylonian Countrey, according to the Scripture phrase, whereby any Countrey is commonly so spoken of. So Jerom. Calvin addeth, That the Babylonian Dominion is so singularly called for the amplitude thereof. And the voice is said to be on the mountains, saith Musculus, because the Medes Countrey was mountainous.

Howl, because the day of the Lord is at hand, &c. Here and vers. 7, 8. the Babylonians misery is further described, by shewing, how they should lament and be stricken with sorrow, which should appear in their faces, for which, he saith, Their faces are the faces of flames, alluding, as Musculus hath it, to the face of a Smith at dark night, when he stands blowing his fire, for his face appears, as if it had no blood in it, most wan and pale.

Behold the cruel day of the Lord shall come, and indignation, &c. From the people that should suffer, now the Prophet turns to another rhetorical way of aggravating the calamity of that time, as if then they should have no comfort of the light, but all horrour through darknesse, in this and vers. 10. And he calls it a cruel day, saith Jerom, because execution should then be done upon on the cruel, who should think it cruelty, as the thief who is lead to hanging, thinks the Judge cruel that condemned him.

The Stars and Sun shall not give their light, &c. This is spoken hyperbolically, the meaning being nothing else, but that the light of these heavenly bodies should be nothing to them for their anguish and sorrow, accounting the light from heaven, which commonly is comfortable to the inhabitants of the earth, no light or comfort to them, because in their minds there was no light of comfort, fort, but darkness of sorrow. For, as Calvin hath it, by the Sun God shews his comfortable face unto us, when it shineth upon the earth to make it fruitful, for which it is said, He makes his Sun to shine upon the good and bad. The Prophet therefore in saying, The Sun shall be darkened, &c. means, that when the Babylonians shall suffer this judgement by the Medes, they shall have no comfort from God to ease their grief, but if they look up to Heaven, more sorrow added to their sorrow, there being not one spark of heavenly light appearing to them, set forth by the stars also losing their light. For stars, as Ierom saith, the Septuagint have Orion, and the Hebrew, who was his master, Arcturus, looking at the word Chefile. But where he found that word, I know not, Hebr. it being Cocabai, Stars.

Vers. 11.
Hieron.

And I will visit upon the world their iniquity, &c. Some, saith Ierom, think that the general destruction of the world is here prophesied of, but by the world he understands the Kingdom of Babylon, which for the amplitude thereof, being the greatest part of the world then known is thus termed, and the rather to shew, that if all the world agreed together to sinne, God can as easily destroy them, as he did once the old world, that none may be hardened in sin, although it may be most common, and millions fear not to commit it. Whereas he further addeth, And upon the wicked their sins; Hereby the greater and prouder ones are set forth, who sin by pride and tyranny, as the next words do shew, And I will cast down the iniquity of the proud, and haughtinesse of tyrants. And then by the world before threatned, understand the common people in all places; so Calvin.

Calvin.

Hieron.

And a man shall be more precious then gold, &c. Hereby the general destruction of the Babylonians is intimated, there should be so few left alive, that a man should be a rare sight there, where formerly they abounded so, that Babylon alone seemed to be a little world, for that which is rare is said to be precious, as in the days of Eli, the word of God is said to be precious, that is, rare. Note here that the word man is twice used, the first being Hebr. עִירָא the second עִירָא, betwixt which if we will distinguish, the first sets forth the common sort of men, the second men of more eminency. But how was this verified, whenas at the destruction of Babylon by the Medes, the greatest part were spared, as the History sheweth, and the City stood full of stately buildings and inhabitants after this, till the time of Alexander the Great? Oecolampadius answers, that it is meant here, that the destruction should then begin, but in process of time be perfected, and not brought to such desolation upon the sudden. For so the event answers the History, after the destruction of the Babylonish by the Medes and Persians begun, Chefiphon a goodly City was built not far off, that by this means Babylon might be left, and after this in Selencus his time Selencia another fair City, after which that Babylon came to utter ruine.

Vers. 13.
Muscul.
Hieronym.

And I will shake the heaven and the earth. Some, saith Musculus, understand this properly, as if it should then thunder and be a great earthquake, but it is better to take it figuratively, as ver. 10. So likewise Ierom.

Vers. 14.

And it shall be as a young Doe, and a sheep. That is, so fearfull shall the Babylonians be, as these creatures before the Lion or the Wolf having shepherd or keeper, when the Medes shall break into their City, as they did, in the night, they being for the most part drunken, and because of the great strength of their wals, nothing suspecting the irruption of enemies.

Vers. 15. 16.

The Prophet proceeds to aggravate their misery, for none shall be spared from the sword of the men, that they can come by, or of the children from being dashed against the stones; see a like passage, Psal. 137.

Vers. 17.

18. 19.

He shews by whom all this shall be done, viz. the Medes; and if any shall think by their wealth to ransom themselves, that they may be spared, or their children, they shall be deceived, because gold or silver shall not by them be regarded. So Babylon the glory of Kingdoms shall be overthrown as Sodom, Chap. 1. he saith, If the Lord had not left us a remnant, we had been as Sodom. The destruction of Sodom was the greatest and most stupendious, that ever we read of, being with fire from the Lord from Heaven, and all both edifices and people being burnt to ashes, and so remaining to this day. But in comparing Babels destruction to this, he means not, that it shall likewise be consumed with fire from Heaven, or burnt down at all: for the event shewed the contrary, as was touched before. But that as Sodom was manifestly destroyed by God's hand, so all shall acknowledge that Babel was, because otherwise no adverse power could have done it, not only for its own strength, but the mighty Kingdoms unto it belonging, which were two and twenty, and as Sodom destroyed was never re-built again, no more should Babel. Lastly, not one of Sodom escaped destruction (whereas Ierusalem being destroyed a remnant escaped) no more should any of Babel, not one being since the utter ruine thereof left to dwell there. For this is the difference, which God puts betwixt the wicked world and his Church, they all perish into one; but the Church, though most perish, yet some are saved in all places everlastingly; and here the hottest persecutions have not been able to prevail so far, as to destroy all Christians, as neither the tyranny of wicked Kings of old to destroy all the Jews.

To shew the greatness of Babels desolation after the utter ruining of it, he saith, That it shall not be inhabited any more from generation to generation, no not so much as by an Arabian pitching his Tent there, or a shepherd, it being altogether possessed by wilde beasts and terrible spectres, fraying all men away from thence for ever. To shew the accomplishment of this Prophecie, Jerom saith, that a certain Frier an Elamite told him, that within all the ground inclosed by those huge wals of Babylon, inhabited none but wilde beasts, to hunt which the King oft resorted thither. For the Arabian here named, they were a kinde of people thus called, who applied themselves to nothing else, but to keep cattel, living in Tents, and removing from time to time to other places, as they fed up the ground where they came. In saying therefore, that an Arabian should not pitch his Tent there, he meaneth, That there should be such a desolation as was not of any Countrey, but only of Sodom. Calvin saith, That by the Arabians those of Arabia deserta are to be understood, who leaving their Countrey, because it is barren, wandered about and pitcht their Tents wheresoever they could finde pasture; but to Babylon the Prophet sheweth, that they should not come after the destruction thereof, either because of the great slaughters of men made there, which terrified them from coming, or because of the curse of God upon the ground, making it barren ever after. But the words following ver. 21, 22. shew another cause, viz. the terrible things appearing there, as Zijm and Jim, Dragons and Devils, and Ohim. By Zijm, some understand all sorts of terrible wilde beasts, by Ohim Apes with tails, or Wolves, Foxes and such like; by Benoth Fagnanah, young Ostriches; by Segnarim, some Satyrs, some Devils appearing in such shapes. Jim are by some rendred Owls, by some Cats; but the word from which it cometh, signifieth to terrifie. The Septuagint render Ohim, clamours and sounds; the Hebrews themselves, saith Calvin, are uncertain how to expound these words, onely all agree, That devils who delight in desert places shall haunt Babylon thus brought to desolation, so that men shall not dare to come and abide any more there. Jerom applieth this to spiritual Babylon, prophesied of in the Revelation, which shall likewise, after she hath long flourished, come also to ruine and desolation. But he sheweth not, which City now extant this is, but others long ago have not doubted, but that it is Rome, whose fatal time is yet to come. Munster in his Cosmography speaks of two Babylons more besides this, which was the seat of the Caldees Empire, viz. Seleucia, afterwards called Babylon, three hundred and twenty furlongs from this; and another in Egypt, called also Cair, being a most mighty and populous City.

FOr the Lord will have mercy upon Jacob, and choose Israel, &c. How this was fulfilled after Babylon subdued and Belsazzar the King slain, appears in Ezra, Cyrus before appointed by God by name, Isa. 44. who together with Darius subdued it, when the whole Empire fell to him by the death of Darius, as it did within one year, gave leave to the Jews to return and build the Temple, restoring the precious vessels thereof, and out of his Kingly munificence, adding divers other gifts for the furthering of this work. But whereas vers. 2. it is said, That they should rule over their oppressours, and have of them for servants and maids, Ierom doubteth how it was fulfilled, unlesse by a Synecdoche, the part being put for the whole, such of their enemies only be understood, as they converted in the time of their Captivity, who voluntarily submitted themselves unto them for their Religions sake. But specially he thinks this to have been fulfilled under Ahasuerus, when many of their Heathen enemies turned Jews for fear of them, and by the power given them, they destroyed so many in all the Kings Provinces in the two dayes of Purim: see Hester.

Calvin saith, This was not fulfilled in their return from the Captivity of Babylon, but meanly, and therefore it is to be referred to the time of the Gospel, when the Apostles went out subduing Countreys and Nations, and amongst them the Assyrians and Caldees, who had formerly been oppressours of their Nation. Whereas he saith, they shall rule over them, this, saith Musculus, is not properly to be understood, as being disclaimed 1 Pet. 5. 1. but because the Gentiles converted should submit themselves to their precepts, even as they over whom masters rule to do what they command. And because this was never so fulfilled, as under the Gospel, but the Jews enemies round about opposed them in godly attempts, Adam Sasbon also stands for a spiritual subjection, as hath been said before. I take it, as fulfilled in part after their return, though not so remarkably at the first, yet afterwards when the Jews were so victorious under Mattathias and his sons, and their high-Priests successively reigned in so great glory, and their friendship was affected by foreign Nations, as appears more at large in my History at the end of Esther: But more fully under the Gospel, because it is not unusual with the Prophet to mix in his Prophecies things spiritual with temporal, as being indeed the chief wherein all true comfort lieth.

From hence to the end of the 20th verse, is shewed, what exulting there should be over Babylon thus brought down, and destroyed together with the King thereof.

Even the Firre-trees, and the Cedars of Libanus rejoiced over thee. Ierom by these understands other Princes, and mighty men upon earth, who could not escape the King of Babylons power, but were cut down by him, as the mighty trees of the Forest, but now they are brought in as rejoicing at his ruine, there being none now to hinder other Kings of earth from reigning in quiet, which they could not do whilst he lived. Calvin and Musculus better. Here by a Prosopopeia the insensible trees are brought in, speaking in way of rejoicing for the overthrow of the King of Babylon, which though they grew in Libanus afar off from him, yet they could not stand, but were cut down in abundance when that tyrant pleased. For the Prophet proceeds by degrees in shewing the common joy in all places for the King of Babels ruine, first beginning with the Jews, then bringing in the trees in their Land; and lastly, the Princes of all Lands rejoicing vers. 9, 10. Neither is it unusual in holy Scripture to ascribe to trees and inanimate things, affections and language before God, the more emphatically to set forth the thing spoken of, that men might be the more moved hereby.

Hell beneath was moved for thee, and stirred up her dead to meet thee coming, even

even all the Captains of the earth, &c. This is also spoken for the greater emphasis, as if the Kings of the world slain formerly by the Babylonian, and in hell, had some joy to see him to be brought down thither by the sword of another, as they had been by his sword, to shew, that his fall should be more terrible then any of theirs, and derided both by the living and dead, who are brought in ironically rising from their places for reverence to receive him coming thither, as sometimes Diogenes is brought by Lucian deriding Alexander the Great. The word rendred hell, setteth forth the grave, as appears ver. 11. in that he saith, that worms shall be under him and cover him, and so it is commonly taken in other places.

How art thou fallen from heaven. (O Lucifer) son of the morning, &c. The word rendred Lucifer, signifieth also ulula, hereby Nebuchadnezzar the proud King of Babylon is meant, who thought no God to be above him, and therefore when he is brought down, his fall is spoken of, as being from Heaven, where he exalted his Throne above the stars of God, that is, above his chosen people. And I will sit in the Mount of the testimony in the sides of the North, that is, rule over the Temple of God, and the Mount Zion, where it stood in the sides of the North, as it is also elsewhere described; so Jerom. This, saith Calvin, hath been foolishly expounded by some of the Prince of devils, for neither is he ever called in any other place of Scripture Lucifer; nor can this be drawn to any, but the King of Babylon, of whom all things here are spoken, and he is set forth by Lucifer the bright morning star, saith Musculus, because he sometime shined in as great glory upon earth, as that star in Heaven, and thought himself as fixedly set in that high dignity. And he is said to have cast lots upon the Nations, because he accounted himself Lord of all, and so one that had power to divide the Nations subdued by him amongst his people by lot, as the Lord anciently divided the Land of Canaan amongst his people of Israel. The exposition understanding the Prince of devils by Lucifer, which Calvin rejects, is Origens, and herein Eusebius, Ambrose, Athanasius, and some other Ancients held with him; some understand Antichrist, as Cyprian. But because the whole Prophecie is of the proud King of Babylon, it cannot so well be drawn to any other, then Nebuchadnezzar, who was for his pride driven from amongst men to live with the beasts, having before this caused his image made of gold to be worshipped; and Belsazzar the last King of Babylon, who was destroyed by the Medes and Persians, after that he had reigned a while as his true successour in worldly pomp and pride, and contempt of the true God, in token whereof he with his Princes and Concubines sat drinking in the precious vessels of the Lords house the same night that Babylon was taken. And this is the pride of every wicked King, he thinks himself above the condition of man, and is lifted up in his heart accordingly, if he prospereth and prevaieth to bring under all Nations against whom he warreth; and he thinks, that as God he hath power in his own hands to establish his throne, that it shall alwayes so flourish. But he doth hereby shew his pride and folly to be intollerable; and herein Antichrist is set forth to be like unto this King, 2 Thes. 2. 11.

I will ascend above the height of the clouds, and will be like the most High. It is not to be thought, saith Calvin, that any mortal could have such a thought, for there is some light in every one by nature, whereby he knoweth, that there is a God, and is affected with reverence towards him: but this Kings extreme pride is hereby set forth to be such, as if he had thus spoken, to render him odious, and to make all Princes in their greatest prosperity to take heed that they be not lifted up, but give all glory to God only. And especially let them take heed how they insult over Gods people; or machinate any thing against his true Religion and Church: for this is taken as doing against God himself, and this was Nebuchadnezzars case, who burnt the house of God, and took and carried away the spoils thereof; and when Sennacherib railed against Gods people, Chap. 38. the Lord saith, I know thy fury and rage against me.

But here by an elegant Antithesis to put him to the more shame, he threatneth, that he should be drawn down, and be placed in the sides of the infernal pit, that is, have the most base room therein, as the vilest of all others have in burying large place, such as be better accounted of having a better.

And opened not the house to his bound. Jerom, Opened not the prison] That they might have the comfort of the light, but keeping them in darknesse to aggravate their misery, so great was his cruelty. Vatablus. He would not open the prison doors to let any out, whom he had taken in warre, and bound in prison, but kept them all perpetually in bands; or would never release them, that the doors of their own houses might be opened to them, contrary to the manner of all Conquerours, that have any humanity in them, for they at length release their prisoners to win their hearts to love them; but this tyrant cared not for being loved, but feared altogether by all whom he had brought under.

Vers. 19.

Hieron.

To shew the judgement of God yet further upon the King of Babylon, he compares his end with the end of other Kings, Vers. 18, 19. They had each one an honourable burial when they died in their own Sepulchres, But thou (saith the Prophet) shalt be cast out of thy Sepulchre, as a detestable branch. The Hebrews, saith Jerom, to explain this, tell this tale, that Evil-merodach the son of Nebuchadnezzar having reigned seven years, whilst he lived amongst the beasts of the field, and then being upon his return put in prison whilst he lived after that, could not after his decease prevail with the Princes of the Empire to be accepted for King, till that he had caused his fathers dead body to be taken up out of the Sepulchre, drawing it forth with a rope and an hook, because they feared, that he might as well come again to reign after that he had been dead a certain time, or reported so to be, as he came after seven years departure formerly, when they thought that he had been dead. Others, saith he, expound it thus, Other Kings have some rest after death, but thou shalt have none, as being prest with the blood of all. Symmachus renders it thus, With those that are slain in warre thou shalt deserve to have fellowship of burial. These words, As the garment of the slain with the sword, going down to the pit, as a carcasie troden under foot, Hebr. To the stones of the pit; that is, saith Vatablus, paved with stones; or rather, because it is a reproach, the pit, at the bottom whereof stones lie, or are cast in upon the dead carcasie, as upon Ab-soloms when he was slain, 2 Sam. 18. 17. This is spoken, saith Calvin, according to the manner of the usage of their bodies, that are slain in the warre: for they are trodden under foot as contemptible to their enemies, and after a while some making a pit, drag them in their garments defiled with their blood, and tumble them into it, least lying above ground they should cause an intolerable stink.

Tostatus.
2 Reg.

Abulen-sis makes mention of that of the Hebrews touching Nebuchadnezzars body taken up by Evilmerodach, saying, That it was by the counsel of Jec-niah, whom he therefore advanced, and that to the end they might be sure he should never live any more to come and reign again, he cut his body into three hundred pieces, & gave them to three hundred Vulturs to be devoured. But this sounds like a fiction, therefore leaving it to the Authors thereof, occasioned by the Prophets saying, But thou art cast out of thy grave or sepulchre; as if this must necessarily be understood of one taken up again after burial, whereas it may well be understood of one neglected, and not buried with any solemnity to honour him, but used as the common sort of souldiers falling by the sword, as hath been already said, and as the comparison in further amplifying this is here made. For the words properly signifie, Thou wert sent from thy grave, and so most probably was Belsazzar a branch of Nebuchadnezzars stock, when he was amongst others slain at the taking of Babylon, for who, can we conceive, would then regard him, to bestow upon him a funeral after the manner of Kings? But as here followeth, rather abuse him as a detestable branch, which growing at the root of a Tree, the husbandman useth to cut off, and cast away with indignation, because it sucks away the sap and fatness of the Tree, if it be suffered. And that it is not meant that he or Nebuchadnezzar should be drawn out of the grave, as the Fable saith, the last words evince, As the garments of the slain going into the pit, after the manner of an under foot trodden earkeffe. For if he went into the pit, how was he brought out of the sepulchre, and cut in pieces, and given to Vulturs? Wherefore he was first instead of being honourably buried, trodden under mens and horses feet together with other slain at the same time, and then with them contemptuously tumbled into one common pit together.

If it be demanded, Why this is spoken of, as a great judgement, when as many good servants of God are likewise used at their death, as is complained, Ps. 79.22? Or what is there in a burial, that it should be made so much account of? Calvin answers, That in all Nations, and not amongst the people of God only, great account is made of burying their dead with solemnity; and to be cast out like a beast to rot as dung upon the earth, a dishonour; the light of nature teaching this, and so a difference betwixt men dying and beasts, because the one riseth again, but not the other. And amongst Gods people many rites were used about burying the dead under the Old Testament to figure this out, when the doctrine of the Resurrection was not so manifestly known. But under the New Testament it is superstition to use many, sith it is now known and manifested by the resurrection of Christ, and believed by all. And if any true Christian through the rage of tyrants be cast out and left unburied, it is no curse or ignominy to him any more then the crosse to Christ Jesus; yea it is a glory, there being the same reason of the head and of the members. But if any be left unburied, upon whom the signs of Gods wrath are, as it is with the wicked; this is a curse, and to be taken as the earth refusing to receive them and cover them up till the time of the resurrection, as most unworthy, being after death neglected as beasts, as in their lives they have been like them in sensuality.

Because thou hast wasted thy Land, and slain thy people, &c. The Septuagint saith Jerom, reade it, My Land, and my people, but Hebr. it is, Thy Land, which makes the understanding more hard. But he resolves it, either as meaning the destruction by his pride and cruelty brought upon his own Kingdom and people, or of the Lands made his by conquest, the people whereof he cruelly destroyed. I prefer the former, for so it best agreeth with the Prophecie of Babylons ruine for ever before-going, which had it not been for the pride and other vices of the Kings thereof, might still have continued. And as Musculus hath it, we may conceive his cruelty even to his own people herein taxed, whom he fore oppressed, and most probably in his rage tyrannically wasted.

Prepare slaughter for his sons in the iniquity of their fathers, &c. According to this Prophecie it came to passe, for Belsazzar being slain, none of that race ever rose up again to royal dignity, set forth in the next words, To possesse the earth, and fill the world with Cities. Jerom, The World of Cities, or the face of the world; Cities, for it is Hebr. and neither with, nor of, and then Cities are added by apposition, to shew, what he means by the face of the world, because Cities chiefly represent the world by reason of the multitudes of people in them. But because the word City here rendred Cities, signifieth Adversaries, there is another reading of the sentence in Jerom thus, They shall not rise up adversaries, and possesse the earth, and fill the face of the world; And this I take to be the best. So the Caldee, Septuagint, and Cyril by this word understand adversaries, but only they differ in reading it, They shall not fill the world with adversaries; That is, Armies of souldiers as the Babylonian Kings formerly did. Calvin also mentions this, yet understanding by their filling of the the world with adversaries, their filling it with the wicked, who as thorns and briars are enemies to the earth, and keep it from fruitfulness. But he followeth the other, and which hath not yet been spoken of, he moveth a Question, How the punishing of children for their fathers sins agreeth with Ezek. 18? and answereth, That it is not meant of guiltless children, but such as be like their fathers in wickedness, as all are, except God sanctifieth them by his grace.

Vers. 22.

For I will rise up against them, saith the Lord. In this and five Verses more following, the Prophet proceedeth to confirm in the name of the Lord what he had hitherto threatned against Babylon, because it was so large, and strong, and stately, and sumptuous a City, that it might seem impossible it should be thus ruined. He calls us therefore here to look at it, as Gods act, to whom nothing is impossible. Vers. 21. He speaks to the Medes to do this, because he useth what instruments he pleaseth; and even Heathens are so subject to him, that they cannot but execute whatsoever his Prophets do in his name command. Whereas he threatneth to root out the name of Babel, it is meant of any honourable remembrance thereof, and the remnant is also named to shew the difference that should be betwixt Babel and Judah, a remnant whereof he promised to leave.

Vers. 23.

And I will sweep it with a broom. That is, As one that sweeps an house leaves no dust in any part thereof, so God would leave none of the costly buildings undemolished there; so that it should from a City be turned into a wilderness for wilde beasts to keep in, no sign of the old inhabitants being left. And to shew further the desolate state thereof, he saith, That it shall be the habitation of the shell-fish, or night-owl, for the word חַיָּה signifieth either, but because these words, Ponds of water, follow immediately, it is rather to be understood of a kinde of fish; yet Junius will have it meant of a kinde of Eagle, which frequents much watery places. How it might become ponds of water we may easily conceive, because the river Euphrates, which was wont to run thorow it, being drained otherwayes by Cyrus, sometimes overflowed into the old channel, thus making many ponds; so Calvin, who also saith, Whereas the Lord is brought in, saying, I will rise up, vers. 22. it is not implied, that he lay idle before, but condescending to our capacity, he meaneth, that he would shew his power to effect all this against Babylon.

Vers. 25.

Hieronym.

To break Assur in pieces in my Land, &c. Here, saith Jerom, the Prophet gives them a sign of the destruction of Babylon, which should not come till long after, least they should sleight that judgement against them, that were not yet their enemies, and take no comfort in it through the fear in which they were for the present, of Sennacherib the Assyrian King. As if he had said, Thus will I do to enemies that shall come against you hereafter, when they have once punished you by destroying your City, and carrying you away captive, viz. to the Babylonians; but that ye may believe this, and be the more comforted by that which the Lord will shortly do for you, I further promise you in his name, that your present enemy, the Assyrian, by whom ye have and are afraid that ye shall suffer much, shall come and be destroyed in your Land, so far shall he be from doing you the hurt he intends. Calvin contrariwise by the Assyrian understands the Caldeans or Babylonians, of whom it hath been hitherto spoken. For, saith he, the Assyrians and Caldees were all under one King, and therefore he might sometime have his name from Assur, and sometime from Babylon; and because he speaks of his yoke and burthen removing from them, whereas the Assyrian King never had them in subjection; and lastly, because it is not improbable, that the Assyrians overthrow was before this Prophecie, though it be related after. But these reasons are too sleighty to prove it. For, 1. the King of Babylon is no where set forth forth by the name of the Assyrian. 2. Jerusalem was burthened by the Assyrian King in Abaz his time; and Hezekiah his son is said to have paid a great tribute unto him, 2 King.18.14. but he not satisfied with it, threatned him notwithstanding. The Assyrian King Sennacherib came not against Jerusalem till Anno 14. of Hezekiah, and this Prophecy was before the death of Abaz, as appears, v.28. To say nothing of his threatning the Assyrians with perishing in his land and upon his mountains, whereas the Babylonish King and his forces were overthrown in Babylon. Therefore Junius leaving Calvin, assenteth to this of Jerom, saying that the overthrow of the Assyrian Monarchy, which should shortly be, was given for a sign of the overthrow of the Babylonian.

This is the counsel against the whole land, and against all Nations. That is, the whole Babylonish Dominion and the Nations pertaining thereunto, which were enemies to the Jews, and help the King of Babylon against them, viz. the Syrians, Samaritans, Moabites, Edomites, &c. against whom are the Prophecies following, Chap.15,16,17,&c.

In the year wherein King Achaz died, was this burthen. Rejoyce not thou (O Palestine.) From the 6th Chapter hitherto, the Prophecies in the daies of Jotham and Abaz, of Jotham chap.6. of Abaz, 7,8,9,&c. to this verse: From hence to the end of the book, the Prophecies under Hezekiah. And he beginneth with one against Philistia, to which Abaz was a great enemy; and therefore he being dead now, and a young King succeeding him, whom probably they less feared for his want of experience, they rejoyced. But Isaiah bids them not so to do; for though he that had smitten them were dead, yet from this (snake a cockatrice, he saith, shall come, and his fruit a fiery serpent flying: For no King of Judah did ever so waste and subdue the Philistines as Hezekiah, 2 King.18.8. And he calls him a Basilisk, because it kils by seeing; and a fiery flying serpent, from whom death suddenly comes by stinging, as to Israel in the wilderness. To this effect Jerom. But because Abaz smote not the Philistines, but they his Countrey, 2 Chron.28.18. Vatablus understands not him by the rod which smote Palestine, but Uzziah, and the body of the people of God, who had formerly smitten the Philistines often. And by the Cockatrice Calvin understandeth not so much Hezekiah, as the same body of the people, ascribing the beginning only to him. But Junius best, by the Basilisk understands Hezekiah, and by the Snake out of whom he comes, Uzziah his great grandfather, because he was the last before Hezekiah that smote them, 2 Chron.26. And although since they not being infested by the Kings of Judah, but invading Judah in the time of unworthy Abaz, took spoils, whereat they greatly rejoyced: Yet now this their joy should have an end; a King was now come to the throne, that would be their great overthrow. The rod then smiting them was Uzziah, who was broken, as it were in Abaz his grandchildes daies, when the Philistines taking the opportunity of the low estate, to which he was brought, made a prey of some part of his dominion, as the Syrians and Israelites had done of others.

And the first-born of the poor shall be fed, &c. That the Philistines before threatned might not comfort themselves by thinking, that if they suffered such grievous things, Judah should not escape long, but come to drink also of the same cup. These words are added, by the first-born of the poor the Jews being understood, who are so called for the extreame miseries by them endured in the daies of Abaz, for which they might well be called the first or chief of poor afflicted ones. But here is shewed, that when the Philistines should suffer, they should be in a prosperous estate: he that should be as a Basilisk or fiery flying serpent to them, being to these, as a good shepherd to his sheep, doing all things to them which conduce to a well-being, because in these two stands the well-being of a flock, to be fed sufficiently and to lie down in safety. And I will make thy root to perish with hunger. Although thou for thy great power art like a mighty tree most firmly rooted, yet thou shalt die at the root, thy principality being overthrown, as the root of a tree dieth, when it can suck no more fatness out of the earth; so the Cities and strong places of the Philistines, wherein the life of their power lay, being taken by Hezekiah, their root was laid bare, and then he shall easily destroy the residue, both body and branches, that is, the Villages.

Howl (O gate) cry (O City) all Palestine is melted or dissolved, because a smoke comes from the north, &c. By gate, saith Jerom, understand such as sit in the gate, Princes and Judges; by the City the inhabitants; the destruction from the north, is from the Assyrian, who amongst other Countries destroyed Palestine in Hezekiah his time. Here the Prophet after the Metaphor of his root dying, useth another of being dissolved, as wax before the fire, for none other the strong places and Cities of the Philistines should be before the Assyrians, who he saith, should begin to come in a fume, that is, of the peoples rumour, and then should follow fire, as is usual. For first, saith he, the rumour should go abroad, that Phœnicia and Palestine should be destroyed, and then their destruction should come, which he confirmeth by the like in Jeremiah, under the similitude of a river saying, The waters shall ascend from the north, and shall be as an over-flowing flood, &c. Calvin so referres it to the Assyrian, as that he saith, it is spoken of Jerusalem also, which stood north from Palestine. Junius and some others understand it only of the King of Judah, as the former verse, and so it will appear to him that looks into the place, that one and another enemy to Palestina is not here spoken of and there, but in both one and the same. Hezekiah that shall destroy the Philistines, shall come as a smook, which passeth into and filleth all places, neither can it be kept out: And it is meant, saith Sasbont, that as smook annoyeth the eyes, so should Hezekiah and his forces Palestina. And none shall be alone amongst his constituted ones: So Hebr. verbatim. But Junius, None shall look backward of his companies. Jerom, None shall escape his troops. The meaning is, that the forces appointed by King Hezekiah to invade Palestine, shall come strongly on, none being left behinde alone, as not daring through faintheartedness to come forward to act his part in fighting against the Philistines.

And what shall they answer to the messengers of the Nations? That the Lord hath founded Zion, &c. That is, after Palestina subdued by Hezekiah, other Nations about sending to enquire of this conquest, the faithful answer shall be, It is God, by whose power this is done for the more strengthening of his people, that hereafter a long time they might be the more free against their enemies round about. And the poor of the people shall trust in her. Jerom, in him, that is, the Lord, more respecting the sense, then the word 72. For this indeed is the meaning, they having such experience of Gods goodness towards Zion, shall be confident, that through his power dwelling there she shall stand impregnable; and that they who keep in the Church hereby prefigured shall be so established, that the gates of hell shall not prevail against them, as is promised, Matth. 16. 16. Of Zion, saith Sasbont, properly understood, it cannot be meant, for we know what came to it, and to the Jews inhabiting there long ago: To spiritual Sion, that is, the Church under the Gospel, it is and shall ever be verified. If it shall seem more properly to belong to the great deliverance of Jerusalem from Sannecherib in Hezekiah's time, because he attempted the overthrow of Zion, but the Philistines never did, although they invaded some parts of Judah. I answer, If with Jerom we understand v. 31. as a new Prophecie of the calamities suffered by the Philistines, (after that Hezekiah had smitten them) by Sannecherib, the sense will flow the better indeed: But taking it otherwise, as before, it may stand very well so. This is the cause why Zion now stands firm, which by the former invasion of enemies was sore shaken, God hath founded Zion, and therefore no marvel, though Palestine be subdued by the Jews, that she was not formerly subdued by all her enemies, for an arm of flesh founded Palestine, but the Lord Zion, whose power none are able to overcome.

CHAP. XV.

THe burthen of Moab, because Ar of Moab is wasted in the night. This is the third Country threatned: And the title of the Prophecie being [A burthen] saith Jerom, alwaies intimateth sad things to follow, as the word [Vision] doth joyfull at last. Moab came of Lot, and was situated in Arabia, of which Country was Balac, who hired Balaam to come out of Mesopotamia to curse Israel; so was the chief City called since Aroopolis, that is, the City of Mars, whereof Jeremiah speaks much, as a mighty and rich City. And it is threatned with wasting in the night, either in alluding to the incestuous begetting of Moab in the night, or intimating the overthrow thereof by mines made under the wals: And I have heard a certain Aroepolitan say, that the same night that the sea passed over the shoar of the City, these wals fell down by an Earthquake, saith Jerom, in the time of my infancy. Moab, saith P. Martyr, stood in Arabia Petraea, and was a most flourishing Country, which made the inhabitants most proud, Jer. 48. They were near of kin to the Israelites, by their father Lots relation to Abraham, who was his fathers brother. But they carried not themselves like kinsmen towards them, but like enemies, for which they are here threatned with destruction: and yet not so much that they might make any good use of this Prophecy, saith Calvin, for it came not unto them, but to the people of God only for their instruction and comfort; 1. That they might know, that the great changes in states and Kingdoms were not casual, but by Gods providence. 2. That God in all his great judgements executing upon the wicked world, had a care of his Church. The places here threatned are Ar signifying a City, according to the signification of the word W, and Kir, a wall, whereby therefore taking them appellatively, all the Cities and strong places of Moab may be understood: But forsomuch as properly two chief Cities of Moab were thus called, we are to understand them only. For their destruction in the night, the time precisely is not so much meant hereby, as their security, and the sudden and unexpected coming thereof, so the destruction of the world is threatened to come in the night, that is, when men shall look for nothing less. And yet in Babylon it was fulfilled according to the letter, Dan. 5. and likewise we may expect for the day of judgement. However, it comes as a thief in the night, when to the world sleeping and secure in sin, as men are in the night, that we may never be secure in respect of that day, but think upon it night and day, and be alwaies prepared for the coming of the Lord, by alwaies doing so, as may be well pleasing unto him, for this is the watching to which he so earnestly exhorteth us all. The destruction of Moab here threatned, was by Sennacherib, that Jer. 48. 4. by Nebuchadnezzar long after. For the word used touching either of these Cities, brought to silence, it is a Periphrasis of death, Pf. 30.

He shall go up into the house, Dibon to the high places, to weep over Nebo. That is, the Moabite seeing himself perishing by the hand of the enemy, shall, as despairing of any humane help, flee to the house or temple of their god Chamos, to cry to him for help, and there weep and howl, but in vain: of Chamos see 2 King. 23. 13. Jerom, for He shall go up, hath, The house and Dibon shall go up to the high places to weep. That is, the Kings house and the City Dibon or inhabitants thereof shall go up to the high places, because there stood the idol Chamos, otherwise called Belphegor; and Medeba and Nebo are named, because two principall Cities of Moab, and in Nebo was that idol placed. Iunius hath the Hebr. word Bajith for house, and renders it, He shall ascend to Bajith, a town notorious for idolatry, otherwise called Beth Baal-Mebon, Numb. 32. 38. Josh. 23. 17. 1 Chron. 5. 8. it was upon the borders of the Reubenites, Dibon was in that tribe, Josh. 13. 17. and likewise Bamoth of Nebo, see Numb. 32. 38. of Medeba, c. 21. 30. But although these were Cities in Reuben, there might be others in Moab of the same name, which are here threatened. Yet I think with

Junius, that Bajith is a proper name, because otherwise it would have been Beth, which is commonly put for an house, and so it is meant, that the inhabitant of Kir and Ar spoken of v.1. shall in their distress flee to these places, as wherein they principally worshipped their idol, thinking thus to attain help, their God being moved by their tears to relieve them, if not in Bajith, yet in Dibon or Bamoth, Nebo or Medeba; or some should flee for rescue to one of these places, and some to another. Upon every head baldness, and beard shaven. See the same, Ier.8.37. For in time of mourning they used to pluck off the hair of their heads, and to shave their beards in all the Eastern parts, and this they did, as counting them their Ornaments, but now in time of sorrow they put them away: Contrariwise in the West, the suffering of the hair to grow is a sign of sorrow, so Calvin. And it seemeth to have been the custom of the Heathen in the East indeed, because the children of Israel are forbidden to pluck their hair in mourning, or to cut the corners of their beards: Yet Mephibosheth in time of mourning for Dauids absence, suffered his hair to grow, so that it seems in the Eastern parts all did not alike.

Some expound this of descending, as if it were from the high places before spoken of, their hopes of help from their gods being frustrate.

Heshbon and Eleale shall howl, their voice shall be heard to Jahaz, &c. These, saith Jerom, were Cities of Moab, the last whereof was near the dead, upon the uttermost border of Moab; whereby he sheweth, that howling for misery should be from one end of the Land to the other. Heshbon, saith Musculus, was the City of Sihon, Josh.13.10. Jahaz was the dwelling of the Merarites, Josh.22.36. there Sihon fell, Numb.21.23. The girt with arms shall howl. So Vatablus renders it, that is, the very souldiers, who were ready armed to defend their Country, seeing a power irresistible against them, shall, instead of fighting, lament as the rest, as having now none other weapons left. Their soul shall cry within him. Some, to it self; that is, mourning inwardly as well as outwardly. And v.5. sheweth what each one should cry: My heart shall howl for Moab, her fugitives to Zoar, &c. Or cries aloud to Moab her fugitives, but in vain, so Junius; because I call them back, and would stay them from fleeing, but to no purpose. Jerom and all others take it as spoken in the Prophets own person; as who would hereby shew the misery of Moab to be so great, that it could not but move pity in very enemies; and this is to be preferred, for so also, Ier.48.36. laments the sufferings of Moab. Touching Zoar, to which the Moabites fled; it was, saith Jerom, one of the five Cities of Sodom, which the Lord spared at Lots request, when he destroyed Sodom, and it was the uttermost border of Moab next the Philistines Country: Hereby then he means, that they should flee far off; and in further setting forth Zoar he calls it an heifer of three years old; that is, in the full strength, and not yet subdued by the enemy. By the ascent of Luith. This he takes to be a cliff in the way to Assyria, and therefore implying their being carried away Captive thither, and not far from that in a valley, the place called Horonaim. Junius pursuing his Exposition begun, understands all, as if the cry of the Moabites were set forth by the lowing of an Heifer, which loweth most strongly, and the voice of their cry coming to Luith and Horonaim, he will have to mean nothing else, but the piercing thereof through hills and dales.

There shall be desolations to the Waters of Nimrim. These, saith Jerom, were salt waters near the dead sea, and therefore the grounds about them were unfruitfull, and to this he either alludeth, or Moab being destroyed, these waters were changed by a judgement into such. Junius saith, that Nimram is that Beitnimram, Numb.32.3,36. in the Tribe of Gad, running with the waters thereof into the

the Country of Moab, making it fruitfull; but now he saith, that even the valleys where these waters ran, should be barren and without any grafs. Calvin doth not think that a change is meant so, that according to the letter the waters should indeed fail, but that the Country should be desolate, and so as if there were no water or grafs growing there, because no inhabitants to make use thereof: and this is to be preferred.

Therefore what is left and their riches they shall carry to the possession of the Arabians. Jerom, ad torrentem salicum; saying, this was into the Country of Babylon, of which David speaking, saith, that many willows were there planted, or in the way thither, viz. the valley of Arabia, as the words טל הערבי also signifie. Junius is for this last; the Chaldees spoiling Moab should lay up the goods there taken in Arabia being near, they being their confederates also, and for such good offices spared, as Herod. saith lib. 3. And it is called by the name of a valley, because in the descent of Horonaim, which was mountainous. Vatubius saith, that the enemies carried the Moabites riches thither, to part them amongst them. But Calvin will have the Moabites carrying of their own goods into secret places amongst the willows to hide them meant. Musculus, their carrying of them away, thinking to save them, but it should be for Arabian thieves to make a prey of them. Vulgar Latine, According to the greatness of their work is their visitation, and they shall lead them to the brook of willows. That is, as Sabon hath it, According to the greatness of their sin shall their punishment be, and their enemies shall carry them captive into Babylon, or the Arabians fighting under the Assyrians shall carry them into their Country. But neither doth the word כן signifie [According] but, therefore, neither doth חסד signifie greatness, but the remainder; or excellency or riches coming in by their work, for which חסד followeth. The most genuine reading then is, Therefore their riches or most precious things coming of their work, they shall put in the brook of willows, nothing else being meant, but that finding the enemy to prevail in every place, as desperate, to save their gold or silver, they should put it into the water, conceiving that haply these troubles being over, if they survived, they might there one day finde this treasure again.

A cry hath compassed the borders of Moab. Here the Prophet returns again to aggravate their misery, by speaking of their loud and uncessant crying, mentioning their utmost borders in generall, to which it should be heard, and then particularly Eglaim and Beer-Elim. For Eglaim, Junius hath confluentes, and expounds it of the flowing waters of Arnon one of the borders Numb. 21.15. and Beer Elim, the well of the mighty, or digd by them, for Elim signifies the mighty, Exod. 15.15. of a like well in the land of Israel so digd, see Numb. 21.16. Jerom for Eglaim hath Gallim, and saith that Ieremiab hath almost all the same: But Hebr. it is Eglaim, coming of a word that signifieth drops of water, or stillings. Pagninus takes it for a proper name, but where any place was in Moab thus called, we know not.

Because the waters of Dimon shall be filled with blood, for I will put additions upon Dimon to them that shall escape lions. This was a river in Moab: yet Calvin saith, that some think it to be a City, but against the current of Interpreters and reason, for what are waters but some river or pond, not a City. He doth here then threaten great slaughters to the making of rivers to run with blood. The additions put upon the river Dimon, are, according to Vatubius, the streams of blood shed running into it: according to Calvin, Lions and other wilde beasts; as if he had said, This shall not be the only suffering of the Moabites to have their blood shed in abundance, to the filling of rivers by the hands of their enemies, but if any escape them, they shall be destroyed by Lions, yea even all that shall remain in the land, when the warre is done, shall thus perish: See a like place, chap. 24.18. Ier. 48.44. Amos 5.19. where such as escape judgement by one evil are threatened with another. Thus also Jerom, who renders it Dibon, affirming that ד and ב are sometimes put one for another, but then he will have Dibon the City before spoken of, signifying flowings, so called for the waters running there: whereas whereas Dimon significth silence. Junius expounding Dimon bloody, saith, that most probably the waters appearing like blood, 2 King. 3. are here alluded to. Iehoshaphat the King of Israel, and King of Edom had water sent them miraculously in their necessity, by the way of Edom, but the Moabites their enemies say that water as blood, whereby they were moved to hasten to the shedding of their own blood. As water was then bloody in appearance, so now he saith, it should be so indeed by the blood of the sin; in other things he subscribes to Calvin. But Ierom understands either Lions properly, or the Chaldees terrible like Lions, because a Lion amongst the Egyptians was an Hieroglyphick of one most terrible: And of Dauids Worthies, some are said to have had faces like Lions. But because the Caldees or Affrians should shed their blood before spoken of, and this is another judgement added, the former exposition is to be preferred.

CHAP. XVI.

Vers. 1.

Junius.

Send ye a lamb of the ruler of the land. So Junius, expounding it of Lambs due by way of tribute ever since Moab subdued by David, 2 Sam. 8.2. and continuing tributary to part of his Kingdom, viz. the Kingdom of Israel, untill the time of Ahaziah and Jehoram, in whose daies they refused to pay any more this tribute, being a hundred thousand Lambs, 2 King. 3.3. but called here a Lamb by a Syllepsis. Now he bids the Moabites to cease from this their sin of withholding this tribute due to the King of Israel, Lord of their land, threatening them otherwise, v. 2. that they shall be as a wandering bird fleeing to the waters of Arnon, from the rock even to the desert; that is, from Jockool, the metropolitian City of Moab, 2 King. 14.7. to the desert of Jordan, which was the furthest extent of that Kingdom, he means therefore, that all the Moabites from all parts should agree together to pay it to the King reigning in Jerusalem then, which he expresseth by these words, To the mount of the daughter of Zion. Calvin contrariwise reading it, Send ye a lamb to the Lord of the earth ] saith, that the Lord, who is ruler over all the world, is hereby meant, and that the speech is ironical, as if he had said, When ye shall see your selves beset with judgements, and your case desperate, and that no help is elsewhere to be had, then haply ye will think by sending lambs for sacrifice at Jerusalem to be delivered, but your hopes shall be frustrated, and so shall the hopes of all the wicked, although they seek to God, when judgements irrevocable coaze upon them. As for the former, he saith, it cannot stand, because there is no mention made of a tribute of Lambs to be paid to David, and if there were, what had the King of Israel to do with all? or if to him this tribute were now, why should it be sent to Jerusalem, and not rather to Samarina, the seat of the Kings of Israel? Ierom differing from both these, renders it, buy a lamb, the ruler of the earth, out of the rack of the desert, &c. that is, By the spirit of Prophecy I do here foretell you, that by the Lamb of God, Jesus Christ, who is Lord over all, coming of David, who came of Ruth, married to Boaz; leaving her Countrey Moab to follow Naomi to Jerusalem, ye shall have deliverance from all your sins and miseries. Why Ierom should for send, as it is in the Hebrew, read it buy, I know not; but I incline most to his Exposition, because it is not Send a lamb to the Ruler, but the Lamb, Ruler of the earth. Ruler by apposition being put to Lamb as one and the same, and then it must needs be meant of Christ, in whose Name it is here prophesied, that even the Moabites should one day pray, being converted to his faith; for he that prayeth in Christ's Name, sends up, as it were, this Lamb, making propitiation for his sins; and the Ruler of the earth he is, for so it is promised, I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. And whereas Junius to approve his, renders the 2<sup>d</sup> verse, Otherwise as a wandering bird, &c. Hebr. it is, And is as a wandering bird: Where he returns again by another similitude further to set forth Moab's misery, of which he was before before speaking. Wherefore v.1. comes in as a Prophecy touching Christ, a comfort against all miseries, to whom even the Heathens are exhorted to come, and to this he was carried by a Prophetically rapture, immediately leaving it again, as he did the like before, chap.5.14. Or according to some, these words may go thus, Send a Lamb O Ruler of the earth or world ] The verb send being plurall for the three persons in the Godhead, yet all one: And to this subscribe Hugo, Lyra, Adam Sashons and Vatablus, who all take it as spoken of Christ; yet as was before said, Ruler being by opposition put to the word Lamb. But forso-much as the Hebrews have no cales, we shall not erre whether we render it by the Accusative or Vocative. Iunius was then misled herein by the Hebrews, who to elude this Prophecy touching Christ, refer it to Hezekiah, as an exhortation to the Moabites to submit and pay tribute to him as they ought, that he might defend them, for they were never his subjects. And the rendring of the words, To the Ruler of the land, gave occasion to Calvin, leaving the old received Exposition, to excogitate another, and this seems to be favoured by our new Translation, rendring it likewise, yet herein it differs, that for the rock of the desert, it hath Sela of the desert; as if סֶלָה signifying a rock, were a proper name. But for the rocks wherewith it is compassed, the City meant hereby is called Petra the rock, from whence the Countrey about hath the denomination, Arabia Petraea, according to Strabo. For the Translation of the Septuagint, followed by Cyrl, I will send as it were creeping things upon the land, I think it such a corruption of the Text, that it is scarce worth the mentioning.

And it shall be as a wandering bird, going from the nest, &c. Here, saith Ierom, the Prophecie touching Christ being interposed v.1. Isaiah returns again to prosecute what he had said, of Lions being sent against Moab, chap.15.9. for by reason of them it should be as a bird fleeing from her nest, that is, the people fleeing from their habitations for fear, and her daughters, that is, they who dwell in all the Cities thereof, at the rivers of Arnon, passing thereby into Captivity. For by Arnon, the uttermost bounds of Moab, they went, when into Assyria Captives. Iunius prosecuting his Exposition hath it, otherwise, that is, unless Moab obey the house of David, they shall flee, &c. But how different this reading is from the Original, I have already shewed. Calvin, But it shall be like a bird. That is, Let the Moabites send sacrifices to Ierusalem, and do what they can to prevent ruine and Captivity, they shall not escape. And as Marloras hath it, they shall as easily by Gods power be driven out of their Country, as a bird from her nest, and so shall the most potent Nation that is wicked, when God will. But thus they make it to cohere with v.1. as it doth not, but is joyned by a conjunction copulative with v.9. of chap.15. And it shall be.

Gather counsel, or enter into counsel, make verdit what is to be done, and this must be your way, make thy shadow as the night in the midst of noon-day, hide, &c. As if he had said, this is the best course that ye can take to obtain mercy of God to be preferred in danger to be an hiding place to his people, when they for fear of the enemy should flee from their own Country, then to keep them as it were, in the dark of the night from their pursuers; thus imitating Lot your father towards the men that came to Sodom, sheltering and rescuing them; and as their father Abraham, by his kindness sometime to Lot hath deserved that ye should do, when he recovered him with all that he had, out of his Captivity, Gen.14. For Moab had rather hitherto holpen the enemy against Israel, as in many Histories appears. Therefore Calvin understands all this as ironically, as if the Prophet did nothing but upbraid them by their inhumanity to Israel in distress, shewing, that they should finde no more favour now in theirs, then they had formerly shewed to them. Iunius rather assents to Ierom here, and so do some others, holding that the Prophet gives the Moabites counsel, when Sennacherib by his coming against Judah, should cause many of the Jews to flee amongst them, to use them courteously, and to protect them; that when Nebuchadnezzar should afterwards indanger their Country, as here is prophesied, God might protect them. Only whereas Ierom understands the Metaphor of the noon-noon-day and night, of light and darkness; Sabon understands it of hot pursuit by the enemy to their great pain, as the sun in hot Countries is tedious to the traveller at noon-day; and their being as dark night to them, of humanity, whereby they might be comforted there-against. But herein the difference betwixt Ierom and Adam Sabon is but smal; I hold with Ierom, that the Prophet is serious in advising Moab, as who doth also shew a reason, v.4. He shall cease that oppresseth, the waster shall fail. That is, the proud King of Assyria, of whom ye may haply be afraid, if ye should do for the Jews as I have said: For in one night his huge army was destroyed, and he put to flight: Although they that take the former words to be spoken ironically, hold this to be spoken not for the comfort of Moabites succouring Gods people, but of Israelites against their fear of that tyrant.

Vers. 5.

And the throne shall be prepared in mercy, and one shall sit upon it in truth seeking judgement &c. This, saith Ierom, is by the Hebrews understood of Hezekiah, a most righteous King; but by others of Christ. And it is not to be doubted, but that Christ is prophesied of in this Chapter, and the event is answerable: For even in the Primitive times many trophies built in Moab to the honour of Christ, shewed his Empire there. Of Christ also Calvin understands it, and Vatabl, because there is no durable comfort but in him: The word rendred truth therefore is [מֶלֶךְ] in truth or firmness, intimating the everlasting continuance; and the tabernacle of David is added to denote that this Kingdom should not be outwardly glorious, as other Kingdoms of this world, but mean in appearance, as a tent of an ordinary man is in comparison of a Kings Palace: And in saying, the tent of David, respect is had to his private condition divers years after his anointing to be King. To hasten justice This is spoken to satisfy those that think long to have justice done them against their enemies; if any such shall think that too much delay is made, let them rest in this that he hasteneth justice, and it shall soon be done.

Vers. 6.

Junius.
Ierom.

We have heard of the pride of Moab, &c. Here the Prophet returns again to Prophecie against Moab, shewing the cause of their misery, their pride by reason of their high and strong wals, trusting to which they contemned their more mighty enemies: for that their pride was founded upon their strong wals, see v.7. His lies shall not so succeed: Thus Junius. His indignation is more then his strength: So Ierom, and indeed one signification of the word עָרִיר here used is fury, and one of עָרִיר fortitudes, to render it then word for word, read it thus, And his fury, not so his strengths or fortitudes. That is, he is proud of his strength beyond that it is. But Junius following another signification of the word עָרִיר his lies, gives almost the same sense in other words. Vatabl hath divers translations, There shall be no truth of his lies; or His indignation is nothing but lies, &c. And this of rendring it by lies, Calvin follows. In the sense all agree, Moabs pride and fury was greater then agreed with his strength.

Vers. 7.

Junius.

2 King. 3.

Therefore Moab shall howl to Moab. That is, either one City to another, according to some; or the living lamenting the slain, according to others; or within himself each one, according to others. For the foundations of Kirhareth, ye smitten only shall roar. Vulgar Latine, To them that rejoyce over the wals of burnt brick, speak ye their plagues. But why the word is rendred by rejoycing I know not, because it signifies only foundations. Junius respecting more the sense then the words. Of the foundations of Kirhareth ye shall speak, but they are broken. The sense is, that their greatest grief should be for this City, being interpreted, A wall of burnt brick, because it was so strong, that being once assaulted by three Kings, yet it could not be taken, but now the foundations of it should be razed, and the people smitten, therefore he useth the word רָגַעְתִּי rugietis, not loquemini, as Junius hath it.

Vers. 8.
Hieronym.

Because the vines of Hesbbon are cut up, &c. Of Hesbbon see chap. 15. 4. Ier. 48. 31. almost as it is here spoken of. This and Sibmah, being as Ierom saith, but five hundred paces distant, it seems were fruitfull places as far as lazer on the borders of Moab, for Vines grow in the fruitfulest soils. But now they should be be all cut down, and so the Land deprived of the chief commodity thereof, as Musculus saith the Turks use to do when they come into a Countrey of vines, they cut them all down; and forso much as they are an occasion of so much sinning, and there is none other way to beat it down, it were good, saith he, that other Potentates would do likewise in all places, sed inconsultis, unlesse there were no strong drink neither, because that also causeth drunkenness. The Lords of the Nations have trodden down the noblest branches, that is, The Assyrian Lords, the most excellent Vines, wherewith the Countrey aboundeth even to Iazer, the border of the Land. And by the destruction of the Vines he intimateth the Countreys lying waste. Jerom by their coming to Iazer, and wandering in the desert, and passing over the sea, understands the people of Moab fleeing every way. Some others, by these words, They came to Iazer, the Vines planted and growing so far; but then under the similitude of Vine-branches of the best sort, the greatest of Moab fleeing and wandering in the Wildernesse, &c. Let the Reader take it which way he pleaseth. Iunius notes, that Iazer was a Town of the Merarites in Gad, Iosh. 21.29. and applies going over the sea to choice plants carried over.

Therefore weep thou vine of Sibmah with the weeping of Iazer, &c. Vulgar Latine, I will weep with the weeping of Iazer, the vine Sibmah. And thus Hebrew and Iunius; it is like that Chap. 15.5. it moves compassion even in the Prophet to think of the greatness of their misery. Of Sibmah in Reuben see Numb. 32.38. Iazer, Sibmah, Elealeh and Heshbon, saith Jerom, were strong Towns, the overthrow whereof he thus prophesieth of.

Upon thy vintage and harvest shall rush a song. New Translation, The shouting for thy harvest is fallen, Iunius being followed herein. Vulgar Latine, Vox calcantium irruit, it being meant, as Jerom hath it and Calvin, That the enemies coming upon them in the time of harvest, should fill all things with an hideous noise in stead of the joyfull singing that was wont to be at that time, and the songs and joy of the wine-makers should cease, as followeth vers. 10. So that unlesse the same thing be twice repeated, Iunius his exposition cannot stand, and the word וירי is rather to be rendred a clamour, then a song in this place; although v. 11. by the same word a song or joyfull noise be set forth, for it signifieth both.

Therefore my bowels shall sound as an harp for Moab, &c. See the like Jer. 48.36. This and vers. 10. are nothing else but a further amplification of that which he said vers. 9.

Then he shall come to his sanctuary to pray, but not profit. That is, saith Jerom, in his distress he shall seek to the Idols, whom he hath served, but shall finde no help, for they shall go to destruction together with him. But here is not only one seeking spoken of, but another in the beginning of the verse, When it shall appear that Moab is wearied upon the high places, he shall come, &c. That is, having sought in his misery to his gods in ordinary places, such as every Town and City had, he shall at length flee to some place reputed more holy, and the common Sanctuary of all distressed ones, thinking surely to have relief there; and this was Chamoz, as Ier. 48.13. is shewed. For so, saith Calvin, the superstitious Papists believe, that by seeking to some place more eminent for sanctity, they shall rather prevail, as to our Lady of Loretto. But the first original of this confidence was doubtlesse their observing, that amongst the people of God there was one place famous above all others for this, being called singularly the Sanctuary, even Solomons Temple. And it is to be noted, saith Calvin, because it is said, When it shall appear that Moab is wearied, &c. that the wicked are not lead by any reason to see into the vanity of their seeking to Idols, but only by sense and experience, when hereby it appears, even as brut beasts are lead, but then it is too late; wherefore let us hearken to right reason, and not stay to be thus lead, till destruction comes, and there will be no remedy.

This is the word which the Lord brought forth upon Moab from that time. That is, is, saith Jerom, That Moab began to be a people: for he decreed of old, that a Moabite or Ammonite should not enter into the Congregation to the tenth generation. But because Moab was a people before that, it is better with Calvin to understand it from the time that Moab was so unkinde to Israel, because although he was not threatened till now, yet it was thus decreed then. And this was in Hezekiah's time spoken, and in his time performed, or the three years being not counted from the Prophecie, but after that Moab should begin to fall, it should be totally ruined in three years by Nebuchadnezzar, who five years after Jerusalem destroyed Moab, Joh. antiq. 10, 11.

But letting passe such Allegories, Bernard expounds Damascus, shedding blood, and saith, he truly is of Damascus, shedding his own blood, and slaying himself, that willingly sinneth: but he that striving against sin is sometime carried away, is only under the burthen of Damascus through grief: that sin causeth in him, but dieth not. This Prophecie against Damascus was fulfilled in part, 2 King. 16.9. when Tiglath Pileser King of Assur subdued it, and in part when Nebuchadnezzar, Jer. 49.33. but afterwards it was restored again by the Macedonians and Ptolomies, as Jerom saith, and is now a noble City of the East. But after the destruction thereof by Nebuchadnezzar, it ceased for a time to be a City, as is here prophesied, and lay as a ruinous heap. The ordinary glosse saith, That here Cain shed the blood of Abel, which gave occasion to the name, and that it was first built by Eliezer Abraham's steward, of whom see Gen. 15.2. And it hath also another signification of the name, viz. Sanguis ciliis, because who so sheds innocent blood had need to put on sackcloth in mourning therefore.

The Cities of Aroer are forsaken, &c. This, saith Lyra, was a Countrey in Syria, which was full of inhabitants; but now he foretelleth, that it should be desolate, and under the power of the enemy, and used to feed their flocks in, no Syrians being left, that should dare to come and drive them away. But he saith, That the City Aroer was in Judah; of this he speaks not here, but of the Countrey Aroer, saith Junius, lying by the River Arnon.

Junius.

Vers. 3.

The munition also shall cease from Ephraim, and the Kingdom from Damascus. Here the Kingdom of the ten Tribes is brought in also, and threatned together with Syria, because they joyned together against Judah, and it is called by the name of Ephraim, as the chief of those Tribes, and because Ierobaam their first King was of that Tribe. For the Syrians might haply bear themselves upon their union with Israel, and so set light by this threatening, that being a potent Kingdom, being therefore called here, The munition of Ephraim. But in saying, that it should cease, he takes away all such hope, and this was fulfilled 2 King. 17. by Salmanasar the King of Assyria, as that against Damascus by Tiglath Pilezar. And the remnant of Aram shall be as the glory of Israel, that is, their great multitudes being by that destruction brought to a very few, as Israel were: for he calls their multitudes of men their glory, because they much gloried therein, and were proud thereof, and The glory of a King is in the multitude of his subjects.

ing,

Prov.

And in that day the glory of Jacob shall be impoverished. Which was, when so many of his children perished: And the fatness of his flesh made lean; that is, his riches, which are as fat (for which it is commonly said of a rich man, that he is fat) shall be all taken away. Iunius by their glory understands nobility, prosperity and strength also.

Verf.4.

Iunius.

And it shall be as when the harvest-man gathereth the corn. That is, saith Iunius, cut down by the enemy, though they were never so many, as the multitude of the ears of corn hinder not the reaper from cutting them down, and to shew that this is his meaning, he mentions the ears of corn in the valley of Rephaim, which was a most fruitfull place, The vulgar Latine, And it shall be as one gathering that which remains in harvest, and as one seeking ears in the valley, &c. As if the meaning were, when the great multitudes of Syrians and Israelites shall be destroyed, as hath been said, Syria shall be as a corn-field reaped, a very few remaining, as a little gleanings only; and then the Vulgar proceeds, And there shall be left therein a cluster of grapes, as it were, and as the shaking of an Olive-tree, two or three Olives, &c. ver.6. and it is understood by Lyra and the ordinary Glosses; and Ierom and Haimo, and others likewise. For they say, the same thing is set forth by three comparisons here, 1. Of ears of corn left a field reaped. 2. Of clusters of Grapes left after Grape-gathering, and two or three Olives after Olive-gathering. And this is allegorically applied by the ordinary Glosses, as setting forth, how few shall be saved in comparison of them that shall perish. Yea Simeon, saith Nilus, an holy man, who lived about an. 1000, being asked, How many should be saved? and that by the Princes of Constantine answered, not above one of ten thousand; so likewise Basil, Chrysostom and Ephrem. But Calvin, as Iunius, by the former words verf.5. understands the cutting of them down by the Assyrians, as reapers do corn, and by the last the taking away of the very gleanings also. And the comparison ver.6. he saith, serve to set forth another thing for the comfort of the faithful, who hearing this, might fear that none should be left at all. Against this he saith, That there should a few be left as a cluster or two of Grapes, or two or three Olives, &c. And this is most agreeable to the original, wherein the word rendred in vulgar Latine, Residuum, signifieth The Harvest; and Iunius to shew that one thing is spoken of verf.5. and another, ver.6. renders it, Yet there shall be a gathering of grapes left.

For at the motion of that good King many of Asshur, Naphthali and Zebulon came to keep a Passover to the Lord at Ierusalem, who remained after the Assyrian Captivity; and then they help to destroy Altars, and to cut down Groves and Images in Ephraim and Manasseh, till none were left. Ierom referring this to the time of the Gospel, saith, That the Jews being so void of grace, that a little remnant of them only shall believe, the Gentiles shall turn to the Lord, and break down Altars, built formerly for Idolatry, and Idols also. The first is best and therefore generally followed; and Calvin hereupon noteth, That there is cause, why the people of God should patiently bear his corrections, sith they work this blessed work of turning from the wickednesses, to which we before apostatized unto him, and from danger of destruction to the way of life. In the sense all agree; The scope of the place is to shew, That as the Canaanites fled in times past before them, so they should before their enemies, their strong Cities being no more to defend them, then boughs or bushes set about.

And verf.11. he renders it, In die plantationis tue labrusca; and in the morning thy seed shall flourish; That is, Thou Israel through confidence in the Syrians help, but shalt be gone by the Assyrians power in the day of inheritance, or infirmity; for one word signifies both; the last of infirmity being followed by the Hebrews, that is, Israel's strength being infirmated; the other by Lyra, it being meant, in the time of harvest, which is a time of getting corn in to be possessed by the owner, as part of his inheritance. But R. Solomon saith, he takes the future tense here for the preter; as if he had said, Thou wert planted at the first a faithfull plant in thy fathers, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, but hast been changed into strange branches, when immediately after the Law given Israel committed Idolatry with the golden Calf. But both this, and Lyra his own are further fetcht; but the first exposition here given is most genuine, for so it is threatned, Levit. 26.16. And of this exposition the Geneva note gives an hint in part, where the strange vine-branches grafted are expounded excellent, and brought out of other Countreys for their extraordinary goodness.

In the evening behold trouble, but before it be morning he shall be no where, &c. Because another Prophecie beginneth here, and nothing pertaining to the former against the Syrians; Innu cutting off these three verses from this Chapter joins them to Chap. 18. where the Prophecie begun here against many Nations, ons, the Assyrians in particular with the peoples under that Monarchy, being first pointed at, he proceedeth against the Ethiopians. This is so plainly against the Assyrian King Sennacherib, that Expositors generally understand it of him and his Army, which came against Judah as a flood of waters; for so he was also compared before Ch. 8. 7. and great trouble by reason thereof, was in the evening, but the same night they being destroyed, in the morning no such terrible flood appeared any more, all that multitude although being as a sea, the overflowing whereof is irresistible by men, yet before God they were but as chaff upon the top of a mountain before the winde, and a light globule apt of it self to roll down before a whirlwinde. Vers. 13. For even so easily did he drive them away, making them with all haste to flee. Psal. 83. 14.* Some, saith Jerom, understand all this mystically of them that raged against the Gospel according to Psal. 2. making him that fled the devil, their Prince, leaving his Temples, where he was wont to give answers. Calvin understands the Assyrians, so as withall he takes other enemies to the remnant of Israel to be meant also, because the Prophet was here in this Chapter speaking of the sufferings of Israel, who had therefore need now to be comforted, that they might not despair. But I prefer the first, and as for Israel and Syria he had done speaking of them, and here enters upon a new Prophecy.

CHAP. XVIII.

VOe to the Land shadowing with wings, which is beyond the rivers of Ethiopia. Vulgar Latine, Va terra, Cymbalo alarum. Which Jerom rendereth so, because though W signifieth a shadow, yet being doubled it rather signifieth a Cymbal, as it is here W W. Junius, To the Land shadowing the heavens, affirming that all the stars in Ethiopia had high mountains overshadowing them, and compassing them about, which he gathers from Strabo lib. ult. saying, That all the Havens upon the red sea were such. Which is by the rivers of Ethiopia, Secundum flumina, Heb. Magnaber Lenachri, Beyond by the rivers, or at them. For Ethiopia was washed with two rivers, according to Strabo; lib. 17. and Pliny, which ran into Nilus of Egypt. It was that part of Ethiopia and Egypt, which lay between the main Countrey of Ethiopia and Egypt, which is here meant, called Meroe. And this the Prophet cometh now to threaten, because Tyrhacha King of Ethiopia coming out against Sennacherib King of Assyria, when he was invading Judah in Hezekiah his time, brought him upon himself, which thing, and his denouncing warre against him by his Legats sent Vers. 2. by sea, is here prophesied of: to this effect Junius. But Jerom takes this to be a description of Egypt, and that Land to be here threatned, because, as Syria before threatned had by helping Israel made them to trust in them, and not in God; so Egypt being made a stay by Judah, incurred Gods wrath likewise. And this is followed generally by other Expositors, Haimo, Thomas Aquinas, Lyra, Cyrl, Procopius, Sasbon &c. because it is not said, The Land of Ethiopia, but beyond the rivers of Ethiopia, implying it to be another Countrey, and Egypt abounded so with shipping covered with sails as with wings, that it may most aptly be applied thereunto; or it might be so called for covering the Jews under the shadow of her wings, because they trusted to Pharaoh King of Egypt, and rebelled against the Assyrians, and would flee thither for shelter after that their Land was subdued by Nebuchadnezzar. These indeed are great probabilities, but because the burthen of Egypt followeth not till Chap. 19. this cannot stand; and because Egypt is not beyond Ethiopia, but nearer to Ierusalem, but this beyond: And lastly in coming to speak against Egypt, he saith the same against it that he doth here; so that if this be against Egypt also, there must needs be a vain repetition; so Cornelius a Lapide hath it, but untruly, as will appear to him that shall shall compare the Chapters together; therefore lastly rather Ethiopia is here meant, and Egypt not touched till Chap. 19. because Chap. 20. 4. concluding both these Prophecies, he makes expresse mention of Ethiopia, as well as of Egypt; and how they should be alike judged by the Assyrians domineering over them. So that if Ethiopia be not here threatned as well as Egypt, Chap. 19. more should be in the conclusion then in the premises. I resolve therefore with Iunius, whom the Jesuite also followeth, that Ethiopia is here meant; and to make this yet plainer, we may thus render the wordss, Woe to the Land shadowing with wings, which is beyond the rivers, even Ethiopia; for the Hebrews having no cases, it may as well be rendred by the Dative as Genitive, and so agree with Terra, To the Land, by apposition. And this description is made, because by seven streams flowing out of Ethiopia, Egypt was watered, and those streams or heads were on this side Ethiopia, and so it was a Land beyond the rivers. For, the word rendred shadowing, but by Jerom, With a Cymbal, though  $\overline{\text{ר}}\overline{\text{ז}}$  of which it cometh, signifieth a tinkling as a shadow, so that the derivative may sometime signifie a Cymbal, yet this being a compound of  $\overline{\text{ר}}$  and  $\overline{\text{ז}}$  put together, as Vatablus noteth rather, signifieth a thick shadow, and hereby Ethiopia is described, either for the abundance of Flies and Bees there darkning the air, and so it is shadowed with winged things being black like the inhabitants of that Country, or for their abundance of shipping with sails, which are to ships, as wings to flee swiftly withall, or haply their offering to be a shelter to the Jews in *Hezekiah*s time is pointed at, when Tirhaka their King came out against Sennacherib to divert him from Jerusalem, which he was hastening to besiege; for it is not improbable but that he sent word hereof by some Embassadors spoken of vers. 2. to Hezekiah, though he placed not his confidence in this, but in God. Now that it may yet appear to be more probable, that Ethiopia is here threatned, we may take notice from 1 Chron. 12. 3. where the Ethiopians are said to have come against the Jews with Necho King of Egypt; and 2 Chron. 14. 9. Zarah King of Ethiopia came out against Asa with ten hundred thousand, that they were great enemies to Gods people; and therefore the Propositum of the Prophet being to threaten judgements against all the several Nations, which were their enemies from Chap. 13. to Chap. 23. no reason that the Ethiopians should be left out. Calvin also conceives it to be some part of Ethiopia near the sea. Vatablus paraphraseth the words thus, O maritin country, which aboundeth with ships, being covered with sails of many ships, as with a thick shadow. The Caldee Paraphrast, Woe to the Land to which they come with ships from a far country, and extend their sails as an Eagle fleeing with her wings. Musculus mentioneth some other interpretations, as of Eusebius Caesar. expounding it of the Jews, who wrote letters into all parts to stir up persecution against Christians, because vers. 2. it is said, sending in paper vessels upon the waters; but this is farre fetcht, sith by paper vessels not letters, but ships made of a wood called Papyrus, are set forth: and of others expounding it by the Romans, who in the time of Titus and Vespasian destroyed Jerusalem. But because the Jews were then to be destroyed for their bloody sin in crucifying Christ, and other great abominations, and they pulled that destruction upon themselves and City; this is altogether improbable, although Iust. cons. Tryphon. follows the former, & some others this. Corn. a Lap. tels of some that refer this Prophecy to the Indies so far remote, as being of their conversion by the Spaniards, ita quisq; suo sensu abundat. Sending Embassadors by sea upon rusben vessels, Go ye swift messengers to a distracted Nation, &c. Iunius saith, That those sent by Tirhacha to the Assyrians to denounce warre against them, are here meant, and that the rusby vessels may also be read Papyrus vessels, that is, Boats made of rushes, or of the light wood of a tree called Papyrus, of which paper to write upon was also anciently made. For such did both Ethiopians and Egyptians use, and not vessels of more solid matter, which would have been in more danger of breaking by reason of many hard and ragged bosoms of rocky matter, as they failed down down the river Nilus; and he calls the Assyrians a distracted and peeled Nation, because the forces come out against Judea had not their King amongst them at the first, and so were as an Army distracted, which being set suddenly upon could not make any such great resistance, as needed to be feared by them, To a people terrible in that place and further; For so were the Assyrians both to Judea and other Nations for their great prevailings, Which delineates and conculcates all things; That is, arrogates power over all, and treads them under foot, Whose Land the floods spoil; according to Ammanus lib. 23. the Assyrians Countrey was much annoyed with waters overflowing and doing great hurt. Cornelius à Lapide distinguisheth sending Legats in rusby vessels from the next words, Go ye Angels or Messengers to a distracted Nation; as if the first only belonged to the Ethiopian, the next to the Assyrian; as if the Prophet had said, The Ethiopian goes out but as a paper or rusby vessel, weakly against the Assyrians, but Sennacherib their King vaunting over them, should count his Princes as Angels for strength in comparison, and they should indeed make the Ethiopick Nation poor and distracted, as lined out to destruction, the Assyrians coming upon them, as a flood irresistibly. Jerom by the Nation distracted understands that of Judah, because the Assyrians should spoil it, yet it was formerly terrible for help miraculously received many times from God, making their enemies to tremble; and the Jews also in Dauids time trod upon divers Nations, but now that Kingdom was to be destroyed by a flood of enemies. Calvin is somewhat doubtful how to understand it, because no History gives any light into it; but whereas Jerom expounds the Jews a terrible Nation, because they were in times past formidable to their enemies, he contrariwise, because they should be overwhelmed with such miseries, that the beholders should be astonisht at it, and it should be terrible to them to see it, as was threatned Dem. 28. 28. and though they expected help from God, yet as unworthy for their sins, they were under foot trodden by other Nations. Thus we see much diversity of expositions, amongst which to put in my poor judgement, I do not think with a Lapide, that here are two spoken of, one sending and the other vaunting, neither with Iunius, that the Ethiopian spake these words in detaching from the Assyrians then so mighty, but holding as before, that the Ethiopian was he that sent Embassadors to Judea with all speed to certifie them of his coming for their help; I conceive that the next, Go ye swift messengers, are the Prophets ironically taunting the Ethiopians for their vain confidence, that they should prevail, and so help Judea in her straits, and declaring what the condition of the Jews should shortly be, in stead of being succoured by them, even a distracted and peeled Nation, great spoils being taken from them by their enemies, although formerly God standing for them, they had been terrible to them; From that time and beyond, that is, Dauids time, and the Judges and Joshua before that, when the Amorites trembled at their approach, yet a Nation full of expectation, for which the word is doubled Expecting, expecting help from God; but notwithstanding trodden under foot, and finally swept away with a flood, which was fulfilled in Nebuchadnezzar with his prevailing Army.

O all ye inhabitants of the world, &c. Here the Prophet to shew the greatness of the judgment before threatned, saith, That it shall be seen as by an Ensign lifted up upon a Mountain, and heard as by a Trumpet extending in the sound thereof to all the world.

Moreover the Lord said thus unto me, I will rest me in my tabernacle, &c. That is, saith Jerom, Whilst these things are in doing I will sit in Heaven, and behold it, my willing of it to be so being sufficient without my labour to cause it to be so. As the noon-day light is clear, and the dewy cloud in harvest; That is, as nothing is more clear then that light, and nothing more refreshing to the scorched harvest-man then a dewy Cloud; so my word being fulfilled shall be gratefull to all that trust in me. Iunius, I will look upon my place as the serene heat upon herb or grasse, and a thick dew in the heat of harvest; That is, I will look upon it becoming such by means of the Assyrian, that is, in an ill case, as grassie smitten with burning heat, and rain coming in harvest. The Geneva translation, As heat drying the rain, and a dewie cloud in the heat of harvest. Vatablus, As fair weather through the sun, &c. N.T. Like a clear heat upon herbs, and like a cloud or dew in the heat of harvest. Hebrew word for word, As heat or the sun lifted up above the morning, as a dewie cloud in the heat of harvest. And the meaning most probably is, that the Lords looking from his place should be most comfortable to the faithfull, as the sun sweetly shining to warm the air and inlighten the world, and refresh all vegetable things, and a dewie cloud, not rainy to do hurt, but a little to cool in extremity of the harvests heat, and to make corn the more floury. Calvin, that some understand this as spoken by the Prophet in his own person, but leaving this, as contrary to the words of the text, he saith the meaning is, the Lord will be for a time as one that sits and beholds and doth nothing, but at length it shall appear that he orders all things for the best good of his, and so that when he seems to do least for them, he is yet working out by his providence good unto them. For resting upon a seat and beholding implies a cessation from action; but having gone thus far in the former part of the verse so, as I cannot but applaud, he proceeds as indifferent betwixt that before going, and the Exposition of Junius, as if the wicked Jews were here threatened in speaking words of comfort, it being meant that they should be by favours fatted up as an Ox against the day of slaughter, prepared as the corn by the heat of the sun sometimes, and sometimes by dews falling upon it, is ripened to be cut down, so they to sudden excision: Which cannot agree to this comparison, sith the harvest ripe doth alwaies set forth the godly not the wicked, and the Vintage causing juice or blood to runne, the destruction of the wicked.

Vers. 5.

Because whilſt the harvest ſhall be preſent the bud ſhall be perfect, and out of flower fruit waxing ripe, then he ſhall cut off, &c. N.T. For afore the harvest, when the bud is perfect, and the ſowr grape ripening in the flower. Hebrew word for word, In the face of harvest, as the bud is perfecting, and ſowr fruit waxing ripe ſhall be flouriſhing. Here the Prophet, having in the words immediatly before going interpolated ſomewhat for the comfort of the faithfull more obſcurely, ſheweth more plainly the deſtruction of the Ethiopians their enemies, as he had done before, and doth chap. 19. and 20. of other heathens round about, and then their returning home again out of Captivity, as an offering ſent by Cyrus, v. 7. as ſhall more appear, when we come to it. He ſhews the ſpeedy coming of deſtruction upon the Ethiopians by a comparison from cutting off the branches of a Vine, before the grapes be ripe, yea but now beginning to appear; for as he that doth thus makes great haſte to the marring of the Vine, ſo the Lord threatens to do to the Ethiopians. And thus almoſt Jerom expounds it, but that he perſiſts in applying it to the Egyptians, which hath been before confuted: And that under the Metaphor taken from a Vine, whoſe branches he ſaith, ſhall be thus ere long cut, he meaneth people, he changeth it v. 6. ſaying, They ſhall be left alike to the fowls of the mountains, and to the beaſts of the earth. That is, being in great multitudes ſlain to be devoured by them, when they ſhall lye without buriall. And his ſhewing that the wicked enemies of his Church ſhould firſt come almoſt to perfection, and then be cut off, ſaith Calvin, tends yet more to illuſtrate the power of God, in that ſuffering them firſt to grow to this, and not taking them off when they began to bud, which had been more eaſie, he now all at once deſtroies them. But he applies it as a continuation of that ſaid, v. 4. as ſerving further to illuſtrate and confirm that. Junius differing from all others, underſtands it as a cutting off the ſuperfluous branches of a Vine, that it might flouriſh the better and fructifie more; but how then are theſe branches thus cut off left to the fowls and beaſts? He ſaith the Assyrians deſtroyed, 2 King. 19. are meant by thoſe that are ſo left, but they are plainly the cut off branches. Lyra follows Jerom.

At that time ſhall be brought to the Lord a gift, a people diſtressed and peeled, &c.

Innōw,

Innuis, and after him the N.Tr. Of a people. Where the word of is redundant, as not being in the Hebrew; for the people of Israel, who had been carried Captive into Babylon, are the gift here meant by the first Persian King Cyrus sent home through Gods singular providence, as he had by his Prophet foretold: And whereas in the words following, Of a people terrible, denoting the same, forso-much as this is a repetition of that which was said, v.2. It is so spoken, because many of them being wasted and dead, and some willingly staying behinde in Babylon still, they that returned were but some of this people. So also Calvin understands it, noting for the comfort of the faithfull, that howsoever the Church of God be distracted, he is both able and will gather them together again in his good time. And that we are Gods sacrifices, when we mortifie our vile and sinfull lusts, Rom.12.1. Col.3.5. Ierom rendring it of a people, expounds it of the Jews, when they should trust no more in Egypt, but in the Lord only, and therefore bring their presents to him, to his Temple in Zion. But because nothing touching Egypt is here handled, I passe this over. Innuis expounds it of the spoils of the Assyrians, whereof a gift was offered to God at Ezra his return out of Babylon: But the description of a distracted people and troden under foot agreeth not to them, as was before shewed upon v.2. Lyra more fully then any other, at that time; that is, the time after judgements thus executed against *Ethiopian*s and other enemies of the Jews, the Kingdom coming into the Persians hands, Cyrus shall send the Jews home, and together with them great gifts, yea and the Jews remaining in Babylon shall send their gifts also, as is recorded Ezra 1. that they did. The Prophecie in every part being thus fulfilled, in the peoples being sent home, as a gift to the Lord, and the gold and silver to his Temple in mount Zion. But he saith further, that all this Chapter seems to be a Prophecie of Israel carried Captive by Salmansar into Media, and after that by Alexander, as Iosephus hath it, inclosed by the Caspian mountains in a more remote place, from whence they could never get out; but towards the end of the world, a way being miraculously opened, they shall come forth again and return to their own land; because Zephaniah, 3.10, they are described by their being beyond the rivers of Ethiopia, as here v.7. And he saith, that they are called a land with the Cymbal of wings, according to the Vulgar Latine, because we hear only a sound of their being there, and because they cannot send out by land to their own Country, they send by subterranean places in vessels made of rushes. Then all Nations are called upon to behold the wonder of their bringing home again, when the Ensign Christ is lifted up, and the Preachers of the Gospel sound unto them as with a trumpet. Then Christ rests, after the work of our redemption wrought in heaven, being yet by his Spirit sent down as heat and dew to the faithfull. Yet their return must not be so understood, as if it were univerfal, for when they shall flourish thus most, some branches not beleeving shall be cut off and remain as food for fowls and beasts. But the other shall be by Gods providence brought home as a gift. All which, I confesse, were worth the considering, but that I know not how they being so inclosed, should send messengers by water under the earth; neither doth any History make mention of any that ever appeared, since their pretended inclosure here. Therefore we must leave it as uncertain, till God shall in time reveal the truth herein.

to a light or swift cloud that bare him. The ordinary Glosse understands this of the Lords coming against Egypt in the Assyrian Army first, that being to him as a light or swift cloud so suddenly and violently coming against the Egyptians, that their idols could not help them. Then of Christ taking flesh of the Virgin Mary, being without all heaviness of sin, and therefore called light and a cloud, because as clouds ingender above, so this flesh was ingendred by the coming of the holy Ghost from above upon the Virgin, according to Lyra; and as was said before, was carried into Egypt; at what time, as the Scholast. History hath it, the Idols of Egypt fell. And the heart of Egypt shall fail.] That is, at the coming of the Assyrians, as the Glosse; but as Lyra, at the coming of the Romans, in whom the Lord came most terribly, when Augustus the Emperour warred against Antony rejecting his sister Augusta (for the love of Cleopatra) which was his wife, and overcame him, and he, that he might not fall into his hands, slew himself. It is childish, saith Calvin, by the Lord coming into Egypt in a light cloud, to understand Christ, and by the Idols being moved, their miraculous falling, when he being an Infant was brought into Egypt; because he began not to work any miracles, till he came into Cana of Galilee, as is expressly said, Job. 2. This beginning of miracles did Jesus in Cana. But this reason is insufficient, for then indeed did he begin to work miracles, hereby shewing himself to be the Messiah; but it cannot hence be proved, that God the Father did by no miraculous sign manifest him before. For the Angels coming to Zechary, and to the Virgin Mary, was a miracle; and John the Baptists springing in his mothers belly, at Maries saluting Elizabeth, and the heavens bearing of a new Star to shew the place where he was born, and the heavens opening at his Baptisme, were all miracles: Yet I do not think that to be the proper meaning of this place, but the Allegoricall, and so Cyrill, Procopius, Theodor. August. Enseb. Bernard, &c. take it. The literal meaning being, that God by the Assyrians should execute his judgments against Egypt for their grosse Idolatries, and that their doing of it, was his coming against them; and because they should come irresistibly against them, all their fortifications profiting them nothing to withstand them, he useth this Metaphor of coming in a cloud on high, against which no forts would profit them, according to Calvin: or he saith thus, because clouds were seldom seen in Egypt, and were counted ominous when they were, according to Junius; who also denotes the time when this was fulfilled, viz. when Sethon, a priest of Vulcan, who reigned in Egypt, was dead, ex Herodoti Enterpe. So that they are wide, who expound it of the Romans. The Egyptians Idols, which were some of silver and gold, and some of wood and stone, were diversly moved by the Assyrians, and afterwards by the Babylonians, when those of wood were burnt, of stone broken, and those of more pretious mettall carried away. And he speaks of their Idols, because they of all Nations were most given to Idolatry, as when they imbraced the Gospel, they were most devoted to duties of Piety, as both Jerom commends them, and August. ex Tresmegisto, more rightly applying that saying of his, Egypt is the Image of heaven, yea the Temple of the whole world. And Chrysost. Heaven doth not so shine with divers companies of starres, as Egypt is illustrated with innumerable habitacles of Monks and Virgins; and that Egypt was by Christ turned into Paradise.

And I will make the Egyptians to fight against the Egyptians, &c. This, saith Jerom, was fulfilled when some of them at the coming of the Assyrians would have yeelded, but others would not, and so fell to civil warres amongst themselves. Kingdom against Kingdom.] The Septuagint ἡ ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, that is, one prefectureship against another, whereof Ortelius numbred sixty six. And this saith Jerom, was mystically fulfilled at Christs coming, because he came not to send peace, but a sword, and to set variance betwixt those of the same house. This of the civil warres of the Egyptians, saith Junius, was fulfilled, when Sethon being dead, twelve Tyrants divided the Kingdom amongst them, expelling Psammetichus from amongst them, who again obtained all and expelled them, them, and then reigned most tyrannically, so Herodorus and Diodorus Siculus. And this is threatned as a great judgement, because nothing more weakens a Kingdom then civil warres: And in saying, I will make the Egyptians fight against the Egyptians, he intimates, that this alwaies in all Kingdoms comes of the Lord for sin. And the more fully to set forth these dissensions, he proceeds by four degrees; 1. Brother against brother. 2. Friend against friend. 3. City against City. 4. Kingdom against Kingdom. What is meant by Kingdom here, and how many such were in Egypt, see before: of Cities or Towns are numbred by some twenty thousand.

And the spirit of Egypt shall fail in the midst of it, &c. That is, saith Jerom, of those that refuse to submit to the Assyrians or Caldeans, for though they ask counsel of their idols or wizzards, it shall be vain. For they shall come into the hands of cruel masters, as v.4. that is, of the Assyrians, who are every where set forth as most cruel. Calvin and Musculus observe that the Egyptians were in those daies counted the learnedest and wisest people in the world, and that they came from Countries most remote thither to hear their wisdom, and to learn the Arts, wherein they were most expert: It might therefore seem ridiculous, that they should want wisdom to order the affairs of their own Kingdom, being so potent; so as that it should evidently appear, that they had done foolishly to help one another into a servile estate. And in speaking of those with whom they should consult, he mentioneth, 1. Idols. 2. Magicians. 3. Wizzards and Diviners; denoting, as Calvin hath it, certain degrees: By the Idols being meant their Oracles, which were most highly esteemed, by the Magi such as were of an inferiour rank, and by the other, such as were consulted with in lighter matters. Being uncertain and unsatisfied by one means, he sheweth that they should seek to another, but all in vain. And in saying thus he condemneth all other waies and means of seeking help and counsel in streights, besides of the Lord in his holy Word.

Then the waters shall fail from the sea, and the river shall be dried up. Jerom understands this 1. Literally, of the failing of all benefits for the use of mans life, which come from the waters, as Fishes and things imported thereby. 2. Metaphorically, of the King and Princes of Egypt, in whom should be no help; and the reeds and canes following, v.6. of all the abundance of Egypt. For in Ezekiel, Pharaoh is compared to a Dragon in the river, which he calleth his; and his Nobles to Fishes adhering to his fins, all being threatned to be pluckt out. 3. Tropologically, as before, chap. 11.15. The Lord shall destroy the holom of the Egyptian sea, &c. That is, under the Gospel the evil arts of Egypt shall all cease. 4. Historically, by the sea dried, the lake of Meroe, because the Hebrews call every collection of waters, a sea; and the waters of this lake failing, Nilus which was fed hereby, must needs fail also. Calvin understands the defences of Egypt failing, because that Country was unaccessible but by water, and at every landing place such strong Bulworks were built, that they could easily repell the enemy. But now their well defended places should nothing avail to save them. Sabon follows the Metaphoricall Exposition, understanding the decay of the strength of Egypt, both in King and Nobles and common people, set forth by reeds and bulrushes, for out of these the Egyptians had many things usefull both for ship and the sustentation of their lives. I conceive, because the not overflowing of Nilus so much as was desired, to make the Country of Egypt fruitfull, caused barrenness there; that in all this the Prophet sets forth a great famine, wherewith they should be punished, the earth not yeelding her increase as formerly, by means of the failing of these waters; so that men of all trades, both in land and waters should be confounded for the failing that should be of all necessities, whereby they were wont to set themselves awork to get a living. And so here is another judgement threatened of famine and drought, besides that of the sword of the enemy bringing them under, spoken of in the former verses: and this is continued, v.7, 8, 9, 10. also.

Certainly the Princes of Zoan are fools, the counsel of the Wise Counsellours of Pharaoh is insatuated, &c. Here because Pharaohs counsel was thought to be most wise to order all things in that Kingdom so, as to prevent the ruine thereof; the Prophet, who foresaw that it should come to ruine, against the high opinion conceived of them, insults over them as fools; because when the time should come for them to do good in saving their Country by their wisdom, it should be like Ahisophels turned into foolishness; neither they nor their King, whom they flattered, calling him the son of the wise and of ancient Kings, being able to do any good for the preservation of Egypt, when the judgements before threatned should come. Which shews that there is no counsel or wisdom against the Lord. And the vanity of Kings and other great persons, who glory in the antiquity of their houses, and the wisdom of their progenitors, being destitute thereof themselves; such it is commonly seen, that inheritours of their fathers estates, do not inherit their virtues, but a wise father hath a foolish son, as Solomon, Rehoboam. The Vulgar Latine, for Principes Zoar, reade Principes Thaneos, following the Septuagint. It was the chief City of Egypt, wherein Moses did all his wonders, Psalm 78.12. Exod. 7.8,9. And this City is spoken of, because there Pharaoh was with his Privy Counsel, selected out of the wisest of all his Princes. Lyra saith, the Kings name that now reigned when this was done, was Antonius, but called Pharaoh, according to the common appellation of the Kings of Egypt; and yet he refers this Prophecie to the time of Augustus Caesar going against Anthony and Cleopatra there, when the name of the King was no more Pharaoh, but Ptolemee; and this Prophecie pointed at the destruction of Egypt by Nebuchadnezzar. Yet Ierom referres it to the Romans times, when Idolatry began to fall at Christs coming into Egypt; for then the wisdom of the Egyptians, who were counted the wisest, appeared to be foolishness in matters of greatest concernment, viz. of Religion, which now appeared in them to be vain, wicked and devilish, for their excessive superstition. And thus he also spake before, upon v.5. but by a tropol. Exposition. How say ye to Pharaoh, I am the son of ancient Kings? That is, speak so in way of flattery to him, that he speaks thus of himself? For the Egyptians derived the pedigree of their Kings from gods, Oros, Isis, Osirides and Typhon, and boasted of their antiquity so, as if they were before all other peoples, yea before the Moon; for they reckoned their time to be many thousands of years before the Creation, and hereby doth Lucian deride the Arcadians, calling them μεγανθυιστοι, Lucian de Astrologia.

Where be thy Wise men to tell thee, &c. Here he goeth on with his irony, deriding the Wizzards of Egypt, as not being able to foretell the destruction of their Land, coming from the true God, that they might forsake their false gods, in whom there was no help in time of need. And Musculus saith, that hereby he condemneth the art Magick, that none may seek to such as have skill therein, or to Astrologians, who haply by the starres may foretell some things of the weather, and of plenty or scarcity, &c. yet not certainly, but only conjecturally, yet so audacious are they, that they also take upon them to foretell of the lives and actions of men, as if all things were known unto them, but most vainly, being here condemned together with Wizzards, so Musculus.

They have deceived Egypt, the corner of his people. Lyra referring this to the time of the Romans, as also that of the Counsellours before spoken of, giving counsel to fight against the Romans taking part with Augustus against Anthony, from whence came their ruine, saith, that by the corner, wherein two walls meet, being the chief strength of an house, Anthony and Cleopatra were meant, who being deceived by the Wizzards, all Egypt was deceived. But how wide he is in this his reference, I have shewed before. Others therefore better understand the City Noph here spoken of, since called Alexandria, a principall City in Egypt, and Zoan making a corner of a wall, as it were, because in them the chief strength of Egypt stood; but being deceived by the Counsellours and and Wizzards, therein making them secure by predictions of good, all the land was deceived, and lay open to this judgement, as Musculus. But Calvin will have the Counsellours and Wizzards hereby meant, as upon whom the people relied, as a building upon the corner; and therefore he reads it as a Nominative, as if it had been said, the corner of his tribes or peoples hath deceived Egypt: Others as an Accusative, as if by the corner they were set forth, that had been deceived, in whom Egyptis strength chiefly lay. I preferre that of Calvin, as best agreeing to the deceivers hitherto cried out upon, viz. not Cities, but Counsellours and Wizzards, which abounded especially in these two; the later otherwise called by Jerom Memphis, a City most infamous for superstitions and idolatries. Some, because the chief firmament of a Kingdom is in the King, will have Pharaoh hereby understood, whom his flattering Counsellours thus extolling, put him on against the Assyrians to defend his neighbor Nations, but to his own ruine.

Calvin.

The Lord hath mingled in the midst thereof the spirit of perversnesse, &c. That is, saith Jerom, that they do all things erroneously, nothing rightly, for so also he saith it may be rendred the spirit of error. Even as they that having something mingled in their wine to make them giddy-headed, so should it be by a just judgement from God upon the Egyptians, that their wisest men should be idle in their brains, and farre from being able to give good counsel.

Verf. 14.

Neither shall there be any work for Egypt, which head or tail branch or rush may do. Hierom hath it, Caput & caudam, incurvantem & refranantem: And he expounds it, In Egypt there should be no work, that should have either head or tail, but agreeing to the dorage of crooked age, or the wantonness of unruly youth, which needs for his wildeness to be bridled. But Calvin, that both the Honourable set forth by the head and branch, and the Plebeians by the tail and rush, should all be at their wits end, and none able to do any thing to profit Egypt, and this is further confirmed by the same words used in this sense, Chap. 9. 13, 14.

In that day Egypt shall be like unto women, &c. Some think that their effeminateness is here touched upon, for which they were noted, the women going abroad to do business, and the men keeping at home to do domestickall works. But because this was usual, and it must be a new thing here threatned, Calvin doth well reject this, averring that the Egyptians yet were not so effeminate to have hearts like women commonly, for they did many military exploits, and sometime subdued, and sometime help the Jews, but now this courage should fail in them, and be turned into the greatest timorousness; as God is wont to strike them whom he means to destroy, whereof the Canaanites may be an example. For the shaking of the hand of the Lord. Whereby it is given to understand, that when the Assyrians came against them, they were brought by God, and therefore this timorousness surprized them, and having an Almighty power against them, which they could by no means resist.

And the land of Judah shall be for a terrour to the Egyptians, &c. That is, saith Jerom, when they shall recount their former helping of the Jews against the Assyrians, at whose hands they shall therefore now suffer such grievous things. And Calvin more fully, because they by helping Judah had drawn the Jews away from trusting in God, and to rely upon them; against which they had often warnings, and when they did so, were much complained of by the Prophets. So that not only the people of God, who are drawn away from trusting and serving him only, but they who are the instruments shall be sure one day to have it turned into a terrour unto them; thus Calvin. But I marvel how Expositours generally were moved thus to render and expound it, because the word is terrore signifying not terrour, but a festival, or exultation, and therefore Jerom hath it, For a terrour or festivity, and saith that Haggai hath it so, and so it must be read, if we will take it in the better part, although he for his part subscribes rather to the other reading. I rather think that the Prophet begins here, passing from threatnings against Egypt to Prophecie of comfort fort which should be unto them, and that in the best kinde; for that being delivered from superstition and idolatry, they should come to the knowledge of the true God, and the feasts of his people should be their feasts: for so it is expressly prophesied of, Zech. 14. 16, 18. and he saith, Every one that should make mention thereof to it shall fear, that is, be moved with reverence towards the God of Israel, who hath wrought this marvellous work; therefore it is added, For the counsel that he hath counselled over it; not against it; for it is 179. And for this makes v. 18. And in that day there shall be five Cities in Egypt speaking the language of Canaan, for this is evidently of their conversion to the true faith. Those Expositions then, which will have Judah's terrour to Egypt; because they should be astonish'd at the judgements coming upon them, mentioned by Calvin with dislike; or Egypt astonish'd on the contrary side at the preservation of Judah by the miraculous confounding of Sennacherib, when he came against it, which Adam Salsbont hath, are not worth the naming.

Vers. 18.

And in that day five Cities in Egypt shall speak the language of Canaan, and one shall be called the City of the sun. So Jerom, expounding it of Heliopolis, or at the least saying that Onias thinking it to be meant, built a Temple there unto the Lord; and he saith that Symmachus well rendred it Civitas solis. Our Translators render it commonly, The City of destruction, for so דור Heres the word here used signifieth: But others reading דור for דור, render it the sun, for so דור signifieth: Thus also the Septuagint, Caldee, Varabian, &c. Because there were five chief Cities in Egypt, mentioned Ezek. 30. 17. wherof Aven or Heliopolis was one, it seemeth that the Prophet alludeth hereunto, by five meaning all Egypt; and by one particularly named, shewing that this above the rest should be remarkable for piety, viz. Heliopolis, as it had been most notorious for idolatry, inasmuch as that it was a City of Idolatrous Priests, to Herodotus; but being converted, it might for Christian piety therein flourishing be called the City of the Son of righteousness arising with healing in his wings, according to Malac. 4. 2. Calvin is the first that I have seen, who renders it, The City of destruction; and his Exposition hereupon is, that by the five Cities, speaking with the lip of Canaan, for so the Hebrew word signifieth, are set forth five parts which shall be converted; but one over and above these, that is, the sixth part not being converted shall go into destruction; thus all who harden their hearts and will not turn at the preaching of the Gospel being threatened with destruction. But because this Prophecie is altogether of good and comfort, for many verses together, to the end of the Chapter, I cannot subscribe to him or his Exposition, but must needs rather prefer the former, against which nothing makes, but a letter varying, ye, this variance is so little that it can hardly be discerned, the one followed by the Ancients, being thus written דור; the other by our new Writers, thus דור; and in this case I think we ought to be swayed rather by the sense agreeing best to the place, then by a letter not acknowledged neither by the Learned of more ancient times. Lyra saith, that some understand Alexandria by the City of the sun, where S<sup>t</sup> Mark preached the Gospel, and Simon the Apostle; after which the converted built Altars there to the honour of Christ; but he is rather for Heliopolis, as was said before. And he saith that Onias an high Priest of the Jews said that he would go to Egypt and fulfill this Prophecie, and being entertained honourably by the King, and a City given him for this purpose, he built an Altar and offered sacrifices to God there; and thus the Hebrews and some of ours conceive it to be meant, and that it was fulfilled. But R. Solomon saith, that Sennacherib coming from Babell against the Ethiopian, brought some Egyptian Nobles, whom he had taken, bound before Jerusalem, thinking to shew them to the Jews for their greater terrour to make them yield; but being prevented by the slaughter made amongst his men, he fled and left them, and they being by Hezekiah released, returned to Egypt and there built Altars and offered thereon to the true God. And that they might the more acceptably do so, they procured Priests to go with them, who offered and celebrated the praises of God in the language of Canaan, that is, their own tongue. But for the former of these,

if Onias fondly grounding upon this Prophecie did so, that was no fulfilling of it, because that which he did, was not pleasing to God, as being done against his injunction, that Sacrifices should not be offered to him any where, but in the place by him chosen. For the next, it doth so strongly favour of the Rabbinical forge, that we may well reject it, as a thing feigned. The fulfilling of this Prophecie then was, when the Egyptians received the Gospel, for then they spake and studied the Hebrew tongue, as wherein the true Religion was set forth; and it is probable, as Lyra hath it, that many of them by the extraordinary gift of tongues then given to the converted after baptizing by the imposition of hands, spake this tongue singularly, as most necessary for Christian people. And further to shew, That the conversion of the Egyptians is here prophesied of, he addeth, They should swear by the Lord of hosts; that is, serve and worship him, one part of his worship, swearing by his name, being put for all.

In that day shall there be an altar to the Lord in the midst of the Land of Egypt, &c. In this and the three verses following, the Prophet goes on further to declare the conversion of the Egyptians. The Altar, saith Jerom, is one Church, one Faith; one Baptism acknowledged in Egypt. And a pillar in the border thereof to the Lord; That is, The Gospels and writings of the Apostles. Vers. 20. And it shall be for a sign, &c. That is, of Christs passion, and when upon the receiving of the Gospel persecution shall arise, they shall cry to the Lord for help, and he shall send them a Saviour, that is Jesus. Vers. 21. And the Lord shall be known to Egypt; That is, both to the persecuted to their comfort, and to the persecutors to their terrour, And they shall do sacrifice, &c. Here the Prophet plainly foretels an end put to the Levitical Priesthood under the Gospel, according to that of the Apostle, The Priesthood being removed, the Law must needs be done away also; That is, the Law of sacrificing by Priests of the Tribe of Levi, and in no place but at Jerusalem: For here it is fore-told that Sacrifice should be done in Egypt; and that by men of that Land. Let the Jews answer this if they can.

The Pillar rendred in Vulgar Latine Titulus, may, saith Lyra, be referred to Christ, for his Title was written, Jesus Nazareus Rex Judeorum. It may also be taken for the faith of Christ preached in all the borders of Egypt; but whereas he saith, Crosses are therefore set up upon Altars amongst Christians, as if this in part might be the title here meant, we reject as superstitious, for the holiness put therein, and the worship done to it, as sometime by the Jews to the brazen serpent, which was therefore broken down. For although crosses might have continued, if they had not been thus abused, yet now they are to be broken down, as monuments of the Antichristian sect, degenerating from true Christian Piety, and not of the Christian. Wherefore I doubt not, but as to the praise of Hozekiah it was recorded, That he brake down the brazen Serpent in this case, and called it Nehushtan; so it shall be in future ages to the praise of our present religious Parliament. Moreover Lyra by their crying to the Lord because of the oppressour, understands their crying against the devil; and by their Sacrifice the Eucharist, and thanksgivings made in the Church to the praise of God, saying, that it is called Sacrifices, because that alone is now in stead of the many Sacrifices formerly offered. Wherein he saith well in part, viz. in saying, that by Sacrifices are meant those of thanksgiving; but in making the Eucharist, that is, the Lords Supper a Sacrifice, he goeth without ground of Scripture, because it is no where called a Sacrifice, but a remembrance of the Sacrifice of Christs death, neither is the place where it standeth called an Altar, but the Table of the Lord: and against reason, which tels us, that there is no Sacrifice but which is offered to God, whereas this is offered to men and women receiving. And lastly, whereas he hath it [Sacrifices] it is Sacrifice in the original in the singular number, intimating Christ the only Sacrifice making all our praises and prayers acceptable to Almighty God.

of which the Apostle saith, We have an altar, Heb. 13. 10. and by the Pillar or Title, that whereby it is known to what Kingdom such or such parts belong; so that whereby it is known that the Egyptians now belonged unto Christ, viz. the publick profession of the Gospel, is hereby meant.

And this shall be for a sign and witness to the Lord, &c. For they shall cry unto him, &c. That is, hereby it shall appear, That the Lord approves them for true converts, that they call no more in the time of their oppressions upon any other but the Lord only, and upon him they call so earnestly, that they are said to cry unto him, as the Spirit makes the faithful to do, Rom. 8. 15. Gal. 4. Touching which oppressions, Calvin saith, That Egypt was subject to divers, for four hundred years, till the Gospel was there embraced, and then they were delivered, according to that which is here prophesied, He will send them a Saviour, &c. That is, the same Jesus, to whom they shall turn shall save and deliver them out of all their troubles at length. One saith, It shall be a sign to the Egyptians that the Lord is propitious to them, when crying unto him they shall be delivered: but then the former words must be read, It shall be a witness of the Lord to them. Which the word אֵימָנָם will not well bear. The Note of Calvin hereupon is very good: Then only doth it appear, and is testified to God, so that he approves it that we are turned unto him, when in our distresses we cry unto him, and are delivered; if nor, we turn not yet so that he approves of it. And also, that deliverance from oppressours is not given, but to the converted, that Christians, who are now so full of trouble may be moved to turn, and not persist in their sins still.

And the Egyptians shall know the Lord, and the Lord shall be known unto them and they shall not sacrifice, &c. It is here to be noted, saith Calvin, that they must be endued with the knowledge of God, who will worship God acceptably, because he saith, first, They shall know God, and then they shall offer, &c. And we may adde, who so doth not, wants this knowledge, although otherwise he may seem to have it. And to know God, and to be known of God, he saith, are all one, but twice spoken, because it should be a thing so remarkable, that the superstitious Egyptians should turn from all their false Gods, and therefore seriously to be considered. But I think there is more implied in it, viz. which the Apostle speaks of Rom. 10. 20. I was found of them that sought me not, and made manifest to them that asked not after me. God prevented the Egyptians by making the light of his knowledge to shine amongst them, and then they came to know the Lord: Of their doing Sacrifice he saith, That hereby is meant nothing else, but their embracing of the faith, and confessing it together with other acts of the divine Worship; and hereby he sets forth the service of the New Testament, because in the time when he spake thus, God was served by Sacrifices of beasts, and Oblations of flower and oil, and wine, &c. And he meaneth not, that should be any carnal sacrificing now, but as our spiritual worshipping of God is hereby allegorically set forth. Whereas it is added, They shall vow to the Lord and perform it; he saith, it is not to be understood at large, that men should vow what they pleased, and perform it, but what should be agreeable to the Word of God. For any thing unlawfull, as David vowed to destroy all that Nabal had (but being better advised he did it not, and blessed God therefore) is not to be vowed and performed, neither any thing out of a mans power, but with a condition, wherefore monastical vows are not here meant, sith the gift of continency is not given but to some, neither can any vow to use it saving such as to whom it is given. And to vow to go in Pilgrimage to such a place also, or to give this or that to a superstitious use, is likewise unlawfull. It seems rather by his saying They shall vow a vow; he means only that vow which all Christians are bound to make and keep, viz. to serve God onely, and to cleave to his Laws, as his people did anciently often vow in the times of godly Kings.

Therefore the Lord shall smite Egypt, swining and healing, &c. Here is the conclusion clusion of all that was said vers. 20, 21. because they shall cry in their distress and be saved, and then come to know the Lord and do Sacrifice, &c. it shall plainly appear, that Gods smiting of them was profitable for them, as tending to their conversion, and healing them by a greater healing, then that of the outward state, viz. of the inward man, being before deadly sick of sin, but by the effectual coming of the light amongst them now perfectly cured. Wherefore it is good to be afflicted, sith it is not to ruine, but after a while ceasing again, and a farre greater good redounding to their souls that are thus exercised.

In that day there shall be an high way out of Egypt to Assyria, &c. Some, saith Jerom, understand this of Antichrist, that he shall come out of Egypt into Assyria, and reign all over Ethiopia, but absurdly, for it is meant, that whereas now there was one King of Egypt, and another of Assyria, both Nations should be under one, even the Roman, and be in hostility one against another no longer, but there should be trafficking amongst them, as being all subjects now of one Empire, and freely come and go from one country to another, as if they were all one Nation. And the Egyptians shall serve Assur, or it may be rendered more according to sense, Shall serve with Assur; forsomuch as now Assur is not dominatour any more over Egypt, but the Roman over them both. Calvin understands this as fulfilled in the receiving of the Gospel, which shall spread not to one Country of Egypt, but all over the world, set forth by Assyria, because that Monarchy reached far and wide, from Euphrates to Tyrrus. Before they came to know God, there were alwayes infest wars betwixt these Kingdoms, and Israel imploring the help sometime of the one, and sometime of the other was an occasion of setting them together by the ears; therefore he addeth vers. 24. Israel shall be a third, of those amongst whom this mutual concord shall be. And indeed they that receive the Christian Religion cordially, cannot but live in love and unity together, of how divers Countreys soever they be, because they have all one Spirit. And he saith, A way shall be, because formerly when they were in hostility, men durst not travel that way, but now they might safely. But Calvin and Vatablus have the last clause, The Egyptians shall serve Assur; Giving this sense, as friends in love do service one to another. Now although W denotes oft times the accusative case, and hath none other signification, yet because it also signifieth [with] it is most commonly so taken, and so agreeth best here. But for the way from Egypt to Assyria, &c. Lyra refers this also to the Gospel causing concord amongst divers Nations, and to it I do subscribe.

In that day Israel shall be a third, &c. That is, Be no more under Amichus, or Demetrius, Syrian Kings, as in times past, or Ptolomies of Egypt, being thus distracted and torn, but now in quiet also together with other Kingdoms embracing the truth, so that each Nation in this respect shall be counted blessed, and Israel especially, as the Lords inheritance, and from whence this blessedness came to others, for the Lam went out of Zion. But Calvin notes that the word [third] is a feminine, and therefore must have reference to blessing following in the same gender; and so vers. 25. doth declare, where each Nation is said to be blessed, Egypt, Assyria, Israel; and not only Egypt and Assyria, but all other Nations embracing the faith, these being singularly named, as alwayes before most infense to the Israelites, and therefore if the Lord would be so reconciled to them, much more we may gather to any other. And they are said to be in the midst of the earth, because their situation is by Geographers counted to be in the midst. And he giveth each one a several title, Egypt my people; Assyria the work of my hands, so called, because the regenerate are by him made such, and so fitted to be vessels of honour, for which cause it is said Ephes. 2. 10. We are Gods Workmanship. So are the Heavens and Earth also called, but the new creature more singularly, as having yet more excellency for the Spirit of God in them. And that which is here said, is no common thing, but rare and admirable, that other Nations should come now to be

IN the year that Tartan came to Ashdod, when Sargon the King of Assyria sent him, &c. The Prophet having threatned Ethiopia and Egypt, Chap. 18. and 19. and concluded with comfort to Egypt, now resumes his former argument against them both, shewing by a sign what miseries should befall them. And first he describes the time. Tartan was a Captain of Sennacherib, of whom see 2 Kin. 18. whereby Expositours gather, that Sargon here spoken of, as sending him, was that Sennacherib, for he had, as Jerom saith, several names, yet some think him to have been Salmannasar. Ashdod was one of the five great Cities of Palestine, and as Josephus saith, was taken by the Assyrian in the twelfth year of the reign of Hezekiah, and that he infested the Egyptians and Ethiopians at the same time. The occasion of his sending against Ashdod, saith Jerom, was because he had taken the Cities of Judah, and of them Ashdod was one, both of right pertaining to Judah, Isa. 15. 47. and now under Hezekiah, as being by him taken 2 Kin. 18. 8. And now the Lord by his Prophet sheweth the Egyptians miseries to come, that Hezekiah and the Jews might not trust to Egypt against the invasion of the Assyrians, but to the Lord onely.

Vers. 2.

Rom. 6. 21.
Sackcloth
wearing.

As that time the Lord spake to Isaiah, saying, lose the sackcloth off thy loins, &c. It is said, But he spake by the hand of Isaiah by an Hebrew phrase, because the Lord used him, as a master his steward, by his ministry doing this or that. Whereas some gather from hence, that Isaiah went commonly in sackcloth upon his bare body, it is to be thought rather, that he did so only in times of calamity by his outward habit to expresse his inward sorrow. Yet Zechar. 13. 4. a garment of hair is spoken of, as common to Prophets. And whereas the Lord biddeth him go naked, some think, that this was not all the three years spoken of vers. 3. for how should he then have endured the cold of winter? but the same God that commanded this, could preserve him, as well naked as clothed. Yet haply he did it but at times when he shewed himself abroad to the people for a sign of that which was to come to the Egyptians and Ethiopians, Vers. 4. If it shall be thought undecent for him thus to do, it is to be considered, that it was Gods command, and hereby the most shamefull things are made decent, there being nothing truly shamefull, but disobedience to his commands, otherwise to uncover the privities to be circumcised had been a shamefull thing, but by reason of Gods Ordinance, honourable. If it be demanded, Whether it be a point of piety now to go in sackcloth, and sometime bare-footed for greater humiliation, as many votaries and penitentiaries amongst the Papists do? I answer, it was a rite peculiar to the rigid times of the Law, when Gods people were required to do outward and bodily acts of extraordinary humiliation as well as inward, by going in sackcloth and ashes: but in the time of the Gospel, all the humiliations required being spiritual by inward sighing, and groaning, and sorrowing for sin and miseries, either of ourselves, or neighbours, or country, fasting and praying only being overlaid, and kneeling at prayer, and being uncovered both in prayer and prophesying, whatsoever is done more is but superstition, raised by the name of voluntary humility, and plainly declared to be such as profiteth not, and so is going to Jerusalem, or to any other supposed holy place for devotions sake, and the austerity of men whipping themselves, or shutting up themselves in cels, as Anchorites all their daies.

By Isaiah his going naked the Lord gives a sign, to shew, how the Assyrians should make the Egyptians and Echiopians both young and old to go shamefully naked into Captivity, as they had shamefully sinned. They should exercise such cruelty against them, as is not often heard of in these daies, but then much used by tyrannical conquerours, viz. To strip their Captives of all their apparell from top to toe, and so to lead them away, not leaving them so much as a rag to cover their shamefull parts. Some by their young men and old, understand children, and all the weaker sort, not able to bear arms, and by the rest past over in silence, that they were all slain. But I think, that all ages are meant by these two, as is usual, and so that men of might as well as the weak multitude were thus carried away to be slaves, so many as escaped the sword. Young men and old are named, because the one counselled, and the other fought for their Countrey; according to Pindar, Consilia senum, hasta juvenum sunt. Of Gods threatening to make bare their shamefull parts, see also Ier. 47. Nab. 3.

And they shall fear by reason of Ethiopia their hope, &c.

And the inhabiters of this Island shall say in that day, &c. Here the Prophet concludes with the Jews, as all agree. When they should see Gods judgments thus executed upon Egypt and Ethiopia, which were formerly an help unto them against Ashur, they should thus fear and say, a reason being herein implied, why the Egyptians and Ethiopians were thus punished, viz. Because by their aiding of the Jews they gave them occasion, withdrawing their confidence from God to place it in them. But why is Judea set forth by the name of an Island. 1. Some think because it was hemmed in with two seas, the dead sea and the mediterranean. 2. Some because it was little like an Island in comparison of Babylon, set forth by the name of a sea, Chap. 21.1. 3. Because it was beaten upon by the waves of the Assyrian and Egyptian wars, for so the Assyrian is said to overflow the Land of Judea up to the neck of Jerusalem, Chap. 3.8. which lifted up the head, and appeared still, when all other parts being drowned by this overflowing, seemed like a sea. 4. Calvin, because Judea was the Lords peculiar inheritance separated from the rest of the world, as an Island from the main Land containing all other Countreies and Nations. Of the three last I know not whether to preferre, and therefore conclude upon them all, in so much as there may be divers reasons of the same phrase.

CHAP. XXI

¶ He burthen of the desert sea: as the whirlwinds come from the South, so comes from the desert, &c. Hebr. In the South, in passing from the desert, comes. Of what Nation this burthen is vers. 4.9. do plainly shew, viz. of Babylon, which should be subdued by the Medes and Persians. See more Ier. 51. 36, 37, &c. where Babylon is also set forth by the name of a sea. For the great multitudes of people therein, according to Jerom, and as others, because Euphrates like a sea compassed it, and as the sea it was never quiet, but waves arose after waves and tempests of warre there. Lastly, for the inexpleable desire to devour the wealth of other Nations. And it is called a desert, because God would make it like a desert, and utterly void of inhabitants, as Chap. 13.24. was also threatened. He compares this destruction to that which comes from the desert in the South, because the desert of Africa, betwixt Babylon and Adria, was full of sands and strong winds blowing, the places to which were filled with mountains of sands, whole Armies being sometime covered and destroyed here-hereby. Wherefore to make this more plain, it is said, That Babylon shall become heaps, Ier. 51. 37. The destruction of Babylon then coming from the desert is from the Persians and Medes marching thorow a great desert to come unto it, and because deserts are horrible, it is further set forth by this name of an horrible Land. Calvin saith, that Babylon is set forth by the name of a desert, because there was a great desert betwixt it and Judea, for it was fruitfull and populous, and that the Prophets threaten Babylon so often, more then any other people, because they were the Jews greatest and most perpicuous enemies. And he expoundeth the desert horrible Land from which their destruction should come, of Judea, according to the name, which he saith, was given it before Chap. 18. as if it were meant, that Babylon thus came to utter ruine in way of revenge from the God of Israel for their cruelties formerly exercised against his people, and their Land bringing it to that state, that it was as a desert full of horroir to all spectatours. Lyra will have Babylon cal'd a desert-sea, because when it was taken, Euphrates that ran thorow it before as a sea, being by the Medes and Persians drained another way, was dried, and so like a desert without water; and for calling it a sea, it was common amongst the Hebrews thus to call any great gathering together of waters, as at the first the Lord called the gathering together of waters, Sea, which in Hebrew is no more but  $\text{יָם}$  waters. And for the winde coming from the South, rendred by the Vulgar Latine Affrican, whereas other Expositours say, That the place is hereby denoted, from whence they should come, by whom Babylon should suffer such things, and Africa was between the South and the West, he saith, That the situation of the Medes Countrey was opposite to it, and therefore the place is not spoken of, but because strong tempests used to come from those parts, he compares the tempest coming by the Medes to these winds, only to shew their impetuoussness, against which nothing could stand; but for the desert he saith the same which was said before, viz. because a great desert lay betwixt Media and Babylon, and Media is called an horrible Land, because it was so to the Babylonians, as from whence that their horrible destruction came. Whereas Chap. 13. 14. contain Prophecies against Babylon, so that it may seem strange, that he should here again prophesie against it, he saith, that the Prophets had not all things revealed to them at once, but at sundry times, as it pleased God; and therefore God giving another Vision here to Isaiah, he sets it down also otherwaies, as a thing which for the stupendiousness of it could never be enough spoken of. Adam Sashons thinks, That Babylon was set forth by the name of a Sea, chiefly because it was so to Judea, being but as an Island to it-ward for the greatness and the troublesomeness thereof, because it was alwaies raging as the Sea against it and other Nations, and a desert-sea, because now destitute of Gods help, through which it formerly prevailed, but now should be prevailed against and overthrown. For the winde, though Jerom renders it by Africa, yet Hebr. is set forth by a word signifying the South, and the meaning is nothing else, but as tempests by the South-wind are raised, which are most fierce; so the Medes and Persians shall come against Babylon. Object. Writers commonly agree, that rain comes from the South being called Auster ab hauriendis aquis; and by the Greeks Nortus, for the same reason, but from the North come tempests. Sol. Pliny saith, that the greatest tempests at sea come from the South, and therefore Babylon being here set forth by the name of a sea, the Prophet compares the tempest coming against it, to a whirlwinde in the South. Junius understands the horrible Land of Media, but the wilderness from whence the tempest comes, of that part of Babylon in which Nirarn made so great a lake. But this not standing with sense may be rejected, and Media concluded to be the Land meant by both. For although the violence done to Gods people were the cause of Babylons ruine, yet the Prophet here plainly speaks of the instruments, by whom, not the cause, as vers. 2. doth declare, in saying, Ascend, O Elam, besiege: (O Medes) of the former part of the verse enough hath been said already, amongst all which I prefer prefer Sabbon's reason, why it is called a sea; but why desert, Lyra's.

The treacherous deals treacherously, and the waster wasteth. Thus Junius, whom our N. Fr. follows: But Nabulus; Transgressor transgressori, Vastator vastatori, reckoning up many Expositions more. Jerom, qui infidelis est infideliter agit, & populum vastat. But Hebr. it is וְנָבִיל וְנָבִיל, &c. the same words only doubled. The treacherous, or transgressor, the transgressor, the spoiler, the spoiler: Before which if we put the words beforegoing, A burthensome vision was shewed unto me, the sense will be plainly this; The Babylonian full of treachery and spoiling without end, having their sin now remembered, that they may be punished accordingly with unspeakable misery; this was the heavy vision that was shewed me, and if ye ask how, the next words do declare, Ascend O Elam, &c. And thus I finde one acknowledging that the words may be rendred, but to make up the sense he addeth est or for, giving this for the sense; the treacherous Median will be treacherous to the Babylonian, or this, let him be treacherous. Lyra applyeth the first words here to Belsazzar, who dealt like a wicked infidel by bringing forth the holy vessels of the Lords house to carouse in, and the next to Cyrus coming presently upon him and spoiling his Babylon. Calvin. A transgressor or treacherous shall finde a treacherous one, a spoiler, a spoiler: Giving this for the sense, The Babylonian that against all right hath spoiled other Nations, shall have another come against him to spoil him, applying to this chap. 33.1. where the same is more plainly shewed, and thus he saith, God proceeded to stirre up one Nation against another, the Grecians against the Persians, the Romans against the Grecians, and the Goths against the Romans, and the Vandals and Mahumetans also, and the day of judgement against the Mahumetans. And the Prophet died a hundred years before this Prophecie was fulfilled. Junius saith it was a hundred seventy years before the accomplishment, whereby it appears that Isaiah spake by the Spirit of God, to whom things to come long after are as present. And it was Gods will that Prophecies should be written of things, the fulfilling whereof the generations then living saw not, that their posterity yet looking hereupon, might be comforted against the miseries under which they were pressed, viz. they that should live in the time of the Babylonish Captivity, being hereby assured that Babylon should fall, and then they should be delivered. But to conclude upon the sense, since there needs no word to be supplied to make sense here, for it is sensible enough to take the words as they are, A burthensome vision was shewed me, a wicked dealer, a wicked, a spoiler, a spoiler. Especially if we understand by the wicked dealer, the Babylonian, with Lyra; and by the spoiler, the Persian or Median: for then the sense is, these two were shewed me in vision; the Babylonian wronging and dealing vilely with others, and then the Persian accordingly spoiling him. Wherefore in the next words it is, ascend (O Elam) that is, Persian, a part of Persia called Elam, being put for the whole. I have made all his sighing to cease. That is, saith Calvin, according to some, all the sighing of the oppressed by him, because he should be utterly destroyed and so oppress no more: According to others, all his sighing to cease in the time of his calamity, because the enemy should not hereby be moved to shew any pity, because the Lord would shew him none, as he had formerly shewed none to others. Jerom hath the first of these and this, so that he shall not dare to fight for fear of the Persian; so Lyra also. Of all these, I preferre the first, which also Nabulus hath; for the sighing of the oppressed caused by him, may well be called his, because he made it; the ceasing of his sighing then is the ceasing of his oppressions; unless we shall understand the Babylonians sorrows and sighings, when they saw themselves in such an evil case; the meaning being, that they should do so indeed and grieve intollerably, but an end should soon be put to their sighing, by the Persians sword, bereaving them of breath and life and all.

Therefore my loins are filled with grief, &c. Jerom thinks that the Prophet speaks this in his own person; because being a man he could not but be affected with with great grief in declaring the Babylonians miseries coming so universally upon them, men, women and children, being many hundred thousands, and that upon the sudden, they living before in all abundance and pleasure, although they were the Churches cruel enemies. Junius contrariwise saith, that he speaks in the person of the Church which had been so ill dealt withall by the Babylonian. Calvin in person of Babylon it self grieving for their own miseries. Lyra follows Jerom, Luther, Musculus and Sabon, and others agree with Calvin. The Prophet speaks this per mimetum, bringing in the Babylonian, and in particular Belshazzar thus perplexed when the hand-writing appeared upon the wall, Dan. 5. for then he was surprized with great horrour and trembling, as is there shewed; and if this be compared with that place, it will appear to agree most aptly to him. If it shall be thought that the Prophet himself might be moved, as well in speaking of this as of the miseries of Moab, chap. 16. 11. if he shall but look into chap. 14. 23. &c. where the Church of God is brought in, triumphing over Babylon ruined, or Psal. 137. he will be of another minde; sith it cannot be thought to be the Prophets grief, which is the Churches Jubilee. And as for that of Junius, it is most improbable, when the cruelest enemy of the Church should be quite destroyed, that she should be filled with grief. No, it was the Babylonian and their King, in whose loins now there was no strength, who had been so potent before.

Verf. 4. The night of my pleasure hath he turned into fear unto me. Vulg. Lat. Babylon dilecta mea posita est mihi in miraculum. The Septuagint as if it had been Ὁ Νεφέβη, My soul was in terrour. But the word is עֶבֶל, signifying darknes, or the twilight; and it is as if he had said, in the person of Belshazzar, the night wherein I feasted and was so merry, became a night of terrour. That which moved Jerom to render it Babylon, was because he thought by darknes, that Babylon was set forth, as being called mons caliginosus, chap. 13. 1. but this was a weak ground, and if it be so taken, how shall we think that the Prophet called Babylon his beloved, sith he took all this as spoken by the Prophet in his own person? Cornel. a Lapide, to salve this, saith that my is redundant, and that it may be rendred without it, Babylon the beloved: That is, of the world, for the glory and magnificence thereof. But there is no need of this shift, if we render the words as they properly signifie.

Verf. 5. Spread the table; watch in the watch-tower, eat, drink, &c. Vulg. Lat. Contemplate in specula, comedentes & bibentes. Or it may be rendred, The table being prepared, there being watching in the watch-tower, eating and drinking, arise ye Princes, anoint the shield. The meaning is, Belshazzar making a feast, and eating and drinking with his Nobles, the watchman being in the mean season set to watch, whether the enemy attempted any thing, he suddenly espying the Persians to enter the City, crieth out, arise, prepare to resist, the enemy is entred, to this effect Calvin, with other Expositions: This making all so plain here, I will not trouble the Reader, for the words will well bear this reading. And whereas Corn. a Lapide makes this an argument that Belshazzar was not meant in the former words, because the fear spoken of Dan. 5. came not upon him, till the table prepared, which is mentioned after that; this is of little force, because he proceeds, 1. By speaking in general of his perplexity and the Babylonians to come, and then shew more particularly the manner, as he here doth. They are bidden to anoint the shield, saith Musculus, because it was their manner so to do, when they went to battel to make the enemies weapons to slide off. Vulg. Lat. arripite clypeum, respecting rather the sense then the signification of the word, which is, anoint. And Paguine hath either anoint the shield for the end before spoken of, or anoint the King, as a shield, but this farre fetcht, though some by the King, that he bids them anoint, understand Cyrus, to whom he wils them to submit, Balthasar being now to be slain. But the plain meaning is, by laying oyle upon the shield and rubbing make it bright, which by neglect is now rusty, as is commonly used to be done, when men prepare to go to battel; according to that of Virgil,

Arvisu pingui. And he is not likely, saith one, to shew himself a stout souldier in battel, that goeth out with arms dusty and rusty.

Set a watchman, let him declare what he seeth.

And he saw a chariot with a couple of horsemen, a chariot of asses, and a chariot of camels, &c. Jerom and others after him give this for the sense, As the Lord hath commanded me, I Isaiah bid thee Belsazzar to set a faithfull watchman up, that may not speak for flattery, but tell the truth, because he had said before a watchman in the watch-tower, and this watchman indeed will I be unto thee; for so a Prophet is called, Ezek. 3. So that when he saith, he saw, in the third person, he means himself, as v. 8. is made plain: And if thou askest me what I see, I answer, a pair, the Persian and the Mede in a chariot drawn by an Ass and a Camel, for the Ass being little and obscure, sets forth the Persian, who before this was but of little power, but the Median alwaies strong and mighty. The Prophet saw in the spirit this pair of horsemen, so long before coming with warre-chariots and men of Persia and Media, whom they guided as the waggoner his chariot, and brought up to fight against Babylon. Ver. 8. And the lion cried being set upon the watch-tower of the Lord. That is, the Prophet as a lion for his terrible voice here following; Ver. 9. Babylon is fallen, is fallen. Ver. 9. And here comes a mans chariot, a pair of horsemen. That is, Cyrus bringing an Army of the two peoples before said, for he and not Darius did all, although he came with him in his forces. Then the watchman, the Prophet foreseeing this, cried, [Babylon is fallen, and all his graven images] Of which he makes mention in speciall, that the Jews might hereby be moved to repent of their idolatry, seeing there is so little help in idols.

My threshing and the son of my floor, &c. That is, either Judea, where the Temple stood upon the threshing floor of Araunah, so that he turns by an apostrophe to his people, perswading them to helveve this, as being nothing but what the Lord had shewed, as in the next words. Or Babylon, the meaning being, as thou hast threshed and cruelly beaten others, so shalt thou be threshed, yet not by any power of mine, but of the Lord, who hath verily spoken thus by me. But this he rejecteth, Sassone is indifferent betwixt both, and yields this, as a reason, why Jerusalem should be called his threshing, because the Lord was alwaies purging his Church as a man his floor; and he used Babylon, as a man his threshing to beat the Nations. Musculus is only for this last, giving a probable reason, because as the oxen did tread out the corn upon the floor; so Babylon trod under foot other Nations, tearing them in pieces, as it is particularly said of Judea, chap. 8. 9. and Ier. 51. 10. of others also, but specially v. 33. where Babylon is expressly called a threshing-floor. And the word here used signifieth threshing, or threshing, the son of my floor, an Hebraism not unfrequent to set forth any thing upon the floor. And that this Prophecie might not by the Babylonians be contemned, because it came from a mean private person and an enemy, in way of epilogue he assures them, that what he had shewed came from the Lord of hosts, who was of power to do it, that they might be affected with it. And nothing else ought any of the Prophets to speak. Whereas, v. 8. he hath it, A lion cried, the righter reading is, he cried, a lion, my Lord, meaning that he saw a lion, the Persian or Median fierce as a lion against Babylon. And he saith, I stand all the day and whole nights to give the more credit to that which he telleth, because he was alwaies most vigilant to mark truly what was coming: And hereby industry and study is so be commended to every Preacher, that he never be idle or negligent. Neither ought any Christian to sleep, but to be watchfull alwaies, as the Lord commandeth all, and the spouse, Cant. 5. 2. sleeping yet watcheth in her heart. Petrus Chrysologus saith, Watchfulness is profitable for all, a watchfull King prevents the treachery of the enemy; the souldier frustrates the attempts of the night; the Mariner passeth through doubtfull waies, and the Shepherd preserves his flock from wolves. For the doubling of the word, Babylon is fallen, is fallen; it serves to denote the utter ruine thereof, even as Rome called Babylon,

The burthen of Dumah, one cries to me out of Seir, Watchman, what of the night? &c. Dumah was one of the sons of Ismael, Gen. 25.14. and of Seir it is spoken, Gen. 17.6. as of the Horites country; but Deut. 2.22. given to the Edomites, who came of Esau. The Septuagint read it Idumaea: but Ierom, it is not so much Idumaea, as a Country thereof, lying south, which by some it placed at a City of the Philistines now called Eleutheropolis, within twenty miles. Seir had the name from Esau, who was hairy, as this word signifieth. Dumah the Metropolis of the Country, remembring that Esau came of Abraham, who was in such great grace with God, and they the inhabitants thereof were his posterity, being besieged by the Assyrian, is here said by way of Prophecie to have cried to the Lord, calling him keeper or watchman, because it is said, he that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep, as if they had said, O thou keeper of Israel, who defendest thy people by a sempiternal custody; and watchest, when they sleep in the night, that the enemies break not in upon them, why dost not thou protect us, who are of the same seed? But the Lord this Keeper answereth, the morning cometh and the night. That is, the light of comfort to Israel, but to you, O Idumeans the darkness of misery, or the night of misery being past, the morning of comfort comes, if ye seek for my help and be indeed Abraham's posterity, that is, not seeking to me in your misery only, but turning to me constantly to serve me with all your hearts, as true penitents; thus Ierom: but Sasbon setting forth all the Prophecie more fully saith. The Prophet makes himself a keeper here, as before a watchman, and brings in those of Seir, who were to be destroyed also, requiring of him, What of the night? that is, what time of the night is it? when will the morning come? hoping that then they should have some ease of their miseries, the meaning being, How long shall we be thus oppressed and suffer by our enemies? The keeper answers, that it would not be long till morning, but then they should still continue in their misery, for with the morning the night should come, or continue still to them. But he presently speaks more comfort saying, If ye seek, seek, be turned and come, that is, yet if ye will seek as true penitents to the Lord, do it from your hearts unfeignedly and not in your misery only, come to him, leaving your sins, and then ye shall be delivered; Now if the cause of the Edomites sufferings be demanded, other Prophets shew this, as Ier. 49. Ezek. 23. Obadiab 1. Amos 1. viz. their unkindnesse and harsh dealing with their brethren the children of Israel. Lyra saith, that this is against Duma or Edom, for they are one and the same, but only Dumah a part, is put for the whole; and hereby is shewed, that they being carried into Captivity, as the Jews were, had no liberty granted them to return, as the Jews had by Cyrus. And of this the Prophet sheweth, that they should complain to God, calling him keeper; because except the Lord keeps the house, the watchman watcheth in vain. As if they had said, Why are not we delivered also, forasmuch as we are the posterity of Abraham, with whom thou madest a Covenant. How much of the night of our Captivity is yet to come, before the morning of our deliverance ariseth? He answers, the morning of comfort, and night of misery come of the Lord to all men according to their doing; the Jews have turned to me and sought me with all their hearts, if ye will seek me and turn also, do it, and then ye shall come out of your bondage, as they have done. R. Salom understands by one crying, the Angel guardian of mount Seir standing for his people, according to the like, Dan. 10. Variable and some others take it as the crying of the Edomites to their watchman, when they feared the coming of their enemies: As if it had been said, What spiest thou to night, seest thou any enemies coming? The morning cometh and the night: That is, I see that which will little comfort you, viz. That though the morning be near, yet night will soon follow again, even the increase of your misery, till ye be destroyed. Some others, Why ask ye, What of the night? What of the night? like children, as if your enquiring after this would profit you, look up your arms rather, come and go out against your enemies like men, if ye mean to do any good towards the defence of your Country. Arias Montanus. The morning is so near, that if ye will go out to seek and bring in any provision, do it with speed and return, before the enemy who is not far off, be upon you, for then it will be night to you again, where in ye cannot go out. Calvin and Musculus and the rest of our Expositors are for the Edomites crying, here prophesied of, that should be in the time of their danger by the enemies coming against them, the meaning being nothing else, but that they should be anxious and solicitous, as people in great straits, first one and then another calling to the watchman, what he observed in the night, and he should be able to speak no comfort but terror to them. For though it were day, it should still be night to them, their miseries continuing and increasing; so that they might seek, and having fled out of Dumab for fear, to be more out of danger elsewhere, return and come thither again, yet their case should be no whit better. And this is the condition of the wicked, when God comes against them with his judgements, they shall be full of terror every where, and in the evening wish it were morning, Deu. 28. Again the Lord made known these judgements before they came, against divers Countries, that his people might know that they came not casually, but from divine Justice, taking vengeance upon sin, and that they might not be moved in their calamities to flee to any other Country of the Heathen, thinking to be more out of danger, but keep constantly in the Church, because though she be punished, yet light shall soon rise to her again, out of darkness and the shadow of death. Thus I have related the divers Expositions of divers, amongst which that seemeth to me to be most genuine, whereby the Lord represented by the Prophet, who was as his mouth, is made the keeper, to whom the cry comes out of Seir: It cannot be a watchman of the Edomites who dwelt there, because it is not said only one cried, but to whom one cried to me. And who else can this be, but the Lord, that spake by his Prophet? The Edomites crying then to the Lord in the midst of their oppressions is here set forth. And what do they cry, but as desirous of some ease, What from the night? for so the words properly signifie; Shall there not come a day of comfort to us again? The Lord answers little comfort; but by and by more sorrow, as when another long night comes, willing them therefore, if they be truly disposed to seek to him, to do it by turning, as the Ninevites being in danger did, and coming by true repentance of all their sins unto him.

The burthen upon Arabia. in the forest of Arabia shall ye lodge; O ye travelling companies of Dedanim. Hebr. The burthen in Arabia. In Arabia dwelt the Amomites, Moabites, Idumeans and Ismaelites, being a very large tract of ground from India to Mauritania and the Atlantick ocean. But the Ismaelites only are here prophesied against; for as Sabon noeth, he saith not as before, the burthen of Dumab, but the burthen in Arabia; that is, in that part of it, where in the Ismaelites inhabited, who came of Ismael the son of Abraham by Hagar, being therefore otherwise called Hagarens, although they now call themselves by the name of Saracens, as if they came of Sarah, for their greater credit. And that these only are meant appears, because 21.16. the Prophet coming to declare who they were in Arabia, that he prophesied against; he saith, All the glory of Kedar shall fail. Now by Kedar the Ismaelites are to be understood, as is plain, Gen. 25.13. where Kedar is named as the second son of Ismael, and their glory was in their tents, which were most sumptuous; and in their abundance of cattle, as is shewed, Jer. 49.28, &c. Wherefore the tents of Kedar are mentioned, Cantic. 1.5. For the thing prophesied of, it is fleeing before the enemy, their tents being left for fear, and they being glad to lurk in

- the Forest, where they might not be seen. For, Ye travelling companies of Dedanim, Hebr. is דְּדָנִים, The ways of Dedanim, wherefore others read it, In the ways of Dedanim. Whatsoever moved our new Translatours to render it, as before. The Vulgar Latine also herein consents with the Hebrew, although in the words before it varies, saying, Ye shall lodge in the Forest in the evening, because the same word which signifieth Arabia, if the pricks be altered, signifieth the evening, viz. עֶרָב with two segols.
- Verf. 14. In meeting the thirsty bring waters, ye inhabitants of the land of Tema. New Translation, They brought waters. Vulgar Latine for Tema hath the South according to the signification of the word: But because Tema was one of the twelve Princes which came of Ishmael, Gen. 25. 15. it is more probable, that a place having the name from him is meant. The meaning is, That such of the Ishmaelites as fled would be ready to perish for thirst and hunger, if some of their brethren did not succour them. Jerom applies this to the Israelites, as if they fleeing at the Babylonish Captivity were meant, and that in fleeing they should come into the deserts of Arabia to hide themselves there, and the Ishmaelites were here bidden to make haste to succour them; and this, saith Sabont, is followed by many. But he is for the former, and so are all ours, as there is good reason, sixth it is not the burthen of Judea fleeing from Nebuchadnezzar, but of the Arabians fleeing from Sennacherib, according to Iunius, who also saith, that Arabia Petraea is here meant, and that they are threatened for their hostility against the Jews, as they are sometimes complained of by the name of Hagarens.
- Verf. 16. Yet a year according to the years of an hireling, and all the glory of Kedar shall fail. Having shewed the judgement to come upon the Arabians, that they might be the more terrified; he here sheweth, that it should not be delayed, but certainly come at the end of one year, that is, saith Lyra, one year after Jerusalem destroyed, and the cause is intimated in saying, The glory of Kedar, and the remainder of the strong archers; they gloried in their tents and abundance of cattel, and valour, and dexterity in shooting, wherefore the Lord would thus abase them.

CHAP. XXII.

- Verf. 1. The burthen of the valley of Vision, &c. The Septuagins renders it, Of the valley of vision, of Zion, expressing the place here threatened, which is here Hebr. only by a Periphrasis set forth. For Zion and Jerusalem are certainly meant here, as all agree, because it was the seat of the Prophets, to whom by visions God revealed things to come, and they were called videntes, Seers, therefore respect also was had to the name Moria vision. And although it were a mountainous place, yet it is set forth by the name of a valley, because brought so low by Gods just judgements for their sins, and this was by Nebuchadnezzar, as Ier. 39. 2 Kin. 25. so Jerom. Some as Sabont hath it, refer it to the time of Sennacherib, as indeed Iunius doth because Elam spoken of vers. 6. was a City in Assyria, and Shebna, who was in Hezekiah's dayes vers. 15. when Sennacherib's Army came against Jerusalem: Some to the destruction by the Romans, but he stands for this, and Lyra also. And Musculus saith, it is the destruction to come by the Caldees, that is here threatened, and I cannot see how it can be applied to the Assyrians, because when they came against Jerusalem, in stead of destroying it, they were destroyed. But Calvin will have the whole Land of Judea meant by the valley of vision, being called valley, because however it were mountainous, yet in part it consisted of valleys, and it was generally a plain compassed about with mountains; and if it be so understood, haply that coming of Sennacherib against the Cities of Judah, and taking them may be meant, yet vers. 2. calling the place here prophesied against a City of stirs, a joyous City, makes it plain, that not all Judea but Jerusalem is meant, meant, and the destruction by Nebuchadnezzar. Whereas it is objected, Lyn saith, that the Elamites were brought by Nebuchadnezzar as his hired men. Others granting, that the Elamites came with Sennacherib, say that the destruction by the Caldees being prophesied of to ver. 5. he there propounds the danger before this past, in which they had been by the Aſſyrians in Hezekiah time, and were saved, but not any whit the more turned in their hearts from sin, and to fear God and trust in him, but in worldly means of defence, of which see vers. 9, 10, &c. which seems to be the best. The Note of Calvin hereupon is good, in that it is not plainly called Judea or Ierusalem, but the valley of vision, that a check was hereby secretly given to the Jews for being so wicked in the midst of Gods Prophets, a Countrey alone of visions, and so of more light, and yet turned by their sins into obscurity, as low ground compassed with high hills hath lesse of the Suns light, then higher grounds; thus they made mountains valleys, dark and obscure by their sins elsewhere called darkness, as Ioh. 3. 19. They love darknesse more then the light. What aileth thee, that thou also art gone up to the house tops? See the like touching Moab before, Chap. 15. 3. for which he saith, That thou also, being in distresse by the Army of the Caldees, he sheweth, that they should go up, and seeing the mighty Army of their enemies, instead of going out courageously to fight, stand there weeping like women: and that we may not doubt how they could stand upon their house-tops, it is to be known that their buildings were battlements to walk upon.

Note.

A City of tumult and noise, and of joy; That is, of joy before the Caldees coming; but now clamour, fear and trouble. Thy slain men are not slain with the sword, viz. Because by famine through the long continuance of the siege, for it lasted about six moneths; even till bread failed them in the City, and this was a greater judgement, then to die fighting valiantly against their enemies, wherein men glory. But these had no hearts so to do, but being pined away and dying through famine, without having any batrel, they perished so, that the Caldees at length brake in, there being few to make resistance, and those that were, fleeing out another way. One hath a conceit, that they are said to be slain, but not by the sword of the enemy, but by Gods hand, as Titus himself acknowledged when he saw the strength of their wals, after the City taken, when he said, What power of man could have drawn the Jews out of these munitions? it was therefore Gods power that did it, Ios. 7. c. 16.

2 King. 25. 3.

All thy rulers fled together, they are bound by the archers, &c. Or rather, as the word מִשְׁכֹּחַ Michaloth signifies, From the Bow, that is, as Innius hath it, from using the Bow; The Vulgar Latine hath it, Duratus vinthi sunt, because the word מִשְׁכֹּחַ from which this may seem to be derived, signifieth durus, and so indeed the sense will be good. For so the History 2 King. 25. doth excellently accord vir. 3, 7. and 2 Chron. 36. for their rulers, it is expressly said, They were bound with fetters of brasse, not only Zedekiah, but also Iehoiakin and Iehoiakin before him. All that were found in thee were bound; That is, all the men of warre left, of whom it is said, that Nebuzaradan carried them away to Babylon, their binding, which was common to Captives, being understood. Thus Musculus also understands it, or of Iehoiakin and his Princes, 2 Kin. 24. saying, that these things agree not to the time of Sennacherib, when no such thing was done, but I rest in the former. Touching the words there is also another reading, Fled together from the Bow, they were bound, all that were found in thee were bound together, so Hebr. verbatim, by distinguishing it into two sentences, as it may well be, and then without question this is the best reading. They fled from afar off. Some referre this to Zedekiah the King, who fled from the Caldees, but was taken and brought to the King of Babylon, but it is not said afarre, but from afarre, therefore it is better understood of such as came from other parts of Judah in time of this danger, thinking to be sheltered in Ierusalem, but all this should not profit them.

he wept, and was grieved in humanity, much more in brotherly charity for Ierusalem, the treading under-foot whereof he foresaw now, and the making of it a valley of misery in stead of a mountain of holinesse. And thus ought we all to sympathize with the Church in her distresse, or else we are not living but dead members of the same mysticall body, and fail of the duty commanded, Weep with them that weep. And Isaiah by weeping thus before it came, sought to move the Jews to repentance and sorrow, as Christ afterwards foreseeing the destruction of Ierusalem, wept over it.

And Elam bare the quiver with the charres of men and horsemen, &c. heb. With the chariot of man, horsemen, to distinguish the chariots in which they came, from others bearing burthens, he saith, a mans charret, and the men drawn in these charrets are called horsemen, because whether they rode on horseback or in charrets, they were horsemen. By Elam the Persian is meant, and by Kir the Median. For Elam see chap. 21. 2. For Kir 2 King. 16. 6. where Junius sheweth, that it was a part of Media called after the captivity Syromedia, and Kir, signifying a wall. because it was compassed with an high mountain, being as a wall unto it: Ierom saith, that the Prophet goeth on here to describe the taking of Ierusalem by the Caldees, but Calvin understands it as belonging to the coming of Sennacherib against Ierusalem, by which danger after it was past, they were not moved, and therefore it was not likely that they would by his threatening of a destruction to come long after, as I have partly touched before and approved. If that which was then done were not meant, how could that touching Sennacherib verf. 15. be brought in, seeing he was over the Kings house in Hezekiah's time, and not in Zedekiah's, but put down to be but Scribe, as is here prophesied, Eliachim being preferred to that more honourable office, as appears Chap. 36. and 37. And Kir uncovered the shield, Vulg. Lat. and the shield made naked the wall: for Kir signifieth a Wall, but because it is a proper name also, and setteth forth the Medes, as hath been shewed, our translation is more sensible, the meaning being, that having their shields covered at other times, now preparing to battel they uncovered them.

Ver. 7. Thy choice valleys were filled with charrets, &c. that is, where their vineyards and olive-yards and gardens were, and the horsemen shall set themselves in aray at the gate, that is, shall come so near that there shall be no copy of stick away for the besieged.

Junius.

And he discovered the covering of Judah, and then didst look to the armour of the house of the forest: Here the Prophet sheweth, what the wicked Jews did in the time of their danger, viz. make preparations by force of arms to defend themselves, God in whom their help did chiefly consist being neglected: as appears plainly, if we reade ver. 8. 9. 10. 11. 12. together. By the covering of Judah then must needs be meant the armory, wherein weapons for war in abundance were kept, and shut up so that they were as covered, and lay hid, but now the doors were opened, and they were discovered to the view of all men, many thousands going forth armed with them. The house of the Forrest wherein they lay, was of the Forrest of Lebanon built by Solomon, 1 King. 7. 2. He discovered the covering of Judah, then, is no more, but as if he said, the covering of Judah was discovered, thus also the Vulg. Lat. reades it: Calvin saith, that some by the uncoverer of the covering here understand God, and some refer this uncovering to the enemy, but he is for the former. Lyr., who is for the destruction by Nebuchadnezzar, saith, that by this covering the Temple is meant, which was covered as most holy, that none might behold it where the glorious Cherubims stood, and wherein Judah trusted as a covering to protect them, as appears by their saying, The Temple of the Lord. Jer. 7. 4. Junius by the covering uncovered, understands their bulwarks in the borders of Judah taken by the enemy, and by the house of the forest; not that built by Solomon, because that was not now in the Jews hands, but any houses in forests at large, where warlike instruments were made. Some will have hidden treasures meant by the covering, which were now brought forth to maintain souldiers, and some by the house of the forest an house house built and filled with arms by David, which lay hid from the sight of the common people till now. But to leave divers mens conceits, here is one and the same thing set forth in two phrascs, viz. the house of the Forrest of Libanus opened to bring forth arms for their defence, where they were before covered and kept, when they had no need to use them. For the drift of the Prophet is to shew all the carnal means which the Jews used to defend themselves, and to reprove them therefore because they did not see to fasting and prayer to God, which was the chief. And he begins with their seeking first for store of arms in this verse, and therefore it doth nothing agree to expound it either of the vale covering the most holy place opened to enter in and prophane it, as Ierom doth, or as Lyrus, or of the bulwarks entred by the enemy, but only, as was first said, and why Iunius should decline that exposition of the Forrest of Libanus. I see not, because there was none other house famous for an armoury but that, and he makes it not to appear to have been at this time in the enemies hands, and out of the Jews. For that which the Jews are said next to have done, ver. 9, 10, 11. reside 2 (bron. 31.455. and we shall see the things done by the counsell and help of Hezekiah his Princes, which he here spoken of, viewing the breaches and repairing them, and stopping the waters, that the Assyrians coming to fight against them might not therewith be supplied, only the numbring of houses here spoken of, and the breaking down of some in the suburbs that might be advantageous to the enemy, are there omitted, and the ditch making betwixt the two wals, yet two wals repaired and strengthened are there spoken of. For numbring the houses, that might be either to know how many men were in them to make an army that they might finde watchmen, or how many persons that the provision for their sustenance during the time of the siege might be ordered accordingly, for the ditch it was to hold water for the besieged, a new one being made, lest the old should not suffice.

But ye have not looked to the maker thereof, &c. Ye have thus used all outward means to preserve your city Ierusalem from coming into the hands of the enemy, but unto the Lord who hath made it an holy city and habitation for himself, and that not newly but long ago, ye have not looked to seek his aid by fasting and prayer, and turning from your sins. He doth not then simply tax warlike preparations for our defence, but a trusting in them and not in the Lord alone, in whom is all our help. Iunius here again differing from all others expounds the matter thereof thus, the Authour of this judgement for your sins long agoe determined by him to be brought upon you, examples whereof he hath also made you to see in your brethren of the ten Tribes, that by them being warned ye might repent. But because he made immediatly before mention of the city and parts thereof, it is more genuine to understand it, as was before said. And from hence Calvin gathereth, because Ierusalem was a type of the Church, that God built her up by his almighty power, and not man, and by the same power is able alwaies to preserve her, which they not considering, placed not their confidence in him, but in their own preparations. And in descanting upon these words [of old] he referres them to predestination before the beginning of the world. But because predestination is one thing, and fashioning it by Ordipances, and sanctifying it another, leaving this I rest upon the former. Now this accusation was not against all in Ierusalem that fortified against the Assyrians, for Hezekiah put them in minde of God as their greatest strength still, and Eliakim who was over his house, is so highly commended in this Chapter, that no doubt is to be made of him, and some others in whom there was piety, but it was against the community of the Jews, who were most of them carnall, and trusted in carnal means.

and putting on sackcloth, he mentions these according to the custom of those times, meaning not precisely, that in times of extraordinary humiliation we should alwaies do thus, for Ios. 2. it is said, Read your hearts and not your garments; but that we should first and chiefly be broken-hearted, and then by outward signs of weeping and apparell, shewing sorrow, and all our outward behaviour, let it publicly appear in times of publike humiliation, how deeply we are stricken with sorrow for our sins.

And behold joy and gladness, slaying oxen, &c. that is, laughing and making merry, all Gods judgements being contemned: Joy is not here simply taxed yet, for there is a time to laugh and a time to weep, but in time of calamity, in coming for sin, or joy in sin opposed to godly sorrow for it, because some are so far from mourning for their sins, that they joy in committing them, and glory in recounting them, and joy to think upon them afterwards, which is an iniquity not to be expiated for ever, as here followeth, ver. 14. Or to be profuse in laughter, making it their daily practice to feast, laugh and be merry: or lastly, being unaffected at the sins of the land, or at our brethrens miseries, Rom. 12. 15. Am. 6. 6. Killing of oxen. Here the Prophet proceeds to aggravate their sins, ver. 13. it is to kill oxen, &c. the meaning is, that when hearing of Gods judgements threatened, they should have sought unto him by fasting and prayer, they contrariwise feasted, and run into all excess of riot, and made a mock of all the terrible threatnings denounced against them, saying, Let us eat and drink for to morrow we shall die: that is, in way of derision of the Prophets threatening of horrible destruction at hand. able to make any heart to tremble, they were so far from being affected with it, that they said in effect, let death come so speedily, we will make merry whilest we may, for we hold this threatening ridiculous, as which shall never take effect. See the like saying of Epicures, 1 Cor. 15. 32. the Papists saith Calvin, because taking of flesh is here taxed, gather that it is a sinne to eat flesh upon a fasting day: but why do they not infer the like touching wine-drinking, which is as well here complained of? Therefore their eating flesh and drinking wine implied feasting, which at times of fasting is an abomination, and to eat or drink any thing, but in case of necessity for infirmities sake, in some only that cannot fast from all food without detriment to their health, is unlawful, and not the fasting from flesh only, because fasting is from eating bread or drinking water, Exod. 10. 6. Est. 4. 16. Ioh. 3. 7.

Verf. 14.

And it was revealed in the ears of the Lord of Hosts, if this iniquity shall be expiated, &c. He speaketh thus, not that God needs any revealing of things done upon earth by wicked men, for he seeth and knoweth all things, but his hearing by an Hebraism is thus set forth, the more to terrifie the wicked, who think haply it shall not come to his ear, who cannot if he hears of their evil sayings and doings, but be a severe Judge unto them; as a man threatening a malefactor, and his knowing of it, and reproof therefore being despised, he tells him further that his evil doing in contempt of the Law is come to the ears of the Judge, this will more startle him. The form of threatening used here is an oath, something being understood, as, I am not just, or live not, if this iniquity be forgiven, that Gods full purpose to punish these contemners of his judgements with death might the more appear, and all others might fear to do the like. Some think, that even this sin upon repentance is remissible, but so somech as it is a despight done to the spirit of God, and to a degree of sin against the holy Ghost, I cannot subscribe unto them, because so also it should be but as all other sins, where as it is here singled out from them, being called this iniquity; and Jeram hereupon saith, Post peccatum erecta cervix, & ex desperatione contemptum magis offensus Deum, quam aliquod aliud peccatum. And whereas some infer, because it is said, till they die, that there is forgiveness after death, it is absurd, and without all ground in holy Scripture.

Lyn for, if this iniquity shall, &c. hath, this iniquity shall not, but this is more emphatic then a simple negation, as if the Lord had said, rather then forgive this I will suffer any thing to be done unto me.

Get thee to this Treasure. Shobna, who is over the house. Vulg. Lat. go in to him that dwells in the Tabernacle, and in over the Temple, even Shobna: for so much as there is no ground in the Hebrew for this translation, it is worthily rejected even by one of their own Doctors, who saith, that there is no word in the Hebrew Text, which signifyeth either Tabernacle or Temple, but Jerom, herein following some of the Hebrews, who hold him to be high-Priest, and the high-Priest dwelt in the Tabernacle, though neither be true, presumed to use this liberty respecting rather this sense by him affected, then the meaning of the words, which are none other, but as in our translation beforementioned: yea, and he noteth, that Jerom himself renders the same words praefectum domus, 2 Kin. 19. and Isa. 36. and Rabbi Abraham saith, that he was treasurer, and over the Kings house. The word is שֹׁבְנָא signifying a Treasurer, and not a Tabernacle, although Cornelius a Lapide contends for it, alledging Exod. 1. 11. where a word coming from the same radix is used to set forth cities of Tabernacles, but it is not so rightly rendered, first שֹׁבְנָא will not bear it, but rather cities of store, or treasure: And if it be taken otherwise for cities of Tabernacles, that Pharaoh should cause the Hebrews to build for him, what sense would there be in it? But he addeth further that the Septuagint render it pastophorum, i. exodans vel cubiculum, but certainly by a great mistaking of שֹׁבְנָא for שֹׁבְנָא, from which a word derived 2 Chron. 31. 11. indeed signifyeth chambers, yet not to keep in, but to lay up the tithes brought in: yea, and the Jesuite himself by and by argueth strongly to prove, that this Shobnah was not the high-Priest, but the Treasurer: for 1. the Septuagint and Cyril call him questorem, others treasurer. 2. Yeelding, that he was over the Temple understood by the house here, he could not be the High Priest, because he is no where so called, but the High-Priest. 3. Josephus in setting down the catalogue of High-Priests, makes no mention of any called by this name. 4. Azariah was now High-Priest, 2 Chron. 31. 10. 5. The High-Priesthood was not translated to another family from Aarons and Sadocks, till the time of the Maccabees, but the office here spoken of is translated ver. 20, 21. But whether this Shobnah, and that 2 King. 19. were one and the same, is by some doubted, as by Josephus and Testarus, because this Shobnah and Eliakim were Priests, those 2 King. 19. Laicks. Arias Montanus saith, that they were the same, so likewise Calvin and all ours generally. The cause of the doubt is partly because according to some the man here spoken of, was one that lived in Zedekiah his time, when Nebuchadnezzar took Jerusalem, whereby they expound all that which went before, of the Jews straits by the Caldees, and partly because that Shobna 2 King. 19. is said to be Scribe or Chancellour to the King, and Eliakim over the house, but here Treasurer, in whose room Eliakim was to be set up. For the first enough hath been already said, to shew that the things before spoken from ver. 6. pertained to their sufferings by Sennacherib and even Sabon, who is for the Caldees, yet coming to Shobnah he saith, that here a new Prophecy begins concerning a great man in Hezekiah his time, of whom before, 2 King. 19. For the second, Calvin observes that שֹׁבְנָא hath another signification besides Treasurer, viz. a fautor or cherisher, which is proved 1 King. 1. 2. where the same word is used in this sense in speaking of Achishag, though there in a good sense, yet here to discover evil cherished in the heart of this wicked man, even evil counsel, so to stand for Hezekiah as to keep intelligence and correspondency with the enemy, that which way soever the world went, he might provide well for himself. The Hebrews say, that he treacherously agreed with the enemy to deliver the city into his hands, and that Hezekiah upon this prophecy of Isaiah put him down from being Treasurer and Scribe, both which high offices he had suffered him to hold, the office of Scribe still, but took his Treasurership away from him, and conferred it upon Eliakim a most faithfull man. But because there is no ground for this in the holy Scripture, I passe it over, as Calvin doth, and rest upon the Etymologie of the word before-going, his office is not here so much pointed at, as his quality of cherishing in his heart evill counsell against the State, and therefore he calleth him this fautor or cherisher, in way of contempt, as Christ sometimes called Herod that crafty Fox, whereas by some he is thought to have this name given him from a city in Egypt, Sochen, from whence he came, being therefore called a Sochnite, it is but conjectural. But why doth Isaiah so terribly threaten him? passing over that which is uncertain, here is enough discovered in the verses following to shew that he had great cause. For he was proud like Abalom, and out of his pride he built him a stately sepulchre for a memorial, which could not be without great cost, and therefore not without pilling and polling the people. And forsomuch as he provided thus for the entombing of his corps, when he should die, he hereby intimated that he was one and the head of them, that contemning the Prophets threatnings are and drank securely, when the whole city and kingdom were like to come into great streights. And he doubtlesse was one of those princes spoken of 2 King. 19. which gave the king counsel to fortifie so strongly, that it was now supposed by the strength of their fortifications without seeking to the Lord by fasting and prayer they should be sufficiently defended against the assaults of their enemies, although the King himself did not so, but by his speeches to the people shewed plainly, that still all his trust was in the Lord, moving them to do the like, 2 Chron. 32.8. With them is an arm of flesh, but with us is the Lord, and the people rested in these words.

Vers. 16.

What dost thou here, that thou hast hewed for thy self a sepulchre, &c. A most unworthy man, because he was in high place, and great in this world, thought by his wealth to make himself great and famous in his memory throughout many ages to come, contrary to that, Prov. 10.7. The memoriall of the just shall be blessed, but the name of the wicked shall rot. But the Prophet takes him up as one that was but a very larva personating a great Officer of the kingdom, but having nothing of worth in him, whereby we may see both how base and unworthy great men make themselves by their pride and oppressions, to learn to flee vices, because God is also full of wrath against them: and that a good King may have evill Officers about him, he not knowing it, as Hezekiah had this wicked Shebna.

Vers. 17.

Behold the Lord will carry thee away with a mighty captivity, &c. Vulg. Lat. sicut Gallus gallinaceus asportari se faciet, taking the word, וְלִי here used for a cock, which properly signifyeth a man, because as a man is amongst his wives strong and impetuous, so a dunghill cock amongst his hens. But then it must be read thus, he will cause thee to be carried captive by the captivity of a cock: because there is nothing signifying me, and the meaning is of a cock taken and bound, and gelt, and made a capon, his comb being cut, and then he being carried to the market, not daring to look up, but holding down his head, who so proudly lifted up his crest, and crowed upon his dunghill formerly. This indeed is a good glosse of Jeroms. But forsomuch as וְלִי signifyeth not a cock, but a man, or strong, it is better rendred as before, though some read it with the captivity of a man, that is, into a far countrey, because men are carried furthest when they are taken, as being more able then women to endure travel, but this is somewhat far fetcht, wherefore I adhere to the first as most sensible, the Lord shall carry thee away with a captivity, that is, far to live and die in extreme misery and ignominy, as thou out of thy pride preparedst for thy long lasting fame and glory, which is further expressed, ver. 18. Of the fulfilling of this we read not, but it is not to be doubted of. The Hebrews, if we will beleve them, say, that Shebna with some other of the Jews conspiring with him, fearing lest the city should be taken, went to Sennacherib, to take part with him, but so great a destruction coming upon his army the night following, he being full of wrath, took them and carried them to Nineveh, doing execution upon them there in most terrible manner, and tying this man to an horses tayl, as Musculus relates it, he caused him to be drawn amongst thorns till he died. Junius differing from all other translators rendeth it thus, Behold the Lord that covered thee with the covering of a man, and cleareth thee godly: but he mistakes stakes <sup>לְמַסְכָּה</sup> laltal, captivating for <sup>לְמַסְכָּה</sup> to cover, confounding two several radizes <sup>לְמַסְכָּה</sup> and <sup>לְמַסְכָּה</sup> and our New Translation being deceived by him, have put the same in the Margin, as if it might be indifferently rendred either way, but the first is the only right reading. For the next words, Shall surely cover thee, Jerom hath, Shalt lift thee up as cloathing, amictum; That is, Shall so easily take thee up, and carry thee away, as one doth a garment, but Hebr. it is, Cover a covering on thee; that is, as Vatablus hath it, shall cloath thee with confusion, and he alludes to the covering of the faces of those that were condemned of old, as we may see in the case of Haman carried thus out of the presence of Ahasuerus to the Gallows.

Vatabl.

He shall surely turn and tesse thee violently like a ball into a large countrey, &c. Hieron. Coronans coronabit te tribulatione, & quasi pilam mittet in terram latam, Hebr. It is either crowning, or rolling as a Ball or Bowl is rolled being cast out of a strong mans hand a great way: But because rolling doth best agree, and Jerom once renders it by mitter, it is better translated all the times, which are three in this place alike, Rolling he will roll thee with a rolling like a ball or bowl into a large countrey, with his hands. Some have it large and spacious, some large of bounds, as if <sup>לְמַסְכָּה</sup> had reference to the Countrey, and not to him that should cast him thither; but for the word signifying hands, it is more proper to referre it to the Lord, who he threatneth shall do all this with his most mighty hands. The Bold, the Spirit of God makes the Prophet to deal even with men of greatest honor and power if they be proud and profane. And the chariots of thy glory shall be the shame of thy Lords house; That is, Whereas through the favour of thy Lord and King thou wert so highly exalted, that thou rodest gloriously in thy charret thorow the streets of Jerusalem, being croucht and bowed unto by the people, thou shalt be brought to such a shameful condition in the enemies Land, being made a scorn and laughing stock to them, that through the contemptible condition, wherein thou shalt be, thy Lord Hezekiah, though a godly King, shall suffer reproach, when they shall say, This was Hezekiahs favourite, who I warrant you is a good one, that favoured and honoured so much such a varlet as this: and to this effect almost Calvin, hence warning Princes to beware whom they prefer, lest it redound at length to their dishonour.

Vers. 18.

And in that day I will call my servant Eliakim the son of Hilkiah, &c. At what time this was done is uncertain, but certain it is that Shebnah his wickednesse being discovered to the King, he was put down from that highest office, and Eliakim set up, yet he was not put down all at once, but being now Treasurer and Master of the Kings house, he was put from the first before Sennacheribs coming against Jerusalem, and was then only in the second office of Scribe, Eliakim being set up above him, as we may see, Isa. 37. and this most probably was upon Isaiah his prophesying against him: but afterwards he revolting to the enemy, as hath been said, Eliakim had all the honour of both these offices, from which it is thought he had been formerly removed through Shebnah his false suggestions to his Lord against him. But this is only conjectural, and haply Eliakim was never in any of these offices before, but being thought a right honest and faithfull man, the King upon the detection of the others fraud, or rather abhorring his pride, preferred him to one of his offices first, and then to another. For if he had found him treacherous, it had been no policy in the King to continue him in any such office about him still, neither could he think him a fit man to send with Eliakim to Rabshakeb, or to the Prophet, as he did. And the Lord calleth Eliakim his servant, thus most highly honouring him for the Graces of Faith, Humility and Fidelity to him, and the Countrey shining in him, as we may gather from that which followeth.

Calvin.

ensigns whereof were a rich Robe and Girdle. Lyra, who stands for Shebnah his being high-Priest before, and Eliakim now, thinks this confirmed here, because the high-Priest had a Robe and rich wrought Girdle put upon him, when he was consecrated, Levis 8.7. But when Jonathan would honour David, 1 Sam. 18.4. it is said, That he took these ensigns of his own body, and gave them to David to be worn by him. And amongst the Romans the Girdle was used likewise by Emperours, honourable persons, and valiant souldiers. Therefore this proves no Priest here spoken of, although almost all Pontificians after Jerom follow it. But Sabon gives a good reason why, viz. because Verf. 22. he saith,

Verf. 22.

I will lay upon his shoulder the key of the house of David; According to that Isa. 9. The government shall be upon his shoulder, and he shall sit upon the throne of David: The house of David setting forth nothing else but his Throne or Kingdom, although some adhering to Jerom expound David's house of the Temple, because he provided treasure and materials for the building of it. But let them shew any other place wherein it is so taken, and if they cannot this must needs fall to the ground. But what an high dignity is here spoken of, being the same that is said of the Son of God, and again applied unto him, Revel. 3.7. Verily this hath made some to expound this as spoken of Christ, and not of any mortal man; but others better of Eliakim, a man thus preferred by Hezekiah, as a figure of Christ; so Cyriel and Theodoret; but for this end they hold him to have been both high-Priest, and over the Kings house also, thus figuring our Christ his dignity both regal and pontifician. But as his having the high-Priesthood hath been already confuted, so it is not necessary to make him any otherwise a figure of Christ thus; but as David in respect of his kingly dignity, there being another, who alone typified him as King and Priest, even Melchisedech. And in setting forth his authority in David's Kingdom, he speaks of keys, because by having the keys of the City delivered to him, the King takes possession of a City, and hath it under his power, so that none can enter in, or go out, but by him; and all things are either confirmed or disannulled by him. Whereas then this promise is made to Eliakim, it doth imply two things, 1. Dexterity and Wisdom to handle the keys for that end for which they are given him, that is, his authority in confirming or disannulling any thing rightly. 2. Power to exclude or to let in to the City, and to bring forth things of present use, and to lock up and keep those things for afterwards, which are not yet usefull. It was an honour like to that of Joseph in Egypt for his great wisdom and fidelity bestowed upon him by Pharaoh, so that without him nothing should be done in all the Land; and by this power he lockt up the corn gathered together; and when he saw his time, opened the houses of store, and brought it out. Whereas keys use to be given into ones hands, but here it is said, I will lay them upon his shoulder, it is to intimate the glory wherewith he should by this power giving to him, be invested, according to verf. 24. They shall hang upon him all the glory of his fathers house, which must be upon his shoulders. Others take occasion here to speak of the keys given to Peter, both papal, affirming power of opening and shutting out of Heaven by Excommunication given to Peter and his Successors; and ours, as Calvin and Musculus, that nothing else is hereby given but power to preach salvation to such as by true faith and repentance turn, and damnation to the unbelieving, according to that Mark 16. 16. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; he that believeth not, damned; for this being done by him and his fellows upon earth, is ratified in heaven. But others better, both this and the power of Government for the well-being of the Church, because the keys are never spoken of, but in this sense, and this Government was by Ecclesiastical Censures, which were sometimes executed by an Apostle, and sometimes by the Church, 1 Tim. 5. 20. 2 Cor. 5. and this was by casting notorious offenders out from receiving the Lords Supper, and forbidding other Christians to eat and drink with them to make them the more ashamed. So that if a Preacher aceth this part or the Government, howsoever it be constituted, either of Officers purposely set up for the ease of the Preacher, who ought wholly to give himself to study and preaching, or of rulers in the State where it is Christian, they have ground in the Word for their so doing.

And I will fasten him as a Nail in a sure place, &c. A nail, saith Adam, was either made of wood to drive into the ground to fasten a Tent Exodus 8. Num. 5. or else an iron nail to drive into a post to hang things upon; and thus the words following shew, that he is called a nail, for it is said vers. 24. They shall hang upon him all the glory of his fathers house, the off-spring and the issue, all vessels of small quantity, &c. The Vulgar Latine, Divers kinds of vessels, every small vessel of goblets, &c. Thus continuing the Metaphor, as he had compared him to a Nail, so the people to vessels great and small; the meaning being, that rich and poor should all depend upon him most willingly, and yield subjection to him. And because the glory of a King is said to be in the multitude of his subjects, this phrase is used touching him, They shall hang upon him, all the glory of his fathers house, that is, when so great multitudes shall willingly submit to be governed by him, then he shall be glorious, as his father, who it seems, was a great Prince, yea and an accession of glory shall come to his house by him, he having more glory then ever his father had, for which it is said, vers. 23. He shall be a glorious throne to his fathers house. Why Jeron renders that divers kinds of vessels, which Symmachus and Vatablus render Nepotes for Steirpes & posterus, I know not, for the word QININ Tsafaim here used cometh of QIN, Pradire, so that posterity which cometh from their parents, must needs be meant hereby, and the meaning must be, as Calvin hath it, that the good coming by this worthy Prince Eliakim shall not be sitting, but durable to the generation to come, and to another after that, and therefore it is said, that he should be fastened as a nail in a sure place, that cannot be plucked out again. For a wise and good Prince by setting good Laws and Ordinances doth benefit not only the people living at that present, but also the Generations to come, and that not only males, but females, for which to the word Hatsafaim of the Masculine Gender is added Hatsaphangoth of the Feminine, signifying Daughters or Nieces. The vessels, which he saith, they should hang upon him, are lesser, as cups; and greater as flaggons or water-pots, and because the word QIN doth sometime signifie musical Instruments, some render it so, especially who hold Eliakim to be high-Priest, saying, that hereby it is meant, that he should order all things in the worship of God, even to the players upon Instruments. But this having been already confuted, it is better understood of all sorts of people both small and great depending upon him, as vessels of all sorts are hanged up upon nails or pins fastened into a wall.

In that day shall the nail fastened in a sure place be removed, &c. That is, In the day when Eliakim shall be advanced, Shebnah, who seemed to be a nail fastened surely before, especially in his own opinion, for the great favour in which he was with the King, shall be removed, that way may be made for this good Prince, and then all his friends that depended upon him shall be frustrated of their hopes, which they had through him. Thus R. Solomon, Vatablus, Calvin, and generally all Expositors, except Jeron, who having mentioned this, resteth not in it, because it is said, that which hang upon it perished, which is not true being applied to Shebnah, because when he fell from his high-Priesthood, other Priests and Levites, and singers depending upon him, fell not also, but continued still to serve in their courses, till the Babylonish Captivity. He therefore saith, by this nail is meant the same before spoken of, this being a Prophecie of Eliakim's high-Priesthood, and of all the Priesthood and service in the Temple lasting for a long time, when by the Babylonian the Temple was burnt, and the Jews were carried into Captivity seventy years; and of this high-Priesthood and Priesthood utterly ceasing for ever, the Temple and City being again destroyed by the Romans. But all this falleth, because the ground hereof, that is, Eliakim being an high-Priest, hath been already razed. And as for his exception taken to the former, it is of no force, for it is meant of the kinsfolk and friends of Shebnah, that hung upon him, and had mainteuance and hopes of preferment from him, from all these when he fell they fell also. And he twice mentioneth the Lords speaking of this, once setting him forth by this title, The Lord of hosts, that it might not be doubted of, but stedfastly believed, that Shebnah should thus be brought down, and Eliakim set up, though Shebnah were then so mighty, and in such grace, that men could hardly believe it. But this consideration, that God is the Lord of hosts, who threatneth the wicked of the highest rank, that stand most strongly, with destruction, should make them fear it, to turn unto him, and not to go on in their pride and tyranny, as if they were too great ever to be moved.

CHAP. XXIII.

The burthen of Tyre, Howl ye ships of Tarshish, &c. Tyrus was an Island in the time of the Prophets, as we may see in Ezek. 26. and 27. where Gods judgements against Tyre are more amply set forth, and the cause thereof: but afterwards it was by Alexander, when he besieged it, laid to the firm Land, the narrow passage betwixt them being filled up, that his Army might approach to their wals. The Countrey to which it belonged was Phenicia, and it lay not farre from Galilee, as we may gather, where Christ is said to have gone from Galilee into the parts of Tyrus and Sydon, Mat. 15. that is, saith H. B. in Patriarchs travels fifty six miles. The cause why Tyre should be destroyed is set forth, Ezek. 26. to be their insulting over Jerusalem at the destruction thereof, the means also whereby Nebuchadnezzar King of Babylon. And Jerom saith, That in the History of the Assyrian warres, soon after the destruction of Jerusalem, the Philistims, Arabians, Damascens and Egyptians were subdued also; and because Tyre is mentioned in the Psalms, as joyning with them against Gods people, The tabernacles of the Edomites and Ishmaelites, Gubal, and Ammon, and Amalek, with those of Tyre; he doubts not but when they were judged, Tyre was judged also. But we need not go by such conjectures, for Iosephus saith, That thirteen years after Jerusalem was destroyed, Nebuchadnezzar went against Tyre, and with great labour making provision for his Army to approach to it, took it, and made it a place for Fishermen to dry their nets, Ioseph. 9. c. 15. Tyre, Heb. is Tyr signifying a rock, so called, because strong as a rock, and situated upon a rock. It was the metropolitan City of Phenicia, the Lady of the sea, and mart of the whole world for the opportunity of the scite. Pliny saith, That it was sometime seven hundred paces from the Land, the whole compasse of the Land where it stood being nineteen thousand paces, the City two and twenty furlongs, being rather all as a Tower, then a City, and for riches and pomp exceeding all other Cities. For the Antiquity Berosus saith, That it was built by the seventh son of Japhet, called Tyrus, soon after the flood, but now the destruction hereof is threatned. For ships of Tarshish, that are bidden to howl; Vulgar Latine hath ships of the sea, because Tarshish signifieth the sea, for the sky-colour thereof, which Tarshish properly signifieth; see before Chap. 2. 16. The Septuagint, Ships of Carthage, because Carthage was a Colony of the Tyrians, according to that saying of Virgil, Urbs antiqua fuit, Tyris remere coloni, And Jerom Ezek. 27. turns the same word Carthage also, because Carthage abounded with ships, which were employed for the Tyrians. The Caldie render it Africa, putting the whole for the part, because Carthage stood in Africa. But it will be best to take it with Sabon for the mediterranean sea, the most most and best ships of which pertained to Tyre. Now the ships are bidden to howl by a Prosopopeia, the more to set forth the misery of their masters. Vatablus saith, that some Hebrews say, That there was a City not farre from Tyrus and Sidon, called Tarsish, but he holds the mediterranean sea, which is of a sky-colour, to be meant hereby. Calvin, Tarsus in Cilicia where P. was born. There is no entring in from the Land of Chittim, it is revealed to them. Heb. From entring in; and the words before, devastation from house, the sense being, so that no house is left, or entring in &c. By Chittim the Grecians are meant, and therefore by some the desolation brought upon Tyre by Alexander is understood to be here prophesied of. But Calvin yields good reason to the contrary, 1. Because Ezek 26. where the same thing is prophesied of, Nebuchadnezzar is expressly said to be the King that should do it. 2. Because Alexander took not Tyre till 500 years after, and what comfort would this have been to the people of God to hear, that their cruel enemies of Tyre, dwelling so near unto them, should be suffered so long to go unpunisht, when all other Nations about suffered by Babylon? 3. Because Tyre is said after this to have a King, but after being destroyed by Alexander, none, but was reduced to the form of a Commonwealth. The not coming of ships therefore from Chittim, is not to be understood as if the way were stopt up against them, but by reason of the desolation to which they should hear that this famous Mart-Town was brought, they should cease coming thither for traffick, and this is meant by these words, It is revealed to them, although Calvin refers it indifferently to Grecians or Tyrians.

Calvin.

Be still, O ye inhabitants of the Isle, &c. Here he further amplifieth the judgement of Tyre, by shewing, That whereas in times past there used to be much noise of ships coming from Sidon thither, now they should not traffick there any more. Sidon was a City upon the sea-coast about two hundred furlongs from Tyre, and a Colony thereof, and therefore the inhabitants thereof are specially spoken of, as coming frequently to Tyre.

Vers. 2.

And by great waters the seed of Sihor, the harvest of the river is her revenue. Jerom joining this to the former words, reads it together with vers. 2. thus. Be silent (O inhabitants of the Isle) the negotiation of Zidon; many waters have replenished thee, &c. whereas ver. 3. is manifestly in Hebrew disjoined from ver. 2. beginning not with these words [great waters] but, And by great waters, &c. Sihor is the river Nilus, which by overflowing the Land of Egypt makes it so fruitfull, and therefore seed and fruits are attributed hereunto, because by the overflowing hereof they grow in abundance, the Land being fatned by the black flud by this river brought down upon it. It had the name Nilus, saith one, from nehilan, novus limus, which it brought with it. But the Prophet here in amplifying the misery of Tyre, by saying, The corn of Egypt was her harvest or increafe, means, that it was so, because brought from thence to Tyre to her great benefit: thus it had been, but now it should be so no more, for Tyre was the Mart of Nations. Vers. 4, 5. He insists upon this amplification from Zidon and Egypt further saying, Be ashamed, O Zidon, for the sea hath spoken, even the strength of the sea, &c. By the sea some understand Tyre, called the sea, because standing in the sea, and the strongest Island therein. Others taking the sea as spoken to by a Prosopopeia, and Tyre brought forth as it were thereby, and encreased to such riches and glory, because all the Tyrians wealth came in by the sea. We may take it either way, or rather both the sea, and Tyre the strength hereof brought in complaining of a desolation, whereas in times past here were many gallant young men and virgins brought forth, and brought up there, now it was not so, the place being laid waste. As at the report concerning Egypt, &c. Calvin. So soon as the rumour comes to Egypt they shall sorrow. That is, saith he, as soon as they shall hear in Egypt, that Nebuchadnezzar hath won Tyre, they shall be terrified, as they that are likely next to be destroyed. Others understanding it in the same manner say, that Egypt shall sorrow, because their commodities, which they were wont to sell to their

Junius. great profit to the Tyrians can now be no more uttered unto them. Some in both these regards, for the Egyptians might know out of Ezek. 29. 18. Ier. 47. 4. that when Tyre fell, destruction by the Caldees was not farre from them, as being promised for their hire. And this agreeth best with the words of the Prophet, which are verbatimim, As this heard to Egypt, they shall mourne, as the bearing of Tyre. Wherefore Junius, whom our New Translations follows, taking it for an illustration by a comparison made betwixt the fear that should surprize the contiguous Nations about Tyre, and of those in the time of Moses, when they heard of the Egyptians drowning in the red sea, did much mistake it; neither will the words bear that exposition, because it is וַיִּשְׁמַעְוּ, a rumour to Egypt; not of or concerning Egypt.

Verf. 6.

Passe ye over to Tarshish, &c. That is, Tyre being destroyed, which hath been your Mart hitherto, seek ye now to get your living by sailing to some other place, as a new Mart-Town, for here is no good for you to be done any more. The Vulgar Latine, Passe the seas, as it may well be interpreted, no particular place being meant; for if it were meant of a place called Tarsus, it will not thus agree with the words going before vers. 1. How ye ships of Tarshish; for what comfort in going to a place in a lamentable case? Besides here is no word signifying [to], but passe Tarshish. How ye inhabitants of the Island; Some render it Islands, but it is a singular, and may be referred to Tyre.

Verf. 7.

Is this your ancient City, &c. Of the antiquity of Tyre, see before; but howsoever they gloried in this, now he saith, that they should go in a poor manner as farre off, after the manner of beggars or captives to Babylon, Hebr. it is [From as farre off into perigrination] or to a strange Countrey, the sense is all one; for if Tyre from whence were farre from Babylon to which they should go, then Babylon was far from Tyre.

Verf. 8, 9.
Plal. 2.

He enquires by what counsell this is done, and sheweth, that it was the Lords to abase all humane glory, whereby we may see how supereminent in wealth and worldly all the inhabitants of this mighty City were. That we may all learn not to glory in such things, but know that the Lord can soon stain all glory, and therefore in the midst of all pomp fear and be submisse to serve him.

Verf. 10.

Passe thy Land as a River (O daughter Tarshish) &c. or, Daughter of the sea. For being taken either way, it agrees well to Tyre, being called a daughter of the sea, because standing in the sea, and as it were springing out of it, and daughter Tarshish, because Gen. 10. 4. there was a Tarshish coming of Japhet, who replenished the Isles, and haply he might inhabit here, and thus the ships of Tyre were before called the ships of Tarshish, vers. 1. Now in bidding her passe as a river, he shews, the going away of the Tyrians into Captivity out of their own Land, there being no means to stay them, as a flood cannot be staid, but flows on, till it be swallowed up of the sea; Or because he saith, Passe thy Land as a flood, he means, That as a flood riseth above the banks, and runs divers wayes, so they should be scattered. Varabius renders it, Passe on to the daughter of Tarshish, as v. 6. but in the Heb. it is plainly, Daughter Tarshish, as the party spoken to. But how can the Daughter of Tarshish flow to Tarshish, as Verf. 6? Answ. Very well, if by Tarshish we understand the sea, as well as a place so called, as one most eminent off-spring thereof. No girdle more, that is, whereas before the waters did gird it about, and were a defence unto it, now they are not, it being joyned by the conquerour to the firm Land. Some by Girdle understand strength, which in that City was great to resist the enemy. I think it best to joine both together. But whereas some by Girdle understand the meanest commodity to be sold there, and so that being full of rich merchandize before, nothing was left, I think this to be far fetcht.

Verf. 11.

He hath given a commandment against the merchant City, &c. Here the destruction of Tyre is further amplified, and he dwells so long upon it, because it might seem incredible to men, that so strong a place, and so flourishing should be destroyed, Hebr. for the merchant City is Canaan, and so it is rendred by

Varabius.

Vatablus, and Vulgar Latine, whereupon some think that mention is made of Canaan, that by recounting how the inhabitants of that Land perished, they of Tyre might fear the same almighty power now set against them; so Jerom and others, affirming also that Tyre stood in Canaan; so Iosb. 19. 29. it is reckoned in the lot of the Tribe of Ashur, and Matth. 15. the Canaanish woman, who cried unto Christ for her daughter, is said to have come out of the parts of Tyre and Zidon, and by this name is it set forth the rather, because it was a City full of merchants, and the word Canaan signifieth a merchant. Wherefore it must be read according to the Hebrew, He hath given a command against Canaan, the sense yet being the same.

Hieron.

Thou shalt no more rejoice (O thou oppressed virgin, daughter of Zidon) &c. Here is according to Jerom another description of the same City Tyre: for although it now excelled Zidon farre in strength, beauty and riches, yet it was built by the Sidonians, and was a Colony of Sidon. But whereas he threatens Tyre, by saying, that she should no more rejoyce, he meaneth not never, for vers. 15. after seventy years there is a Promise made unto her, wherefore it is meant, no more a long time. And a virgin Tyre is here called, not in respect of purity or chastity, or truth formerly being there, but because she was never before subdued or brought under the lust of any; so Calvin, saying, that the Tyrians goods kept, as it were, lockt up before a long time, were now subjected to the Conquerours will, as if Venice never subdued, were therefore called a virgin City. Passe into Chittim, that is, saith Jerom, into Gracia, and other western parts, as before upon ver. 1.

Verf. 12.
Hieron.

Behold the Land of the Caldeans; they were not till the Assyrians founded it, &c. Vulgar Latine, There hath not been such a people, the Assyrians founded it; That is, saith Jerom, if ye would know by whom ye shall be brought to this destruction, the Caldeans shall do it, who are such a people for might and power, as that there was never any people like them, and they are most ancient, as having their beginning from Ashur, of whom see Gen. 10. Before ver. 12. he spake to the runawaies, now to such as remained in Tyre, They have captivated his strong ones, dig'd down the houses, &c. Our new Transl. They set up the towers thereof, and raised the Palaces thereof, and he brought it to ruine. Contrary to the former, and indeed it is a marvel, that Jerom should be moved by one word signifying either to raise up or to dig down, as 1771 here used doth, to pervert the whole sentence, yea the whole verse, making it to speak of the Caldeans destroying of Tyre, and of their incomparable greatness, whereas nothing else is here set forth, but an example of the Assyrians overthrown by the Caldees, from amongst whom they came, as the more ancient, who when Ashur was a great Monarchy, had no name of a people, yet at length they overthrew and brought to ruine that Monarchy, and therefore it was not for the Kingdom of Tyre to contemn the Lords threatening of their ruine here, as if they were too mighty to be subdued, for a greater Kingdom by farre had been ruined by a people of no name or note, even the Assyrians the founders by the Caldees in times past under them, the Proverb being thus verified, Mater peperit filiam, filia devoravit matrem, that they might tremble and fear, as being much more liable to destruction by the same Caldees, if the Lord should bring them against Tyre, their strength being now doubled by the accession of Assyria to Babylon. Of this an hint only indeed is given here, but Ezek. 26. it is plainly shewed, That Nebuchadnezzar should destroy Tyre. Now that Jerom and the Expositors following him do pervert the sense, is plain, because here are no words signifying, There is not such a people, but it was not a people; that is, had no name, but went long under the name of Ashur, and was under Ashur; and whereas they read it, They have captivated the strong ones, Hebr. it is, They have raised up the towers thereof, &c. that is, saith Calvin, by bringing them to a civil kinde of living, whereupon they built them Cities, who had been before a rude and wilde people living in Tents, but finally the Caldee made the Assyrian Kingdom to fall, as is shewed in the last words, which are verbatim according to the Hebrew, He put it to sailing, Cal. He brought it to dust.

Tyre shall be forgotten seventy years, &c. That is, saith Jerom, according to the time of Jerusalem's desolation, over which Tyre insulted, As the dayes of one King, that is, of Nebuchadnezzar, under whose Kingdom Judea was held so long, but others, saith he, referre it indefinitely to the reign of any King, that liveth longest. Other Expositors generally agree about the seventy years, as being the time that the Babylonians reigned after this, wherein no eminent place, such as Jerusalem and Tyre were, might be rebuilt for fear of rebellion and trouble. But Vatablus in expounding these words, As the dayes of one King saith, it may be referred to David, who lived seventy years; Calvin, to one King, as to any other one man, whose age is said Psal. 90. to be seventy years, but it is said of one King; and not of one man, because Tyre had a King. I preferre that of Jerom, understanding by one King, one Kingdom of the Caldees lasting so long, and triumphing over Tyre, as over Jerusalem in the ruines all that time. For why David should be here meant, or man indefinitely, especially one well maintained, as a King, as Cornelius a Lapide hath it, I cannot see; but why the Caldee Kingdom should be meant, we may see good reason, because although Evilmerodach reigned after Nebuchadnezzar, and Belsazzar after him, before the fulfilling of this, yet they were all but as one King, because of the same line, it being the manner of the Scripture thus to set forth any Monarch with his issue succeeding him in his Kingdom, till the last be cut off, as Dan. 2. 39. After thee shall stand up another Kingdom, where but one King is spoken of, as standing till another Kingdom, because he stood till then in his posterity; so likewise Junius, rendering it, Quasi anni unius, omitting the word Regis. Now Tyre is said to be forgotten all this time, because no City, and no resort unto it till this time expired. After that shall Tyre sing as an harlot. That is, saith Jerom, shall have joy for many Nations frequent her, as in times past, as many lovers frequent an harlot, being contented, no more once thought upon all the time, that she lies squalidous in her sordes: for so say Tyre those seventy years in his ruines. It is meant then that Tyre should be built again, and be a Mart again.

She is bidden to sing as an harlot, because when her lovers have forsaken her, she seeks by sweetly singing to bring them back unto her again, so Tyre should seek after her rebuilding to draw other Nations to resort thither for traffick again, thus Lyra. Now a merchandizing City, saith Calvin, is compared to an harlot, not because it is simply evil to get gain by Merchandize, but because this trade of life is commonly accompanied with much deceit in words and shew of wares, whereby as the harlot by singing, merchants allure men to their great hurt to deal with them. Musculus saith, That as an harlot having the French-Pox, is forsaken of all her lovers, but being healed seeks again by decking her body, painting face and singing, to allure men unto her, so Tyre. And the Prophet Isaiah 23. 16. doth not bid her do thus, but in bidding, Take the harp, &c. he prophesieth, that she shall so do, her chastisement shall not work so with her, but that she shall Redire ad suum ingenium, by all kinde of fraud to seek gain and riches, as before in her prosperity in times past. Wherefore it is said Verf. 17.

She shall return to her merchandize, and fornicate, &c. The same word being used to set forth merchandize, which signifieth whoredome; so Zuinglius; But the word here used, is only put for whoring or receiving as an host, so as the merchants there did strangers to their own gear gain. Some understand whoredom properly, because men coming thither being from their own wives, defiled their women; or spiritual whoredom with Idols, but so all Nations might likewise then have been taxed. But such it is here intimated, That Tyre should be built again, and indeed it was, else how could Alexander afterwards have destroyed it? A Question ariseth upon comparing this with Ezek. 26. 14. Thou shalt be built no more; How that was verified? Some answer, It is meant not in the same place, but cannot prove it. Some, that it was built no more to come to that state and glory, because it was alwayes after under others, Perfians, Greeks and Romans, so Jerom, and Emman. Sa. Lastly, some not a long time after, for it was not re-built in all those seventy years, and so the word Tyre is there taken, and 1 Sam. 7. 13. Joel 2. 19. and herein I rest, because Ezekiel saith not, No more for ever, but only, no more.

Hieronymus
in Ezek. 26.

And her treasure and merchandize shall be holiness to the Lord, &c. As Babylon, Ashur, Egypt and Damascus were before spoken of, Babylon as a figure of the everlasting destruction of the wicked, the rest being to be turned to the Christian faith in the time of the Gospel, being instanced in particularly, some for all other Nations, so is Tyre here, the last of them all. Here then is a Prophecie of Tyres being converted to the Christian faith, at what time her riches formerly gotten by deceit shall be well imployed in maintaining Gods Ministers, which shall preach amongst them the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and giving to his poor members. It shall not be laid up] That is, saith Calvin, after their old covetous manner, when all their trafficking was to enrich themselves, gathering goods together with an unsatiable desire by any means, but now being converted, they shall be liberal in distributing them. Their merchandize shall be addicted to them that dwell before the Lord] That they may eat to fulnesse, and have a thick covering; That is, to his Ministers, who then were Priests and Levites, now Preachers of the Gospel, for they dwell as it were before the Lord, in that as his servants they wholly intend his work for the salvation of souls, which he hath purchased by the blood of Christ. And of Christians liberality, which should be to them, see Gal. 6. 6. 1 Cor. 9. And this liberality must be, not to afford them a little food for them and theirs, but food to fulness, that is, in plentiful manner, and likewise cloathing enough, the two most necessary things for this life being put for all other, which sheweth, that they who are truly converted, by liberality to the maintenance of Gods service, and to the relieving of his poor, get their riches sanctified, which are otherwise polluted, and therefore are not covetous horders and gatherers without end, as aiming at nothing but to be very rich in this world, as the thing wherein their felicity consisteth. For thick cloathing, Vulgar Latine bath, Vestientur ad verustatem, because the word signifies as well old as thick; our New Translation durable, respecting rather the sense then the proper meaning of the word, and he that renders it old, understands the same, viz. cloathing that is not torn, till it be very old. How this was fulfilled under the Old Testament we know not, but only Ioseph. lib. 12. antiq. cap. 12. it is said, That the Tyrians were overcome by the Maccabees, and the prey taken was dedicated to the Lord, and Simon is said to have ruled from Tyre to Egypt, 1 Mac. 11. 59. But under the New Testament, Psal. 45. 12. it is prophesied, That the daughter of Tyre should come with a present. And one saith, That Anno Domini 300. there was a most flourishing Church at Tyre, which continued six hundred years, then it was taken by the Saracens, and retaken by Christians, Venetians, and others. Gnave Mundus Patriarch of Ierusalem being Captain, and continued in the faith an hundred sixty five years, till that Anno 1289. it came again into the Saracens hands, or the Turks, who are masters of it to this day.

Here saith Jerom, after destruction denounced to particular Nations, from Chap. 13. hitherto, it is prophesied of the destruction of the whole world, and of the torments of the wicked, and the comforts of the faithfull. Thus also Ambrosius de Elia & Jejunio cap. 21. and Tyre, &c. And here first this destruction is set forth vers. 1, 2, 3, 4. Secondly, The cause of it set down, vers. 5: &c. Thirdly, That but a few shall be saved from it, vers. 13, &c. with their joyes.

joyes. Fourthly, The miseries of the wicked and straights then, vers. 17, &c. Fifthly, Their everlasting punishments after this v. 22. But Vatablus and some others think, that the judgements of God against the Jews after their crucifying of Christ, are here prophesied of. Calvin and Junius, &c. will have it to be nothing but a capitulation of judgements going before against all the Nations about Judea, and against Judea also, being before from Chap. 13. spoken of severally, now they are put together and further aggravated, some things being interlaced for the comfort of the faithfull, when the world should thus be as in a combustion. Lyra saith, That some apply them to Idumaea, against which he prophesied Chap. 21. but now having more to speak against that Countrey, he addeth it here: but let the whole context be considered, and there will be found no colour of reason for this, only Chap. 34. 5. Idumaea is in particular named, when the greatest judgement is threatned against all the wicked. And whereas it is most generally received, that the last judgement of the whole world is here prophesied of, it cannot be, because, as Calvin hath it, a flourishing estate of the Church is after this spoken of in this world. Neither may it be restrained to Judea only, because v. 21. he threatneth the Kings of the earth. Yet I cannot see but that all which is said, untill v. 21. may well be applied to the Land of Judea, prophesied against before Ch. 22. because he saith, vers. 2. it shall be with the people as with the Priest, and vers. 5. he alledgeth this as the cause, that they had changed the Ordinances and broken the Covenant, and vers. 13. speaks of a remnant escaping, who should rejoyce, which properly belong all to Israel, and not to other Nations. Neither doth he any where inveigh against others for drunkenness but Israel, as here vers. 7, 8, 11. implicitly, as he also did Chap. 5. and doth Chap. 28. I conceive therefore that the Prophet not having spoken all that which he had to say against Judah and Israel, and other Nations round about before threatned, resumeth the same kinds of argument again, that the hearers might be the more moved to fear and repent, beginning first with Judah. 2. Proceeding to other Kings, v. 21. 3. Declaring joyfull things to Judah, for which they should praise the Lord, vers. 13. and Chap. 25. 26. 4. The destruction of Leviathan, whereby the mightiest enemies of the Jews seem to be understood, Ch. 27. 1, 12, 13. for which again a song of praise. 5. He inveigheth against Israel for his sins, threatning destruction therefore Chap. 28. 6. Against Judah again under the name of Ariel, Chap. 29. and 30. in both after judgements prophesying of mercy. 7. Against Assyria, Chap. 30. 31. and some reproof against Judah coming between, and comfort, Chap. 31. 8, 9. the threatning against Assyria is again renewed. 8. He prophesieth mixedly of joyfull and terrible things to Gods people, Chap. 32. and 33. 9. Putting all the enemies of Gods people together, he threatneth them with destruction in more terrible words, Chap. 34. Lastly, He speaketh of the most happy and joyfull condition of the Jews, being converted to the faith of Christ, Chap. 35.

Vers. 1.

Behold the Lord emptying the earth, making it naked, changing the face of it, &c. All which may be seen in the Prophecies before-going, for the earth was then emptied, when the goods of all the Nations round about were made a prey to their enemies, and made naked when their houses and walls were broken and burnt down, and the face changed, when of free they were made servile, and the inhabitants dispersed when captived. Jerom who seeks to adapt all this to the destruction of the whole world, understands the dispersing of the inhabitants, some to places of torment, and some of joy, but taking it for the emptying of the Land where Priests were, and the Law, that is, of Judea, is most agreeable to v. 2. and v. 5.

Vers. 2.

And it shall be like Priest like people, &c. This is spoken, to shew, that if any should think for their riches or superiority, or their most holy function, to escape better then inferior persons, they were much deceived: for all degrees should suffer and be abased alike, when Gods judgements should come. And indeed, as Musculus hath it, sin and unworthy walking in any office abaseth seth such an officer or superiour, so as that now he is no more to be accounted of for his office, but amongst the most infim and basest sort of men. For it is not said, An elder is worthy of double honour, but, that rules well, if not, then he ought to have no honour at all, but to be used, as the basest sort, agreeable to which is that saying of Jerom, Virtus ubique honoretur, vitium ubique deturpetur. Let virtue be honoured in whomsoever, and vice debased in whomsoever; but Kings are still alwayes to be excepted, whom we are bidden to honour without this condition, as where it is said, Fear God, honour the King, 2 Pet. 2. 17. and children their parents, as Shem and Japhet did, as in whom is a greater Image of divine Majesty.

Muscul.

In Jac. 2.

The earth also is defiled under the inhabitants thereof, &c. The word אדמה here used hath divers significations besides defiling, as to be impious, to deal wickedly, to be condemned or punished: Wherefore Vatablus noteth, That divers do render it diversly. But because vers. 6. he saith, A curse hath consumed the earth, it is plain, that the best rendring of it is, The earth is punished, for according to this it is said Ier. 23. 10. The Land mourns because of swearing; see also Hos. 4. 3. Because they have transgressed the Laws, &c. The Laws were the ten Commandments, the Ordinances those of circumcising, sacrificing, &c. the Covenant, that made with Abraham, whereby it appears, that this Prophecie pertained to the Jews, and so doth all that followeth even to vers. 13. for Ierusalem, saith Calvin, was the City of vanity, which should now be brought to this misery.

Verf. 13.

But I said (O my leanness, my leanness) Vulgar Latine, Secretum meum mihi. Which Ierom expoundeth, as if it had been said, It strikes me with extream sorrow to see, as I do by the Spirit of prophecie, what a wonderfull great number shall in the end be destroyed for ever, they are so many, that I cannot utter it, therefore I must keep this secret to my self. Calv. Paraphrast. The secret of the reward of the just is revealed unto me, and the secret of revenge] But they say thus, presuming that the last judgement is here prophesied of. But Hebr. it is, My leanness, for so ל signifieth, and not secret, although ל a Caldee word signifieth secret. And he meaneth leanness by continual grief in foreseeing the judgements to come upon his people; so Junius. But Calvin having first gone upon the same exposition, finally preferreth that, rendring it secret within, conceiving that in thus saying he laments the troubles and dissensions within the Church after all the former judgements, and only a few reserved, which stand for the true faith, which is most to be lamented of all other judgements, that there should be digladiations of the godly amongst themselves, That there should be intestine enemies, and domestical, which the Church can neither flee from, nor put to flight. This indeed may seem very plausible, but it is too farre, the word neither signifying secret, having added to it, which as Rab. Joseph noteth, is not an affix here, but a radical letter, which appears by the next particle וְ; neither thus taken doth it agree with the following words, wherein he crieth out against transgressours and wicked men, which caused all this misery, and his sorrow therefore, as in the next words, the treacherous dealers have dealt treacherously, &c. where the same word ל is used five times, and hereby are set forth not simple but malicious and obstinate transgressors.

- so good to make any disjoyning of those words from the former, as he doth. The Prophet having complained in the former words of mens intolerable wickednesse, after comfort spoken to the faithfull, ver. 14, 15. here sheweth into what miseries they should fall, that they might not take any comfort from that which was said before of their exceeding great joies, but be dismayed at their own fearfull condition. And he sets it forth by wilde beasts before the Hunters, for as the Hounds coming abroad they fear and run, and such as so escape tearing in pieces fall into pits made to take them, and such as are not so taken, run unawares into a snare or net, so he sheweth that it should be with the wicked Jew: See the same Jer. 48. 43, 44. And in this case the hand of God is manifestly shewed against those, that having escaped one danger, cease not, neither are long free from another, and a third, till they be confounded, that they may be moved by the first and second at the least to repent, and not harden themselves till the coming of the third.
- Note.
- Verf. 18. For the windows from on high are open, &c. Some saith Calvin, think that it is here alluded to the flood in Noahs time, and so do I think also, because the same phrase is used, and the destruction of all, none escaping, whithersoever they fled, could not more aptly be set forth then by that, lest any should bear themselves upon such an hope. For how should they escape that when they climbe up aloft have the windows of heaven open to let our judgements upon them, and if they think to be hid in any cave of the earth, have the foundations thereof shaken against them? Neither doth Calvin when he hath declined this, speak to any other but the same effect, that all the powers above and beneath shall be moved against them to their destruction.
- Calvin.
- Verf. 19. The earth is utterly broken down, &c. That is, The judgement coming, which is here threatned against Judea, shall not only hunt the wicked to destruction, but as when the foundation of the earth is shaken by an earthquake, many buildings sometimes also fall, and the earth is rent asunder in some places, filling all men with terrour, so by the enemies before threatned to be sent against them, should their Land, their Temple, and goodly buildings, being brought to ruinous heaps. And he varies the phrase four times. The earth is clean dissolved, moved exceedingly: Verf. 20. Tossed too and fro and removed, in which strain of eloquence, saith Calvin, he goeth on prosecuting the allegory from the earth begun, ver. 18. not out of any affectation of shewing his Rhetorick, but to affect mens dull mindes the more with fear before the Lord, whom a little speaking will not move, that if by all this they were not moved, they might be left without excuse. And for this cause should we Preachers be instant, and presse our admonitions and threatnings home against the wicked, as being the way of Gods Spirit speaking by his Prophets, not forbearing through faint-heartednesse, nor languishing through lukewarmnesse: Rev. 3. 18. In saying that the earth shall reel to and fro, and stagger like a drunken man, he means neither by this nor the words following, the transgression thereof shall be heavy upon it, and it shall fall and not rise again, and it shall be removed as a cottage: That the frame of the whole earth shall be thus, as at the last day, though some take it so, who have been before confuted, but the carrying of the Jews into captivity, and the removing of Israel into other countreys, Heathens being brought from thence to inhabit in their Land, as 2 King. 17. as a cottage or Tent is to lodge in for a while, and then is removed; and as a drunken man by reason of a giddinesse possessing his brain, being carried hither and thither, knows not where he is, no more should they, because they were carried into countries which they never saw before, thus by the earth synecdochically, the inhabitants being meant, with whom God was so highly offended for their abominations.
- Note.
- Verf. 21. God will punish the host of high ones, and the Kings of the earth, &c. Divers Expositions are here brought by divers. 1. Some saith Calvin, think the first words to be spoken of the Sun, Moon, and Stars, which are the host on high. 2. Some of the devils, because Eph. 6. 12. they are called powers in heavenly places

cer. 3. Some of the Jews, who were by Gods singular favours towards them made higher then other Nations, whence their Land is called the high places of the earth, Isa. 58. 14. for this last is Vatablus, yet Calvin holds rather, that none other are meant then kings, who are of the highest dignity: and that the next words and the Kings of the earth, are only exegeticall, it being only declared by them, who were meant by the high ones. Vatablus also saith, as the expositions are divers, so be the readings, some rendring it, the Lord will visit the host of the high ones on high, some exercitum superiorum in supernis. Sept. The Lord will bring his hand upon the ornament of heaven. But they are Heb. the Lord will visit on high the host on high: whereby I think it best with Vatablus to understand the Jews hitherto pointed at for the reason before-going, and in the next words the Kings of other Nations round about in the foregoing chapters threatened in particular as well as they. For if the next words of Kings were only exegeticall, the conjunction ⁂ were superfluous, and the word ⁂ hitherto used to set forth the Land or earth, were causlessly varied here into ⁂ in naming the Kings of the earth on the earth. Others then be manifestly meant here, and not the same which were spoken of before, because the Kings of the earth on the earth are opposed to the high host on high, that is, most probably, Gods peculiar people: but now for the most part degenerated through sin, yet thus set forth in respect of that which they were, even an high host on high, as the faithfull under the Gospel are said to sit together with Christ in heavenly places. So that here the excellency of the faithfull, whom God hath peculiarly chosen, even above Kings in this world is set forth, these are but Kings of the earth on earth, those Kings or high ones on high, elevated by grace above an earthly condition, at the least in their mindes, to heaven above.

And they shall be gathered together as prisoners in the pit, &c. heb. they shall be gathered, the gathered being bound in a pit, that is, being through the judgement of God against them taken captive and bound with fetters of iron by their enemies, and imprisoned, for the word also signifyeth a prison, if it be rendred a pit, a dungeon is meant. And hereby is shewed to what misery even kings rebelling against God, are sometimes brought, though not all, for some are slain, and so their imprisoning is prevented. And what an abasement is this to a king, to go from the throne to the dungeon, that they may learn to serve the Lord in humility and fear in this their elevated condition, lest not doing so, but proudly domineering they be brought thus low? Sabon and others, that follow Jerom. by the gathered into the pit, understand both devils and wicked kings spoken of, ver. 21. for by devils they expound the host of the high ones on high, and accordingly they say, that by the pit is meant the bottomlesse pit, and whereas it is added, after many daies they shall be visited, it is meant with punishments made more grievous. Origen, who by the high host understands the Sun, Moon, and Stars, saith, that they having wicked souls tied unto them, be cast into this pit, but after a long time be released again, as all the damned shall be. But this grosse error is by all the Orthodox long ago cried down as contrary to the truth, which saith, these shall go into everlasting fire, and Isa. 66. their worm never dies, and their fire never goeth out. Haimo expounds their visiting after many daies thus, they shall be visited in their bodies at the time of the resurrection being joyned again unto, and tormented with their bodies. Lyra, after many daies past, since their sins were committed, they shall suffer in hell therefore. Jerom the time of many daies being past they shall be visited, that is, punished still forth on for ever and ever. Some applying both these verses to the Jews in the Romans time, and the Romans who destroyed them, the Jews being the high ones, the Romans the Kings of the earth, say, that the high ones were then visited, when the Jews and their city were destroyed by the Romans, and the Romans when after a long time of persecuting the Church in Constantines time their idolatry was put down, at what time Satan was bound up a thousand years, and after this long time they shall be visited visited again by the coming of Antichrist. But going according to the exposition hitherto followed, here will be no place for any of these conjectures, and the last words which are hardest to be understood, will be made plain thus, when the people of God have long suffered the grievous things before spoken of, they shall be visited with mercy again, and so vers. 23. agreeth excellently.

Verf. 23.

The Moon shall be abashed and the Sun confounded, when the Lord shall reign in Zion: for if the judgements before-going be referred to the last day, how shall the Lord reign gloriously in Zion? for then he shall no more reign in any part of the earth but in heaven for ever, the earth being destroyed. But understanding this visiting of the Jews after their great punishments, of Gods visiting them in mercy, as after their 70 years captivity, by bringing them home again, or rather of his visiting them after their farre longer dispersion since the time of the Gospel to convert them to the Christian faith, and so to reduce them and make them to live in their own countrey in more prosperity then ever, nothing could be spoken more aptly to set this forth, it being such a glorious condition as that the glory of the Moon or Sun were nothing to it. And upon this doth Calvin also touch a little, although he first expounds it of punishments, continuing after many daies upon the wicked, that they might not feed themselves with hope of being soon delivered, although their miseries for a time should be most grievous. It may also be extended to some kings of other Nations before spoken of, and their kingdoms: for so it is ch. 23. concluded touching Tyre, and some others, as will appear to him that shall reade, chap. 15, 16, 17. &c.

CHAP. XXV.

Hieronym.*

O Lord thou art my God, and I will exalt thee: Jerom taking this and four verses more together saith, that here the Prophet speaks in the person of the Nations, that should under the Gospel embrace the faith of Christ, when the Jews rejected it, and he both praiseth God, v. 1. for fullfilling his word touching the Gentiles in calling them, and prophecies of Jerusalem overthrow for the Jews infidelity and malice against Christ, and that it should never be built again, ver. 2. and for the Gentiles conversion, whom he calls the strong people and the terrible nations, that should praise God for his grace towards them, ver. 3. Who were so called because by their great strength they subdued all that opposed them, especially the Assyrians and Babylonians: ver. 4. he also praiseth God for his protecting Christ in his poor Christians from the fury of persecutors. For Christ is set forth as poor, Zech. 9. and riding upon an Ass, and the poor received the Gospel. Thus he, but he saith, that the Jews expound this city of Rome, which shall be in the end destroyed, and then the Jews called the poor, who are now subject to many miseries, shall be relieved. But of the destruction of Jerusalem never to be built again, as here threatned, he is so confident, that he derides such as expect a restauration of the Jews to their own Land again, and their enjoying a flourishing estate. Calvin takes this as spoken by the Prophet, who considering the judgements of God before spoken of against the wicked, and the comforts of the faithfull, could not but break out into this affectionate thanksgiving, and praising of God and his truth. For he looked at these things though not to come till many years after, as certain, and so was affected greatly with them, as any true Prophet of God, (forso much as he is fuller of faith then the common sort) must needs be. And by the city turned into ruinous heaps, he understands the cities of the Nations before threatned, the singular being put for the plurall, as is common amongst the Hebrews. And by the poor sheltered from storms, such as should fear God in generall, to whom God hath alwaies been a protection in time of danger: Lyra having expounded, chap. 24. of the last judgement. when the world world shall be destroyed, understands this of perpetuall praises, that shall therefore be given to God by his Saines triumphing over all their enemies in heaven. Wherefore by the city turned into ruinous heaps, he will have the world meant, which shall never be built again. But because his foundation faileth, as was before shewed, it must not be so understood, and for that which followeth, v.6. of a feast that should be made upon this mountain of fat things, being also by himself expounded of the Lords Supper: but this I suppose, no man will say shall be kept any more in heaven, and vers. 20. it is said, that Moab shall be troden under foot, which can by no means be applied to that time, yet he impugneth that of Jerom taking the city for Jerusalem, because, saith he, the city here spoken of shall never be built again, but Jerusalem was built again long ago, after the destruction by the Romans, and whereas it is said not to be built in the same place, he saith, but contrary to all others, that it standeth upon the same foundation, only all places pertaining to it of old are not within the compasse of the new buildings. But receive this and deny the prophecy of Christ to be true. Thy habitation shall be left desolate, &c. For the city here to be understood, it appears to be meant of Jerusalem, because that was the city in particular threatned, Chap. 24.10. as the context from vers. 5. to the 10. plainly sheweth. And here being a thanksgiving for things related there, it doth not agree to expound this of any other city but that, whereas this saying it shall not be built again for ever, seemeth to make against it, the like was already said before of Tyre, Chap. 23. 17. compared with Ezek. 26. 14. from which an answer to this also may fetcht. Moreover the Word 𐤇𐤍𐤏𐤔 here used doth not alwaies signifie to the worlds end, but a very long time, the end whereof is not known. And this I say the rather, because when upon the Jews conversion their sin shall be taken away, most probably the effect hereof desolation of their city shall have an end also, and they shall return and build it again most splendidly. And the same which is called the city is also set forth by the name of the palace of strangers. Now by strangers are sometime understood the Heathen of all other Nations besides Judea, and such as had not the same rites with them, and sometime the wicked of any Nation, as Psal. 18. Strange children have lyed unto me, and Psal. 58. They have been estranged from their mothers womb: and in this sense the Jews estranged from God by sin and malice against Christ, are set forth here, their city and the palace of strangers being all one and the same. And that by the city turned into ruinous heaps, the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans is meant, appears further, ver. 3. where he speaks of the city or cities of the Nations glorifying and fearing God after this. And what else can be meant hereby but the rejection of the Jews turned to the planting in of the Gentiles, as Rom. 11. because they embraced the faith, when the Jews refused, according to that Act. 28.28. The salvation of God is sent unto the Gentiles, and they will hear it?

Thou hast been a strength to the poor, a refuge from the storm, and shadow from the heat, when the blast of the terrible ones is against the wall: Hereby he sheweth that at the same time that he destroyed Jerusalem, he shewed speciall favour to such poor Christians as were there, as indeed he did, calling them to Pella, before the Romans besieged the city, by which means they were out of that danger which was as a tempest being so violent in those parts, that unlesse a man were under shelter at the coming thereof, he could not escape in safety, and likewise the heat was extrem. But when they were thus under shelter, the Romans meant by the terrible ones, overthrew the wals of the city.

Thou shalt bring down the work of strangers, as the heat in a day place, &c. here the Prophet goeth on in his allegory taken from a storm and heat, from which Christians shall be sheltered. As the heat by the shadow of a cloud coming between, is abated, and made nothing grievous, so he meaneth that the heat of that war made by the Romans should be to Christians, Gods protection coming as a cloud over them, they should not be hurt thereby. And to shew the greatnesse greatnesse of the heat he calls it heat in a dry place, for in such a place the heat of the Sun is most annoying, and he varies the phrase of terrible ones, calling them strangers, to shew that they who should overthrow the city of the wicked Jews, called strangers for their wickednesse, were also a wicked nation, and strangers from the Covenant of promise, as the Gentiles are called, Eph. 2.12. For that which is added, the branch of the terrible ones shall be brought low: here again be speaks of the strong Nations imploied against the Jews for their sins, as those that after this work done to which God in his providence had appointed them should also be judged, as the Assyrians, and Caldees, and Romans also, who though they flourished long after Jerusalem was destroyed, yet within four hundred years after they were over-run by the Goths and Vandals, and brought very low, continuing so many years.

Vers.6.

And upon this mountain shall the Lord make a feast of fat things to all people, &c. By this feast is meant that Mat. 22. to which the great King inviteth, that is, to beleve in Jesus Christ, and so to be fed with his promises of pardon of sin, and life everlasting, of which there is joy, as at a most sumptuous feast, where fat meats and wines chearing the spirits are most abundantly. For so it is there said, My fatlings are killed, and all things ready, and Psal. 22.16. it is said, The meek shall eat and be satisfied. To this effect also Calvin and Musculus &c. Jerom referring it also to the time of the Gospel faith, that all these fat things are the priviledges of the Jews, as being Gods peculiar people now turned over to the Gentiles. Before he fed one Nation only with this milk and honey, but now all Nations imbracing the Gospel. And this feast is said to be made upon this mountain, because in Canaan, the Metropolis whereof was Jerusalem and Mount Zion, the Gospel was first preached, and there men of all Nations under heaven, began first to hear it, Act. 2.

Vers.7.

And he will destroy in this mountain the face of the covering, &c. Jerom precipitavit faciem vinculi colligati super omnes populos, & telam quam orditus est super universas nationes: Understanding the band of sinne whereby they were bound, and consequently of death before Christs sufferings, whereby sin was expiated, and death turned into life, because by death the faithfull are now let into life, in regard of which blessed change tears are wiped from their eyes, which before they had cause to shed, as he addeth, ver. 8. as being most miserable, and in an ignominious and reproachfull estate, being counted uncircumcised and heathen, but now this disgrace ceasing, as in the next words, and the rebuke of his people shall he take away from off all the earth. But the word דלרש doth not signifie a band but a covering, and the word is doubled to shew the thicknesse of this covering.

Vers.8.

Calvin saith, that some understand hereby the calamities of Christs Churches in all places, covering them or overwhelming them, so that the glory thereof could not appear, but he and Musculus both do rather prefer another understanding, viz. the covering of ignorance. But forsomuch as the word rendred shall take away, signifyeth to swallow up, and in varying the word, he saith, the rebuke of his people, it is not so genuine hereby to understand their ignorance as their outward misery, causing tears, which he saith should be wiped away. Wherefore I resolve, that the deliverance of the Church in the time of Constantine, after persecutions of long continuance, is here prophesied of. They were all that time covered as it were with sackcloth, as the two witnesses in the Revelation, and did sow in tears, and had it objected to them, that their God was poor, and unable to help them, because they his servants were in such want and misery. But he saith, this covering should be swallowed up by riches and glory coming to them in stead thereof, as Mordecai had his sackcloth taken off, and royall apparell put on, and then they should reap in joy, and their misery as a sign of those that served not the true God should no more be objected to them. After they had suffered for a time he here to their comfort promiseth them deliverance, and this joy begun here shall be everlasting in heaven, for which John speaking of that Rev. 7. 17. hath the same words. And herein and in permitting his to encounter with many af-

fictiones first the Lord dealeth with his servants, as Cyrus did sometime with his souldiers, he caused them to labour hard one day in cutting down wood and other works, and the next day made them a great feast, then he asked them whether of these two daies they had rather have, they all with one consent said, This: then he, Ye must then manfully fight against your enemies till you have overcome them, and then ye shall feast with their spoils. Some following the version of Ierom understand Antichrist, saith Sasbon, Haimo the devil, Carthusian the effect of originall sin, Th. Aquin. death, Judei the successe of the Gentiles: others of them their craft and subtlety covering over their evil intent against the Jews.

After this the thanksgiving of the faithfull is set forth, and then it is said, In this mountain shall the hand of the Lord rest, and Moab shall be troden down, &c. That the Church should have good cause to rejoyce, here are two things promised. 1. Gods continuall presence and protection in his mountain, by which his Church is meant, he would not be to her as a lightning, which soon vanisheth away, but continuing. 2. For her enemies set forth by Moab, they shall be troden under foot as chaff upon the dunghill, a thing in those parts so base that they made no more account of it, but to cast it out and to tread it under foot as dung, Vulg. Lat. Ut plaustro, an instrument to cut withall, but then it must come from דגל, but Vatablus and others derive it from דגל signifying dung, the word is Madmenah. He seems herein to allude to that which David did to them, 2 Sam. 8. 2. But Madmena, saith Calvin, is the name of a city, Jer. 16. 4. and haply by treading them under as chaff in Madmenah, he meant in one of their most fruitfull cities: thus he, but looking into Jeremy, I finde no such name, but only דגל dung, and looking back to Isa. 10. 31. there Madmenah is mentioned, as a city in the tribe of Benjamin, and not in Moab. Leaving this therefore I rest in the former, nothing else by this simile meant, but the greatest abasement of Moab that might be, and because Moab was a continuall enemy to the Jews, who were Gods peculiar people, the abject condition in which all the enemies of the Church should be, when God had once set it up in all places amongst the Gentiles.

And he shall spread forth his hands as one that swimmeth in the midst of them, &c. Here by another similitude, saith Calvin, he sheweth how the Lord should do all that hath been before said for the comfort of his people, and the confusion of their enemies, viz. not coming with the noise of arms and men to fight, but without all noise, as one swimming pierceth the waters, and passeth through them, so the Lord by the power of his Spirit passeth through all difficulties, there being no resistance in any, that can hinder his effecting of this great work. Ad. Sasbon referring it to Moab saith, he shall be as one swimming stretching out his hands and feet, as a man overcome, and in the water struggling to save himself from drowning. Lyra also expounds it thus, rendring it, stretching out his hands under him, and to make this sense good, he saith, he speaks according to our Proverb, when one brings another most under, he saith, I will make thee lie like a frog, and thus is a man swimming. Vatablus refers this to Christ stretching out his hands upon the crosse whereby he overcame and brought under the devil, that had the power of death, set forth by Moab, and all the enemies of his Church. And this doth most arride me, because a man stretching out his hands to swim in the water, is labouring for life, and may seem most unfit and unable by so doing to prevail over his enemies. In like manner Christ having his hands stretched out upon the crosse, when he suffered death, might seem no way able by this his suffering to subdue his enemies, yet he did, Heb. 2. 15. and Col. 2. 15. and this is further confirmed by the words following, and shall abase his glory with the layings in wait of his hands: Our New Translation referring it to Moab, with the spoils of their hands, some with the boles of his hands: The Vulg. Lat. Cum allisione manuum ejus, Vatablus, arms or cubits of his hands, so spoken because herewith a man swimmeth, that allegory being still insisted in. The word אֲרִיבֵר indeed signifyeth cubiti or insidia, but because Christs overcoming the devil was after the manner of those that do struere insidias, that is, unawares, I preferre this. For certainly the devill never thought that by suffering death Christ should overcome him, otherwise he could not have moved Judas to betray him, and so he got his overthrow as an enemy his by an ambush unexpectedly. For spoils, or collisions: I finde no such signification of the word, but Cataracts it signifieth also, or multitudes, both unapt to expound it by here; of Moabs stretching out his hands to swimme it cannot be meant, because Moab was before said to be troden under foot by him, and the same who trod under foot stretched out his hands to swim, and not Moab, who was now past doing so, and can it be thought that Moab should abase his own glory, as it is here said, that this he should do: And these words in the midst thereof, Heb. hath it, and not under him, evince, that he who swimmeth is not Moab but the Lord.

Verf. 12.

And the forresse of thy high wals, he shall bring down, &c. This is added, because the Moabites trusted to the strength of their wals, as impregnable by any power, for which cause he useth not one but three words, he shall bring down, destroy, and cast to the ground, and not resting here, he addeth, to the dust, meaning that no memorial thereof should be left. And this concerns all the wicked, if they shall think their strength and works to be invincible, and hereupon carry themselves proudly as Moab did, Chap. 16. 6. they must know, that there is no strength against the Lord, but when he will shall be brought down and become as the dust.

Note.

CHAP. XXVI.

Verf. 1.

IN that day a song shall be sung in Judah, &c. Here the Prophet returns again to the rejoycing of the faithfull begun to be spoken of, Cha. 25. 9. after the destruction of Moab, setting forth their enemies, by reason of whom they could never be free from oppression in times past. And herein he did not only aim at propounding a form of thanksgiving then, but also at the comfort whereupon they might bear themselves in the time of their miseries by the Babylonians, and afterwards by the Romans. And by the land of Judah is meant, both it and every other countrey where the faith of Christ shall be confessed, Psal. 137. they could not for sorrow sing in a strange land, but now in their own land they should. And what should they sing, but We have a strong City, Salvation hath God appointed for wals and bulwarks: this makes the faithfull sing for joy, because they have a strong city, not like Jerusalem as it formerly stood, the wals whereof were broken down, and it destroyed, but because after all those sufferings by their enemies, a time shall come of being walled about with Gods singular protection, no enemies being able to prevail against them any more. For the defence of a city lyeth not in the wals, but though there be no wals God can protect it, and if there be the strongest wals, if God protects it not, they are vain. Yet the beleiving Jews took care about building wals in the time of Nehemiab, because means of safety are not to be neglected, but yet they are not to be trusted in where they are, but the almighty power and strength of God only. A like speech to this is also chap. 60. 18. The safe standing of this city is opposed to the chief city of Moab before spoken of, for as the wals thereof should be cast down, so contrariwise it is here promised, That none should be able to ruine these wals; for which cause it is said, not a Saviour, but Salvation in the abstract, which none can hurt. The Vulgar for wals and bulwarks, hath muros & antemurales, which agreeth better with the Hebrew, for the word here used signifieth a little wall before a greater, or a ditch for the greater strength. Understanding hereby salvation Jesus, which Hebr. is the same word, he is said to be our wall and fore-wall, 1. Because he is a defence to such as go about any thing in his name, for which the Apostle saith, Let all things be done in the name of our Lord Jesus; 2. In time of danger ger his name being called upon, giveth present confidence, although before was fear and diffidence, as Bernard saith. 3. Because faith in his name accompanied with works, as Jerom hath it, is a most strong defence against our strongest enemy, the devil, for it is a shield able to quench all his fiery darts, Ephes. 6. and who so resists the devil being strong in the faith, makes him flee from him.

Verf. 2. Open the gates, that the righteous may enter in. Having spoken Ver. 1. of a City most safe and excellent, that is, Jerusalem to be re-built after their return out of the Babylonish Captivity, now it is shewed, what manner of persons should enter into it and inhabit there, and because Jerusalem was a figure of the Church gathered out of all Countreys and Nations, what manner of persons it shall consist of, viz. of righteous persons keeping truth, nor that there shall not be any wicked or hypocrites in the Church, whilst this world standeth, but because at their return from Babylon, there should be more righteous, and fewer wicked then ever before, for they were a true-hearted company, and full of faith in Gods promises that returned. or else they would not after so many years have returned from Babylon, where they were settled in quiet, but have stayed still there, as others did. In like manner the Primitive Church was at the first full of righteous persons, and true-hearted, though they afterwards degenerated, as also the Jews had done before the next destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans; so that there was not a more profligate Nation under heaven. This City then consisted not sely of righteous persons, but they that entred are called so comparatively, in respect of the corrupt conditions in the Church in other times, because no such pure Church shall ever be in this world, but chaff together with corn, and tares growing amongst the wheat, as both Calvin and Musculus agree. Some, namely the ancient Fathers and others after them, because no such righteous company can be in the time of this life, referre it to the world to come, and the glorified estate of Gods people in heaven: but other things following, and particularly vers. 4. where hope is spoken of, agree not to that estate. It might seem ridiculous indeed, that such a City with gates should be spoken of, to such as lived after the wals and gates broken down by the enemy, lying also in the ruines so many years, but to faith looking at the power of God, and his truth in his promises, it was serious, and so a singular comfort. And in bidding the righteous enter in, who keep truth, he intimateth it to be full of unrighteousness, when he wrote this, but the case should be altered after purging by the fire of affliction, as Chap. 1. 29. Note that none enter the City of God rightly, that is, as bidden guests, that live in the sin of injustice and fraud, but only the just and true in word and deed, who are upright-hearted, others the Lord will challenge, as him without the wedding-garment, saying, Friend, how camest thou in hither not having a wedding-garment? But this is not spoken, as if any were perfectly righteous here, but sincere in matters concerning either God or man, and not tainted with hypocrisie.

Thou wilt keep him in peace, peace, whose minde is stayed on thee, &c. Heb. The cogitation conjoynd thou wilt keep peace, peace, because he trusteth in thee. The Vulgar Latine, Vetus error abiit, &c. because the word W signifieth figmentum as well as imagination, and he expounds it, The old error of the wicked now holds no longer, That they by reason of the pleasures which they had in this world, were the most happy of all others, for then they shall plainly see the contrary, for he understands all as spoken of the life to come. But although here be a word, which may be rendred error, yet here is none signifying old, or is gone. Wherefore to leave this, it is to be understood as spoken to God by the Prophet to the comfort of all the righteous, who were bidden vers. 2. to enter into the City, the wals whereof are salvation; here such are further described to be the faithfull, whose hearts set forth by cogitation, are joynd to the Lord, which appears more by the words following, where they are said to trust in him, for these, he saith, Thou wilt keep; and to shew their happiness, in the midst of the sentence he cries, Peace, Peace. Calvin renders, Cogitationi conjuncta tibi custodis pacem; and Varatius little differs here-from, but by conjoynd cogitation Calvin understands Gods thoughts towards man, viz. his thoughts of predestination from Eternity, because this is the foundation of the peace and welfare of the faithfull, who do put their trust in him; the word conjoynd or firm being added to thought, in opposition to mens thoughts, which are erratical, and not fixed, and therefore their keeping in safety should depend thereupon, they should alwayes be in danger. He hath also another Exposition of the heart alwayes fixed and seriously set upon God, and not by fits and girds, for such God keeps peace in abundance, as is meant by the word doubled here. But this he rejects, because so the first words and the last come all to one. And why they may not so do I see no reason; yea there is reason, because of the last words, to understand the first of such as are fixedly bent to Gods truth, as was said in the end of Verf. 2. That keep truths, going from none, such this is yielded as a reason why they shall be safe, Because they trust in thee. And hence this Doctrine will not kindly flow, that they only whose hearts are constantly to the truth, believe in God aright, and shall be kept in peace and peace, here and after death, here in peace of conscience, then in everlasting peace and rest, that is, the most happy and prosperous estate that may be, as the word rendred peace signifieth.

Note.

Verf. 4.

Trust in the Lord for ever, &c. After the safe condition of the righteous, who trust in God, shewed ver. 1, 2, 3. here they are exhorted therefore to trust in him alwayes, forsomuch as he is a most mighty defence unto them not, for a time, but to all eternity.

Verf. 5.

For he bringeth them down that dwell on high, &c. This answereth to that against Moab, Chap. 25. 12. and therefore is to be expounded of the whole company of the wicked enemies of Gods people, of all whom Moab is put for an instance, and not for any particular City of Jerusalem, as Jerom would have it, or of Rome, as the Hebrews, but it is the City of the devil, as Augustine calls it, distinguishing all men into two, the City of God and of the devil. And the ruining of this City is spoken of, as a reason why the faithfull should trust in God, because there is great reason that we should trust in him, who by his allmighty power confounds all our enemies. Musculus understands it of Babylon, that was then so high and mighty; and of spiritual Babylon, that is Rome, which shall shortly be thus brought down, and trodden under the feet of the poor, spoken of in the next verse.

Muscul.

Verf. 6.

Calvin.

The foot shall tread it down, &c. That is, saith Calvin, the poor Jews, who lived long exiles there, when once by the Medes and Persians it was subdued, shall be exalted by King Cyrus the Conquerour, and then they shall have the Babylonians in contempt, as much as ever they had them. But if it be understood of the wicked and righteous in general, it will better agree with the premisses, wherein Moab and not Babylon is threatned to be thus trodden under foot, and brought down to the dust.

Verf. 7.

The way of the just is uprightness, or righteousness: And he addeth, That God weigheth it, some render it, Thou makest it equal, but the first is most agreeable to the Hebrew. The meaning is, in what estate soever the just are, they keep in the right way, never being beaten out of it by any judgements, and so God maketh their way finally prosperous, putting it, and the way of the wicked, as it were into the balance, to the one giving a good event at the last, and overthrowing the other. It is a confirmation then of that which was before said of the wicked Cities being trodden down under the feet of the righteous, not for any merit in their own justice, but because God who loveth uprightness makes it so. And for this for more explanation sake, Calvin prefers that reading, Thou shalt make the just mans way equal; but forsomuch as this cannot be without forcing it to another signification, besides that the word will bear, I rest in the former, which may be construed to the same effect, such Gods weighing of our wayes implies an end, viz. if they be right, to keep us in them, into which he first set us, and to make them prosperous, and such as a man may with comfort go in, as in a way plain and equal.

Even in the way of thy judgements (O Lord) we have hoped in thee, &c. Here the Prophet brings the righteous in speaking, after that he had said, That God made their way delightfull for them to walk in, and shewing, how it was thus not only in prosperity, but adversity, viz. through hope of a good issue of sharpest judgements and deliverance thence from through his almighty power, to which effect Calvin speaketh, and noteth it to be a sign of hypocrites, to hope in God only in prosperity, to the sincere even the way of judgement is joyous through faith, Rom. 5.1. The desire of our soul is to thy name, &c. that is, that thy name may be glorified by working mightily for our deliverance from our enemies, when they shall be made to cease detracting from thee, as though thou wert not able to save us, for we are more affected with a desire of the vindication of thy great name from this blasphemy, then of our own prosperity. And to the memory of thee That is, that thou maist make thy self and goodness memorable to posterities to come by working so great a work of deliverance to thy people. Calvin by name understands the word of God, wherein he hath revealed himself to us, whereas his Essence is unknown, and by memory of him, the notions touching him fixed in the minde, and not coming in sometimes, and then going out again. I rest in the former.

Verf. 8.

Calvin.
Note.

My soul hath desired thee by night, &c. Having spoken in the name of the faithfull in general, now he speaks of himself in particular, and how intent he was to the same, both in affection set forth by soul, and in his understanding set forth by spirit; and that continually both night and day, although some by night understand the time of adversity, but there is no need of that Trope in this place. And why was the Prophets soul so desirous of God, and drawn by so great love towards him in times of so great sufferings, as were to come, he resolves this in the next words, When the judgements of God are in the earth, the inhabitants of the earth will learn righteousness. The sufferings will be more available to turn men from sinne to righteousness, then prosperity, which is commonly abused to licentiousnesse in sinning. And this he confirms, Verf. 10.

Verf. 9.

The wicked is in favour, but learns not righteousness, &c. or, Let him have favour, as in our new Translation, for the word will bear either. Some think this to be spoken by way of opposition to vers. 8. as if the indocibility of the wicked even by judgements were here set forth, but it is plainly opposed to the words going before vers. 9. as if he had said, although some inhabitants of the earth by judgements are turned, viz. the predestinated to life, yet others there are, which be so wicked, that nothing will turn them, although God seeks by his mercies to allure them, and placeth them in the land of the righteous, where they have all good means, and Gods glory shines in miracles also, which are able to move any heart, yet they shut their eyes against them, and are nothing moved hereby to repentance, as the next words imply, They will do perversely in the Land of uprightnesses, they will not see the majesty of the Lord. And this was the case of the Jews in the holy Land and City, becoming most notoriously evil, and as Musculus addeth of such Monks and Friars as live now at Jerusalem under a pretence of piety, and of Priests and men in holy orders in Rome, counted by them the most holy Land. And we may adde, it is the case of them that live in the reformed Church, and professe to be of it, but are of most deformed lives. Let all such know, that hereby their sins and condemnation are much aggravated, so that it shall be easier for Sodom and Gomorrah at the day of judgement, and therefore this is mentioned here as an aggravation, like unto which is Rom. 2.4.

When thy hand is lifted up, they will not see, but they shall see, &c. Hebr. The mighty acts done by his high hand. They shall see] That is, by feeling the weight of it in judgments bringing upon them, and then they shall be confounded. The zeal of people, the fire of thy enemies shall devour them; we may put the first words to the words before-going, thus, They shall be ashamed at the zeal, meaning when they should see the Nations honouring Christ, whom they despised, or not being ashamed in themselves for their foul sinne, it should tend to their confusion before men here, who should debase them in every place, and the fire of Gods wrath, whereby he destroyeth his enemies, as he did sometime Sodom, shall destroy them. Of Gods wrath set forth by fire, see Deut. 31.22, 41. and this is thought by Musculus to be particularly spoken of the Jews, to which I also agree, if by Jews we understand the wicked unbelievers of them.

Vers. 12.

Hebr. for us.

Jehovah thou wilt ordain peace for us, thou hast wrought all our works in us. Having shewed the destruction of the wicked he returns again to the faithfull, and brings them in speaking most confidently, that they shall not come to such an end as enemies, but enjoy peace and happinesse, hereby also meant, constantly and everlastingly, and of this they make this an argument, that he had done such mighty works tending to their peace already for them, for they are brought in speaking, as living after their return from the Babylonish Captivity, or their return to the faith at length, from which they had gone so long. And it is a good argument to which we may trust, God that hath begun a good work for us, especially of grace and exempting us from misery, will perfect it in glory and eternal felicity. To this effect Calvin and Musculus, who reject the applying of this against the Papists, to prove that we have no strength of free-will to attain grace, but that this is Gods meer work in us. For, say they, we have plain places enough to prove this, and if we should insist upon this, it would easily be eluded. But if we reason from hence to peace in Heaven for ever, and to the perfecting of the good work begun in us, as Musculus doth, I can see no reason why we should not take in as meant by this word [All our works] all works of grace wrought in us, as well as any other of favour in this world, yea rather, because he spake last of the uprightness of the way of the righteous, and then comes to this conclusion. And it is a true position, God works all the works of grace by his spirit, whereby we become acceptable to him, for the bringing of us to his special favour here, and to life hereafter, our weaknesse being such, that of our selves we can do nothing, yet to shew that he works not in us as in dead Images, he bids us turn, and reproves those that will not, thus implying a will concurring with his Grace in the act of turning.

Vers. 13.

Calvin.

Other Lords besides thee have ruled over us, only in thee we will remember thy name. Here the faithfull go on to recount their former miseries, when they were under the Babylonians and Assyrians, a like place unto which Calvin noteth Ezek. 20.24. to be, I gave them laws that were not good, meaning the Laws put upon them by tyrants tending to their oppression, when they were under the Heathen, to do things against a good conscience, as they that live now under Papists are urged to do. Thus they were domineered over, but what do the faithfull now? Only in thee we will remember, &c. That is, to thy glory, or by faith being in thee, for the faithfull are one with Christ, and through Christ with God the Father, we will even in such an underling condition remember thy name, and what thou hast, and believe thou wilt do for it, that it may be feared and had in honour, and therefore for us who are so dear and near unto thee, though for the present thou seemest to neglect us. And this is the virtue of a true faith, even in misery to remember how dear we are to God, and therefore to be comfortable, and not in time of prosperity only, when men are against us, and we are in their power that hate us, and we have none but God only to think upon, and so to be stayed up with hope of rising one day to a better condition.

Note.

Vers. 14.

Calvin.

The dead shall not live, nor the slain rise again, &c. Some, saith Calvin, understand this of the faithfull, but it is manifestly spoken of the wicked enemies with opposing whom to the faithfull, who shall rise again, as he saith

vers. 19.

vers. 19. he here beginneth. But he doth not here mean the general resurrection, for then all shall rise again, both good and bad, but recovering out of the fire before threatned, that it should devour them, from this the slain hereby shall never recover, but from a temporal death go to an everlasting, the rising again of the body to judgement, being counted as no living, but an associating of it to the soul in the everlasting flames of hell fire. Therefore thou hast visited and cast them out, and destroyed all the memory of them. This is added for further illustration, that the meaning of the former words might the better appear. For this is meant by the wickeds not living nor rising again, the utter destruction of them for ever, so that neither they nor their memory shall live any more, but rot, as Prov. 10.7. and if there be any memory of them remaining, it shall be but as a rotten and stinking carcase.

Thou hast added to the nation (O Lord.) Here, after utter destruction threatned to the wicked, the Prophet returns to the faithfull, and to Prophecie how they contrariwise shall, from the paucity to which they were brought by many miseries suffered at the hands of their enemies, be hereafter encreased exceedingly to the great glory of God, and therefore he doubles the word, Thou hast added, thou hast added to the Nation; and yet to make it more plain, Thou hast enlarged the bounds of the Land. Thus prophesying of the Gentiles conversion to the faith, when the Church set forth by the Nation and Land shall be made far greater then ever before, as it was fulfilled by the propagation of the Gospel into all Nations, begun Matth. 28. 16. Act. 10. so that the premises in this and Chap. 25. cannot be understood of things to be done at the day of judgement, as the common stream of Interpreters hath heretofore gone.

In tribulation they have visited thee, and poured out their prayer whilst thy chastening was upon them. Hebr. A mussion or prayer in secret, thy chastisement upon them, the word [being] understood. Here the Prophet, to make way to the comfort spoken of, v. 19. brings in the Church complaining to God of her miseries a long time suffered before that happiness, and the happiness spoken of before, v. 15. wherein the faithfull ceased not to visit God with their prayers, and secret sighs and groans unto him, as not being without hope, but full of hope, as a woman in travel, that crieth out, expects a joyfull time of deliverance, as followeth, v. 17, 18. though she continues in her pangs a long time, seeing nothing to come yet of her hope but an empty winde. Vers. 18. Neither salvation restored to the Land nor the fall of the inhabitants of the world. Where by Land, understand the Land of the faithfull, and by the inhabitants of the world, the wicked oppressing and persecuting the faithfull, by whose fall from all power, salvation accrueeth to the Church. But this is the condition of Gods people in this world, to be afflicted and oppressed by the wicked, they being a long time suffered, though praised against, to go on in prosperity and power, and these all this time to lye in misery, their hopes and prayers coming to nothing: But the comfort followeth, Vers. 19. Thy dead shall live, with my dead body they shall rise, awake and sing, &c. The word wish is here added more then needs, for the words Hebr. run thus, Thy dead, my dead body shall live. For the faithfull are Christs body, Eph. 4. 12. And therefore to shew this, My dead body is added by apposition, to shew, how the faithfull being dead and buried are to be accounted of, even Christs dead body, which the bands of death could not hold, for which he is called the first fruits of them that sleep; and it is hence inferred, that if the dead rise not again, then is not Christ risen, sith what is done to the first fruits, must also in time be done to the whole crop, by carrying it out of the field. This verse sheweth the faith of the Prophet touching a better condition of the faithfull to come, although they must wait long first; he speaks to the Lord, calling them who were before compared to a woman in travel, his dead. But whereas I have expounded this of the resurrection at the last day, it is not to be restrained to that only, but also to be understood of rising out of misery and sin, to grace and prosperity; for the life which shall afterwards be everlasting, is begun by joy through the Spirit of grace in this this world. Calvin, by these words, My dead body, understands the Prophets carcase, touching which he sheweth his faith, that though it should lye rotting in the grave, yet it should rise again, as others dead in the Lord. The Vulg. Lat. render the word מי My slain, whereof Lyra gives this sense, not only they that dye in the Lord, who are called his dead, shall live, but my body, which by the Spirit I know shall fall by the sword, even they and it together shall rise again. And Corn. a Lapide. Of this speech there are two parts, 1. Of the Prophet to the Lord; Thy dead shall live. 2. Of the Lord answering him, My slain shall rise again: Then follows the Prophets to the faithfull, Awake out of the dust, &c. And whereas the word before, These shall rise again, being plural, is of the singular number, he helps that, saying it is per enallagen numeri. And if we follow this, I confess it runs best of all without any word understood, or forcing any construction upon it. Junius also, for my carcases, hath cadavera mea resurgent, but he will have the next words to be understood as spoken of the Lord, by a Prosopopeia, and all understood of rising out of misery, by reason whereof it might seem as impossible for the people of God to come to any flourishing estate here, as for dead carcases to rise again; but it was shewed to Ezekiel, chap. 37. that God was able to effect this. And thus it will answer best to vers. 14. where it is plain, that the dead spoken of are not the corporeally dead, but such as are under great sufferings, being wicked and without all life of grace; of whom it is said that they shall not live or rise, but of these, that they shall do both. Arise out of the dust, &c. Here the Lord is brought in speaking, as by the power of whose word all things are done, and shewing how his dead before comforted with a promise of rising again, should arise, viz. as easily as herbs, which seem to be dead in winter, but the spring coming with sweet dews, spring and grow up again, for which he saith, Thy dew is the dew of herbs, being made so by the power of his word who speaketh thus. For though we be brought never so low, which is set forth by lying in the dust, yea lye dead and rotting in the grave, for so dust returns to dust, Ecclesi. 12. 1. yet the Almighty can and will raise us, when he utters the word, Arise out of the dust, as Joh. 5. 28. And touching the wicked, whom he calls מי dissolved to death by fear, in the next words, The earth shall give up the dead; and not מי, as the faithfull being dead are called in the beginning of this verse; he saith not they shall spring up as herbs by the dews falling, but the earth shall cast them forth as an abortive, as the word signifieth, which is here used מל. So that here we have a notable ground of beleeving the Churches rising out of misery, when it is hereby most dead, and of our rising out of the grave, that are faithfull, to sing and rejoyce in heaven: and the difference which shall then be betwixt such and the wicked of the world, whom the earth also shall give up, as Revel. 20. but as abortive stinking carcases, be cast into everlasting burning, not being suffered to lye in rest in their graves any longer. Some have for dead, giants, because the word signifieth both, rendering it The Land of giants thou shalt bring to ruine; and by bringing to ruine the last word מל may be expounded; thus therefore the Vulgar Latine and Lyra by giants understanding sinners, seeks to make it good, but then they must be called giants for their most corrupt qualities, whereof see Gen. 6. Junius by adding words, After that thou hast cast those that are without life to the earth. Chald. Paraphras. But the wicked, to whom thou hast given strength, but they have not kept thy word, thou wilt cast to hell: The sense comes all to one, but the first is best to express the Hebrew according to the letter, and suits best with the precedent words.

Come (my people) enter into thy chambers and shut the doors about thee, &c. The song of praise being ended, vers. 19. the Prophet doth here in the Name of the Lord, call upon his people to be comforted in the time of calamity to come yet before the joyfull time hitherto spoken of. By entering into their chambers he means retiredness of cogitation, how true God will be of his word to trust in him in times of greatest misery, that they shall soon pass away again, and then shall shall come the joyfull time before spoken of. For their shutting of the doors, this is meant to keep out all temptations from their hearts, whereby they might be made to faint: It is then as if he had said, Let no door of your hearts be open, whereby the devil may enter to make you despair, but let it be kept close shut by faith and trust in God against all gusts of temptation, that might make you stagger. And good cause is there, for after retiredness thus for a moment, the indignation of God dealing so sternly with his people, shall be past and gone. For all our sufferings here are but momentany, being compared to the eternity of joy to come, 2 Cor. 4.17. Lyra and others that expound the joy beforegoing, of the joy of the Saints in heaven, by chambers understand the graves wherein the dead bodies of the Saints lye till the day of judgement, when they shall be thus beautified: As if he had said, Rest quietly in your graves, till my judgements be executed upon the wicked world; as the souls under the Altar are bidden to rest a little while, Revel. 6.11. and Christ bids his disciples wait a little, Joh. 16.33. But because the faithfull share with the wicked in sufferings in this world, this entring into their chambers is better referred to the quieting of their mindes in God whilst they do suffer by shrouding themselves by faith under the shadow of his wings, as in close chambers, Psal 91.

Sasbont.

For behold the Lord goeth out of his place to visit the iniquity of the inhabitants of the earth, &c. As if he had said, Thus (ye my people) may perceive how my indignation shall soon be past, for I now am going out to visit your enemies with judgements. And he speaks of the Lords going out, not as if he did at any time move from place to place; but because whilst the wicked prosper, God seemeth to sit still, as neglecting to do any thing against them: And in saying thus, he had respect unto the Ark, saith Calvin, where God was said to dwell, but at times, when the wicked prevailed, this seemed none other to them but as a poor cottage, wherein he lay hid, as not able to do any thing; but when he executes judgements, he comes forth as it were, and makes his enemies feel his might, as a great King going out with his hosts and destroying his rebels. And the earth shall discover her blouds and not hide any more her slain. Here the Prophet having shewed, that God will go forth to judge sin, specifeth the sin which above others he will judge, viz. bloodshed of the righteous. Musculus saith, this is spoken, not as if the Lord would judge Countries and Nations, but for the bloodshed of the innocent, that most crying sin. Oppressours and persecutors may think haply, that their blood sinking into the earth, these their cruelties shall be no more remembred; But when all other means fail of bringing to light their murders, the dumb and senseless earth, that hath long hidden them, shall hide the slain no more, that have been buried in her, but their wicked enemies shall be proceeded against, as if they came out in person to accuse them, the earth standing up as a witness, which received their blood, and so can best tell of their murders in what part of the world soever; because as every mouth of men is dumb, when God speaks not hereby, so the mouth of the earth or any creature shall speak when God opens it, as Gen. 4.

CHAP. XXVII.

*A*T that day the Lord will punish Leviathan with his sore and great and strong sword, &c. These words belong to the 26 Chap. v. 20, 21. as being a further amplification of the destruction of the wicked threatned there, because one enemy that shall be destroyed, as the greatest of all others, is here specified: And therefore it is best with Junius, ending Chap. 26. at verf. 19. to begin this, verf. 20, 21. making this for the third verf. as being all of one argument, and then the praises of God will aptly follow, for judgements thus executed upon the wicked enemies of the Church, from the lesser to the greater, verf. 2. which which may go for vers. 4. of the Chapter. For this verse, the greatest doubt is, who is meant by Leviathan; but according to the letter this is easily resolved, by comparing this with Ezek. 29. 3. where Pharaoh King of Egypt is threatened by the name of dragon, Heb. לִיָּאָן by which name Leviathan is also called in this verse, although in Vulg. Lat. it be rendred Whale: For Leviathan coming of לָוִי to adde, or accumulate, and therefore properly setting forth a body augmented to the most vast greatness of all others that live and move in the waters, hath also two other names here, a Serpent and a Dragon, for לִיָּאָן here, and לִיָּאָן in Ezek. are all one, as Pagnin. noteth, although there be a change of the last letter. But here the word Serpent is twice named with two Epithetes, 1. The Serpent a door-boult, for so the word signifieth: But in our N.Tr. is rendred piercing, because it goeth from one end of the sea to another, as a boult overthwart a door. 2. The crooked Serpent, because this is a Serpents form, setting forth his crooked conditions and devilish subtilties. Of Leviathan also, whereby the Whale or greatest Serpent, the Dragon is meant, because Isaiah calleth him here by both names, see Psal. 104. 26. and Job 41. where his might is in many words set forth, that Gods power, who made him, and can easily slay him might the better appear. Some, because a barre is strong, expound these words, The Serpent a barre; the strong Serpent, as Theodotion. Some, because a door with a barre making it fast, keeps those in strongly that are shut in prison, render it, The Serpent shutting fast up, as Symmachus. But if we take it as alluding to his swift motion from one side of the sea to another, and to his strength, overthrowing all things in his way, we shall best attain to the sense. Now for the Physical exposition made of this by one Rabbin, as Adam Sasbont. Adam Sasbont saith, that it is here meant, that God will in the end slay the great Whales of the sea and make them meat for his Saints, it is too grosse, and therefore followed by none. For it is certain, that not a huge Fish or Serpent is here properly meant, but some great Potentate most terrible to the people of God, as the Whale or Dragon, or Serpent is to all men, and that by Ezek. 29. 3. before spoken of, where the holy Ghost himself expounds it of Pharaoh. Here haply some other mighty State is meant, which Isaiah foresaw by the Spirit should arise to the great terrour of the faithfull; and by whom can this be better expounded, then by the Turk extending his dominion farre and wide, and that in the form of a Dragon, if we consider how his vast Empire lieth? the head as it were in Grecia, and Macedonia and Thracia, in Europe; his body in lesser Asia, now called Anatolia; his belly growing out, as it were round in Syria and Phanicia; his tail stretcheth out along by Egypt and the Lybian coast, and his State is in the sea of Pontus, Constantinople standing upon a neck of land in that sea. The great Turk also to make the body of his Empire so vast, hath gathered together many Countries into it, for which he may well be set forth by Leviathan, which hath the name, as was shewed before from addition. For as the Whale swallows up other fishes, and things in the sea, so the Turk Countries and Nations; and the Babylonians or Egyptians were never more deadly enemies to the Jews, then he to Christians. But the day shall come, when he shall be destroyed, as all other most potent enemies have formerly been, by the sword of God, that is, by his Almighty power, yet sharpening haply the swords of men, as instrumental to ruine this vast Empire. And this is the more probable, because after this here is joy in the Church, as in a Vineyard, ver. 2. which cannot be understood of the joy in heaven, after the consummation of this world, but of some notable destruction of Christs enemies, after which shall immediatly follow the joyfull time of the Jews conversion, whereupon this song shall be sung. Yet I deny nor, but according to other Expositours generally under the figure of temporal enemies, our spiritual enemy the devil is also set forth, who shall be finally destroyed, so as that he shall be no more formidable to Gods people, Heb. 2. 15. 1 Cor. 15. because his power, which is by carrying on in the way of death, shall utterly cease, the Saints being then in glory past his reach and not reducible any more by his temptations to a state of sin sin and death, as formerly they were, if Gods power had not supported and strengthened them in the good way. And so many names are used to expresse the nature of the devil, of Leviathan for the vastnesse of his Empire, in regard of which Gods people are but a little flock, a strong serpent for his power to be perceived when God permits, in Job's case, and the Gadarens swine, and a crooked serpent for his subtleties, and contrariety to God and his waies, which are most streight and right, but his crooked: Yet as strong as he is, Christ is stronger, Mat. 4. and by faith in him his members are able to put him to flight, 1am. 4.7.

In that day a red Vineyard, sing to her, The Vulg. a vineyard of red wine shall sing to her, it may be taken both waies, because the imperative and second future amongst the Hebrews are all one. But by the vineyard here, the Church being understood, when in the greatest purity, because the vineyard which brings forth red wine was of old counted the best, Gen. 49.22. Prov. 23.31. the meaning is, that as at the time of grapes gathering they commonly sung for joy when they had plentifull encrease of the best sort, so now the Church after many sufferings, and deliverance therefrom, their enemies being destroyed, there should be great joy to her, as being turned most fruitfull, and that of the sweetest and best grapes, Chap. 5.1. There was a song of complaint to this vineyard for bringing forth sour grapes, here contrariwise, so that it is plainly opposed to that, it being a lamentable song, this a most joyfull one, as the causes were contrary.

And therefore as there the laying open of the vineyard to the wilde beasts, is threatned, contrariwise here, vers. 2. the fencing and watering of this vineyard, &c. is promised. I the Lord keep it, &c. This he saith, he doth now and alwaies, though in affliction he may seem to neglect it for sin, and he waters it so, as is said 1 Cor. 3. Paul plants and Apollo waters, and that continually by his word and spirit, seeking to make it fruitfull, as the rain doth the earth, and he addeth, I will keep it from enemies, viz. when that day of bringing forth such sweet fruit shall come. Not Moses, or the Prophets, but the Lord himself is the keeper of his Church, saith Luther, so happy and safe is her condition. But till she be purged to bring forth better fruits, she shall be liable to danger by enemies, because in his state only the Lord promiseth keeping her from their visitings by war, and other miseries accompanying wars.

There is no fury in me, who shall give me briars, thorns? I will go forth in war, and burn them together. Junius will have this spoken by way of preventing an objection, which might be made against the premises, thus; Doth the Lord indeed so tenderly defend his vineyard both day and night? how then happeneth it that so much hurt is done to it by the enemy, the Caldees, Egyptians, &c? Sol. They bring me forth briars and thorns in stead of sweet grapes, as Hab. 6.4. and therefore by these enemies I warre against them and burn up their city. Musculus takes it as an amplification of the premises by the similitude of briars, as if he had said, though for a time I may seem to be angry with my vine, yet I have no anger against it to perdition, but to castigation only: if ye speak of anger to perdition, set the wicked in the Church before me, who are as briars, and I will come against them in way of war, and at once as a fire my wrath shall burn them up. Varablus saith, he speaks as one grieved, that by the sins of his chosen people he was constrained to deal so harshly with them, wishing rather that he had to do with reprobates, when he must come so with judgements, and that there might be none occasion thus to deal with his people. The Reader may follow any of these Expositions. And if it be taken for a preventing of an Objection, the next words vers. 5. must be taken as a means prescribed by God in time of wrath to recover his favour. If he shall lay hold of my strength, and make peace with me, &c. For this is the only way when Gods strength is up in arms as it were, to lay hold upon it by humbly seeking to the Lord in prayer, for so his power that is otherwise irresistible, is held from doing any more hurt, and man becomes most potent, as Jacob wrestling and prevailing, yet after the manner of a friend who findes favour with his king, before angry, but now reconciled and at peace with him, and for more assurance and elegancies sake, the word make peace is doubled here. If the former words be taken as a desire rather to have to do with the wicked in way of wrath, and shewing unwillingnesse to proceed in hostility against his chosen people, these words must be understood as further expressing Gods sorrow, that his people should so provoke him, and not speedily when they have done so turn by humiliation, that they might have peace, for which cause he saith וְיָחִיץ יְהוָה Oh let him lay hold upon my strength, &c.

Vers.6.

Afterwards Jacob shall make roots, Hebr. Jacob shall make his comers to root; So also Junius: the meaning is, As in time of peace a Nation is encreased which was before diminished in war, so the people coming of Jacob reconciling themselves to God after many sufferings, and attaining peace again with him, shall like a tree which seemed dead but had life in the roots, grow and flourish again, and encrease so as they never did, even to the replenishing of the whole earth, that is, under the Gospel, when all countreys turned Israelites by embracing the faith, which had the root there in Christ and his Apostles. For all beleivers now are Israelites, after Isaac heirs of the promise, Gal. 4. and so all the world is filled with them, or shall certainly be because it is said, the fulnesse of the Gentiles shall come in.

Vers.7.

Hath he smitten him according to the stroak of him that smote him? These words are added by the Prophet further to confirm the former, as if he had said, considering the great encrease that Israel shall attain unto, judge now, whether there fury in the Lord against his people or no, though he smote them and that grievously, and it will plainly appear, that it was not in fury, as he smites the wicked of the world. He smote him not according to the smiting of the wicked heathen, that in those daies smote him, thinking utterly to root him out, if their malice had been given way unto. For God, as the issue will declare, sought not this, when he was most provoked, but that by his smiting they might learn to amend, and so be restored and prosper more then ever they did. This I have from Calvin, who also addes another, and preferres it, viz. God hath not smitten Israel, as he smites his enemies, the wicked, who smote him, for he puts this difference betwixt his own and the wicked of the world, smiting these to correction, them to utter destruction, and therefore the faithfull ought patiently to bear his stroak, howsoever it comes, as the wise will the sharpest reproof of a friend, which is for his good, Prov. 27.6. Better are the strokes of a lover, then the kisses of a deceiver: yet indeed men are never so tried, as when Gods stroak comes by wicked instruments, therefore David would not fall into the hands of men. But we must look up to God, and upon these wicked executioners but as his rod or staff to smite us, as Ashur is called Chap. 10. 5. and be supported through hope notwithstanding, in regard of the good by him intended unto us, that gives them this power. And this I also prefer, because of the next words, Is he slain according to the slaughter of those that slew him? where, not their smiting and Gods are compared together, but Gods smiting of the one and of the other, they being slain so as never to come to a flourishing state again; these so, as a vine is pruned to make it grow the better.

Vers.8.

And to this also agreeth vers. 8. In measure, in the shooting out he argues with her, that is, not lik a Tyrant destroying his Vine altogether, but in the branches, which be the shootings out, the root being still spared, yea, when he brings the greatest tempests, which commonly overthrow all things, and because such tempests in those parts came from the East, he calls it Eastern, and from Emous the East comes, Euroclydon a whirlwinde, for which he saith, he stayeth his rough winde in the day of the East. Some, saith Calvin, understanding by shootings out, the fruits of the earth wherein he punished them, will have his judgements in these outward things meant, and some understanding their encrease of men to be cut off by civill wars. But because it was another judgement, whereby the Jews were chiefly punished, the very meaning is as before, so Calvin. But Junius taking this as an answer to vers. 7. renders the words, He contends moderately with him, that is, the Jews, his people, by sending them out, viz. into Assyria and Babylon, But he takes away with his hard spirit, him, that is, their enemies, as in the day of the East-Winde. And this he further confirmeth by ver. 9, 10, 11. which indeed do thus agree excellently well with this verse. And the word נִלְוָה rendred in our New Translation, he stayeth by others even when he bloweth, signifyeth as Junius renders it, takes away or removes so by judgements, as not to be any more. For this is the different dealing of the Lord towards the faithfull, and towards the wicked, if the one sort be carried into captivity, they are but sent out, as the word נִלְוָה signifieth; but this shall be for the best in the end: the other are blown upon as by a killing east-winde never to recover life any more.

Now vers. 9. he sheweth in what regard the Lord is said to deal moderately with him, and that by sending them out for the best; Therefore by this shall all the iniquity of Jacob be purged, and this the fruit to take away his sin. That is, being thus chastened he shall be purged, as gold by fire, and separate from the dross of sin, see the like Chap. 1. 23. and to shew how reformed he should be, he instanteth in one particular, viz. the breaking down of Altars, Groves and Images, When he shall put the Stones of the Altar, as Stones of Chalke broken, Groves and Images shall not stand up any more. For this was the greatest sin of Israel, whereby God was most provoked, that they left him to worship Images, and set up Altars, and planted groves to them, and from this sin how they were purged appears by their history after their return out of captivity, they never sinned thus any more, but were most zealous to keep their Temple from such defilement both in the time of Antiochus Epiphanes, and of the Romans. And it is to be noted, that sin is not purged or done away by affliction or sorrowing therefore, but when the monuments of sin are quite demolished, which stood up formerly, and that not some, but all of them, Altars, Groves and Images, and whatsoever else sheweth sin rooted in the heart; and that idolatry is the ground of all wickednesse, because this only is named, the rest left to be understood; and that affliction causeth ceasing from sin, when nothing else will do it. Wherefore by Altars here, as by groves, appurtenances of idolatry are to be understood, and not the Lords Altar; as for us Christians, we have none but Christ, who is our Altar, Sacrifice, and Priest alone. And amongst us that have left the idolatry of Heathens and Papists, and broken down all monuments of their idolatry, idols yet stand as long as covetousnesse, and the love of fleshly pleasure remains in the heart, for the one of these is called idolatry, and for the other some are taxed as making their belly their God.

The fenced City shall be solitary, and the habitation forsaken, and left like a wilderness. After the issue of afflictions to the people of God shewed, here follows the issue of their enemies sufferings, their strongest cities, as Babylon, shall be as a wilderness, and no habitation for men any more, as was shewed, Chap. 13, 14.

When the boughs thereof be withered, they shall be broken off, and women shall come and set them on fire. Calvin, When his harvest shall wither, because the word נִלְוָה signifieth either a branch or bow, or harvest. But forso much as it was before spoken of as blasted by the East-winde, it is rather to be thought, that the Metaphor taken from a Tree with the boughs withering after blasting, is here further prosecuted, and then the fenced City is as it were the great Tree, the Inhabitants as the boughs, who by Gods judgements were made so pusillanimous, that there should need now no more an army of men to destroy, for weak women could do this. Calvin by women understands effeminate men, as Ch. 12. and both he and Musculus apply all this to the Jews, not observing the distinction of Junius, which I have followed, and is in reason to be preferred, as hath been already said. And the next words yet make it more plain, that he speaketh not of the Jews but of their enemies that smote them, he that made them will not have mercy on them, or shew them any favour, whereas this whole context runs contrary touching the Jews, for to them all favour is promised. They were heathen enemies then, of whom Jeremy, saith, Pour out thy wrath upon the Heathen that know thee not, and so they are here said to be without understanding, for which they should lie under judgements and have no favour. Whereas Calvin seeks to confirm his from these words, The Lord that hath made thee and formed thee, noting, that the Church is formed anew by the spirit, and not any other company of people whatsoever. It is not necessary alwaies to make this distinction betwixt making and forming, for the potter both makes and forms vessels of dishonour as well as of honour, and so God may be said to make and form heathen people, which shall utterly perish, and his making or forming of Babylon to such an height of worldly glory, may not amisse be understood in this place, sith such magneticall things be elsewhere spoken of her proud King, Princes, and Armies.

Vers. 12.

And in that day the Lord shall beat off from the channell of the River to the stream of Egypt. Or according to Calvin, the Lord shall shake off, as the word וַיִּכָּרֶם signifyeth, the meaning is, that when the wicked shall be destroyed, as is aforesaid, without any favour, then Gods people that were hidden as wheat under chaff, shall, as it were by winnowing, be shaken out and gathered: so some. I rather think that an earthquake is alluded to, which openeth prison doors, as Act. 16. that the prisoners may come out, as if he had said, They that were held fast in their enemies countreys, some in one place, and some in another, as in so many prisons, shall by my power shaking and weakning these Nations, so as that they want strength to hold them still, come out even from all parts between Euphrates and Nilus, meant by the river and stream of Egypt, because the Jews were here disperfed far and wide, after their captivity into Babylon, but Babylon being taken by Cyrus, they were gathered together into one, and returned into their own Land.

Vers. 13.

In that day it shall be sounded with a great Trumpet, &c. Here their gathering together to return into their own Land, to serve God there, is further amplified by a metaphor taken from a Trumpet, whereby a Captain gathereth together his souldiers into one body, that were before scattered abroad, that they may go with him to the places to which he pleaseth to leade them. For even so the Lord by his powerfull word, by a Trumpet sounding aloud, should gather his peop'e together to follow him, till they came again to Zion: And this was done when Proclamation was made by Cyrus, God stirring up his heart, that all the Jews which would, might return into their own countrey and build again the Temple of the Lord. And this gathering of them together is set forth by the founding of a Trumpet, because by this sound God of old would have them assembled together to the Tabernacle, and it is said, that at the last day a Trumpet shall sound to gather all together before Gods Tribunal. And it is more specially to be noted, that in speaking of them that should be gathered, he saith, The perished in Ashur, and the disperfed in Egypt, or the runawaies there, for so the words signifie: Which is spoken to shew the desperate condition of them in Assyria, being as good as dead, and unlikely ever to live any more in Canaan, because the Assyrians carrying them so far off, meant, that they should never return, if the power had still been in them; and the unworthinesse of those in Egypt, because they fled thither, when God so seriously charged them by Jeremy not to do so; and to magnifie Gods mercy and power towards both, in bringing them home again notwithstanding.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Vers. 1.
Lyra.

WO to the Crown of pride, the drunkards of Ephraim. In this and Chap. 29, 30. saith Lyra, is a Prophecy against the Jews of both Kingdoms, for their mocking and contemning of the Prophets sent unto them, and that either present Chap. 20, 29. or to come Ch. 30. viz. after their carrying away to Babylon, for for then they despised Jeremy, Chap. 43. Junius will have this Chapter an entire Sermon, or Prophecy by it self against both Kingdoms, and Chap. 29. 30. 31. to contain in them all one other against the Kingdom of Judah. And this is to be preferred. For having begun with the Kingdom of Israel, under the name of Ephraim, ver. 1, 2, 3, 4. he turneth plainly to Judah, ver. 7. threatening most terrible things, and exaggerating their sins as no whit inferiour to the sins of Ephraim. And then, as it were coming to another Prophecy, he begins to thunder, yet more against Jerusalem by the name of Ariel, Chap. 29. Indeed as Lyra hath it, forso much as pride and drunkenness are the foundation of contemning and mocking of the Prophets that impugne these and other vices, and 2 Chron. 36. 16. it is said, that they did so, for these, as the sins whereby their wickedness grew to the height, it may be held, that they were thus threatened. Jerom saith, that pride is ascribed to this kingdom, because it was by reason of many more Tribes in it, far greater then that of Judah, and so proud of its strength and populousness. But drunkards, he will have them called, because like men giddy-headed through wine, and without wit, they went from the true God to serve the calves of Ieroboam. And therefore he threatens them with destruction from the Assyrian, as it were by a flood overflowing, and that they should be to him, but as fruit soon ripe in summer, which because it is most pleasant, and the first, a man doth greedily pluck, and eat, not staying till it be more mellow. For so the King of Assur soon devoured that whole Kingdom, 2 King. 17. Lyra understands drunkenness properly, saying, that they were guilty of two great sins pride and drunkenness, by excess in drinking, and therefore it is added erring by wine, and that the Kingdom of the ten tribes is called Ephraim, because Ieroboam the first King thereof was of that Tribe: Calvin understands both drunkenness properly, and inebriation by prosperity and riches, which, as drunkenness, make men to contemn and slight all others in what place or authority soever they be set. And he saith, that some think it called the crown of pride, because the Kings were proud, or the chief City Samaria; but because plenty and riches cause pride, we shall not need to look to any other respect for which it is thus called. And to denote this to be the cause of pride and drunkenness both, it is added, upon the head of the valley of fatness, that is, in a most fertile country, contriti vino, for so the next words signifie, abundance giving occasion to excess, and this being the foundation of all manner of sin, they come thus to be destroyed, being glorious, as a flower for a time, but soon fading. For this was no sooner threatened then accomplished. Salmanasar coming against it in the daies of Hezekiah, when this was prophesied: a fair warning to all Nations, and to take heed of being intoxicated with wealth and plenty, so as to be proud and contemptuous, or licentious to run to all excess of riot, for this is to run to destruction with speed.

It is shewed how they should be destroyed for these sins, The mighty and strong in the Lord as a tempest of hail, &c. That is, Salmanasar, the King of Assyria, strengthened by power given him of God for the punishing of sin, shall as a storm or flood by his army, called his hand, do it, and there shall be no power of resisting no more then of a tempest or overflowing flood, drowning all things when it cometh. And not resting in these similitudes, he adds another, Verf. 3. of treading under foot which was a great dejection for a crown, and that upon the head of fatness, and to this besides the repetition of the first taken from a fading flower, a fifth taken from fruits soon ripe and soon plucked off and eaten, Verf. 4.

In that day the Lord shall be a Crown of glory, &c. When the Kingdom of the ten Tribes shall be destroyed, as hath been aforesaid. the two Tribes remaining here called the residue of Gods people, shall have the Lord as a Crown of glory to them, their King Hezekiah becoming famous for the miraculous destruction made for his sake of the host of Sennacherib, of which see Isa. 37. Wherefore it is added.

Vers.6.

For a spirit of judgement to him that sits in judgement, and strength to them that turn the battel in the gate. For the King that sate in judgement without going forth of the Gate, only sending some of his Council to Isaiah, and praying in the house of the Lord, prevailed so, that a hundred eighty five thousand of the enemies were smitten by the Angel in one night, and so Sennacherib their King, who pitcht before Jerusalem, or was coming in battel-array against it, was confounded and forc'd to flee home alone. And was not this a turning of the battel in the gate, which is oft put in Scripture for the place of judgement? Or the word [Gate] being without a preposition may have reference to strength by apposition, thus, A strength to those that turn the battel, yea a gate, or a strong gate, sufficient to keep out all enemies, with how great power soever they come against the City, for such was the Lord to his people.

Vers.7.

And they also have erred by wine, and by strong drink have gone out of the way, &c. Having shewed Gods singular favour to the Kingdom of Judah, ver.5,6. he proceeds now to prophesie against it also, and that, 1. By aggravating the Jews sins by many more words, as reason required, sith they had warning in the judgements coming upon Israel, and yet fell into the same sins, from hence to ver.16. 2. By threatening a like destruction to that Kingdom also ver.17, &c. to the end of the Chapter, having first premised somewhat to the comfort of the few amongst them, that feared God and believed in him, ver.16. touching Christ to come. For the first, they are accused of more then brutish drunkenness, yea the very Priests and Prophets, in expounding which Jerom sticks to his first in speaking of the drunkenness of Israel, understanding it likewise here of idolatry, and the filthy vomiting. filling all Tables of the filthiness of that sin, tropologically applying it to the Pharisees and hereticks arising after, defiling the truth of God most foully. Others generally understand drunkenness properly, whereby men become sottish, having no wit but to scoff and mock at Gods Prophets, and at their sayings.

Hieronym.

Vers.9.

Whom shall he teach or make to understand doctrine, them that are weaned from milk, and drawn from breasts? That is, if not only the people of the Land be thus gone with wine and strong drink, but also the Priests and Prophets, what good effect of the Prophets teaching can be expected in any of them, surely none, it must therefore be another generation by reason of their infancy, through which they are incapable of being drenched in the abominations before spoken of, that shall be taught better, viz. the Apostles, and others like them by the Pharisees accounted but Babes in comparison of the wise and learned in the Law, as appears by that saying of our Lord. I thank thee (O Father) that thou hast hid these things from the wise, and revealed them to babes; thus almost Jerom. The Hebrews, as Sasbout sheweth, do not take it, as an answer to the Question here made, but as an addition, shewing it impossible, that any of them should get good by teaching, being as sucking children in respect of knowledge, and having as little capacity to make good use of it, continuing therefore the Interrogation to the end of the verse. Thus also Musculus, rejecting that of some, who by Infants understand the new born spiritually, according to 1 *Pet.*2.1. and that of referring it to the Apostles seems not to agree much better, because though Babes comparatively, yet he seems not here to speak of any capable of teaching, for they are all reproved and threatened, ver. 10,11,12,13. and so Junius also understands it, proving the same by the words following three wayes, 1. *Vers.*10. When precept upon precept, line upon line, &c. That is, it appears that ye are as incapable as sucking children, or a little while ago weaned, because such being taught now a little and then a little, learn somewhat, but ye nothing. 2. *Vers.*11. With a strange speech and foreign tongue, &c. This further convinceth you, That ye are incapable of good by any teaching, because I have brought strangers in amongst you, whose language ye understood not to your punishment, as in the dayes of Manasseh, but ye profited not hereby. 3. *Vers.*12. He said, This is my rest, give rest to the weary, &c. wherein he alludes to 2 *King.*21.8. he had wooed them by promises, ses, neither were they capable of good thereby. All which being so, and moreover they being a company of mockers, as is shewed vers. 14, 15. they abundantly proved themselves to be past all teaching, and therefore not thus to be dealt withall any more, but as persons incorrigible, to be destroyed. The Septuagint for these words vers. 9. Whom shall he teach knowledge? have these, To whom shall we declare evil? to avoid it, because drunken men fear no danger whatsoever be threatned against them; and this is most agreeable to the Hebrew, the word not being למד which all our Expositors follow, rendring it knowledge, but לעל evil, and therefore it is best. But for the verb plural, shall we, Hebr. it is, shall he, meaning the Lord by his Prophets.

Septuagint.

Vers. 10, 11, 12. have most difference about them. Jerom renders it [For precept upon precept, line, &c. Manda remanda, expecta reexpecta, hic modicum, &c. giving this for the sense, Thou Isaiah comest and commandest us in the name of the Lord, and biddest us expect now a little and then a little, when thou prophesiest of comfort, but we tell thee, command and command us so again and again, we shall but deride thee for it in repeating thy words over and over, to make our selves more merry at thy sayings. For so when men mock at others speaking, they use to repeat his words over and over to make him ashamed thereof. Who so will may follow Jerom vers. 9. taking the last words thereof as an answer to the first. He shall teach the ignorant people in his due time, not the drunken, the Priests, or learned, drunken with error and malice, but the unlearned, whom he should send out to preach the Gospel, counted Babes by them, as Luk. 10. 21. But for the next words being Hebr. למד ללמד signifying either precept to precept, or command to command, line to line, or leisurely, or expect to expect, they must be taken as a reason of the question before-going, Whom shall he make to understand? As if he had said, For precept hath been upon precept, &c. and yet they live as if they had been without all teaching, so that the Lord may well disclaim teaching them any more, and turn to teach Babes, seeing they by teaching and waiting, and then teaching a little more, will profit; but these never. Then will the vers. 11. most aptly follow, For with a lisping lip, &c. or because, לשון signifieth as well ut, as quia, so that henceforth he will speak unto them with a strange tongue, and lisping or deriding lip, being unworthy to be otherwise spoken to any more; that is, he will punish them by Captivity into a farre Countrey, where all the language, which they shall hear, to the encrease of their misery, shall be nothing but contemptuous derision of their insulting enemies, and such as they shall not understand, that is, of the Caldees, as was also threatned by Moses, Deu. 28. 49. For that a lisping lip denotes mockers appears Judg. 12. 3, 4, 5, 6. where the scoffing Ephraimites are set forth as lispers, not being able to pronounce Shibboleth, but Sibboleth. And of the fulfilling of this Prophecie, see Pf. 137. and S<sup>t</sup> Paul speaks of it as a judgement upon unbelievers 1 Cor. 14. And this being thus understood, we may both gather, that the Jews were judged by this judgement in their kinde, who mocked the Prophets, 2 Chron. 36. Isa. 5. 19. and how vers. 12. follows most aptly, Who said, This is the rest wherewith ye may make the weary to rest, &c. For the word שכב hath plainly reference to him that was spoken of, vers. 9, 11. that is, God. He shall speak to this people, who said, This is the rest, not to whom he said, as our New Translatours and others have it. He means, The Lord would punish them by speaking to them in strange tongues, as he might justly do, because he spake sometime so kindly to them, shewing how they might procure good unto themselves, viz. By giving rest to him wearied with their sins, in turning therefrom, as 2 King. 21. 8. For by sinne God is pressed, Amos 2. 13. and then Sacrifices weary him, Isa. 1. 11. neither hath he rest, but continues wearied, till that by repentance sinne is washed away, if his people go on in sinne, he will at length ease himself and procure his own rest, as he saith, Isa. 1. 24. Ah I will ease me of my adversaries. All this being premised, that they wanted not plain and continual teaching, and that the Lord sought to move them by his judgements, and before that by a most kinde offer of resting with them, but not prevailing, he vers. 13. threatens, That his Word shall be unto them, Precept to precept, line to line, &c. that they might go and fall backward, and be broken, &c. That is, forsomuch as they were incapable of instruction by their intemperance, even this great favour of continual teaching, which they had enjoyed, shall turn to their ruine, as our Lord saith, This is the condemnation of the world, that light is come, &c. and Paul, We are to some the savour of death. In describing their ruine he alludes to their sinne of drunkenness: for as a drunken man going falleth, and if backward upon prerupt stony or rocky ground, breaks his back, and comes as it were into a snare, and is taken by his enemies, and what can he look for after this, but to die miserably? so he meaneth they should do, that is, fall into the Caldees hands, be broken in all wherein their strength lay, and so be in their power, as a beast taken in a snare to exercise what cruelty they please upon them. Musculus saith, here are two similitudes used, 1. Taken from them that against sense will adventure to go up a steep hill being very slippery; The 2. from such as wander out of the way, where snares are set, to shew, that they who wander from the path of Gods precepts, shall come into snares and perish, and they also that leaving this plain way go up slippery places, such as the waies of sinne are, shall fall backward and be broken through unspeakable miseries. Calvin also applies that of snares to the snares of errours, into which they fall that goe from the plain way of truth, traced out unto us in the Word.

Wherefore hear the word of the Lord ye scornfull men, &c. Here the Prophet sets himself to inveigh in particular against the Governours of the Jews, as chief leaders unto, and cause of the great enormities before taxed, as before Chap. 1. 10, 27. he had not spared to speak in the most upbraiding manner against them. And according to his example the men of God ought, when there is the like occasion, not being terrified by their greatnesse, boldly to reprove such, as upon whom the common sort depend, and if they be evil, are imboldened to do evil also. And here is the height of their sinne, making any incapable of good by teaching pointed at, when he saith, Ye scornfull men, or mockers: for they that grow once to this, are so nigh to judgement, that there is no escaping.

Because ye say, We have made a covenant with death, &c. Jerom holding these mockers to be the Scribes and Pharisees, who were of greatest authority amongst the Jews, expounds this their covenant with death of their sleighting of the destruction threatned by the Prophet, because it might be so long in coming that they might be all dead before, and their making lies their covering, their trusting to the words which he spake, expect, expect, &c. making this construction thereof, that the judgements threatned should not come till after long expectation, when they that were presently living should be out of the danger of them. Calvin and Musculus better, They were not so grosse to speak thus, for they had certainly more care to uphold their credit amongst the people, but by their deeds they spake so, and thus do all prophane wicked persons at this day, who are not moved to any repentance by the judgements of God threatned, they say in effect, that they have made a covenant with death and hell, whatsoever comes, not to hurt them, which if any man abhors from saying with his tongue, let him abhor saying so by his deeds. When the overflowing scourge passeth thorow, it shall not come at us, &c. Here their vain-confidence is yet further set forth, who are secure even when judgements are abroad in the world destroying many, and that amongst themselves, yet they will not be moved to fear, to repent, because they believe they shall not come at them; for they think that they shall finde means to escape, the Jews then by the aid of neighbour Kings, the wicked alwayes by some arm of flesh or other, or by keeping out of the dint of danger, or when they see death ready to seise upon them, repenting by saying, Lord have mercy upon me. Now because such shall all be deceived, as they that trust to lies, they are said here to make make lies their refuge and protection, that is, in their sleighting of the Prophets threatnings to have done it, fearing nothing under the shelter of such lying and vain imaginations.

I lay in Zion a stone, a stone of tryal, a corner stone, &c. The Prophet having reproved the wicked Princes of the Jews, vers. 14, 15. now because he saw that their condition was desperate, he first interposing somewhat, whereby we might know of what time they were, who thus mocked, and had such a carnal confidence of impunity in this verse, proceedeth vers. 17. to threaten them with inevitable destruction; as if he had said, Because ye are such despisers, I will for the sake of some few believers amongst you provide for their assured comfort by laying a firm foundation. For the stone so precious here spoken of, it is Christ, of whom before Chap. 8. 14. under this name, and herein even many Rabbins consent, saying, that it is spoken of the King Messiah, whereunto Targum Jonathan cited by Galatinus consenteth, as Musculus hath it, though some of them expound it of Hezekiah, but without all reason, because other things here spoken of agree not to any mortal man, but to Christ alone. He is truly a foundation stone, whereupon his Church is built, and a stone worthy to be twice named for his two natures; a corner stone, because in him two nations are united, Jews and Gentiles becoming one spiritual building; a precious stone, because as farre excelling other men in vertue, as precious stones do common; and a sure foundation against the building, whereupon the very gates of hell can never prevail. Lastly, He that believeth shall not make haste That is shall be sure, though he stayes long before he comes, that he will assuredly come to his salvation, and therefore he shall not by doubting in regard of his long delay need to grow weak and languishing in his hope, but constantly waiting, and patiently bearing all sufferings in the mean season expect his coming, and be herein comforted against them all. Hereby then we may gather with Jerom, that though proud men and contemptuous of divine comminations of all times amongst the Jews are here threatned, yet it is specially bent against the wicked Scribes and Pharisees, who were so notorious for their despising of Christ and his teaching, and his many threatnings denounced against them; and when they prevailed with Pilate to crucifie him, and he to shew that it was not through any default in him, but in them onely, took water and washed his hands, saying, I am clean from the blood of this just man, they impudently, and without all fear of Gods judgements, cried out, His blood be upon us, &c.

And I will lay judgement to the line, and righteousness to the plummet, &c. A phrase, saith Calvin, borrowed from builders, who by a line and plummet set up all their building equally; in like manner the Lord here sheweth, that when the corner stone before spoken of shall be laid, the Church of the faithfull built hereupon shall rise up to a fair and uniform built Temple in the Lord, according to Ephes. 2. 20. And the hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, &c. Thus also P. Mariyr. But Jerom expounds it of judgement against the wicked, and mercy to the faithfull: Lyra, of judgements against those wicked mockers proportionable to their abominable sins: Sasbom, of Gods casting them off without mercy, as they had deserved, which he did, when preaching the Gospel to the Gentiles, he left them to the Romans as a sweeping hail to be quite and clean destroyed. Nazianzen and Basil, of mercy and righteous dealing of men, whereby God will go, as the Mason in building, by a line and plummet, remunerating every one according to his doings. That of Calvin is most probable, because he doth certainly prosecute the metaphor of laying a foundation stone, spoken of Vers. 16. under the similitude of a builder, shewing how he will evenly, as by line and plummet hereupon build up his Church. Otherwise to understand it of judgements, were to determine the Lord to be an imperfect builder, laying only a foundation, and so leaving it through haste to go and break down another building of wicked scoffers. The later part of the verse sheweth, That when he shall do thus for his elect, the wicked who trusted in their own lying imaginations, shall finde how vain their confidence was, all further hopes being swept cleane away, when by Gods just judgements, as by a storm of hail, like the Egyptians they shall miserably perish, and be destroyed.

Verf. 18.

And your covenant with death shall be disannulled. From hence to ver. 23. the Prophet goeth on to amplify his threatening of judgement further, contrary to their brags before-mentioned Verf. 15. as is plain by the words of this verse, only here having threatned that their covenant with death shall be disannulled, he addeth, Your Vision of hell shall not stand for so the word חזון signifieth, being in our N. Translation, Your agreement, but more is hereby intimated, viz. their security grounded upon the visions of false prophets that deceived them, who spake to them pleasing things in the name of the Lord.

Verf. 19.

When it passeth, it shall take you by morning, by morning, day and night, &c. As they had brag'd verf. 15. When the overflowing shall passe thorow, it shall not come nigh us. So contrariwise he here threatneth, That it shall take them. And whereas they flattered themselves with this conceit, that although it came, yet it should not hurt them, for either it would be so long in coming that they be dead and gone before that time, or if not it should not last long, and so they might outlive it; he addeth these words, of the coming thereof in the morning, that is, speedily, and the lasting of it day and night, that is, a very long time. And upon such conceits do the wicked still harden themselves in their sins, but let us fear God, whose judgements shall certainly come and seise upon all that carelessly go on in sinne, and that so long that through vexation they shall curse the time that ever they were born to suffer such intollerable miseries. And the commotion is only making to understand Doctrine; That is, when no teaching will prevail to make them receive and profit by instruction, judgements shall.

Verf. 20.

For the bed is shorter then to stretch upon it, &c. Calvin, The bed is contracted as not sufficient. The first comes nearest the Hebrew, and this is aptly added by another similitude besides that of a covering, taken from a bed to shew their security in their sins, by their lying herein, as in a bed with covering upon it, wherein they meant to sleep forth on, say the Prophet what he could to make them arise by repentance, and to come therefrom. And it is, as if he had said, Ye lie in your sins as in a bed, thinking to lie at ease, and that ye are covered so that no judgements shall come at you, but ye are utterly deceived, as a man going to bed thinking there to take his ease when he is weary and to lie warm in cold weather, but being laid he finds the bed too short to lie upon with any ease, and the covering so narrow, that he is nipped with the cold notwithstanding, so ye upon the bed of sin, and under your covering of lies shall not finde any ease or warmth, but be nipt with the foresaid hail when it cometh, and shall have no true rest in the mean season, but for fear of Gods judgements lie trembling and unquiet through the terrour of an evil conscience. Hierom both renders it otherwise, The bed is so straight, that one falleth out, and the covering too narrow to cover both, and giveth another sense, thus, To hold me and the adulterer, a false God, but he both goeth from the Hebrew, and from the true sense, which is not to impugn idolatry only, but excess of riot, and that chiefly according to verf. 8. the verses before that from the fourth.

Hieronym.

Verf. 21.

For the Lord will arise as in mount Perazim, and be angry as in the valley of Gibeon, &c. Here he proceedeth to confirm further what he said of the storm of hail destroying them, against which their covering should not shelter them. For it should be as that in the dayes of Joshua upon the Amorites in Gibeon, Josh. 10. 10. and as that upon the Philistims in Davids time, 2 Sam. 5. 20. To do his work, his strange work. Some, saith Calvin, take this as spoken, to shew, That it is against the mercifull nature of God to bring horrible destructions upon his own peculiar people, and that he doth it not but upon extream provocation: Some, because it was no wonted judgement, which was now to be brought, seeing alwayes hitherto though he judged them divers times for correction correction in their own Country, yet he never gave them so into the power of their enemies, as to be all destroyed, or carried away Captive, or left only to serve their enemies in poverty and baseness, their temple and City being burnt; for contrariwise he made them famous, as his beloved people throughout all Nations by his noble and mighty acts done for them. But he resolvethe only upon this that he calls it A strange work, because unwonted towards them in former times, and only used to be done against heathens, their enemies. But I see no reason why it should not be called a strange work in all these regards, because so it will more fully appear, why it is thus called, sith there are divers reasons commonly of one and the same phrase. And he doth not only call it a strange work once, but the second time, varying the word from לעבוד to לעבד implying a work reducing them to the condition of servants to cruel tyrants, to please whom they should serve Idols. Lyra will have it a strange work, because a further thing is here pointed at, then the destruction of the Jews, viz. the judging of the world by Jesus a man, as the same being God had suffered by men, which was most strange, to be scourged, buffeted, &c. And therefore he mystically applies his rising up in mount Perazim, to his dividing of the sheep from the goats, as the word signifieth. But if so, the consumption upon the whole earth, v.22. must be understood of the whole world, against which enough before.

Calv.

Lyra.

For I have heard a consumption determined upon the whole earth. Here the Prophet concludes his threatening with an exhortation not to be mockers any more, as not willing to omit any means of doing them good, by converting them, that judgements threatned might be averted; otherwise he saith, that their bands should be made strong, that is, their bands of servitude, into which they should come, not to be hastily broken for them to come into liberty again. And this, saith Jerom, is spoken according to the letter, of the destruction to come upon the Jews by the Caldees, and upon all the world, according to the Anagoge, they should by persisting in their derision and vain confidence, make their bands of servility stronger, none of them escaping, for the judgement should be upon the whole land in all parts, and all the wicked make the bands of their sins stronger, by going on to sleight the judgement to come at the last day. Calvin understands this consumption first to come, both upon the Jews, and finally upon all the world, but by and by he expounds it as Jerom: Only he saith, that the Prophet said he heard it from the Lord to purchase the more credit to his Prophecie, and to move them the more to repentance, as not speaking of himself, but by the Lords direction; and speaking of their more strengthened, or made stronger, that herein he speaks by a similitude taken from prisoners, who if they strive to get away are bound with stronger chains; and an unruly horse that kicks and flings, thinking to cast his rider, gets nothing but more beating thereby; so the wicked eluding Gods judgements, do but aggravate them upon them.

Vers.22.

Calvin.

Note.

Hearken and hear my voice, &c. Here, saith Calvin, the Lord answereth an objection that might be made against his proceedings in judging, as if they were not so wisely ordered. And he answers it by saying, Doth the plowman alwaies plow so low? he breaks the clods, &c. As if he had said, Ye will grant that God hath more wisdom to do his works then a plowman to do his, but even he doth all things in order for his own best benefit against the harvest and after; by plowing sometime, and sometime harrowing, then sowing his seeds, not confusedly, but severally, and having gotten in his grain of all sorts, he proceeds not alike to beat them all out; but wheat with an heavier and greater instrument, the wheel; smaller grains with a wand or staff, and in all this he receives his discretion from God; therefore He much more as the Fountain of all wisdom, must needs be wise and above all exception in his dealings with sinfull men. And hereby we may indeed understand the scope of the Prophet in this place in general, but Jerom particularly saith, that by the fitches, which he calleth Gith, and the Comin, sinners of the Nations are meant; by the wheat,

Hebr. bread or bread-corn, which the wheel being turned upon, tears in the straw with more violence, the people of God; and so takes it as meaning that the Jews, who had more means, should be more severely punished for their sins than the Gentiles, which wanted means, for theirs: Yet he sheweth that they should not be alwaies under punishments, but after punishments live in peace again. For which it is said, Verf. 28. Bread-corn is bruised or broken in pieces; for he will not alwaies be threshing it, or tearing it with the wheel of his cart, or bruising it with his horsemen. Hieron. with his hooves, because the Jews had no horses. The Hebr. is שור, properly signifying prickings as with spurres; and because horsemen commonly prick their horses with their spurres, it is commonly rendred horsemen. But why it should be so rendred here, I see no reason, because not with the feet of horses, but of oxen, they used to tread out their corn; according to that common saying, Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn. Calvin therefore best renders it thus, according to sense, Although wheat be threshed, yet he doth not alwaies thresh it, nor tear it with his Cart-wheel, lest with its teeth it should break it in pieces; for Cart-wheels, wherewith they used to beat out corn, had teeth like saws, and therefore if corn were continually torn with the Cart-wheel, it would instead of beating out the corn from the straw, be confounded together with it, and quite marred. But although the general scope of this place hath been toucht upon by Calvin, and of some passage more particularly by Jerom, yet this is not enough to make us understand all things here spoken of. To make use therefore of some others also, Doth the plowman plow all day to sow? doth he not open and break his ground? as he, shall not God, whose husbandry his people are, use the like discretion in his dealings towards them, not alwaies tearing them by his judgements as with plow and harrows; but when he hath thus made them sufficiently pliable and fit by his judgements sowing his seed, that he may have fruit, where formerly he could have none by reason of their hardening their hearts through continued prosperity to the excess of wickedness? for of this he had before complained, and therefore threatned a consumption to the whole Land. Now least his faithfull people should doubt, if he proceeded in this great severity, how he would verifie the promises of comfort often made, Chap. 25. and 26. 27. 9. 13. he sheweth by a parable taken from a plowman, how those grievous judgements notwithstanding, finally his people should have ease and comfort. Verf. 27. For fitches are not threshed, &c. Here by another similitude of his divers grains growing in severall grounds, and being reaped, beaten out, not all one, but divers waies; he further sheweth, that the Lord hath divers waies of afflicting his people, sometime dealing by them, as the husbandman by his smaller grain, beating them as with a rod; and sometime with a more heavy threshing instrument, by more tearing judgements; yet as the husbandman doth not thus alwaies without end, thresh his hardest corn, but when he hath beaten it out sufficiently, ceaseth from beating it out any more; so God will deal by his people: though for a time they be as under the Cart-wheel, and that long, as their hard-heartedness requires; yet there shall be an end of their forest miseries, and then they shall magnifie Gods wonderfull counsel and excellent working in all this, as it is concluded, ver. 29. For I cannot think with Jerom, that divers peoples, Jews and Gentiles are here compared together in their punishments, for Chap. 27. 8. 9. when the Prophet compares their punishments together, he plainly sheweth, that the Jews shall not be judged to utter destruction, as the Babylonians, but by the divers waies of threshing he sets forth lighter and heavier judgements coming upon the same his own people, against whom all the preceding threatnings in this Chapter are, and experience sheweth it to have been thus done, other lesser judgements being first brought upon them, and then the greatest, by the Assyrians and Chaldeans.

The conclusion, Verf. 29. Also this comes of the Lord; who is wonderfull in counsell, &c. is not, saith Calvin, to be applied to the plowman, as v. 26. as if the

the same were repeated over again in other words, but this also is the dealing of God with his people, as the plowman deals by his ground and grains, although he seems not by his so doing in wrath to care for them, but to hate them, and to be bent quite to destroy them, yet it shall one day appear, that he did execute all these heavy judgements upon them for their final good, and that he might receive them as precious to himself, as the plowman his divers sorts of grains. Indeed, v. 26. he remembers every plowman and every artificer, or artist of rare invention, that he attains not this but by Gods teaching him, that he and not man, who hath invented things so profitable and needfull for us, might have all the honour; contrary to the manner of the heathen, who for such admirable skill have numbered men and women amongst the Gods, as Ceres, Tristolemus, Mercurius, &c.

CHAP. XXIX.

Woe to Ariel, the City where David dwelt, add ye year to year, &c. The Prophet having Chap. 28. spoken against both Kingdoms together, now he speaketh against the Kingdom of Judah and Jerusalem apart. And this Prophecie is continued throughout this and Chap. 30, 31. Here is the judgement first threatned, to v. 13. then the cause is shewed in respect of hypocrites, from v. 13. to the end of this Chapter. 2. In respect of open contemners, Chap. 30. 3. A conclusion of all this made with exhortation to repentance, Chap. 31. Ariel signifieth the lion of God, whereby the great brazen Altar is meant, the fire made whereupon, devoured beasts offered, as a lion; see Chap. 31. 9. and therefore in naming the Altar, which was a part, he means the Temples destruction by Nebuchadnezzar; but to it he addeth The City where David dwelt also in his threatning, to shew, that it should escape no better then the Temple. Add year to year. Hereby is not obscurely foretold that they should hold out long before the City should be taken, and seek by sacrifices to procure Gods favour to defend them, but all in vain. Vers. 2. I will streighten Ariel, &c. And it shall be to me as Ariel. That is, I shall destroy both Temple and City; thus Junius. For the City where David dwelt, is the City of David's tent; that is, mount Zion, where he made a tent or tabernacle for the Ark. Let them kill sacrifices. Junius, Sacrificiis fessorum capita exescent, by a needless circumlocution, such קָרְבָּנִים Caggim signifieth sacrifices as well as feasts, and רָצַח kill, as well as cut off heads; neither do I finde it in Pagnine so rendred, but to cut off lambs. Jerom, by Ariel understands both Temple and City, and mentioneth another Exposition of David's pitching his tent against it when he expelled the Jebusites; and the numbring of years he will have to be those past, since the City and Temple built, and how many festivals had been kept, as trusting to this, that sith they had been at cost to serve God there so long, he would not leave it as a prey to the enemy. For v. 2. although he agreeth about the distress to which this Ariel should be brought by the Chaldees, yet in these words [Shall be to me as Ariel] he much differeth; saying, this is meant of the time when they returned out of Captivity with Zerubbabel and Jeshuah the High-priest, when the Temple and Altar were built again; and so it was as Ariel, that is, the Altar in former times. But herein he goeth certainly from the Prophets meaning, which is here only to denounce judgements, and not to Prophecie of reparations to come. Calvin therefore best saith, the Temple and City was made as Ariel, when all were full of slain bodies, because then there was every where a resemblance of the Altar for which so many sacrifices were slain and lay bloudy about, till they could be offered. Musculus hath a conceit, that Ariel is opposed to Ariel, signifying the City of God, it being meant, that it should not now be as his City, but as a lion, whom he would chase and destroy. But some, some as to Ariel, that is, as to a strong lion, it being meant it should now be a prey to the forces that he would bring against it. Calvin also saith, that some think think the Temple called Ariel, from the form wherein it stood, but because Ezek. 43. it is plain, that the Altar is so called, we may rest in this. Where David dwelt, this and the Altar are mentioned, because the Jews trusted in the Temple and Altar, and were the more confident for the promise made to David, that God would build him a sure house. It is not any outward priviledge either of the place where the most famous of Gods servants have dwelt, or his most magnificent house hath been, or service most frequent, or is, that can priviledge the wicked inhabitants from destruction, that we may trust to none of these, and take notice how ridiculous the Romanists are, who trust that Rome shall stand for ever, because S. Peters seat was there.

Verf. 3.

I will camp against thee round about, &c. Here is set forth the manner how Ierusalem should be destroyed, viz. by war, and how low the proud and scornfull there should be brought, ver. 4. to speak out of the ground, as one that hath a familiar spirit, who was wont to mutter out of a den within the earth, with a most low voice, his words so, as that they could scarce be understood. An argument of the proud and fierce and high-spoken brought low enough, and so filled with shame and confusion as to be without all spirit to speak audibly. Thus God can and will stop the proud and insolent mouths of the wicked, who in prosperity will speak in spite of God and men.

Note.

Verf. 5.

Hieron.

The multitude of thy strangers shall be as small dust, &c. This is by Jerom applied to the same proud-spoken men, who, he had said, should speak out of the dust: now he calleth them strangers, because the wicked are such to God, and compares them to the dust blown away by a tempest, and to chaff instantly gone. And then their brags of making a covenant with death and hell shall be but as a vain dream, which profits not him that seemeth to eat and drink, when he is once awake again. The Chaldee applyeth all to verf. 9. to the enemies destroying the City of Ierusalem, as if it were meant, that their joy hereof should soon be at an end. Innim, That innumerable enemies as the dust should come against them, whose power should be as irresistible, as if God fought against them: and to shew how suddenly and impetuously they should fall upon them, it is added, it shall be at an instant suddenly, by thunder and earthquake, &c. And then further to expresse their inextinguishable desire to destroy the Jews, he addeth v. 7, 8. that their enemies shall be as they that dream, that is, hungry still of their destruction. Calvin by these strangers understands forces hired by the Jews to help them against the Chaldees, for which it is said, Thy strangers. These, he saith, should be but as the dust or chaff soon blown away, when the Babylonish army should come, and to expresse this, it is added, at an instant, suddenly. For the next words Ver 6. he saith, that thunder and earthquakes, &c. are threatned to come from the Lord upon them, to expresse by many metaphors how terrible these enemies brought by the Lord to punish them for their sins should be unto them. And whereas ver. 7. it is said, The multitude of all the Nations that fight against Ariel, shall be as a dream, it is meant, when they shall come, it will appear, that the vain confidence which the Jews had, that they should never be distressed or brought to so great want by their besieging them, should prove but as a dream, because having no fear of scarcity, but being confident of continuall plenty, they should then be pinched with famine and hunger. Lyra takes all this as a Prophecy against the Babylonians, their enemies, for the comfort of the faithfull, it being meant, that within a short time they should be as the dust before the Medes and Persians, coming as a tempest upon them, and a flame of fire, as they did indeed, when breaking into Babylon they burnt it. Then all the riches and glory that they had gotten in fighting against Ariel, should vanish, as food which one thinks that he abounds with in his dream, but awaking he hath nothing, but is hungry and thirsty. And this I must needs approve as most genuine, there being none which fals in so fully with the Text. Not the first, applying it to the scoffing wicked Jews, because they could not be called Ariels strangers, but of them the City threatned was mostwhit compounded, and because they were enemies to Ariel, who are threatned here, and such as fought against it, and for the same reason Calvins cannot stand, because the wicked Jews are not compared to them that dream, but they that distressed them. And for that of Junius, it were strange that the Prophet meaning according to his sense, to set forth their enemies as irresistible, should compare them to small dust, which every puffe of winde bloweth away, and as ill doth that agree of their being made the more hungry of the Jews as of a prey, when they had gotten them, and their wealth, like a dreaming man, who awaking hath nothing, whereas they had all which they came for. This last of Lyra's agreeth in all things, unlesse it shall seem strange, that it should thus be applied to the Babylonians future destruction, to which it was 70. years: but a thousand years are with the Lord but as a day, as a moment, and therefore it might well be spoken of, as a thing to come instantly. If it seems not to agree to the argument in hand to expound it thus, because after a siege, and being brought low threatned, what can in reason follow, but a description of numerous forces, whereby this should be done? I answer, It is not unusuall with Isaiah when he is in the midst of his threatning suddenly sometimes to interlace comforts, lest the faithfull should be overwhelmed with despair. Understanding it therefore thus, all things will best agree both to the Text, and the event, as it is recorded in history, and Dan. 5. For the Persians brake suddenly and unexpectedly into Babylon, which they within thought impregnable by men, and therefore were securely feasting that very night, and sleeping according to the words of the Text, when they awoke again, finding how greatly they were deceived, the enemies being then Masters of the City.

Stay your selves and wonder, and cry ye out, they are drunken but not with wine. After prophesying of their destruction by the Caldeans, saith Jerom, he prophesyeth against the Scribes and Pharisees, and the whole Nation of the Jews, that they should be destroyed by the Romans, beginning first with the cause, viz. their grosse errors, and that above all, that they could not see Jesus sent unto them to be the Messiah, through the judgement of God being as it were asleep, and their eyes covered, so as that they could not reade to understand the books of the Prophets, which they had, plainly prophesying of him. For none of them could open the book, because it was sealed, that is, the book of God, as all the Scriptures are called his one book, till the Lamb: Christ came who opened the Seals, Rev. 5. and 6. Lyra also more fully saith, they are said to stagger but not with strong drink, because as Iosephus hath it, they were full of fear at the coming of the Romans, causing them to fluctuate, some perswading to yeeld up the city, and some not, as a drunken man reels sometime to one side, sometime to another.

He hath closed your eyes, sent you the spirit of sleep, &c. that is, not to be able to see the destruction coming to repent, by the fearful signs appearing before it. For even then they that made themselves Prophets expounded them to be signs of good. And the vision is become unto you as a sealed book, &c. that is, prophecies of your destruction, which the learned amongst you cannot reade, because it is sealed, nor the unlearned, although it were open, for they depend wholly upon their Rabbins, when they are opposed with this, that the time of the Messiah his coming is long ago past, yea, times set by themselves. And according to the word of shutting here used, Rabbi Solomon confesseth upon Dan. that their modern Rabbies say, that the reason why they have been deceived in the time is, because the sayings of the Prophets about this are shut. And Ad. Sarbont likewise, who, in explaining this, he will shut your eyes, saith, this is done only by permitting and ministring such things about them, as whereby they should take occasion to shut their eyes against the light, Of which see more in mine upon Rom. 9.

Cunctantur, quin admiramini? delicias agunt, quin vociferamini? &c. Applying it to the judgements before spoken of, at the hearing of which, the wicked Jews without all fear delaying their repentance, and staying still in sin, yea;

going on in feasting and drinking, all men are stirred up to wonder and to cry out against them. Then he sheweth, that this is come so to passe by a just judgement spirituall, for their wicked licentiousnesse, shutting up their eyes, &c. Stay and wonder, they are blinded and do blinde, &c. Heb. רתמו עיניהם a strepitum, and may be with the next word of the same radix, be expounded, Cause a noise to be heard as wondring, and make a noise, and then the same is said again in two other words, of like signification, Cause a cry to be heard, and cry out. And this is thus spoken, the more to condemn the wicked and blinde and hard-hearted Jews, whom no teaching, or signs, or wonders wrought amongst them, would move to believe and repent any more, then if they had been shewed before men in a deep sleep, as the word רדמו signifieth. Therefore although Calvin also understands it as spoken altogether of the Jews stupidity then, not being moved by any threatnings of the Prophets, of judgements to come by the Caldees, to turn by repentance; yet I must needs rather embrace the old exposition, taking it as a prediction of a greater kindenesse yet to come upon the Jews in the time of our Saviour Christ, when the means were farre more powerfull, and yet they like a company of men dead asleep through a spiritual judgement upon them for the pride and presumption in them, to urge traditions of men even above Gods precepts, and the malice and envy against Christ, when he reproved this in them, saw nothing to move them, but even unto the end hardened themselves against him, being bold (when Pilate fearing, would acquit himself from guiltinesse in respect of his blood) to cry out, His blood be upon us and our children, and continuing in the same malicious minde unawakened out of that dead sleep to this day. For vers. 13. Teaching for doctines the precepts of men, with which they are charged, is plainly applied Mat. 15. against the Pharisees, a generation of men unborn long after the daies of this Prophet, or the accomplishment of the judgement upon the Jews by the Caldeans. And the spirit of slumber or dead sleep pouring out, is applied to them of the same time, Rom. 11. 8. together with that of having eyes to see but not to perceive, Isa. 6. 9. And this is shewed vers. 10. to be the case of their very Prophets and Rulers, that is, which took upon them, as men more enlightened, as the Pharisees did, by whom others were guided, their eyes were covered, and so they were as Christ saith they were, Joh. 9. And Calvin himself coming to speak upon vers. 11. and 12. applyeth it likewise, citing for proof, 2 Cor. 3. And because this is threatned as a judgement that the Book of God should be as a sealed book, both he and Musculus note, that the Papists are under the same judgement, because reading the Scriptures is interdicted to them, or having them in their mother tongue for fear, as is pretended, lest they should otherwise be an occasion of error unto them, but in truth, lest the grosse errors of Popery being hereby easie to be seen by any one, should appear, and make men turn from it.

Because this people draweth near to me with their mouth, &c. Here the reason is yeelded, why they were under the judgement of spirituall blindenesse, viz. because they worshipped God but in hypocrisie, and his fear was taught by the precepts of men, for which he threatneth to take away understanding from the wise and prudent, vers. 14. as it is also applied to the Pharisees under the Gospel, 1 Cor. 1. 19. Their being farre off in heart, is by Ierom expounded of their infidelity in respect of Jesus, whereby they were far from the Sonne, and therefore from the Father, to whom no outward approaching is a drawing near, but that of a beleiving heart. Lyra expounds it of hypocrisie, and Calvin, as before, and this is best, because the closing up of their eyes, not to be able to see Jesus to be the Messiah, was the judgement which came upon them from God for their hypocrisie and preferring of Pharisicall traditions before Gods Commandments. The wise from whom he threatens for this to take away understanding, were the Scribes and Pharisees, so called for their learning wherein they had been brought up, and were amongst the Jews had in speciall account therefore, as most wise men. But for-so much as they understood not Jesus to be the Messiah, but this, though set forth in their Law and Prophets, was hidden from them, but not from the Apostles and others called to preach the Gospel, who yet were illiterate men, it is said, that he chose the foolish things of the world to confound the wise: and I thank thee, (O Father) that thou hast hidden these things from the wise, and revealed them to babes. And thus was it with many learned amongst the Papists, when the poor men of Lions in France were enlightened to see into the superstitions and idolatries of Popery, and to detest them; but they, who were learned and in greatest eminency for wisdom, saw not, but eagerly maintained them, as matters wherein greatest devotion consisted. And what a number of hypocrites are discovered in England at this day by the like spiritual judgement upon them, hindering them from seeing into the truth, whereby it comes to passe, that they dote every one upon his own errour, thus causing many schisms and divisions in our Church, to the hindering of us from a desired Reformation! And that they are under this judgement appears, because their tenets be merely new, and were never anciently held in the Church of God, whereas any truth, although because disused, may be called new, yet if it be inquired into, it will appear to have been old, as 1 John 2.7. he saith, I write a new commandment unto you, yet the same, which ye had from the beginning. And this is neither Independency, Anabaptism, Antinomianism, or any the like.

Note.

Woe to them that seek deep to hide their counsel from the Lord, &c. Here the Prophet goeth on to aggravate the wickedness of hypocrites, who would seem godly indeed in outward appearance, but were nothing lesse in heart and in their lives, yet such was their simplicity, that they thought by their feigned godliness to deceive the Lord and good men also, by carrying the matter so closely, that neither they nor he should see it. For whilst they did thus dig deep as it were to hide the wicked imaginations of their hearts, the Lord beheld well enough, what consultations each one had within himself, purposing therefore to judge them, as hath been already said, by making them to appear to be without the sight of understanding, and instead of wise men, and men of deep counsel, very fools and blinde men, when for all their sins, wherein they thought to passe on without check by reason of the good shew made outwardly, he should severely, and without all pity destroy them, as was prophesied vers. 2, 3, 4. and again vers. 17. And this shall be the end of all that are cunning to do evil, they may please themselves for a time in a conceit that they are wiser then the notoriously prophane, but this their wisdom making them to go on securely in their sins, shall one day appear to be extream folly, when a greater judgement shall be laid upon them then upon any other sort of sinners. And hereby it appears, that although they be brought in Chap. 28. 14, 15. saying, We have made a covenant with death, &c. yet they spake not thus with their tongues, but in their hearts, none but good and godly speeches coming from their mouths, as is the manner of most men, to conceal the wickedness of their hearts and lives what they can, because otherwise they should make themselves too palpably evil, and be in greatest discredit almost with all men; at the least of all that carry the faces of honest men, as most do where there is frequent prophesying, as was then in Indea. See the like Iob 22. 14. Ezek 9. 9, 10.

Verf. 15.

Note.

Your turning of things upside down shall be esteemed as the Potters clay, &c. Calvin, Shall it be esteemed as the Potters clay? And this is best, because otherwise the participle turning here used goes untranslated, and Im, signifying if, is commonly used by way of interrogation; and thus the sense will be good, Shall ye be able to work out of your revolution of thoughts within, the thing that ye imagine, as the Potter doth by turning his wheel, a piece of clay into what form he will? No surely, for ye may winde and turn, but no such effect as ye expect shall follow after all this deep counsel taken in so great secrecy. To think otherwise, is, As if the pot should say of the Potter, he made me not, and he understood not for it is all one for a man to say of God he made me not, and he knows not my heart to deal with me according to the wickednesse lying hid therein, for as the Potter knows the pot both within and without, so God his creature, man, and to deny unto him this knowledge, is to deny him to be thy maker.

Verf. 17.
Hieronym.

Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitfull field, &c. This, and vers. 18, 16, 20, 21. is by Jerom expounded of the Jews and Gentiles, they being in times past as a fruitfull field, after their rejecting and crucifying of Christ, became as Lebanon, a barren place, who were before as Carmel, which is the word here used, signifying fruitfull, because since that time, as ground barren of all good fruits, they have been cast off, and as without a dresser and fencer they lie open to the treading under by the feet of all Nations: But these being formerly barren, as a forest, for such was Lebanon, are by the coming of the Gospel amongst them made fruitfull as Carmel, by reason of the multitudes of true believers amongst them, abounding with the fruits of good works. For Lebanon is a mountain in Phanicia, barren of grasse and corn, but Carmel in the Land of Canaan abounded with both. And, saith he, let the Jews, who cleave to the letter answer if they can, how this being literally understood can be verified, and if not, acknowledge the metaphor here. And he saith, this shall be within a very little while, because six or seven hundred years are no more with God then a piece of a day.

Verf. 18.

Then the blinde shall see out of darknesse, and the deaf shall hear the word of the Lord That is, the Gentiles, who were before in darkness shall have a great light rise up unto them, whereby to see into the mysteries of God; and whereas the Jews are complained of before, that it was vain to shew the hearing to them Chap. 28. 9. it shall not be so to these, although deaf in times past; now they shall hear and obey the Gospel. And these same are in the next words, called, Meek and poor, that shall encrease their joy, because poor in respect of true riches, as all are, till they come to the knowledge of God and are converted, and to this none attain, but the meek, such the word is then only received to the saving of the soul, when in meeknesse, because the proud who are of another spirit, refuse to submit thereunto, and cavil against it, and then comes exceeding great joy, as Acts 8. Isai. 9. 1. Then he sheweth the evil case of the Jews, saying, The terrible one is consumed, and the scorner brought to naught, &c.

Verf. 21.

That make a man a sinner for a word, and lay a snare for him that reproveth in the gate, &c. That is, By making men to blaspheme Christ, who is the Word; thus, saith he, Nazari expound it, but we of the devil seeking to ensnare Christ by his temptations.

Iunius.

Iunius by Lebanon understands the proud and contemptuous, as if they were here threatened to be brought down; and whereas before their eyes were covered, they should now be made to see and hear whether they would or no, vers. 20, 21. being spent in describing further their wickednesse. Vatablus follows Iunius, Calvin, that the present state of the Jews is compared with the future after that God shall have once done punishing them by the Caldees, they being now as Lebanon, unfruitfull, shall be made fruitfull. But if this be admitted, what shall the Carmel be that is turned into Lebanon? Or if that of Iunius, whereunto adde, That it is a phrase never used in way of threatening, That the deaf shall hear, and they in darknesse see, but of promising and comforting. And therefore it must needs be so taken here also, especially because Ver. 19. they are called the meek and poor, to whom this is spoken, and the scornfull and proud Jews are otherwise spoken to vers. 20, 21. Wherefore leaving these I subscribe to Jerom, and the rather because these words, as the former, were spoken of the time of the Jews rejection, and the Gentiles vocation, when the wisdom of their most prudent ones failed. For what can then be expected to follow, but that Gods vineyard, which they were, Isai. 15. growing in a most fruitfull soil should be turned into Lebanon, a place of Trees and Briars, but without fruit, and then because God will not be without a vineyard, Christian people of all Nations must be it, and therefore hear and see that which the Jews would not, viz. that Jesus is the Messiah, although formerly altogether in darkness; yet whereas Jerom by making a man a sinner for a word, understands Christ, I rather understand Christ by the man to entrap whom in his words they laid wait, because he was ever reproveth their grosse errors and sins, as here followeth, because of this we reade in some places, but not that they sought to make any to blaspheme him, although they themselves did often, neither is Christ any where set forth by this name Word, till Joh. 1. Lastly, He could not speak more plainly to intimate whom he meant by his threatening vers. 20. then by calling them scorers, as Chap. 28. 14. for what were the Jews towards Christ, but a company of scornfull mockers, calling him, The Carpenter, Drunkard, Belzebub, and He calleth to Elias, Let us see if he will come and help him, &c. and the terrible one, seeing they were so terrible to his followers to excommunicate them, and afterwards to put them to death, as they could lay hold upon any of them, and to him, to cry all out against him, as one man, Crucifie him. Although Adam Salsbort, By the terrible one, and the mocker, being of the singular number, understands the devil, and by those That make a man a sinner in a word, or by a word, the Jews, who by their enticing words drew men from Christ. And first making a question, How by one reproveth in the gate, Christ could be understood, because this is a description of one to whom power of judgement is committed? He answers, That because he that sits to judge, sits to reprove also, a reprover in publick, though no Judge amongst men, may also be meant.

Lyra agreeing with that, which I said before, about making a man a sinner for a word, differs yet in that, by the fruitfull field, as it is commonly translated, Hebr. Carmel, he understands barren mount Carmel, where Elijah kept, and by Lebanon a farre higher mountain, adorned with tall Cedars, and therefore by the turning of Lebanon into Carmel, the pulling down of the proud Priests and Pharisees, &c. Cornelius à Lapide, By making a man a sinner in a word, understands the word before spoken of vers. 13. viz. the doctrine derived from mens precepts. To conclude, with Jerom consenteth Cyris, Procopius, Theod. taking Carmel for a most fruitfull place, as Jer. 2. 7. and herein do I rest, yet preferring that of making a man a sinner for a word, or in a word, as it is Hebr. whereby it is understood of their seeking to intrap Christ in his speeches, and consequently any of his Ministers, whom to trap, or at whose sayings to carp at likewise to bring them into danger, is the chief end of some wicked instruments of the devil in coming to hear them, for this they learn of their father the devil, whose trade it is to be the accuser of the brethren. And this is the rather to be preferred for the words immediately following in way of explication, They lay a snare for him that reproveth.

Jacob shall not be confounded, neither shall his face now wax pale. Vulgar Latine, Shall not be ashamed, nor his face ashamed] But the next word rendred here ashamed, is Hebr. wax pale, that is, for fear; the meaning being, that for this threatening of the Prophet they shall not now in his days be affected either with shame or fear to turn, but the time should afterwards come, when they should see the Apostles, and other Preachers of the Gospel, their children, sanctifying Gods name, &c. as vers. 23. That is, By preaching and miracles confirming the Gospel, and Jesus, the holy One of Israel to be the Messiah.

Then the erring in spirit shall understand, and the murmurers learn doctrine. That is, The Gentiles, who wandered after vanities, as they were lead, the light of the Gospel coming amongst them, shall attain right understanding to serve the true God; and their Poets, who were their teachers, that denied the people of God formerly in their rithmes made against them for their Sabbath, and their God of heaven, shall learn by this teaching also. For so venal Satyr. 14.

To this effect Adam Sabont and Lyra, taking their hint from Jerom. And it doth excellently agree after the Prophecie of the conversion of the Gentiles before spoken of, to shew it, lest any supposing the Prophet to speak of a time nearer at hand, and that he meant the Jews blinded then by Gods judgement, and so think, that his Prophecie was not true, because he had said, Yet a very little while, vers. 17. he saith here, not now, for they shall see their children sanctifying Gods name first, and then they should be confounded for their own malicious opposing of the Gospel: and he most aptly calleth the Apostles, The work of my hands, because being illiterate God did so suddenly make them learned above all others by the coming down of the holy Ghost, Act. 2. to the admiration of all Nations present, then the Gentiles set forth by them that erred, came to understanding, and their murmurers to know their derisions of Gods service amongst his ancient people to be vain. Calvin and some others understand the Prophet, as speaking only of the Jews by way of comforting the faithful amongst them, lest they seeing themselves overwhelmed with so much misery, as was before threatned, should utterly despair. Wherefore he saith, That Jacob shall not now be quite confounded, nor his face wax pale, whereby, saith Vatabl., on and the same thing is meant, because though they that be ashamed look red at the first, yet this redness ends in paleness. No such thing then was to be feared now when Gods judgments had wrought their work upon that people, as that they should be finally confounded hereby, and therefore he makes mention of his redeeming Abraham, of whom they were descended, that is, out of Ur of the Caldees, and the dangers that he was in in Egypt, and the Philistims Countrey by reason of his wife Sarah, here commemorated, to intimate, that they his posterity might be comforted in hope by the power of the same Lord God of hosts on one day to be delivered also out of all their miseries. And in calling them by the name of Jacob, he gives them an hint also of comfort, by recounting, how he was in his time delivered from Esau, and Laban, and the Shechemites. And whereas he saith, Jacob shall not now be confounded; he implieth, that their wickednesse made even him to blush, as it were in his grave, to see it, by a Prosopopeia, as Rachel is said to weep for her children the Benjamites, who were killed up many years after her death and burial. Then vers. 23. he sheweth the ground of this happy end to be expected, When they shall see their children, the work of my hands, they shall sanctifie my name; That is, by mine almighty power made free of bond-men, and brought from misery to a flourishing estate again; for this, as the creation of all things of nothing, was the admirable work of Gods hands, therefore seeing this, they should praise and fear God. And then the erring should learn knowledge, and the murmurers doctrine, Verf. 24. And these are the same, who before were called mockers, who also are said to have erred by the spirit of slumber sent unto them. Hitherto Calvin, Vatabl., Musculus and others, neither doth Iunius differ. Cyrl and Thomas Aquinas, Shall not now be ashamed] to repent, that is, at the coming and preaching of Christ, but afterwards towards the end of the world they shall, For they shall see their children, the work of my hands, &c. That is, many of the Nations converted by the Ministry of the Apostles and other Preachers of the Gospel stirred up from amongst themselves, and then at the last they shall sanctifie Gods name, and the holy One Christ, whom they before despised, and the erring through blindness of minde shall see, and the murmurers or mutterers, who were always before muttering, and secretly detracting from Jesus, because such of them as lived amongst Christians, durst not for fear of them speak openly against him, Shall learn doctrine, Hebr. דרשן Doctrine elegantly set forth. And hitherto what I finde in Expositors for the clearing of the sense here. Now to give mine opinion. The word [therefore] with which this clause is begunne, sheweth it to be a conclusion of that which was said before, and what was it? but that the Jews should fall and be consumed for their wickednesse, Ver. 20, 21.

Therefore

Therefore it is not now to be expected, that they should be ashamed and fear to repentance, by this denunciation of judgements, but suffer as hath been threatened in all extremity, and then a time should come of some of Jacobs children, being new moulded by the almighty working of God, at what time the Jews should be moved to fear God, and to glorify him and Christ that holy One coming of them, and this by their understanding returning unto them, with the taking away of which for the time determined for their punishment they were threatned vers. 14. thus for those of them that erred for want of understanding through a spiritual judgement upon them; and whereas through the same defect they muttered amongst themselves secretly against all threatnings, saying, that they should be safe, whatsoever Isaiah prophesied against them, hereupon storming and contemning all that was said to move them to repentance, for which he bids them, Chap. 28, 14. Hear ye [cornfull men] and cries out vers. 9. To whom shall he shew the bearing? Now he saith, That the multitudes shall learn doctrine. And to make this favour promised finally the more probable, he mentioneth Gods delivering of Abraham in so rare and wonderfull a manner, making a Covenant with him to be both his God, and the God of his seed, they therefore being his seed having his favour entailed to them so, as to be never cut off. And against this, I take it, can be no exception, as there may be against that which expounds it of confounding by judgements alwayes continuing to utter destruction, because the confounding here spoken of is limited to the time present, by his saying [Now] and against that expounding it of the Gentiles, who erred, because he had fully done speaking of them and their conversion vers. 18, 19, 20. and against another of Forerius not hitherto mentioned, expounding it thus, Jacob shall not be ashamed, although his children degenerated so, for by the taking in of the Gentiles to the faith, who thus become Israelites, he by this great encrease of his posterity, becomes more glorious, because thus he should conclude, besides the premises vers. 20, 21. wherein not the Gentiles, but the wicked and malicious Jews were spoken of. And this of mine is almost the same with Cyrils and Thomas his before-going, and this began to be fulfilled when many thousand Jews believed at the Apostles preaching, upon which it is touched, Act. 21. Act. 2. and we further expect to be fulfilled, when the covering of which they said, Isai. 28, 14. We have made lies our covering, shall by the light of the Gospel breaking out unto them be taken away, according to S. Pauls prophetic, 2 Cor. 3.

CHAP. XXX.

VWoe to the rebellious children, that take counsel, but not of me, &c. This is another Prophecie against the Jews for a sin to come, saith Jerom, an hundred and fifty years after, when they rebelled against Nebuchadnezzar in the time of Zedekiah his reign, Ier. 37. and being brought under, yet they would of their own heads go down into Egypt, having more confidence, that by so doing they should be safe, then by staying still in Judea, and trusting in the Lord, as they were directed Ier. 42. and 43. For herein they took counsel, but not of God, and sought to be covered from danger, but not by any means directed to by Gods Spirit, and therefore as adding this sin to their former they were in stead of being in more safety, in more danger, and because they plainly rebelled against the word of the Lord in Jeremies mouth, stoutly saying that they would not obey it, they are called rebellious children. Whereas vers. 2. he saith, That they took counsel, or asked it, but not from his mouth, and went into Egypt, trusting to Pharaoh, yet Jeremy saith, That they prayed him to ask the Lord, here is no contradiction, for when he had asked they would not obey it, which was all one with not asking. Thus almost also Iunius. So likewise Sabons, saying, That some think this spoken of the the ten Tribes, which sought help from the Egyptians against the Assyrians, whose tributaries they were, 2 King. 17. 2, 3. And some, that the Kingdom of Judah is meant, which even in the dayes of Isaiah sought help from Egypt, as appears Chap. 20. And this doth Lyra make yet more probable, alledging R. Solomon for it, and arguing from vers. 4. where it is said, That his Princes came to Zoan, and his Embassadors to Taanen; whereas in that going down to Egypt, Jer. 43. they fled and went not by way of Embassie. Yet he concludeth with Jerom, and saith, that so Expositors generally take it. But Calvin, Musculus, &c. passing over the shewing to what time in particular it belonged, speak only in way of aggravating their sinne for seeking to Egypt, and going thither, contrary to Deut. 17. 16. It is to be held yet, that it is to be referred to a certain time, and whereas if to the time spoken of Ier. 43. v. 4. makes against it, if it be referred to the Kingdom of the ten Tribes, 2 Kin. 17. v. 16. and 17. make against it, because it is said, In resting and sitting still ye shall be safe [But they fled upon swift horses] which cannot be applied but to that time spoken of Ier. 43. because Hosheah and his ten Tribes had no such promise. Yet again, how can vers. 31. agree to the Kingdom of Judah, which was not destroyed by the Assyrian there threatned, but by the Babylonians? All which considered hath made me to think that this Prophecie is neither against the Kingdom of Judah alone, nor of Israel alone, but against them jointly, speaking therefore most aptly sometime to them of both Kingdoms altogether, as ver. 1, 2, 3. sometime to Israel alone, as vers. 4, 5, &c. and ver. 30, 31, &c. and sometime to Judah alone, as vers. 15, 16. as also he did Chap. 28. beginning with Israel, vers. 1, 2, 3, 4. and then proceeding to Judah, vers. 5, 6, 7, 8. from thence upbraiding them both, and threatning them. But looking into Ier. 37. 5, 7. and Ezek. 17. and finding in both that Zedekiah had help out of Egypt, I must needs assent to Junius, saying, that he here prophesieth of that which was to come long after, viz. in Zedekiah's time, sith all will so well agree, as will soon appear.

His Princes were at Zoan, and his Embassadors came to Hanes, &c. Zoan and Hanes were not both in Egypt, as Oecolampadius saith, but Hanes beyond Egypt; Zoan, otherwise called Tanes or Tanis by the Greeks and Caldees, saith Vatablus, was a very great City in Egypt. Of the antiquity of Zoan see Num. 13. 22. called also by Iunius, Tanis, giving the name to the second door of the River Nilus; and Hanes he saith, was Taphanes, a City in Egypt also Ier. 43. 7. so that Oecolampadius was then deceived herein. This is a Prophecie of things done by Zedekiah a wicked King of Judah then, and the last King that reigned over Judah, as appears more plainly Ezek. 17. he, saith Iunius, sought help from Egypt, but in vain.

The burthen of the beasts of the South into the Land of oppression, &c. Here by beasts of the South Junius also understands beasts properly, Camels and Asses, and other beasts used to carry burthens, these King Zedekiah laded down into Egypt with treasure, to hire him with his Army against the Babylonians, and Egypt is called the Land of oppression from the signification of מִצְרַיִם being derived מִצְרַיִם Egypt and Judea, saith Jerom, is here called the South in reference to the other parts of Canaan, for it lay South; but by beasts he understands the men of Judah, who for want of understanding, when they set themselves headily against Jeremiah to go into Egypt to their own confusion, for man being without understanding is like unto the beast that perisbeth, Psalm. 49. And by the burthen of the beasts of the South, according to his former using of this word against Babylon, Egypt, Moab, &c. understand the miseries to come to these brutish men, after that they should come into Egypt, as Jeremy threatned afterwards. Some by the South will have Egypt understood, but it is plainly spoken of the Jews called beasts for the reason beforegoing, and the beasts upon whose backs they carried their goods, are said in the later end of the verse to be Camels and Asses. Moreover if beasts properly were meant, it must be granted that Isaiah prophesied against beasts, which is absurd. Neither ther is by the Land of affliction Egypt meant, but Judea, in which these beasts were before that they carried away their goods. And all this will appear more plainly, if it be rendred word for word according to the Hebrew thus, The burthen of the beasts of the South in the Land of affliction, &c. The Jews dwelling South from the other part of Canaan, even in a Land afflicted, because subdued by Nebuchadnezzar, let them hear what a burthen of miseries, is to come upon them for their doing like beasts incapable of the good counsel, which Jeremy shall give them, and going headily, as their own obstinate minds should carry them into Egypt contrary to it. Wherefore Varatius, Pagnin, and Sabotus are mistaken, who by the Land of tribulation understand the wilderness, through which they travelled to Egypt, whereunto indeed the next words seem most aptly to agree, The Lion, and young Lion of them, &c. because wildernesses are full of Lions and Serpents ready to devour passengers. But forso much as it is the South in the land of tribulation, the later being added to the former word, that it might more plainly appear, what he meant by the South, and it is not said by, or into the land; the way by which they passed cannot be meant, but the Land or Countrey of which they were. As for these words, The Lion and young Lion of them, for so it is Hebr. and Vulgar Lat. and not as the New Transla. from whence come the Lion, &c. They shew a reason why he calleth them beasts, they were like wilde beasts that could not be tamed and governed, and as full of malice and pride, as Serpents of poison, as Jerom hath it, and Haimo, and Cyri. And Lyra saith, That by the Land of affliction is meant Judea, for that it was to suffer by Nebuchadnezzar, and by the Lion and Lioness, as he reads it, were the King Zedekiah and his Queen set forth, and by Serpents coming of them, their children, who were all wicked and a great cause of this judgement. I rest in the first.

Haimo.
Lyra.

Their strength is to sit still. This further confirms Jeroms exposition of the Jews in Jeremies time, because he promised, that in keeping in their own Land they should be safe, but removing destroyed.

Verf.7.

Now go write it before them in a table, &c. Because this judgement was not to come till a long time after, viz. 110 years at the least, a charge is given to write it, that it might never be forgotten. And what must he write, but that they were lying and rebellious children, vers.9. and slighted true prophesying, but affected false and flattering. vers.10,11. wherefore he saith, That they did bid the Prophets to make the holy One to cease from before them, that is, because his sendings to them were in way of menacing them for their sins, that they would not come in his name any more in such a way. Lastly, His threatening that they should be broken all to small pieces like an earthen pot, v.12,13,14. and his direction, by following which they should be safest after Jerusalem destroyed, viz. by keeping still in their own Land so many as remained, and fleeing to Egypt, which direction if they refused to follow, their miseries, should yet be farre greater, vers.15,16,17. whereas vers.13. he compareth the judgement to come to the breach of an high wall falling, because by such a fall sometime many thousands have perished at once, 2 King.20.30.

And therefore will the Lord wait, that he may be gracious unto you, &c. Expositours, saith Lyra, do commonly hereby understand comfort promised after the Babylonish Captivity of being restored again to their own Land. But against this he makes divers objections. 1. From vers.19. Ye shall see no more, for after their return from Babylon they suffered many things, as is shewed in Nehemiab. 2. From vers.20. Their teachers shall not be removed into a corner any more; for Ezra their greatest Doctor came not amongst them till a long time after their return, and when he died and Haggai and Zechary, they had no Prophets more. 3. From vers.26. The light of the Sunne shall be sevenfold, &c. now by light comfort being understood, this was not verified when they were brought back, because they never had so comfortable a being, as in times past, especially under David and Solomon; wherefore he concludeth, that the exposition of the Hebrews is here rather to be preferred, who say, that it is spoken of the times of the Messiah, only their error in expecting a Messiah to come, is to be abhorred. For to the time of the Gospel do all things excellently agree, partly to Christs first coming, ver. 18, 19. &c. to ver. 26. partly to his second ver. 26. Therefore will the Lord wait that he may be gracious unto you, &c. is as much as if he had said, Because ye go on so obstinately in rebelling against him, he will stay long before he comes with his greatest grace amongst you in Christ Jesus, for he is a God of judgement, that will first judge and be avenged upon the wicked, and then he will afterwards shew this great favour, and blessed are all they that wait for him; that is, who believe that he will do thus, notwithstanding the miseries, wherein he will leave his people for their sins a long time. Thus Lyra, but whereas he saith all our Expositors generally understand this of the Jews return out of Babylon, he was mistaken, for Jerom also applies it to Christs time, confuting the contrary, so likewise Procopius, Cyrillus, Theodoret. But they generally hold, that the Prophecy concerning Evangelical comfort, begins ver. 19. this being added to the former threatnings, as if he had said, Therefore the Lord will not suddenly indeed bring those judgements upon you, but forbear a time expecting your repentance, that he may be gracious unto you, and not thus severe. For he will be exalted by shewing you this favour of deferring, as he must needs be every where, when after so long forbearance and no amendment following, he shall execute his fiercest judgements upon you. But I rest in the former, because the particle for wherewith ver. 29. begins, sheweth it to be a reason of that which is here said, and that his waiting hath reference, not to the time of delaying to judge them as he threatned, for when they thought thus, it is objected as an aggravation of their sin, Chap. 28. 15, 18, 19. but to the time of shewing them grace, so also Junius: but for the favours hereafter following, he restrains them to the Church after their return out of Babylon, and in causing them to return: Wherein they do better, who apply to much of the promises here made to those times, as was performed, to them, but the things wherein they exceed all that was then performed to the times of the Messiah his coming.

For the people shall dwell in Zion in Jerusalem. &c. that is, saith Jerom; in speculanda & visenda pacis, as the words signifie, that is, in the Church, and none dwell here, but he that is holy, and hears him who hath said, Be ye holy as I am holy. They that by faith wait, as was before said, so as none do but the just, of whom it is said, Hab. 3. The just shall live by his faith: Of their coming to dwell in Mount Zion, and the Heavenly Jerusalem, see Heb. 12. 22. And he saith, they shall not then weep, that is, for their hope of Christs coming any longer deferred, and that they shall cry to the Lord, because being men we are still subject to sin, and for sin to judgement; we must not expect to be altogether free, but this is our comfort, we shall in our sufferings have grace to repent and to call upon God, and then he will not delay to hear and answer us in mercy.

Though the Lord give thee bread of adversity and water, yet thy teachers shall not be removed into a corner any more, but thine eyes shall see them. Vulg. Lat. and the Lord shall give you panem arctum, & aquam brevem. Which Jerom understands of doctrine contracted or epitomized into a few words, Thou shalt love the Lord with all thy heart, &c. and thy neighbour as thyself: referring for proof hereof to these words, The Lord will make a brief and short word upon the earth. Lyra and Sæbon; the one a slender diet for many Christians lived in great abstinence, the other affliction which the Church should suffer by persecution under the Gospel, as the phrase is used touching Micahiah, Let him be fed with bread of affliction, &c. and Junius saith it is spoken by way of preventing an objection, when the faithfull were in adversity again, he granteth, that they should be so indeed, but they should have comfort sufficient to bear them out. And this is best, for both after their return from Babylon, they suffered many things, and so did and do the faithfull under the Gospel. For the reading, Heb. it is, and the Lord giveth you, &c. But for the next words, the Septuagint hath, they shall not draw near thee that shall deceive thee, for thy eyes shall see them that have deceived thee, and thy ears shall hear the words of thy teachers behinde thee, saying This is the way, &c. But leaving this as too much differing from the Hebrew, which speaks not of deceivers but true teachers, whom to have alwaies is so comfortable to the people of God, the word is רִמְיָא rendered best by Jerom, He will not make to flee away from thee any more. Only whereas Heb. it is teachers, he hath it teacher, by whom Lyra understands Christ, who saith of himself, One is your Master, Mat. 23. And loe I am with you to the end of the world, Mat. 28. alledging the Chad. Paraphrast. who renders it, Non recedet ultra divinitas ejus, of Ezra, Haggai, Zechary, &c. it cannot be understood, as Corn. a Lapide hath it, because they soon departed: but of Christ and his Spirit, and learned Doctors teaching the truth, who should never be wanting in the Church under the Gospel, as Ad. Salsbont hath it. This is opposed to the threatening, Amos 8.11. for as there a famine of hearing the Word is threatned, and not of bread and water, so here contrariwise against suffering at any time by scarcity of bodily food, which followed upon the going out of the Gospel, as is shewed Rev. 6.6. they are comforted by this, that they shall never be destitute of spirituall food any more. For Christ hath sent his Spirit into the hearts of the faithfull, to teach them continually, Joh. 14. 1 Joh. 2.20. and he by his Ministers is with them to teach them to the worlds end. Under the Law they were sometime without King, Priest, and Sacrifice, as in the time of the Babylonish captivity, but since the coming of the Messiah never. Whence note what a comfort it is to enjoy true and faithfull teachers, it is even so great that corporeall wants are not to be passed for, if we have this comfort, yet neither shall the faithfull want necessities at any time for this life, some bread and water, though but a little, Psal. 37. assuredly thou shalt be fed.

Lyra.

Noté.

And thine ears shall hear a word behinde thee, saying, This is the way, walk in it, when ye turn to the right hand and to the left, Vulg. Decline not to the right hand, respecting the sense rather then the rendring it verbatim: Calvin incongruously either to the right hand, &c. neither the word ׀ affording it, nor sense according to other Scriptures, wherein declining to the right hand or left, is generally forbidden. But for hearing the word to be guided in the right way, when thou turnest to the right hand of being overwise, or to the left of being overfoolish, as Jerom expounds it, and Eccl. 7.16,17. good reason that we should be called upon by the voice of the Gospel. But why is it a word heard behinde thee? Jerom referres this to the back of the Lord, who goeth away, as it were, for sin, but yet out of his great love sometimes looks back, and speaks again to sinners, but this agrees not, because it is not said behinde him, but behinde thee, and being thus understood it would not answer so well to v. 20. Haimo therefore better, when men enticed by worldly things turn their backs upon God to go after them, he calls to them by his word to reduce them to the right way again. And Gregory, We turn our backs as it were to our Teachers face, when we despise his words, and tread his precepts under foot, when he notwithstanding ceaseth not to call us. As a loving father seeing his childe going towards a dangerous pit, or green place, where serpents lie hid to sting him, calls with all earnestnesse after him, to make him turn back, and keep out of that danger of destruction, although by the childe not yet perceived.

Thou shalt defile the coverings, or places of thy silver graven images, &c. Here are shewed the notable effects that shall follow the preaching of the Gospel amongst the Gentiles now turned to be Gods people. They shall break down their Idols both of silver and gold, which they before worshipped, as filthy and abominable things, as the event shewed, when Emperours and Kings began to embrace the faith. And it was also in part fulfilled in the Jews, after their return out of Babylon, as was also before prophesied, Chap. 1.30. 2.20. for they alwaies hated Idols after, being willing in the Romans time rather to die, then to suffer the Eagle, the imperiall arms to be set up in their Temple.

And he shall give rain to the seed that thou shalt sow in the Land, &c. After reformation from sin, the blessing of plenty of the fruits of the earth, shall follow every where, which apply answers to verf. 20. where scanty bread and water is spoken of, as coming by way of correction upon Gods people for sin, but now the contrary shall be upon the leaving of sin through the word working in the hearts of the hearers.

Verf. 24.

Thy Oxen and Asses shall eat clean provender, &c. a further amplification of their plenty, in that the beasts which laboured in tilling the ground, should be allowed corn well-dressed, the offall being cast away. The Vulg. Lat. hath commistum migma, whereby is understood diversity of grains mingled together as of Oats, Fitches, Pease and Barly, to make the provender the more pleasant to the taste.

Verf. 25.

On the day of the great slaughter when the Towers fall. Here the Prophet promiset further, that when the great slaughter of the enemies of Gods people shall be made, and the great ones of the earth set forth by Towers, which formerly overtopt them, shall fall, Rivers shall run upon high mountains, which Jerom understands of many wicked ones first perishing by Gods judgements, such waters shall flow, as Christ speaks of, Joh. 4. He that drinks of this water, it shall be a river of water flowing out of his belly; Junius likewise touching wicked hypocrites, whereof some be as Towers for their greatnes, Ch. 2. 15. but for the Rivers of water nothing else but a further amplification of most plentiful times. The Hebrews by the Towers understand the Romane Potentates, holding that this blessed time of so great plenty shall be to them, when they shall perish and their armies. Sasbons by the high places, the high in virtue, in them shall run rivers of grace, when the wicked, yea, the greatest in this world shall be destroyed at Christs second coming. For my part I see no cause if all the good promised before upon the destroying of Idols, verf. 23. 24. be temporall, standing in the blessing of greatest plenty, but that this should likewise be understood. For having said, ver. 23. that rain should be given in every place, and here, that rivers shall run upon high places, how can any exposition be so fitly brought of this, but by expounding these rivers, as of waters in abundance coming of that raine? sith in that dry countrey where Isaiah lived, when he spake this, and the parts about, water could never too much abound. And for the time of the great slaughter, to what can it more aptly be referred then to that spoken of verf. 17. where it is so many shall be slain, as that they shall be left but as a beacon upon a mountain, and for towers fallen? see Junius before.

Verf. 26.

And the light of the Moon shall be as of the Sun, and the light of the Sun sevenfold. This is by some referred to the Jews deliverance out of Babylon, by some to Christ glorified more abundantly, who is the Sun of righteousness, and the Apostles after the coming down of the holy Ghost having their light encreased, and waxing more famous, and some to the day of judgement when they think that the Sun and Moon shall shine more gloriously, applying to this Rom. 8. 21. of the creatures deliverance into glorious liberty, and some to the thousand years spoken of Rev. 20. But forsomuch as the Argument in hand from ver. 23. is about temporal blessings that should be upon the beating down of idolatry, and these blessings come by the kindly influence of the heavenly Lights, the Sun, Moon, and Stars, the meaning can be nothing else, but that these shall be far more comfortable then ordinary, working upon the earth, so as to cause far more fruitfulness, and upon the air to cause more healthfulness, when once the Gospel so prevaieth, as that the Jews be converted, at what time as heathen Idols were destroyed Christianity first prevailing in Emperours and Kings, so Popish Idols shall be destroyed throughout the world, and all Nations shall bow their knees to one true God only. For what is the encrease of the light of heavenly bodies to us, but more comfort by their means through greater fertility and abundance? To the day of judgement this cannot cannot be referred, because then the Sun and Moon shall lose their light; nor to the Jews deliverance out of the Babylonish captivity; because the times then were not so happy in outward respects, as sometimes past before; nor to the glory of Christ exalted, when the Gospel first prevailed, because so we should confound the cause and effect together, forso much as this blessing is an effect following upon Idols beating down, which was by Christ becoming glorious amongst the Nations. Lastly, Neither to the thousand years yet to come, for these are past long ago, as I have shewed upon Rev. 20. Now the time set for this great blessing is, when he shall make up the breach of his people, and heal the stroke of their wound; that is, whenas having been reduced to so few, as is said v. 17. they should again grow far more numerous by the accession of many Churches of the Gentiles.

Behold, the Name of the Lord comes from a far, his face burning, &c. The Prophet having threatned the people of God for their sins, and promised all comfort to the faithfull in the words before going, now enters upon threatnings by way of Prophecy against their most infest enemies, the Assyrians by whom as Calvin saith, he meaneth also the Babylonians, because their kingdom was translated to them. And he saith, his Name comes from far, that is, his power doing miraculously in confounding the great Monarch of the world, to the purchasing of fame to himself in all Nations, for so he gat him a name sometime in Egypt, by destroying Pharaoh. And from far, is as much as after a long time, that he had suffered that Tyrant to rage, his face or nostrils burning, that is, fire issuing from him, as breath out of mans nostrils to destroy, or his anger burning.

Verf. 27.

Calvin.

His breath as an overflowing stream that shall reach to the midst of the neck, &c. Having compared the wrath of God to fire extreemly hot and burning, now he compares it to three other things. 1. To a flood reaching to the neck, of which see Chap. 8.8. 2. To a fan that tosseth and casteth up the corn commonly to purge the chaff from amongst it; but this is a fan of vanity, bringing these wicked enemies to nothing. 3. To a Bridle, which we use to turn horses with, and to guide them in the right way: but this bridle should be put into the Assyrians or Caldeans jaws to cause them to erre, that is, to run such a race as should be to their destruction, the like phrase, see Chap. 39.29.

Verf. 28.

Ye shall have a song, as in the night, when an holy solemnity is kept, &c. When the Assyrians should be thus destroyed, as they were, Chap. 39. of which also see before Ch. 10.16, 18. then the people of God should have joy, making them to sing and to play upon pipes, and other instruments of musick in way of praising him, as sometime did Miriam, Exod. 15. and the godly are exhorted to do, Psa. 92. neither is it unlawfull for the faithfull now to do thus. But it is, as in the night of a holy solemnity, in a godly way, as they did of old the evening before their solemnity or festivall day, for their Sabbaths began in the Evening. So that here is nothing to countenance vain songs and pipings; but to stir us up to solemn praising of God, and keeping a day in so doing, when in fighting against our enemies he takes our part. And to shew where this should be done he saith, As one going with a pipe to the mountain of the Lord, that is, the Temple which stood upon a mountain, now in every house of God.

Verf. 29.

Calvin.
Note.

And the Lord shall cause his glorious voice to be heard, &c. Here again the Prophet further prosecutes the argument in hand, verf. 27, 28. touching the enemies destruction, whom he nameth, verf. 31. and he amplifieth it divers waies, as first, by the glorious or powerfull voice of God, commanding it to be done. 2. By the descent of his arm, or strength doing it. 3. By the fury of his countenance appearing most terrible in these his judgements. 4. By the flame of a devouring fire. 5. By dissipation as by a tempest. 6. By inundation, of which before. 7. By a tempest of hail, for thus sometime he destroyed the Cananites, Josh. 10. Not that the Assyrians should be destroyed all these waies, but most certainly and terribly, seeing it cannot be otherwise with them that are beset with so many sorts of judgements, whenas God is able with any one of them to confound all his enemies, but he useth such variety to terrifie the enemy the more, and to comfort his people against their most violent and proud attempts.

Verf. 30.

Verf.31.

By the voice of the Lord shall Assur be broken in pieces, who smote with a rod. In saying thus he alludes to Chap.10.24. The rod of Assur shall smite thee. They that in times past smote the people of God, and many other Nations by their irresistible forces, shall be now smitten without warlike instrument, or humane forces, as it were, by the meer voice and command of God, of so great power is he, if any doubt should be made how so great and mighty a Monarch could be smitten. And by thus saying is further declared why he spake so magnifically of the voice of the Lord, v.30. The last words may indifferently be rendred, He shall be smitten with a rod, or he smote with a rod: Therefore some, saith Vatablus, understand it as spoken of God; but that wherewith God smiteth, is before said to be his voice; there Assur smiting in times past is rather meant, he being now paid with his own coin, which is more expresse, Chap.33.1.

Vatablus.

Verf.32.

And in every place where the grounded staff shall passe, which the Lord shall lay upon him. Calv. And there shall be in every place a grounded staff, which the Lord shall insit upon him. Jun. So every place whereby he shall passe shall be a most grounded rod, upon whom the Lord hath put it. To multiply no more, according to the Hebrew, it may thus be best rendred verbatim, And every passage is a staff fastened, which the Lord shall make to rest upon him. For he speaks of a thing to come, as already past, as most commonly for the certainty thereof he doth. And the meaning is, Let him go whither he will in fleeing from the stroak of the Lord, the very place whither shall prove as a staff to smite and break him in pieces, neither shall he with all his power be able to keep it away, that it may not smite, or when it smiteth, to make it cease smiting, till he be utterly destroyed: for which he saith it is grounded and rests upon him, as a staff stuck into his very bowels not to be pluckt out again, as Ehdad his dagger stuck in Egloons belly. For so Sennacherib passed from place to place to take Jerusalem, but before he came there, a fixed strong staff of judgement was set, as it were, so fast in his way, that he could come no further, but in his passage lost his Army, and then fleeing home with confusion; his life, see Chap.10. & 38. With tabrets and harps, and battels of shakings he shall fight with it; or with battels of agitation it shall be fought with them. For although in the Text it is נֶחֱסֵם yet in the margin it is נֶחֱסֵם put by way of correction, meaning the Assyrians and Babylonians also, for both were by this divine power confounded miraculously. For tabrets and harps they are mentioned to shew, that to the Assyrians overthrow should not be used any weapons of warre, but as in Jehoshaphats time, the Amonites and Moabites were overcome and fell by singing and praising of God on the Jews part, 2 Chron.20. and playing with instruments of musick, so they by Hezekiahs praying, there being nothing left to do for the Jews, but to praise God likewise.

Verf.33.

For Tophet is ordained of old, yea for the King it is prepared, &c. Calvin, Topheth was ordained since yesterday, even for the King it is prepared. And this is verbatim according to the Hebrew: But by yesterday is meant from the beginning of the world; and by Topheth, hell; for it was otherwise called the valley of Benhinnom. Hebr. גִּבְעֵן הַחֵמָה Geben hennom, contractè, Gehenna, 2 King.23.10. Jer.7.31. 19.6. Here they making a great fire burnt their sons and daughters in sacrifice to Moloch; of which cruel superstition, and where this valley was, see upon Levit.18.21. 2 Chron.33.6. It was near to Jerusalem, being a great and deep valley, had in such detestation by the Lord, for the most odious idolatry there committed: That here in threatening everlasting torments in hell, he doth it by this name, applying all circumstances accordingly both of the largeness and depth, the great pile of wood and the fire, hereby allegorically expressing, both hells capacity, and the extream pangs of the damned there, and that they are so deep in, that they can never get out. For having hitherto threatened the wicked enemy with temporal destruction, here he addeth addeth eternal, which shall be to all the wicked; and the proud King is specially spoken of, because he thinks himself too great for God to bring under, and by such pride are most Kings apt to be lifted up, as Sennacherib and Nebuchadnezzar, and Pharaoh: To this effect Calvin, who also saith, that no certain place is here to be conceived to be set forth, or fire wherewith the damned are tormented, but by things known, the unspeakable condition of such is declared, to deter us all from sinning. Lyra following the Vulgar, it is prepared of the King, that is, by God; but he confesses the Hebrew to be. [for the King] that is, the devil, who is said, Job 41. to be King of all the sons of pride; so likewise Matth. 25. Go ye cursed into hell fire, prepared for the devil and his Angels. And he saith, it is deep, that is, in the center of the earth. But whereas many expound yesterday of the second day of the Creation, holding all the time of the world after, to be but as to day, he rejecteth that, because the second day was spent in dividing the waters; and saith rather the beginning of time is meant, when he made heaven and earth; because yesterday being so understood, answereth better to all the time following. Junius differing from all others hitherto cited, saith, That this is but an exegesis or further declaration of that which was said, v. 30, 31, 32. against the King of Babylon. By Tophet, of which see, 2 Chron. 28. 3. nothing else being meant, but as that was a noted place for putting to a tormenting death, they that there died having none other burial, so should not the King of Babylon, as was before threatened, Chap. 14. Of the word yesterday, put for a long time ago, see Chap. 30. 1. and Gen. 32. 1. Some others not much disagreeing herefrom, refer it to Sennacherib, saying that hereby his falling in his Army in Topheth, when the Angel smote it, was threatened, and that by burning, as children were burnt there to Moloch. Pagninus holds with Junius, that it was meant of Belshazzar slain in Babylon, and cast upon a dunghill. To me, seriously considering the three verses before, and this together, and finding the argument to be so alike, it seemeth that one only and the same thing is here and there set forth in more words, for the horribleness and miraculoufness of the destruction. For v. 32. the word עֵשֶׂת is used, coming of Toph a tabret, and here עֵשֶׂת is prepared, coming of the same radix; it being hereby alluded to the tabret there spoken of, because Tophet the valley of the son of Hinnom without Jerusalem, had the name from tabrets or pipes wherewith they played there, when children were tormented by fire to death, by way of sacrificing to the idol Moloch, as the Jews had trumpets sometimes blown in the offering of their sacrifices. And if we ascend to v. 28. we finde the breath of the Lord as an overflowing flood, and what doth that differ from the words here, The breath of the Lord as a flood of brimstone; for the same word נָחַל is both here and there. Wherefore Cyril in my poor judgement, applies it best to the destruction of Sannacherib the King of Assur before Jerusalem, and haply in that valley, for both Assur is mentioned, v. 31. and the smiting wherewith his Army, of which he was so proud, was smitten, most probably, was by a stupendious fire, called Gods Angel, for he makes his Angels a flame of fire, Chap. 10. 17, 18. for though the King perished not herein, yet his Army, his glory did; and therefore it might well be said to be prepared for the King, and his fatall stroke began so then, that he never joyed after, but fled and perished in the very act of idolatry, as many at divers times before had done in Tophet; yet I think it not fit to exclude the Babylonish King, but to take him in also as meant in this threatening, though not so properly, yea and the forces of them both, for the last word of v. 32. עֵשֶׂת against them, it being no unusual thing per enallagen numeri, to put the singular for the plural, King for Kings. As for hell to be meant here, there is more against it then for it; 1. Because the Gebeninnom is not once named. 2. Although it be meant under the word Tophet, yet for the place of torment, into which the infinite number of the damned shall be cast, there is no verisimilitude, that it should be set forth by that valley, being neither for the depth nor greatness a fit type thereof. 3. Here the King only is mentioned; whereas hell is prepared for an innumerable crew. 4. Although an hideous burning be here threatned, yet it is not added for ever and ever, as is commonly when hell fire is spoken of, as Chap. 66. 5. If by the King the devil were meant according to Lyra, here were no coherence with the former verse, but a strange chopping from one thing to another, not yet thought of in this Prophecie, the matter against the enemies then not being first concluded. Yet I deny not but this may be taken as some allusion to destruction in hell, which was not then, but under the Gospel more manifested, all the threatnings before being of temporal judgements and miseries.

CHAP. XXXI.

Vers. 1.

*W*Oe to them that go down to Egypt for help, and stay on horses, &c. Here the Prophet goes on to speak to the same effect against the wicked Jews, who relied on Egypt against the Assyrians and Babylonians, adding some other reasons to move them not to do so, but to repent and to seek help of the Lord. As first, that the Lord is wise to know, and resolute to punish them severely for thus doing, v. 2. Secondly, That the Egyptians are not wise as God, but foolish as men, and their horses flesh, that is, weak and vain to save such as trust in them; and not spirit, that is, mighty, v. 3. Thirdly, That the Lords coming in judgement shall be as the coming of a lion, whom a company of shepherds cannot fray away, v. 4. Fourthly, That his people are under his protection, and therefore need not to be afraid, v. 5. Upon these reasons he exhorts them to repentance, promising if they shall cast away their Idols, that the Assyrians, whom they so greatly feared, should fall by the sword, not of man, but of God, v. 6, 7, 8. To this effect almost Junius. Lyra distinguishing betwixt this and Chap. 30. saith, that the Prophet having there inveighed against the Jews, in Zedekiah his time, here threatneth the Kingdom of Israel in Hosiah his time, which I touched upon before, in speaking upon Chap. 30. And he saith that the Lord threatned Israel and Egypt by *Sennacherib*s coming, but if Judah would repent, and put down idolatry, or because they did in *Hezekiah*s time, he comforts them with a promise of destroying the Assyrians their enemies, without their striking of a stroak with their swords, as indeed he did Chap. 38. wherein I do not much dissent from him, but that I hold that both Kingdoms were threatned, Chap. 30. here Israel only is threatned, and Judah living now under a godly King, for the present comforted, and under the name Jerusalem the Church of God wheresoever for the future. Nothing more needs explication here, but all things are plain till Vers. 8. where it is said that the Assyrians shall be made tributaries. Junius expounds this of the enemies of the Church in general, because we never reade that it was fulfilled touching them in particular; but hereby is shewed, that the time should come when the faithfull should reign, and then all the enemies of the faith should be under. But the word נָתַן here used, doth not only signifie to tribute, but to liquefaction or melting, and so it is rendred by Calvin; and the meaning is, they being dissolved by death in part, and the surviving without all courage and strength as water, and so the event proved, for their choice young men, as Captains of the Assyrian Army, were destroyed by Gods Angel, as by fire, and such as escaped with their King, for fear fled, all courage melting away.

Junius.Lyra.

He shall passe over to his strong hold for fear, or Hebr. His rock shall passe for fear, or passe away, or vanish, as Junius: A Periphrasis of the Assyrians strength failing him, whereupon he relied and did formerly bear himself as invincible, for where was it now, when his great Army was so confounded: and his Princes fearing, fled from the Ensign, that is, the standard set up by the Lord against them, viz. the Divine power whereby they were smitten. And in describing the Lord who did it, he saith, Whose fire was in Zion, and furnace at Jerusalem; to denote from whence this destruction came unto them, even from the Temple, where where the true God was worshipped, by fire continually burning, being ready when he pleased to flame out into a consuming fire to the enemies of his Church and people. A great comfort to the faithfull, and no lesse terrour to their wicked enemies at all times, when they shall dare to attempt any thing against them, they do but expose themselves to the danger of a devouring fire, for such is God to them; according to that, Our God is a consuming fire.

CHAP. XXXII.

Behold a King shall reign in righteousness, and Princes, &c. The word rendered Princes, hath the letter z prefixed, signifying [to.] Although all Translatours passe it over as nothing, yet to me it seemeth to intimate, that to this King shall be Princes sutable, because then the Common-wealth is in best case, when it hath both a good King, and adjoined to him, as eyes and ears and hands to see to do justice, good Princes and under-Rulers. For under Nerva a good Emperour, by reason of wicked under-Rulers, the Roman Common-wealth was in a worse case, then under Nero, as many observe. Jerom refers this Prophecie to Christ, and so doth Junius. Lyra and Calvin to Hezekiah; yet so as that he is not the only man aimed at, but he as the type, Christ as the antitype, and this seemeth best. Lyra understanding Hezekiah after wicked Abaz, thinketh, that after him wicked Manasseh is here next prophesied of, v. 6, 7. it being shewed how bad he was, and v. 8. how good his grandchilde Josiah should be. Then he sheweth the destruction that should be in the time of Zedekiah, calling upon the women to lament it, v. 9, 10, &c. Lastly the felicity to come after this, through Christ, ver. 15. And this distribution of the chapter I shall follow, for it is not improbable by the text, that all these things are thus set down in order, as will appear to him that shall peruse the whole chapter; and it tends greatly to the magnifying of the Spirit of God enlightning Isaiah to speak so long before so punctually of these particulars. If it be objected, he saith, A King shall reign, this may well be understood of Hezekiah, although he reigned at the time of this prophesying, for he had as it were, two lives, forsomuch as after the sentence of death given against him, it was miraculously reversed, and then he lived and reigned again after this fifteen years. He was then the King here spoken of, and who knoweth whether this Prophecie be not misplaced, belonging to Abaz his time, although, order not being so much regarded, transferred hither, the people being comforted against his abominable wicked reign with a promise of a better King shortly to come. For which this is begun with this word of attention, Behold, as being a thing most remarkable, especially he being the son of so wicked a father.

And a man shall be an hiding place. Hieron. shall be hidden. Sept. a man hiding his speeches. But for so much as נִחַן is to hide, and the word is נִחַן coming of it in Hithpael, signifies to hide himself, it may be indifferently taken both waies; if for a noun latibulum, he means that this King shall be such, when any tempest ariseth to the poor that might otherwise be wronged by the mighty; if as a participle absconditus, he means that every man being a subject of this King shall be hidden, that is, kept out of danger by his righteous proceedings, and the Princes set up by him to execute justice, which is all one with the former; or as Lyra the tempest from which, may be understood of the Assyrians coming to take Jerusalem, safe from which by his means the Jews should be within the City; the other similitudes added, as a covert from a tempest, rivers of water in a dry land, and the shadow of a rock, serve only to declare the benefit of this good King further, and in him to shew what every King should be, viz. a defence and comfort to his subjects, not a tyrant, being grievous to them by cruelties and exactions, seeking the increase of his own treasure, but their welfare. So Aristotle, A Tyrant seeks his own profit, a King the profit of his subjects. Seneca, Know (O Prince) that not the servitude, but, rulership of Verf. 4. And the heart of the rash shall understand knowledge. That is, which rashly followed wicked Abaz in idolatry, they shall now know the difference betwixt serving God and idols, and they that for fear spake, as it were, stammeringly then, shall now plainly praise the Lord. Hebr. Shall speak elegantly, thus be: But Musculus and Calvin, who are also for things done in Hezekiah's time, extend this to Christs, as being words to the same effect with those, Chap. 29. 18. ch. 30. 21. It shall not be said any more to the fool liberal, nor to the churl bountifull. For liberal, Hebr. נָדִיב, signifying either Prince or liberal; and for bountifull שֹׁבֵל signifying also wealthy, as being for his wisdom made such by Gods blessing, and so mighty. And this is by Lyra applied to Abaz, who dealt like a fool, for so the word signifieth, being Nabal, and is so expounded, i Sam. 25. for what greater folly then to be an idolater, therefore he shall lose the name of a wise Prince, and for his wealth, he was so rifled of it by the King of Asbur, that he was left poor and contemptible.

Verf. 6.

And v. 6. The Nabal or fool will speak folly, &c. N. Tr. The vile person vilany. He applieth to wicked Manasseh, who reigned after Hezekiah, who spake foolishly, when he spake for the worshipping of more Gods, pretending that thus they should have the more Gods to help them in their need. And his heart works wickednesse. That is, this wickedness of manifold idolatry, comes from his wicked heart, in working hypocrisie and speaking error to the Lord. That is, drawing the Princes on by dissembling good, that would redound to the Common-wealth hereby: As Leo saith, that the Romans did of old take into the number of the gods, the gods of those Nations whom they had subdued, that thus they might make them to work for their good. And he spake error touching the Lord; when he worshipped him still, thinking thus to please those Princes, who would not be moved to revolt from the Lord altogether: But this was a gross error to hold, that any worshipping of God could be acceptable to him, when it was joined with the worship of false gods. And he shall make empty the soul of the hungry, &c. That is, requiring so great means to maintain sacrifices for so many gods, that which should be for the sustenance of the common people, being to maintain idolatry, exacted of them, and they left even without necessary food.

And v. 7. The instruments, even his instruments or vessels are evil: For thus it is Hebr. verbatim. Vulg. Fraudulenta instrumenta pessima sunt. N. Tr. The instruments of the churl are evil. Jun. Tenacia instrumenta. Calv. Avari instrumenta. But the words are כלי כלי רע, which words are never used to signify, churle, tenacious, fraudulent or covetous, but vessels only or stuff. And this by him is applied to the evil officers whom Manasseh used as his instruments to set up idolatry, and to destroy those that would not consent unto it. He consulteth devices to destroy the poor with lying words, and in the poor's speaking judgement or right. That is, Manasseh accusing Isaiah and other godly men (for they are in the Scripture phrase called poor) but falsely as enemies to the publick good for speaking against the worshipping of many gods, which he pretended, might make so much for the benefit of all, thus wrought their destruction; for he both sawed Isaiah in funder, and killed many more unjustly, for which he is said to have filled Jerusalem with innocent blood. And touching

v.8. The liberal man deviseth liberal things; or more agreeably to the Hebrew, The Prince shall think things worthy of a Prince; so also the Vulgar Latine: And by things worthy a Prince shall be established. He applies it to Josiah the grandchilde of Manasseh a most godly King, who in his youth set himself to purge the Temple from pollution, and all parts from all monuments of idolatry thoroughout his dominion. But for these words, By things worthy a Prince he shall be established, he hath, super duces stabit, that is he shall rule over other of his Princes so as to bring and settle them in the same good way. But forso much as the word by him rendred duces, is the same with that before going, signifying things or thoughts worthy a Prince, or Princelike thoughts, and is of the feminine gender, I see no reason why he should render it by Princes.

Vers.8.

Rise up ye Women that are at ease, ye careless daughters. Hebr. & Vulg. Ye confident daughters. This he applieth to the time of Zedekiah, wherein Jerusalem was destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar, saying that the men are here spoken to by the name of women for their faintheartedness, and their confidence whereby they are upbraided, was the trust which they had in their strong wals.

Vers.9.

Daies and years ye shall be troubled, &c. Hebr. Daies above a year, so Calvin also, but why the Vulgar hath it, post dies & annos, I see not: Yet Lyra following this, and R. Solomon saith, that the meaning is, they should be a long time multiplying their sins, and then their destruction should come by the Caldees, but rather the time of their being in Captivity is here pointed at, which was many years, wherein their vintage ceased, as here followeth, because the ground lay unhusbanded: Or the time that was spent in besieging Jerusalem, for that was a hundred seventy nine daies above a year, as will appear to him that will look into 2 King. 25. and this agreeth best with the words here used, daies above a year. From hence to Vers. 15. all things are plain, being applied as Vers. 10. Lastly Vers. 15, &c. to the end of the chapter, he understands of the time of the Gospel, when the Spirit came down in the likeness of cloven tongues of fire, Act. 2. in the vertue whereof the Apostles went out amongst the Gentiles and converted them, who thereupon became fruitfull as Carmel, being before a wilderness. But vers. 14. a joy of wilde asses and pastures of flocks. He saith the land of Judea was even after their return from Captivity, as well as before; for there were some good of the Jews living there, in respect of whom he saith, that it should be pastures for flocks: But because they were alwaies subjects to strange Kings after this, first to the Babylonians, then to the Persians, and after to the Grecians, &c. He calls it a joy of wilde asses. Vers. 19. But hail shall be in the descent of the forest, and the City shall be made low. That is, saith he, the Roman armies shall destroy the houses built with Cedars out of the Forrest of Libanus, both the Temple and Kings houses, so that Jerusalem, which before was lifted up aloft with stately buildings, shall now lie low.

Vers.10.

Vers.19.

Blessed are ye that sow upon all waters, sending forth the feet of the ox and the asse. That is, ye Apostles and other Preachers of the Gospel, who whilst Jerusalem was thus in destroying, sow the seed of the word amongst all peoples and Nations of the world: For both the Preacher is said to be a sower, Matth. 13. and the people of many Countries are set forth by waters, Revel. 17. 15. and by the ox and asse are meant the strong and learned, and the unlearned and weak. Thus Lyra, whom I have thought good thus to trace throughout the chapter, because for the most part he is singular in his Exposition hereupon. For Jerom applieth all things here to Christ and to the time of the Gospel, saying he is this King, and the Apostles these Princes governing the faithfull in all Countries, and that Christ is both an hiding place and all manner of comfort to the faithfull soul; and now so many of them that were blinde before, as were ordained to life, attain sight, and the deaf hearing, answerable to the promise made, Chap. 29. 18. And for the fool, v. 5. 6. he applieth that to the Pharisees, who in times past were counted the wisest, and ruled like Princes, but Christ coming sheweth them to be fools and hypocrites; and they spake against the Lord Christ, and devised the destruction of this meek one, when he spake nothing but right, but they most deceitfully to him, Master we know that thou art just, &c. Shall we pay tribute to Caesar or not? to intrap him, and to keep the souls of the hungry empty of the divine instructions, wherewith he was ready to feed them; they bad them search and see whether the Prophet should rise out of Galilee. But Jesus spake things worthy of a Prince, v.8. when he said, Come to me all ye that are heavy laden, and I will refresh you: And again, If any man thirsteth, let him come to me and I will give him of the water of life freely. Vers.9. The calling upon women, he takes to be Christs preaching, either to some women properly, and their daughters, who had formerly been careless, or some Cities of whom there was still some hope in respect of conversion; his words also agreeing, Luk.4. This is the day of salvation, the acceptable year of the Lord; to these v.10. Daies and a year ye shall be troubled; and these words, The vintage is ended, he applies to the Romans having done their last, when they had destroyed their City, so that now they should suffer no more, but after this have comfort. And by the houses of joy he understands the Temple, which should be abused by buying and selling therein. And by the pouring out of the Spirit, v.15. The Spirit of grace given to the Gentiles, who thereupon should have peace with God, and be as a fruitfull field, and the Jews as a wilderness through their unbelief. For the hail, v.19. he differs not from Lyra, nor in saying, Blessed are ye for he applies it to the preachers of the Gospel sowing the seed of life in all Countries, there being now no more difference put between the Jew, set forth by the ox, a clean beast, and Gentile by the asse, which was unclean, but all alike preached unto, and promised life upon turning to Christ by faith and repentance. Calvin and Musculus, as was said before, understanding this of Hezekiah coming to the Kingdom after wicked Abaz, apply v.5. to the great change that was then to the better; foolish and wicked men being before preferred, and made Judges and Rulers, for such pleased Abaz best, now contrariwise no such were in place of authority any more. but were put down, the worthy only being advanced. And mystically to Christs Kingdom, under which by the light of the Gospel, things did so appear as they were; as that such as had been formerly in great account for wise and learned men, as the Scribes and Pharisees, were then counted so no more, but fools and covetous, as the Lord calls them, Matth.23. And v.6. to all wicked persons and hereticks, who speak error against the Lord, and despise and mock at the truth taught; for that which is done against the truth of the Lord, is done against him. Vers.7. By instruments they understand all crafty waies of the covetous to bring in gain, and their circumventing of the poor with deceitfull words in judgement, the turning of the seat of judgement, which should be a sanctuary to the poor, into a place of robbing and spoiling them. Vers.8. The liberal thinketh of liberal things; that is, how he may do good to others, being never weary, as Gal.6.9. Vers.9. The women that are at ease, arise. Some, saith Calvin, think this to be the beginning of a new sermon or Prophecie touching judgements to come afterwards, but it is the manner of the Prophet when he hath spoken comfort, as he hath done in this chapter hitherto, suddenly to turn to threatening of judgements, that all might not think the foresaid comforts to belong to them, but hearing of judgements, which are the portion of the wicked, be moved to repent and fear. But when this judgement should come he saith not: but women are spoken to, because that sex is often spared in time of warre, but now in speaking to rouse them up, he sheweth what a bloody time is to come, wherein no sex or age shall be spared; wherefore he names women and daughters; though some by women understand, as the Hebrews, greater Cities, and by daughters little villages, grounding upon Ioshua, where a City and her daughters are oft spoken of. And for the spirit pouring out, the time whereof is set, as the limit of these calamities, v.15. He applies that to sanctifying grace under Hezekiah, but most of all under the Gospel, which when it shall take place, worldly blessings shall as much abound, as miseries did before. For the Forrest now shall be as Carmel, that is, through through the grace of the spirit, they that were before barren shall be most fruitfull, and they that seemed to themselves as Carmel for some beginnings of grace in them, shall now think, that they were before but as a forest barren of fruit in regard of that which they are made now, vers. 17. And the work of justice shall be peace, &c. that is, the people of God being endued with so great grace to make them live righteously, as vers. 16. in stead of warre to waste them, they shall now have peace perpetual, and in stead of briars and thorns before threatned, vers. 13. admirable blessings upon the Land, so that in all places, where they should sow, yea though squalidous with water overabounding, yet their seed should so plentifully come up, that they should not need to keep their oxen or asses out of their corn-fields for fear of doing them hurt by treading and feeding upon their corn, but they should rather sometime put them in to keep it from being too rank, vers. 20. and whereas before they were threatned with destruction of their palaces by the enemy, vers. 14. now they should abide in tabernacles of peace, vers. 18. and when the hail should fall it should be upon the descent of the forest, the City being in a low place in safety, vers. 19. and so the storm not coming at it, but falling only in other places, where it might do them no hurt, for they shall suffer no violence any more. And concluding he saith, That the Church hath had no such time yet under the Gospel, by reason that sinne still remains even in the best Churches, and therefore the full accomplishment of this is not to be expected till the time of Gods creating a new heaven and a new earth in the world to come. I am not of Lyra his minde, that Manassih and Iosiah are here pointed at, vers. 6, 8. after Hezekiah, because all things cohere so together, as that all may best be referred to the time of Hezekiah his reign, and after that to Christs. But for vers. 9, 10, &c. to vers. 15. I think it best to apply that which is therein said to the destruction of Ierusalem by the Romans, and women are particularly called upon to lament the miseries of those times, because they would be to them most grievous, as who had never been used to any hardship, but lived daintily and tenderly. For in naming not only dayes, but years also, a very long time is certainly meant; and because it is said לעול for ever, whereby a very long time amongst them is commonly meant, the determination of which is not known vers. 14. we may well gather, That the long desolation of Ierusalem under the Gospel is prophesied of, whilst the Jews continue in unbelief, but being converted an end is put hereunto, as vers. 15. And so it notably agreeth with Matth. 23. 23. Your habitation shall be left desolate, till I say, &c. And the words vers. 12. Lament over the daggis, with Matth. 24. where woe is to the women that give suck in those dayes. And then vers. 15. must needs be understood of the conversion of the Jewish Nation, when they shall enjoy more peace and plenty, and security from enemies, then ever before, as the next words shew, The desert shall be as Carmel, that is, a fruitfull field, for since the destruction of Ierusalem, all the fields about are as a wilderness most barren, and therefore this may well be understood as a promise of their becoming most fruitfull again, as in times past it had been a Land flowing with milk and honey, according to Psal. 107. A fruitfull Land turneth he into barrennesse, and a barren Land into fruitfull, or standing waters; But what sense shall we give of the contrary, and Carmel as a forest or wood? A very good one thus, Corn shall grow therein as thick as a wood, as our common Proverb is, when we speak of an excellent field of corn. Expositours, I confesse, generally give another sense of the Jews barren before in goodness becoming fruitfull, and yet in the midst of their fruitfulness humbling themselves, as thinking their former fruitfulness barrenness; in comparison of that which they now were, yea even the best of them, and confirming it from the like, Chap. 29. 17. But here are not the very same words, but for לעול a wood or forest, לעול a wilderness is here, implying the ground to be spoken of, and not the persons, neither can the last words without forcing be expounded of any mens thinking themselves so, but as the former words imply a real change, so do the latter, and to intimate intimate the sense that I have given, he saith not, Carmel shall be a wilderness, but shall be counted a weed. and therefore even Calvin followeth this sense first, and interposing a more mystical sense a little seconds this through the other verses to the end, and what he hath said upon them, I take to be most genuine. Only whereas he seems to think, that this time of such extraordinary blessings of peace, and so abundant plenty, is not to be expected here, but hereafter. I conceive by comparing this with some places in this Prophecy like to it, that he, who made Sodom and Gomorrhah a desert most barren, which before was most fruitfull as the garden of God, and likewise the tract about Jerusalem farre and wide, can and will upon the Jews conversion make it again most admirably fruitfull. And whereas he vers. 20. by waters understandeth places most unlikely to bear corn for their waterishness, I cannot finde, that there were ever in that hot and dry Countrey any such places, but when watery places are spoken of fruitfullst soils are meant every where, and Pf. 104. & 107. Isa. 30. 25. and so I doubt not but sowing by or upon all waters, here is meant upon most fruitfull ground.

Some referre these words to the devil, who stirred up persecution against the Apostles, but shall at length be destroyed together with all his instruments. Some to no particular, but generally to all wicked enemies of the Church. Some to Sennacherib the King of Assur, who was smitten in his host by the Angel, as is said here touching this spoiler, vers. 3. But the Vulgar rendring it, From the voice of the angel, erreth, because it is, Heb. From the voice of the tumult [When I look back therefore to c. 21. 2. where the same words are used in prophesying against Babylon, as I have there shewed, I cannot but conclude, that this is against Babylon also, which although it were prophesied against largely, c. 13. 14. and briefly pointed at c. 22. and c. 29. 7, 8. Yet because the punishment of that City was most remarkable of all others, as being by far the greatest, and the City whereby the people of God, and his City and Temple suffered most, it is not to be thought strange that Isaiah should so often threaten it. But of Babylon he saith no more, but the few words of this one verse, for the exposition whereof see before Chap. 21. 2. For he immediatly falleth to prayer, O Lord, be gracious to us, we have waited for thee, &c. much like to Chap. 26. 8. Because mercy to the people of God in destroying the enemy prophesied of vers. 1. is to be sought notwithstanding by prayer. And he praieth God to be their strength to mornings, for so the word properly signifieth, that is, to morning after morning continually, which he having briefly done turns again to his Prophecie against the Assyrian, whom he had also often threatned before, as another most infest and potent enemy of the Jews, of whose coming against them he speaks at large soon after this in H Ezekiah his time, Chap. 36.

At the voice of the tumult the people fled, at thy exaltation the Gentiles were dispersed. It is not unlikely, that the Angel who smote the Assyrians, did it with a great noise, haply as of a Trumpet, whereby they being afrighted, as sometime the Midianites at Gideons sounding with Rams-horns began to flee, but in vain most of them, because he that terrified them smote them, so that few escaped, and now the Lord, whom Sennacherib had so boldly blasphemed, was exalted, by shewing to all the world his infinite power to his glory, that all might tremble before him as the most high. He seemed before, saith Calvin, to be low and little in power, whilst he suffered the enemies to go unpunisht, but now he made them know, that he had power above the proudest and greatest, and he speaks of Nations dispersed, although he meant the Assyrians, because their Army consisted of divers Nations. But touching the tumult, rumult, at the noise whereof they are said to flee, he applies that to the Caldees at the coming of the Medes and Persians, which I also would willingly have done, but that I see not how the words following vers. 5. can be made to agree to those times, He hath filled Zion with justice and righteousness: For this must needs be understood of something in judgement done there, at the least in grounds to Zion appertaining, and not so farre off as Babylon; and vers. 7. The embassadours of peace shall weep] that is, Hezekiah's Embassadours sent to Sennacherib, seeing that they could not prevail. And vers. 8. He hath broken the covenant] which is plainly meant of the Assyrian promising peace upon Hezekiah's compounding with him, of which see 2 Kin. 18. 13. Thus also Calvin himself upon these verses.

And your spoil shall be gathered as the gathering of the locusts. Pagnine rendreth it Bruchus, a kinde of locust, having the name from bruxum to eat, because in the East they often come in great numbers, and devour the fruits of the earth, so that Husbandmen gather abundance of them together, and making an hole in the ground put them in there and earth after them, so killing them; they have no wings as other locusts, and therefore they may easily be gathered; Nicander calls it στροβη, a corn devourer, and to the gathering of these, which may easily be done, the Prophet here alludes in speaking of the spoils of the Assyrians when they were slain or fled.

Wisdom and knowledge shall be the stability of thy times, &c. That is, this being done in favour to Hezekiah for his wisdom and fear of God, during the whole time of his reign after, it is here promised, that by the same means he should have fetled peace and prosperity, all Nations about hearing how mightily God fought for him, not daring to come against Judea, where he reigned any more. And this is mystically by Cyril, Theodor. and Procopius applied to the Church under the Gospel, and to Christ guiding her by the spirit of wisdom, and the fear of the Lord; see Isa. 11. 2. and happy dayes Gods holy mount enjoyeth being thus governed. And if our happinesse and stable peace be founded upon such knowledge and wisdom, as causeth in us the fear of God, it is our part to esteem more hereof then of the greatest treasures in the world: for that which Hezekiah's treasure could not procure to him, viz. peace with Sennacherib, although by sending to him he sought it, is for this treasure promised him, both in respect of Assur, and all other enemies round about. And specially now being in such danger of our peace breaking out into warre again, for which moneys be gathered, and forces maintained, let us seek stability by improving our knowledge to the fearing of God, and eschewing evil. O fools that employ your wits to invent errors, or to get treasures upon earth, but neglect the getting of this greatest treasure, that hath length of dayes in peace on her right hand, and on her left riches and honour, see a like promise to this Chap. 32. 17.

The Embassadours of peace shall weep bitterly. Here the Prophet returns to shew how it should be proceeded before the destruction of the Assyrians threatned Ver. 3. he saith, That their mighty and strong ones shall cry without, for so צורר signifieth, and the word rendred [cry] signifieth to utter a loud voice, and so may well be applied to Rabshakeb, and his fellows crying out against Hezekiah, and to declare the power of his master to make the Jews afraid. Which when they did, Eliakim and Shebna called here the Embassadours of peace, coming to speak to them upon the wall, wept and rent their cloaths to hear their blasphemies. Calvin understands Embassadours sent to Sennacherib, but when they could not prevail for peace, returning, and weeping, and crying for sorrow, so that they might be heard before they entered the City. Lyra, such as were placed without upon watch-towers, who espied the enemies coming, and crying out to them within to keep out of their danger. But neither rightly, for, 1. Their strong ones crying without, and the Embassadours weeping, cannot be such as belonged both to one King, for then it would have been said, Their Embassadours as well as their strong ones, and the order - of the words is inverted, by saying, They returned weeping and crying so loud; for first their crying out is spoken of, and then weeping, and they are called by two names, who did these two things, as being two sorts of men, and not one. 2. The word here used is never put for watchmen, but for mighty ones or Angels. But for the exposition given, who so shall read the story must needs confesse it to agree excellently.

- Isa. 36. 13. Verf. 8. The high ways lie waste, &c. That is, before Assurs overthrow, he with his Armies was so formidable, that men durst not travel; and the Cities are said to be despised, because other Cities of Judea besides Jerusalem were taken by him, 2 King. 18. 13. and then doubtlesse the people were spitefully used. And he is said to have broken the Covenant, because being compounded with by Hezekiah for three hundred Talents of silver and thirty of gold to depart, he notwithstanding bent his course against Jerusalem, 2 Kin. 18. 14, 15. such is the condition of wicked tyrants, who have no fear of God in them, that they will break Covenants, though never so solemnly confirmed by oath; when they please. For it is not probable, that Hezekiah would send him so great a summe of money but upon such a Covenant; and therefore the Papists are most wicked, like Sennacherib, and void of all fear of God, because they hold it for a maxim, That no faith is to be kept towards hereticks; upon which ground Vladislaus the Emperour having made peace with Amurath the great Turk for ten years, by the Popes perswasion brake it, and received a mighty great overthrow at his hands; and Henry the third of England brake his Covenant with the Barons, often confirmed, being all of one religion also, by the Popes dispensation, which cost him dear.
- Note. Verf. 9. The earth languisheth, &c. An amplification of the miseries of the Land of Judea in those times, and of the principal parts, Lebanon, where the Cedars were cut down by the Assyrians prevailing, Carmel, Basban and Sharon, all fruitfull places; and Lebanon is said to be ashamed by a Prosopopeia; Sharon made as a desert, because the inhabitants were destroyed or gone, and their cattel by means of the Assyrians.
- Verf. 10.* Now will I rise, saith the Lord, and be exalted. That is, when all things in Judea shall seem most desperate by this enemies coming, the course shall suddenly by Gods power be turned, the enemies so greatly prevailing being destroyed and fugated, and the distressed Jews filled with joy: and the Word exalted is used to shew, that the same is meant here, that is prophesied of, v. 3.
- Verf. 11.* Ye shall conceive chaff and bring forth stubble, &c. Here it is shewed how the Lord should be exalted, according to verf. 10. viz. by making all the high thoughts of the Assyrians against Jerusalem vain and nothing worth, as chaff and stubble, and making their own breath to kindle a fire, as it were, upon themselves to burn and destroy them, as in the next words, Your spirit as a fire shall devour you, or The fire of your spirit] so called, because as a man by blowing kindles a fire; so they in meditating mischief against Gods people, blew up a great fire to burn themselves, when God by his Angel destroyed them with fire, as was before touched upon Chap. 10. and is more confirmed verf. 12.
- Calvin. Muscul.* Verf. 12. The people shall be, as the burnings of chalk, as thorns cut up, &c. For here is both shewed, that their destruction should be by fire, and to what weakness they should then be brought; though before as hard chalk stones and pricking thorns, yet now they should crumble away, and be suddenly consumed. Whereby we may see, how vain the wicked enemies of the Church are in attempting any thing against her, when God riseth up to take her part, as he will assuredly do when her case may seem most desperate.
- Note. Verf. 13. Hear ye that are farre off what I have done, &c. After destruction thus denounced against the Assyrians, the Lord now calleth all men to hear and observe this, that the godly might be comforted: and Chap. 34. the wicked enemies, that they might be terrified; for there he shews the horrible judgements that should befall them, as Cha. 35. again, the blessed and happy estate of Gods Church, and the peace thereof.

The sinners in Zion are afraid, fearfulness hath surprized the hypocrites, who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? &c. Here it is shewed, that when deliverance from the Assyrians was graciously promised, there were some wicked hypocrites amongst the Jews, who sought contrariwise to fill all men with fear like themselves, speaking yet through hypocrisie reverently of the Lord, as Abaz had sometime before done Chap. 7. As if they had been brought in saying, But how can we that are so wicked hope for so great a good from the Lord, sith he is a consuming fire to the wicked, and such as by Idolatry pollute themselves and their habitation? shall such as we are then finde him still dwelling amongst us with his favour to protect us? no, it cannot be hoped, that he will do so any longer, but we must now perish by the hands of the Assyrians. So Iunius. But Calvin contrariwise understands it, as setting forth the horrible fear that wicked persons and hypocrites shall be in, when God comes with his judgements, which before they feared not being onely denounced. Lyra, by the wicked hypocrites here spoken of, understands the wicked Priests, who were wont to stand and minister at the Altar, where fire burnt continually, and therefore is here called, The everlasting burning. Jerom understands it of the Scribes and Pharisees, as if it had been said, Who shall dwell with God to declare the everlasting burnings of hell fire? Sasbon understands it, as a description of God, called devouring fire; &c. for his destroying Sennacherib's Army by fire; as if he had said, What man being of a guilty conscience, although seemingly holy, can abide by God so terrible in his judgements! Thomas Aquinas & Hugo, by the Hypocrites here spoken of, understand the Assyrians, whose coming against Ierusalem made a great shew of power irresistible, but their power was proved to be of no force, when they approached near Ierusalem, where God dwelt, who is a consuming fire to the wicked, as they soon found it. And whereas these words, sinners in Zion, may seem to make against this exposition, they say, the Assyrians are said to be in Zion, because in the land of Zion. But it is plainly meant of the wicked and hypocritical dwelling in Zion, who when they saw God to have so terribly destroyed the Assyrians, feared lest they should be next destroyed also, whereupon the Prophet cries out, Which of us shall dwell, the fire devouring, &c. for so it is, if we render it verbatim, as if he had said, The condition of the wicked and of all hypocrites within shall be fearfull and trembling, when God shall so severely execute his judgements against the enemies without; but if any faithfull person shall ask, What shall become of the truly godly, shall they stand, when God comes to make a general judging of the world by fire and brimstone, after which shall follow everlasting burnings & tormentings in hell? this is in the next words v. 15, 16. resolved, they shall not by all this be moved, but continue with God in his greatest favour for ever in all joy and glory. Being any otherwise understood there will be no coherence of the next words, v. 15. with these, He that walketh righteously, and speaketh uprightly, &c. A description of a right godly man, like unto that Ps. 15. & to shew that this is an answer to the Question, v. 14. he addeth, v. 16. He shall dwell on high his place of defence shall be the munition of rocks, &c. That is, in heaven, where no evil can come at him, by most strong & safe places upon earth, the ever safe estate of the inhabitants of heaven, being set forth, & likewise by the bread and water here spoken of, their continual never failing supply of all comforts, for to speak properly, there is no need there of any thing to eat & drink. And in setting forth the place where, and with whom the righteous shall dwell, he useth another Periphrasis here, that it might the better be understood what was meant by the everlasting burnings, v. 14. even the Lord that is so to the wicked to destroy them both here and hereafter, but to the righteous as a most strong defended place to save and provide for them, that they shall never want in this world, or in that which is to come. Whereas in describing the righteous, v. 15. he saith, That stoppeth his ears from hearing of blood. Gregory saith hereupon, What is this, but not to consent to the sins to which flesh and blood perswades him? But it is better, with Cal. and others to understand it of consultations tending to the shedding of the blood of the the innocent, or to conspiracies against them for any mischief. And the shutting of his eyes against seeing evil, is meant either of any object whereby lust may be kindled in his heart or evil done by others, as abominating the very beholding of it. Thine eyes shall see the King in his glory, they shall see a Land farre removed. Jerom by this King understands Christ reigning gloriously in heaven, of whom he spake before Isa. 32.1. and the Saints looking from thence should see the earth afarre off, as little and contemptible. Lyra takes him for Hezekiah, who for the overthrow given to the Assyrians was glorious in all Lands round about, as we may see 2 Chron. 32. and in particular he applies it to Eliakim, of whom the Prophet spake before Isa. 22.20. because he was such a righteous man that his eyes should see the Land afarre off, that is, the Land of Judea before covered with the Assyrian Army, but now cleared of them, for from Zion by reason of the height thereof he might see into the countrey of Judea very farre. Musculus consents with Lyra touching Hezekiah here meant, whom to see sitting fast in his Throne, the Assyrians Army being confounded, could not but be an exceeding great comfort to every faithfull heart, and not to Eliakim only, as he expounds it. But we must not rest in this as all aimed at here, but from Hezekiah look to Christ his antitype, who should long after this be seen gloriously reigning farre and wide, his Gospel being propagated into all Countreys and Nations, and they subjected unto it, for which it is added, They shall see the Land afarre off ] That is, Countreys farre remote from Judea, where Christ was born King, living under his obedience, so greatly in him shall the Jewish Kingdom be enlarged. Being referred to the faithfull in Hezekiah his time, it is meant, that they should after the Assyrians destroyed, who pent them up within the wals of Jerusalem, be at liberty to travel again afarre off, as they might formerly do, as occasion served, and that their Kingdom should be enlarged, in which as the true sense I rest.

Thine heart shall meditate terror; where is the Scribe? where the receiver, &c? That is, saith Junius, Think with delight upon the danger past, according to that saying, Olim hac meminisse juvabit; and so these words, Where is the Scribe, &c? are taken up exultingly 1 Cor. 1.20. Here is an enumeration of Officers necessary in the setting forth of an Army, 1. Counsellours, for so he hath it for Scribes. 2. Payers of money, for receivers. 3. Numbers of the Towers, that is, to appoint how many, and where they should be made to prevail in the siege. Such indeed were in the Assyrian Army, but now they have all perished, and so shall all the wicked before God, Psal. 68. 3. Musculus not much differing, yet more fully gives this for the sense; Although I have spoken of thy seeing King Hezekiah in his glory, yet know, that first much terror shall be to thee, although soon over, and then thou shalt thus insult over the Assyrians, amongst whom some were appointed to write down the men of Jerusalem particularly who should be tributaries, some to gather and receive this tribute, and some to set down all the Towers or principal houses to be disposed of according to the will of the conquerour. Ad. Sasbont speaking much upon the word meditate, shewing that it signifies a serious and often thinking upon any thing, adjoins the first words here to ver. 17. as spoken of often recalling to minde their great dangers to stirre up themselves the more to fear God, who had so miraculously delivered them. For this ought not to go out of our hearts, but be often thought upon, when dangers are past, this good use being made by us all thereof, to love and fear almighty God, who did it, and not as is the manner of most, forgetting our deliverances past, and looking only at our present safety to be secure, and to go on still in our sins. For the next words, Where is the Scribe, &c? ] Jerom for Scribe hath litteratus, at which Sasbont wonders, because 1 Cor. 1.20. it is rendred Scribe, seeing litteratus is a word more general, the word Scribe peculiarly used to set forth one learned in divinity in all places of the New Testament, except Act. 19. Amongst other Greek Authors it is sometime put for one that only writes res gestas, as Demosthenes upbraids Eschines by this, that he called him γραμματικός a writer only of the publick actions. The Septuagint render it Grammatici, sometime applying it to civil things, and sometime to divine; to the first, 2 King. 12. 2 Chron. 24. Ezra. 3. to the other in this place, and all others. And concluding, he saith, the meaning is, in the time of the danger by the Assyrians, what did the Learned Doctors of the Law, who before spake highly of themselves, towards the saving of the city from destruction? Verily nothing, God alone did all. Lyra applies it particularly to Shebnah, threatened before, Ch. 22. and to Eliakim, saying, he should meditate of the fear of the Lord, but Shebnah to whom these three Epithetes are given, should, as he well deserved, be deposed from his dignity, to shew which this question is put, Where is the Scribe now? as if he had said, His place is no more to be found. Some apply this only to the terrour at the apprehension of the everlasting burnings before spoken of, in consideration whereof, and the faithful escaping them, who were but babes in knowledge in comparison of the Scribes and other great Scholars, it is thus cried out; it being meant, that all they dying without the knowledge and faith of Christ, perished in those burnings for ever, and this is most consonant to the Apostles applying of it, 1 Cor. 1. 20. and therefore though it first concerned those times, as hath been said, yet it is certain that the Prophet had herein a further reach, even to tax and terrifie the learned amongst the Jews and Gentiles, who under the Gospel wanted Evangelicall learning.

Lyra.

Thou shalt not see a fierce people, &c. Vulg. Lat. Populum impudentem, by whom he means the Assyrians, for they should not get the dominion over them, nor become a judgement to them by their strange tongue, as was threatened that the Caldeans in time to come should be, Isa. 28. 11. And this is opposed to Verf. 17. he shall see the King in his glory. And whereas there was danger of seeing the enemy rather getting the kingdom from him, he assures them that it should not so be, neither should the faithfull afterwards see the Scribes and Pharisees accounted of for learning and power any more, but declared foolish and blinde, and so accounted amongst Christian people, and proved, when by their folly they had brought destruction upon themselves and all the Jews by the Romans.

Vern. 19.

Look upon Zion the city of our solemnities, that is, saith Jerom, upon the Christian Church, wherein daies shall be solemnly kept to the praise and glory of God. And this he saith shall be quiet in alluding to the old Tabernacle which was removed from place to place, but the Tabernacle of this Church shall be unmoveable for ever, and that Tabernacle ceased, but this never; that was taken away, when the Jews were broken off from being a people, but this of the Gentiles continues firmly established as built upon a rock to the worlds end. Whereas it is added

Vern. 20.

The Lord shall be a place of broad rivers, wherein no gally or ship shall go, hereby is meant, that God as a broad river shall compass his Church about, and no enemies shall be able to arrive at her, or the devill set forth by ship or tower. Some yet applying it to the New Jerusalem, described also by a river, Rev. 21. as the Garden of Eden, a Type hereof, had formerly been by four Rivers compassing it, will have the meaning of no ships coming there to be to bring in any provision, for it shall not need, God that is this River being all in all to this City, and his bidding the faithfull to look to Zion the place of our solemnities to be, in any of their sufferings to look up to this most blessed place, where solemnities and festivals shall be continually kept in all joy for ever to be herein comforted.

Lyra applyeth all still to the time of Hezekiah, saying, that it is here prophesied of the great peace wherein solemnities should be kept in Zion after this, the people being free to come from all places to the Temple there at festival times, whereas before in the time of the siege by Sennacherib they could not. And he saith, the Tabernacle shall not be removed, in alluding to that in the wilderness, which was often taken down, and carried from place to place, and set up again by Tenons and pins joyning the parts together, yet so as that it might again be taken down, but the Temple here meant was not so, but stood firmly alwaies, and could not be taken down and removed, neither should Sennacherib ever be able to do it by all his forces. And by the place of broad Rivers he understands the waters made by Hezekiah, by digging into a great pond becoming thus a defence to the city, and that so as to supply them within with water, but not the enemies without, that which was superfluous being made to run another way, and the waters as broad as they were being unusefull for them to approach against the City with Ships or Gallies. Calvin doth so expound it of the time of Hezekiah, as that he takes it most to concern the time of the Gospel, and that outward peace is not so much meant as peace of conscience, and inward security through faith against all that our spiritual enemies can do unto us, Christs Church being not like a city approachable by ships upon the water to be taken or disquieted, but being abundantly supplied with waters of comfort by God; he that is such a supply unto her, takes continuall care to keep off all enemies that might annoy her. And forsomuch as to understand this more waies, doth both agree with reason, and being so understood, is most comfortable, I shall not exclude any of these waies, but taking them all three in, understand it first with Lyra of Jerusalem safety under Hezekiah; 2. With Jerom of the safety of the Church in this world, being impregnable by all her enemies through God who is her strength, and where true joy such as in holy solemnities only is to be found through peace of conscience. 3. With Cyril of the future most happy estate of the Church in heaven, because the word rendred for ever is not, עולם but עולם for ever world without end.

Note.

Thy tacklings are loosed, they could not well strengthen their mast, &c. This is by Jerom applied to the earthly Jerusalem, and the Jews, that for their unbelief were destroyed, when the Church before spoken of was so established under the Gospel, and they that of themselves had no strength like lame men, took the spoils, being yet forgiven, because they did nothing but the will of God herein. Lyra proceeds in applying it to the case which then was, as if they that could not fasten their Tents, were the Assyrians: for when they attempted so to do, the Angell smote them with death, and then none in Jerusalem were so lame, but being allured by the richnesse of the prey they went all out to take it, neither for joy did they feel their infirmity, and if it be enquired how this should come so to passe, they in Jerusalem having formerly sinned by idolatry, the last words may serve for answer, God shall take away their sin, his favour to Hezekiah was so great, because he served him with a perfect heart, that the sins of the people past in Ahaz his time should not come up in remembrance against them. And this is followed by Oecolampadius, Luther, and Vatablus, the former by Sasbon, who by the spoils of the Jews ruined when the Church of the Gentiles was set up and established, will have the spirituall priviledges meant, which the old Church of the Jews had, but now the Evangelical. Calvin and Junius understand it of the wicked enemies of the Church in general, who sometime are like a mighty ship overtopping the lesser vessels of the faithfull, but in the end the cords being broken, and the Sails falling, it stands unmoveable either for offence or defence, till it be rifled, and all the goods therein taken away, which is good if it be taken as a morall, but certainly the littall meaning is that of Lyra, and Jeroms the mysticall.

And from the conclusion vers. 24. Calvin rightly gathers, both that sin is the cause of all our sufferings, and that we are in a most happy and joyfull condition, when our sins are pardoned, we need not now to fear any most potent enemies for their riches wherein their power lies, for they shall become as a prey to us, though but of poor and weak condition.

CHAP. XXXIIII.

The indignation of the Lord is upon all Nations; and upon all their hosts, &c.

Verf.2.

After particular threatnings against divers Nations, here is thought by Jerom and many others to be a generall against all the world at the last day, much like unto the course taken Chap. 14. after particular Nations threatned, Chap. 13, 14. &c. thitherto, so Chap. 28. 29. 30. 31. 32. 33. having further prophesied against divers particulars, he here prophesieth against all Nations of the world, and as Chap. 25. and 26. after judgements against the wicked, comfort is spoken to the faithfull, so after this Chap. 35. Calvin and Musculus, and many more of ours understand this, as Chap. 24. before-going, viz. of the wicked enemies of the Jews, who envied them and banded against them for their religion. But now being first called to attend to that which God determined to bring upon them, vers. 1. he declareth vers. 2. what that should be, they should be slain terribly, and vers. 3. proceeds to amplify it by the casting out of their dead carcasses, and the melting of the mountains with their blood, which is hyperbolicall, and vers. 4, 5. by the heavens being rolled together as a scroul, and his sword being bathed in heaven, for all this is spoken only to shew the greatness of the judgement, as if the very Heavens were made to fear, and to shrink up upon an heap at the sight of Gods anger, and to be as thrust thorow with his sword, when he addressed himself to do this strange and terrible execution, see the like Apoc. 6. 12. and at the day of judgement, to shew the dreadfullness of that time much more, the same is said, 1 Pet. 3. 19.

Muscul.*

Verf.3.

And Idumea is named in particular, vers. 5. 6. because the Edomites being the posterity of Esaú, and so nearer to the Jews in the flesh then other Nations, yet they were most malicious against them, and ready at all times to joyn with forreign enemies to destroy them, as 2 Chron. 20. &c. And they help the Babylonians in the destruction of Ierusalem, as we may see, Psa. 137. and therefore they specially are threatned also, Chap. 21. 11. Ier. 49. Ezek. 25. The sword of the Lord is said to be bathed in heaven against Idumea, because God in heaven decreed to bring upon them this destruction, and he speaks of a sacrifice in Bozra, because that was the chief city of the Edomites, being so called for the great strength thereof; yet the inhabitants with slaughter, as Lambs and Goats are slain for sacrifices in great abundance.

Verf.5,6.

And the Unicorns shall come down with them, &c. that is, not only the common sort and weaker set forth by Goats and Lambs, but also the most valiant and mighty shall be slaughtered together with them, neither shall their valour, strength, or riches save them.

Verf.7.

And the streams thereof shall be turned into pitch, and the dust into brimstone, &c. which is so spoken to aggravate the judgement, for so the Lord did to Sodom turning the waters into a pitchy substance, there being therein and in the ashes covering the land a continuall monument of that hideous burning. And by saying, that so it should be done to Idumea, he means horrible desolation, that should come upon it, and that for ever, as he further sheweth. Verf. 10. &c. to vers. 16. see the like before threatned against Babylon, Chap. 13. 19, 20. &c. Chap. 32, 13. But it is not, saith Calvin, to be taken otherwise then hyperbolically, to strike the greater terrour into enemies of Gods people, who are nearest to them, yet bear the greatest malice against them. And the Prophet is the larger now in threatening the Edomites, because he but briefly touched them before, Chap. 21. 11. And that his prophesying of such a desolation to come to their enemies, might by the Jews be credited,

Verf.9.

Verf. 16. he saith, Search in the Book of the Lord, and reade, &c. Which, as Calvin saith, is best expounded of the Book of the Law, and the divers sorts of threatnings against the wicked, therein contained, especially Lev. 26. Deut. 28. and 32. For whatsoever God threatneth against his own people sinning, their enemies must expect should come upon them much more. Hieronym.

Jerom and others that follow him, taking the first part of this prophecy to be against the whole world in generall, set forth by Idumea which signifyeth the earth, the wicked inhabitants whereof shall lie in everlasting burnings, and the inhabitants of heaven which fell, shall then have Gods sword against them and fall, even the whole host of them, as is meant, ver. 4, 5. by saying,

Verf. 8.

All the host of Heaven shall be dissolved, and fall down, and my sword shall be bathed in Heaven. Having I say expounded it so to ver. 3. he saith, that there the Prophet turns again to the Jews, and threatens them after their overthrow by the Romans for their great infidelity, with perpetuall desolation. But because it is added as a reason of dealing so severely with Idumea, For it is the day of the Lords vengeance, and the year of recompence for the controversie of Zion, it is a wresting of the words to understand them otherwise then of the same Idumea, and other like countreys of wicked enemies to Gods people. So also Lyra, who saith, that in some part of Idumea there is still ascending a smoak of fire and brimstone, as out of Mount Etna in Sicily, and that this perpetuall desolation of that countrey is to be understood of the wasting of all the old inhabitants, so as that none of them should remain to multiply again and repeople it.

Lyra.

Hitherto Lyra having set forth the literall sense, because it doth not so well agree either to the Idumians, for that it was not left in desolation for ever, nor yet to the Romans, whom some understand by Idumea, for their enmity against the Jews, as here threatned with utter ruine, or rather because Rome is the seat of the beast, Rev. 17. drunken with the blood of the Saints, and there be many most notable prophecies of the utter ruine thereof for ever. He bringeth out of Burgenfis another Exposition mysticall hereupon, that Idumea sets forth the Jews after the Gospel preached unto them, most like unto Isaiah, despising this their birthright, and therefore well worthy to be set forth under this name, and for their hatred against Christians, as in Esau, of whom the Idumians or Edomites came against Jacob. For their countrey indeed hath been ever since their city destroyed by Titus, in desolation, no Jews being permitted to come and dwell there by the Romans the conquerours, howsoever the Turks having it since in their power, have permitted some for money.

Verf. 11.

But in them is this Prophecy fulfilled, The Cormorant and Bittern, the Owl and the Raven shall be there, &c. that is, men black and foul by abominable errors, to which the Jews are given over, as God of old, in forbidding such to be meat because unclean, would have vicious men, and men black by error, as blasted by an evill spirit understood by them. For it is strange to recount the stuff, that is to be found in their Talmud, as That God was never merry, nor would have any mirth made before him, since he suffered Jerusalem to be destroyed, and That he weeps therefore three daies in a week, That by the Law-giver and Scepter that should not depart from Jacob, was meant, that the Jews should never want Rabbins to rule them by their teaching, as by a Scepter, till the Messiah comes, &c. He also saith, that they might be set forth by Idumians, because they had one Rabbi Mayr that was a Proselyte of the Edomites who bare great sway amongst them in his teaching, that when God gave his Laws unto Israel, he meant not so as he said, &c. For this and the like absurd and blasphemous commentings upon the word, were a turning of their Rivers into pitch and brimstone. And Verf. 11. in Vulg. Her Nobles shall not be there, they shall there call their King, he saith is meant, that the Scribes and Pharisees, whom they since counted their Nobles, should cease, as they have done long ago, and they called Caesar their King, when they said, We have no King but Caesar. But Heb. it is No Princes shall be there, and they shall call it a Kingdom, that that is, when all shall be destroyed, yet the Idumeans shall be so proud, that they shall call their shattered and miserable state a kingdom still, but this shall be a vain brag. Hitherto he, and because the Prophet is mysticall, and hath a further reach then according to the letter, and that even to the worlds end we may apply this to the last burning, when the earth being on fire shall burn everlastingly, to the tormenting of the wicked world, being turned to an hell unto them who have formerly taken such pleasure in earthly things.

CHAP. XXXV.

The wildernesse and the solitary place shall be glad for them, &c. After all Nations and Idumea in particular judged most severely Chap. 34. which were enemies to Gods people, now he returneth to comfort the faithfull again under the name of a wildernesse, meaning hereby the Jews surviving after the Babylonish captivity, who were brought back to their own countrey again, whereof they had great joy, when the Persians having taken Babylon destroyed that Monarchy with the appendices thereof, of whom Idumea spoken of Chap. 34. was one. Then Jerusalem that had lien so long desolate, was glad to see, that God had thus judged their enemies, and began to flourish again. But the Exposition is not to be limited to that time, for more magnificall things are spoken then agreed thereunto. Wherefore the Church under the Gospel consisting both of Jews and Gentiles, is principally meant here; see the like before Chap. 32.15. and Chap. 35.20. and to this do our Expositours generally agree: Lyra refers it wholly to the Church under the Gospel, expounding the wildernesse by the Gentiles, who before the faith reached among them, were barren of all goodnesse, as is a wildernesse of good fruits.

The glory of Lebanon shall be given to it, and the excellency of Carmel, &c. that is, whatsoever pertains to decency, or fruitfulness, or piety, shall be in Christs Church, though imperfectly here, yet perfectly in heaven.

Strengthen the weak bands, confirm the feeble knees, &c. that is, the Lord bids the Apostles and other preachers of the Gospel thus to comfort and confirm beleivers who before had no courage to endure any thing for Christ, till that by their preaching and examples, who suffered persecutions with joy, they also were encouraged to the like. Or it may be taken as necessary for the Prophets of those times to do, that the timorous in hearing of the calamities to come, might be comforted against them in expecting timely deliverance and revenge to be taken upon their enemies, for which it is said, Verf. 4. The Lord will come with revenge, and save you; how the Apostle applies this, see Heb. 12.12. And hence note, that the weak and timorous are not to be rejected by Gods Ministers, but to be comforted and confirmed with Gods gracious promises, Rom. 14.1.

Then shall the eyes of the blinde be opened, &c. that is, when the Gospel is preached with efficacy and power, contrary to that which was threatned, Chap. 29.9,10. For all the time that men are unconverted and in the state of sin and infidelity, they are blinde, and deaf, and lame, as is here intimated, but turning to Christ, their eyes and ears are opened to see and hear, and understand the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven to their comfort and salvation. For herein doth our Lord comfort his Disciples, Mat. 13.12. saying, To you it is given to know the mysteries of the Kingdom of heaven, but to them not, &c. see the same, Isa. 6.9.

And the lame shall leap like a hart, &c. that is, the lame that could not go in the waies of God, shall now go with all nimbleness, and the dumb that could not speak to the praise of God shall now sing clearly: Lo here, saith Luther miracles to confirm the Gospel to be of God, against those that deride his Ministers, saying, They cannot make so much as a lame horse sound. For all they in whose hearts it taketh effect, of blinde are made to see, of deaf to hear, of lame to go, and dumb to speak. Then another great blessing is added of barrenness turned into fruitfulness, for rivers shall be in the wilderness, and vers. 7. where Dragons lay, grass shall spring, and reeds and rushes, which are a sign of watery places, whereas Dragons lying there was a sign of barrenness and driness; but this fruitfulness is more spiritual then earthly, as the rivers causing it are, according to Iob. 4. 10. If thou hadst asked of me, I would have given thee water of life. And who so drinks of the water that I shall give, it shall be a river of water flowing out of his belly to everlasting life.

Verf. 8.

And there shall be a path, and a way in which no unclean person shall go. As in the time of barrenness there were no comers or goers to the Church of God, which he intended should be, inasmuch as there was no way to be seen to walk in to true blessedness, for this was the condition of all Nations before Jesus Christ revealed unto them: So after this, according to the manner of fruitful places, which are able to yield food to all comers, there is great coming and going of many people, to the beating out of a plain path, that any man, though never so simple, may see to walk without wandering from it another way. And this way is called holy, because holy persons only, and none unclean go in it, they ceasing now to be unclean, because they are washed and sanctified in the name of our Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of God, as is said, 1 Cor. 6. 11. by believing, and the Spirit of holiness and righteousness now guiding them in all things. Before indeed they were unclean through idolatry, fornication, theft, &c. as vers. 10. and so the place was polluted; but now they being sanctified, it is holy, as Tit. 1. 15. To the pure all things are pure, but to the defiled all things are unclean, yea their very conscience. It is not hereby meant, saith Calvin, That in the Church of Christ there should be none but holy persons, unless it be understood of that in heaven, for here the Church is, and will always be mixt, being called holy from the better part. But because there is no way or beaten path in heaven, for then travelling is at an end, it cannot be so well understood of that Church, but of this upon earth, wherein no unclean person walketh, when no idolaters are amongst the worshippers of the true God, and of Jesus Christ any more, or which deny Jesus to be the Son of God, or his Ordinances of preaching or baptizing, but come and submit hereunto and confesse his faith. For as of old no man was counted unclean, that was circumcised, and by outward washing cleansed from legal pollution, and so might not be kept out of the Camp; so now it may be said, that no unclean person walketh with the clean in the path or way of divine worship, when none but such as outwardly professe the faith of Christ, and submit to his Ordinances are in our Congregations, as members thereof, especially if upon uncleanness of life appearing in any, they be kept out of the way of communicating with the clean in the Lords Supper, because an unclean person, whose uncleanness appears not, as in hypocrites, cannot, so farre as men can judge, be called unclean, although before God they be such, and therefore all their service is abomination unto him. For the words added, It shall be for them, and the wayfaring men though fools shall not erre, Hebr. וְהַיֹּדֵעַ and he therein, that is, God in this way to go before them, as sometime he was by his fiery pillar in the way that they went in the wilderness, that they might come to Canaan; and where God is thus guiding his people, the traveller, though all in the company were fools, yet not one of them can go out of the way, as is said in the next words. And to this Calvin, after other expositions first brought, agreeth. Only he thinks that travellers in this way are thus spoken of, though fools, because they are so in the opinion of the world, that are godly, 1 Cor. 1. 20. and think themselves so, being considered in themselves, 1 Cor. 3. 18. and were such indeed before their conversion, Tit. 3. 3. But to render the words altogether to the end, according to the Hebrew they go thus; And he therein walking the way, and fools shall not erre for וְהַיֹּדֵעַ walking, is a singular, and וְהַיֹּדֵעַ Fools a plural, and therefore cannot be put together, as setting forth the same walkers, but walking hath reference to him, that is

God

Calvin.

God in the way to guide men, and so very fools are kept from wandering out of it, touching whom I must like not, that it should be taken, fools in the worlds account, yet I think somewhat more to be herein implied, viz. that the least worldly wise, who have not great wits, are here meant, according to 1 Cor. 1.19. Not many wise are called, if they be not so acute as some other Christians, yet he that walks with them guides them, that they go not out of the right way of holiness and truth. Therefore Psal. 25. it is said, That the word of God giveth light unto the simple; and of the spirits going before them, after whom they walk, Rom. 8.1. which walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit.

There shall not be a Lion or savage beast, &c. Because he had spoken of a wilderness, wherein the holy way should be, and wildernesses are not without savage beasts ready to devour passengers, he secures the redeemed from fear of them in their travel towards heaven. Now the devil is said indeed to be a roaring Lion here, 1 Pet. 5.8. and Paul saith, That God delivered him out of the Lions mouth, meaning Nero a persecuting Emperour, so that both devils, and their instruments, wicked persecutors are in their way to devour them. But God here promiseth, That his shall be as safe, as if there were no savage beasts there. For as it is with the Church in general, The gates of hell shall not prevail against it; so in particular with every true faithfull person, there shall be no Lion or Bear to hurt his soul in the way, or to hinder him from salvation, Mat. 10.28. They can only kill the body, not the soul, that is carried away unhurt by persecutors into Abrahams bosom, as it is said of poor Lazarus. And when God sees that it will make for his glory, he cures and tames the fiercest Lions towards his Church, so that instead of persecutors they turn Fathers and Preachers, as Saul, Act. 9. and nursing Fathers and nursing Mothers, as Kings and Queens converted, or at the least their rage is made to cease, as Traians against Christians; and thus also the Lamb and the Lion sometime dwell together, as Ch. 11. God making a Covenant, as it were, for his people, with beasts, not to hurt them, Hos. 2.18. and it may be applied to beasts properly understood also; for God hath sometime so restrained them, that they have contrary to their natures forbore to hurt his servants being exposed to them, as Daniel and many Martyrs, as is intimated in an Epistle of Ignatius, saying, when he was condemned to be cast to the wilde beasts, if they would not tear him with their teeth, he would provoke them, that he might be made fine meal for God. Contrariwise the wicked are threatned with devouring by wilde beasts, Dent. 28. and Bears did execution upon them, 2 King. 2. and 2 King. 17. Lions.

Therefore the redeemed of the Lord shall return and come to Zion, &c. As he began the Chapter with joy, so he concludeth, That Gods people, as they had begun to spring in the Decree made by Cyrus of liberty to return, so they should joyfully return to Zion after a long Captivity under the Babylonians, for their way, though long and dangerous thither, should be safe by his providence that redeemed them, even till they came to the end thereof, and therefore sorrow and heaviness, of which they were full before for their being detained in a strange Land, now ceaseth. But mystically it is further to be extended to such as in all Nations turn to the faith, for they thus come to Zion with joy, that is, the Church, as Acts 2. and 8. And although they have many times outward cause of sorrow, yet spiritual joy doth so abound in their hearts, that it is as nothing, Rom. 5.1. Alth. 4. Jam. 1. But they with whom it is thus, are The redeemed of the Lord Before that any can attain to such joy, they must by faith be assured of this, all others being incapable of true joy, how merry soever they are, and this joy begun here shall be everlasting in heaven, Pf. 16. Apoc. 4. and Chap. 7.

For Ch. 36, 37, 38, 39. they are the same verbatim with 2 King. 18, 19, 20. and therefore the Reader may have recourse to my Commentaries upon them for the understanding of these.

Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God, &c. In this Chapter, and the next, saith Junius, is one Sermon Prophetically touching the benefits by Christ, and the consolation which the faithfull have in him. Lyra, The Prophet having hitherto spoken of Christ to come, mingling with the Prophecies touching him, judgements against the wicked, here he prophesieth comfort to the faithfull. And this his prophesying consists of two parts, 1. An inducing of them to expect the promises touching Christ to come in general, to Chap. 45. 2. A more particular declaration of them, Chap. 45, 46, 47, 48. For the first he induceth to expect, 1. From Gods power, Chap. 41. 2. From his charity, Chap. 42, 43. 3. From his verity, Chap. 44. Jerom likewise applieth this Prophecy to Christ, expounding the double, which Ierusalem received at the Lords hands, verf. 2. of her sufferings by the Babylonians first, and secondly by the Romans; Lyra, of double comfort of soul and body coming by Christ, for though it be spoken of in the Preterperfect tense, as if some thing past were meant: yet it needs not to be so understood, but he speaks thus for the certainty of the consolation, as if it had been already come. Oecolampadius and Calvin say, That this is a Prophecy of their deliverance from the Babylonish Captivity, and comfort that they should have therein, and Calvin addeth, That this doth most aptly follow Chap. 39. where the servitude of the Kings in Babylon was spoken of, yet in this consolation, he saith, he also comforteth all the faithfull by the benefits coming to them by Christ Jesus, whosoever dispersed throughout the whole world, and that this must needs be so extended appears v. 3. The voice of a crier in the wilderness, &c. which is applied to John the Baptist by all the Evangelists.

Speak comfortably to Ierusalem, &c. Hebr. Speak to the heart of Ierusalem, and say, Her warfare is accomplished; that is, she shall suffer no further the miseries coming by wars, as she hath done hitherto by the Caldeans, but as a souldier at fifty years of age was allowed to rest, as being now emeritus miles, so Ierusalem, that is, the Jews, being tossed with many miseries in Babylon, in seventy years of their Captivity, had thenceforth rest in their own Land. But because this was not so fully then performed, for they had enemies which hindered them in their building, it was most perfectly accomplished in Christ to all believers, who against the terrours of all assaults and fightings against them of their spiritual enemies, by justification through faith in Christ have peace with God, and peace and joy not to be broken off by the rage of the wicked world against them. For then only can we have true peace, when our sins being not imputed, but all pardoned, neither the devil nor our conscience accusing can disquiet us any more. Because she hath received double from the hand of the Lord in all her sins. N. Translat. For all her sins. That the Lord may not be thought here to give occasion to think, that it is meant he punisheth the Jews twice as much as they deserved, according to the sound of the words, some expound this of comfort, as Lyra before; and Vatablus saith, that some understand abundance of benefits by Christ, some by the double one of grace, and the other of glory. But forsomuch as the comfort was to come, and here it is spoken of that which was past before the coming on of this comfort, Calvin understands it better of sufferings, saying, That they had suffered abundance of punishment, so that the Lord was now moved with compassion, as having done more against them, then he by the goodnesse of his nature was willing; as if he had said, They have suffered too much already, I will not therefore proceed against them any further, but forgive them, and put an end to these miseries by destroying the Babylonians their enemies, by whom I have chastised them, and setting them again at liberty with joy, to go home and possesse their City and good Land, as in former times of their prosperity. Whence it cannot be gathered, that God punisheth any more then they deserve serve by their sins : for then it could not be said, Her sins are forgiven, after all this (seeing this argueth, that more punishments were still due, if God should in justice have proceeded against them) but only that the Lords anger was now over, and that he was moved in the bowels of his mercy in a manner to repent him of the miseries wherewith he caused his own people to suffer. That no man may dare to think, That God in his greatest anger exceeds the measure of mens sins in his punishments, as the truth is that he doth not, for so much as sinne deserves death, Rom. 6. 23. and therefore what punishments soever we sinners suffer, that come short of this, which is everlasting destruction both of soul and body in hell fire, we have no cause of complaining that we are punished beyond justice. Whereas Jerom applieth this double punishment to that by the Babylonians first, and after by the Romans, I cannot herein subscribe to him, because then this comfort should in no part have place at the end of the Babylonish Captivity, which the Lord was so carefull to comfort the faithfull amongst the Jews by. It is rather then meant of a double grievous punishment upon the Jews, 1. In the destruction of their City and Temple. 2. In their Captivity and miseries therein of so long a continuance. And being applied to all Gods faithfull people under the Gospel, they may be said to have received double, because Jesus Christ hath suffered death for them, to justify them from their sins, and yet they suffer by persecutions also, as all that will live godly must do to the worlds end. Although herein God hath another end besides judging for sinne, viz. the bringing of his faithfull servants to the greater glory in heaven for ever, when they have patiently and chearfully suffered for his sake upon earth for a short time.

2 Cor. 4. 17.
Rom. 8. 16.

The voice of one crying in the Wilderness. Who was meant here John the Baptist declares Joh. 1. 23. and in naming the wilderness, he alludes to that Chap. 35. 1. where the wilderness is said to rejoyce, and to spring, meaning the Church hitherto, as a wilderness; but now valleys are filled, when Gentiles low in confession are raised to confesse Christ, the high by pride are humbled, for their sins past, wherein they had gone blindly on, and the rough made plain, when they of rough manners were made meek and gentle, and then all flesh saw the salvation of God; when being by John baptized, the heavens opened, and a voice was heard saying, This is my beloved Son, &c Thus Ierom. The Hebrews understand this of their return out of the Babylonish Captivity, which cannot be, but as hath been already said, and even some of them consent, that it is spoken of the time of the Messiah, only they would hereby prove, that he is not yet come, because the earth is not yet made plain, as is here prophesied, for they understand the words literally. But they are indeed allegoricall, as are many things more spoken by Isaiah of Christ and his Kingdom. And R. Moses one of their own men is clearly against them, who saith, That in the world there shall then be no alteration in respect of the earth, but it shall continue, as at the first Creation; so Lyra, who agrees with Jerom about high things and rough things; and for valleys he understands thereby the humble, who were exalted by gifts and graces bestowed upon them; and by crooked, walkers in the ways of wickedness, who are now brought into the way of righteousness. Thomas Aquinas, Calvin and some others expound this of Cyrus making Proclamation of liberty to the Jews to return home, and removing all impediments of their passage: wherein they say somewhat, which might have been probable, but that John, who overpoiseth all Expositours, hath made it plain, that it was meant of him. And for further explication of the words, enough hath been already said in my Exposition upon Mat. 3. and therefore I spare it here.

true, viz. That all flesh is grasse, for so do the fairest women soon wither, that erewhile drew flocks of vain men after them by their beauty, and are as much despised as before they were loved: but the word of the Lord, and they that are sociated to it, endure ever. So that by flesh here is meant the outward man, of whom it is said before, All flesh shall see the glory of the Lord: For multitudes were present at Jordan, when he being baptized, who is the glory of the Father, was so graced. But this notwithstanding the carnal were but flesh still and withering, but Christ and his body, the Church of the faithfull meant by the Word, as Lyra further explains it, shall endure for ever. Calvin, Musculus and Luther being larger upon these words, say, That some understand this, as spoken of the Jews enemies, whom they should not need to fear, for they were but as grasse soon to be cut down and withered: But against all fear of them be comforted in the word of God coming to them by his Prophets, because that should stand and ever take effect, saving all that into believing hearts receive it, as is hereby promised, and that both temporally and eternally. Which although it be true, yet much more is here intimated, viz. the vanity of man in himself, and his eternity by receiving worthily into his heart the word of God. A voice saying, Cry. This is not to be restrained to the voice before-spoken of, but to be understood generally of the charge given by God to Isaiah, and all other Prophets, how to proceed in their ministerial office at all times. The thing to be taught by them is the vanity of all men in themselves, not only in respect of the body, or any thing that graceth it, but also in respect of the indowments of the minde, wisdom, memory, courage, eloquence, and pious and charitable performances, and whatsoever else makes him seem glorious in the eyes of others, as riches, goodly apparel, honour and worldly power. For a man in the midst of all these is but as grasse or flow-ers of the field, upon which fierce winds blowing they wither and soon fade away: So the Spirit of Gods wrath blowing upon men even of greatest eminency, they with all their pomp and pride, and seeming glory, fade, and come to nothing. But the word of the Lord endures, &c. That is, entering into the heart to regenerate and sanctifie, makes such as were before so vain and withering, flourishing green by grace, and everlastingly glorious in heaven, 1 Pet. 1. 23. And this is constantly by every Preacher to be taught with all freedom and boldnesse every where, not with a voice suppressed, but lifted up aloud, whereby the dulnesse of men to hearken and to be moved by this is intimated, and yet no true happinesse to be by any man attained, till he comes to this, every one being otherwise as grasse, yea vanity and misery for evermore. The word רַחֵם rendred glory in this place signifieth properly mercy, but as Vatablus hath it, is diversly translated, clemency, or piety, or beneficence, but it may best be rendred decor, any thing about man being hereby meant, that makes him best esteemed of amongst men. And that which is here said is taught by every Philosopher, saith Sasboni, why then are the Prophets bidden to cry this? Verily because it is never taught effectually, till by the Prophet of God and his Spirit, for which it is not uttered without a preparative to stirre up to attention A voice saying, Cry. And he said, What shall I cry? A Dialogue betwixt God and his Prophet as if he had said, A voice came from heaven saying to the Prophet, that will shew himself most obsequious to God, Proclaim with a loud voice that it may pierce into all mens ears and hearts, which is most necessary for all, the thing that I shall now say. Whereunto the Prophet replying, What worthy and remarkable thing is that? who can but give all diligent attention?

Verf. 9.

O Zion that bringest good tidings, get thee up into the high mountain, &c. Now returns again to Jerusalem, to whom he had spoken comfort, verf. 1. by Zion and Jerusalem meaning the Preachers of the Gospel sent out from hence with the glad tidings of salvation by Christ. And he bids them get up into an high mountain, and yet Zion was an high mountain; meaning that they should go further forth, that they might be heard every where throughout the whole world; for being thus ascended they are in the next words bidden lift up their voice, Lift up thy voice with strength; lift it up: Because a man standing on high and speaking with a strong voice, is heard afar off. So that here is prophesied the going out of the Gospel from Zion into all Nations, as it was fulfilled in the time of the Apostles. And whereas it is added, Fear not, the dangers where-with they should be compassed about, against which they are encouraged, both which were accordingly fulfilled; for both their sound went into all lands, and they were hotly persecuted by the Jews first, and then by the Gentiles, that they had great need of this comfort not to fear, as they had, Matth. 10. 28. And Jerom noteth here, that the word bringing good tidings, is Hebr. of the feminine gender, and that it may be referred either to the law or precept which is a feminine; and then it is to be rendred, Ascend thee up on to an high hill bringing glad tidings to Zion; or to Zion itself, being read as before; because Cities are commonly set forth as daughters, that be feminines, and this reading is to be preferred *. The meaning is, that the Apostles going out of Zion to preach should ascend higher in opening the mysteries of salvation to all peoples far and near, then any Prophets or Preachers that went before them, and be without fear of Persecution that should be stirred up against them in so doing. But to shew where they should begin first to preach, it is added, Say to the Cities of Judah, Behold your God. For they were bidden first to preach to none, but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. And first his Incarnation is preached, Behold your God,] for then God was visible to the eyes of mortal men; according to that, We beheld his glory, as the glory of the only begotten of the Father.] And [That which we have heard and seen.] This is the same with that v. 5. All flesh shall see the salvation of the Lord; and what is this, but Jesus a Saviour? Then is preached his second coming in power at the last day, v. 10. Behold the Lord cometh with a strong arm, &c. But he shall first in time of his humiliation do as a shepherd, v. 11. He shall feed his flock like a shepherd, he shall gather the Lambs with his arms, &c. As he also sets forth himself unto us, John 10. and Luk. 15. in the parable of the lost sheep. And he shall gently lead those with young. That is, saith Jerom, the Apostles and other Teachers, who travel in birth with the people under their teaching. Lyra, by his coming with a strong arm, understands his divine power to work miracles whilst he lived here, and by his ruling by his arm, his arms stretching out upon the crosse; after which he said, All power is given to me in heaven and in earth. Lastly his reward with him being as certainly to be bestowed at his second coming, according to his promise, as if he had then brought it with him. But I rest in the former, because it is said, he comes in power, and his arm, that is, his strength, rules. For when his arms were stretched out upon the crosse, he was in his lowest humiliation. Musculus proceedeth to apply all this to the deliverance out of the Babylonish Captivity, which filled Zion and Jerusalem with so much joy: And Calvin by Zion and Jerusalem understands the true Church, which is hereby shewed to be that, wherein the word of God, and nothing else, is continually founded out aloud, as by the voice of a crier, for which she is called The ground and pillar of truth: But if any Church ceaseth so to do, it is but a vain brag for her to pretend her self to be such, as the Church of Rome doth. I hold it not amiss to take this as spoken first and literally of that deliverance of the Jews, but the thing chiefly intended here is Christs coming, both first and second, as hath been already said: Although *Cyri*l and Procopius, as Lyra, apply all to his first coming, when by his Almighty power he cast out the very devils.

Who hath measured out the waters with the hollow of his hand, &c. To purchase credit to that which was said before, he here declares the greatness and Almighty power of God, whereby he is able to do whatsoever he pleaseth, and therefore to shew himself visibly by taking flesh upon him, and to come in power at the last, and to rule over all, and to give rewards to them diversly, and in the mean season to render and do for his people, as a shepherd for his lambs, so Jerom, Lyra, &c. And there is need that the faithfull should be hereby confirmed touching the great works of redeeming and saving them, having so many and potent enemies to hinder it, as the devils of hell and their cursed instruments endeavouring nothing more then the destruction of their souls, and the overthrow of the Gospel by continued Persecutions; so that unless God be apprehended as infinite, we cannot conceive how these things can be. And comprehended with three fingers the dust of the earth. So Calvin reads it: and Jerom, Who hath weighed with three fingers the heap of the earth. N.Tr. Comprehended the dust of the earth in a measure. Hebr. And all the dust of the earth in three; there being no verb either comprehended or weighed; so that this is by Translatours supplied out of the words beforegoing; but why the N.Tr. should leave the old rendering by three, to turn it measure, I see not. But why it should be rendered three fingers, good reason; because, as Lyra hath it, this argueth the facility of his taking up the whole masse of the earth; for when a man takes up any great weight, he doth it with his whole hand, yea with both; but when a little, with two or three fingers; and fingers may well be added to three, because he spake before of the hand of God and the hollow and span thereof. And he saith [the dust] meaning the whole earth, to shew how light a thing it is to him; so Calvin: for the dust is so light, that the winde blows it away. And from hence to v.18. he amplifieth further the theme begun touching Gods power and greatness, and wisdom. All men and things are nothing to this infinite and incomprehensible Essence, and he only is wise and of counsel to bring to pass whatsoever he pleaseth: And the drop of a bucket is spoken of, because that is a thing of nought, which a man regards not, but lets it fall.

To whom then will ye liken God, &c. Now he fitly comes to shew the vanity and foolishness of idolaters, that presume to represent God by an Image, for what Image or similitude can be made of him that comprehends all things, and is himself incomprehensible? And he proceeds to this next that he might move mens mindes when Christ should be preached, to turn from dumb Idols unto him, they being but the works of mens hands; who if they be all put together, are to himward but as the drop of a bucket and the small dust of a balance, and therefore extream folly and madness it would be in any to adore them. Thus Jerom, who also draws it to an allegory against Hereticks, that set up Idols in their hearts, made, as they think, of firm and incorruptible matter, shining by the gold and silver of humane eloquence, and fastened by Logick so strongly, as not to be moved.

Have ye not known and heard, hath it not been told you from the beginning, &c. Having spoken before of Gods greatness, and the vanity of Idols, how costly and artificially soever made, now he comes to challenge Idolaters for this their wickedness, as not being able to plead ignorance, sith from the beginning of the world they were better taught by Gods works of Creation; so that they might easily have gathered, what his infinite wisdom and greatness was, as is shewed, Rom.1.19.

He sits upon the circle of the earth, and the inhabitants thereof are as grasshoppers, &c. That is, saith Lyra, as King, and because men being compared to him are so little, they are said to be as grasshoppers. Jerom, in comparison of the vast earth, if they be lookt upon, from one end thereof to the other. He spreadeth the heavens as a curtain, and as a tent to dwell in. That is, for men and other earthly creatures, who are under the canopy of heaven as the covering of a tent; and so it seemeth indeed in the horizon to compasse us round, even to the earth, which hangs in the midst as a ball, supported by nothing, but by Gods Almighty power, the basis being only a thinn and empty air round about.

That bringeth Princes to nothing, and makes the Judges of the earth as vanity. That is, If their power, glory and wisdom be compared with his, as experience daily sheweth: For they come but up a little while to act a part, and then all their glory vanisheth again and is gone; so Xerxes, and Alexander, Nebuchad- nezzar, and Solomon; and other Assyrian, Babylonian, Persian and Roman Monarchs.

He bringeth out their hosts by number, &c. So the Psalmist saith, he calleth them all by their names; but Abraham could not number them, and the stars are his hosts, whereby he ruleth earthly things, and fighteth against his enemies, and for his people when he pleaseth, Judg. 5. And such hosts be his Angels, of whom he hath Legions, ye twenty thousand thousands, and ten times more.

Why saiest thou (O Jacob) and speakest (O Israel) My way is hid from the Lord. That is, considering how powerfull and wise the Lord is, why doest thou Jacob, or the two Tribes, and Israel or the ten Tribes lead into Captivity, speak despairingly, as if he did not regard or take any care of you, but left you to the will of your enemies?

Hast thou not heard, that the everlasting God, &c. fainteth not? He speaks in the same manner to his own people, that he did before to Idolaters, v. 21. laying a great taxation upon them, that they being so well taught should doubt of Gods care over them and humane affairs, and whether he moderated in that which they now suffered, or not, or would even put an end to their calamities, as he had promised. Thus intimating, that no error is so gross, but even Gods own people are ready to fall into it, notwithstanding the good instructions that they live continually under, if temptation cometh. And that this is a gross one, that God either sees not or cares not what becomes of his servants, if they have once by their sins provoked him; it is a very heathenish error, neither did they fault more that made and worshipped Idols, then such. For God will as soon cease to be God, as to regard the transaction of things amongst men here upon earth: a sparrow falls not to the ground without his will.

He gives to the weary strength, &c. Here he comforts the faithfull by teaching that the Lord will not fail to supply all those that put their trust in him, with any thing that they shall stand in need of, although others, who be young and lusty shall become faint and feeble, these in their feeblest estate shall be strengthened and have spirit put into them, as more largely appears by putting to this, v 30, 31. And this is not spoken for Israel only then in distress, but for all Gods faithfull servants that fear him in all Countries and Nations to the worlds end.

CHAP. XLI.

O Islands, be silent before me, and (O people) gather strength. The Lord being now about to declare his dealings of old with his people, first gives a charge to the Islands, beaten upon by the sea on every side with a great noise, to be silent; as when a Judge is to speak in the face of the Country met together, the Crier first enjoineeth all men silence, that he may be the better heard. And then he wils his people that were faint-hearted and weak through many sufferings and of long continuance, to gather strength to hear him; because when God utters his voice, there is need of extraordinary strength to bear it, the infirmity of man not being able, unless supported by God and his word encouraging him, as we may see in Daniel. To this effect almost Jerom: But for these words, Gather strength, he hath these, mutent fortitudinem; but in the sense giving he agreeth, Change it into greater, that they may be able to bear the voice of God speaking. Lyra, Let them change their strength to do evil, into strength to do good. But forsomuch as the next words, Let them speak, let us come together into judgement; it is manifestly a challenging of them, if they had any thing justly to except against the Lords dealings towards them, to speak; and that they might be able to speak most to the purpose, to strengthen themselves with arguments, as Calvin and Musculus have it. intimated, that if men would but diligently hearken to the word of God, the noise of worldly things not sounding in their ears, when they are in hearing, by wandring thoughts, but they being attentive to the sound reasons by him brought, they could not but be wrought upon by being brought home to him by true repentance.

Vers. 2.

Who stirred up the righteous from the east, and called him to his foot, &c. Hebr. Righteousnesse; and so Calvin renders it: But Jerom, justum; and N.Tr. The righteous man, which is according to meaning, sith Abrahams righteousness by faith is thus set forth; and it was by vertue of his faith, that when God called him, he went from Ur of the Chaldees, which was Eastward from Canaan.

Calvin.

And that by righteousness the man, in whom it was, is meant, appears by the next words, And called him to his foot. And he calls him righteousness, saith Calvin, because he was the father of the faithful, and what he did to him he being the same God is ready alwaies to do to all his faithfull people. Wherefore he mentioneth his calling out of Caldea, a very remote place, to intimate that he could as easily bring them out of Babylon home again. This stirring of him up, was Gen. 12. 1. and was of great force to be remembred, because he was a lone man, having only two or three more with him, when he went out from Ur; and therefore if God preserved him in all places where he came, much more could he bring home his posterity, being a great number, coming together in safety. And he is called righteous, not because he was so before God called him, for Josh. 24 shews the contrary. Gods effectual calling him, working in him faith and obedience, made him righteous, and not because he was righteous God stirred him up, for he is the authour of all good unto us, And in me, saith Paul, there is no good. But when God pleaseth he can stir up righteousness in the midst of the most notoriously unrighteous, such as the people of Ur of Caldea were. And it is said, He called him to his foot meaning, to go to a Country which he would shew him, not naming it unto him, but making him to follow him as his guide, step after step. And subdued Kings to him, &c.

Jam. 1. 17.

That is, the four Kings whom he overcame, Gen. 14. He subdued them and their Armies, making a great slaughter of them; which he sets forth, by saying, He gave the Nations before him, he gave them as duff to his sword, &c. Jerom recites this, as an Exposition of the Hebrews, and another applying it to Cyrus, who subdued the Babylonians. But he reading it, He will give the Nations before him, and Kings, &c. applieth all to Christ our righteousness, who is said to be raised up out of the East, as the sun, because he is the Son of righteousness.

Hieron.

And to him Nations and Kings are subdued, when converted to his faith. But Lyra saith the same with Calvin and Musculm: And whereas he following Jeroms Translation, reades it, He will give the Nations before him, &c. in the future Tense, he saith this is frequent amongst the Prophets, by the future to set forth things past: But all our Translations are in the preter Tense, and so take away all occasion of questioning how it can be applied to Abraham, whose time was past long before: yet Hebr. it is in the future, yea and the word call him to his foot also. And he saith, that both Catholick and Hebrew Expositours understand it of Abraham. But I marvel how he could say so, seeing Jerom did not, nor Cyril, nor Procopius, but of Christ. And although before in speaking hereupon, I have represented others applying it to Abraham, yet considering the word righteousnesse here used, whereby no man was ever called, but Christ only, and his speaking in the future Tense, as of a thing to come and not already past, and lastly of Nations and Kings to be subdued by him, being to him but as duff and stubble; I cannot but hold with Jerom, that a greater then Abraham is here meant, even Jesus Christ both God and man. For although the preter Tense be sometime put for the future in Prophecies, to shew the certainty, yet the future is never used for the preter: and therefore neither Lyra nor Cornelius, who seek thus to talve it, produce any like passage; and whereas Cornelius saith, that the conjunction [and] coupleth these futures to the preter Perfect, to shew, that all is to be understood alike; for [he stirred up] is the preterperfect, it is gratia dictum, for the conjunction [and] doth not coupletenses but persons, and it is as good Grammar to say, he hath stirred up, and will call to his foot, as he hath stirred and called, for he is stirred up when in the decree of God, as he was slain from the beginning of the world, and when the time set in this decree shall come, he will call him to his foot, &c. that is, he shall having humbled himself to come in the form of a servant, be obedient in all things, and then he shall give the Nations before him, and kings, that is, all Nations to be subdued by the Gospel, a thing often spoken of, and promised to Christ, whereas if it be applied to Abraham, that conquest once made by him over a few Kings only, will not bear these magnificall words and those following: much lesse can it be applied to Cyrus, who was but an heathen King, and therefore most unaptly should have been set forth by the word righteousnesse, although Hugo, Sabons and Pagnin be for it. And being applied to Christ it will best answer to the promise of his coming before-going, Chap. 40.9, 10, 11. with so great power and such a mighty arm. And whilst the Lord speaks of this, no marvell though he requires the Isles to be silent and attentive (as to a thing of the greatest moment in the world, and most concerning all Nations) and all people to come with their strongest arguments, if they had any thing to say, why they should not, leaving dumb idols serve this mighty conquerour, being otherwise in danger to be consumed, and utterly to perish.

He shall pursue them, he shall passe in peace, by the way he hath not gone with his feet. Vulg. Lat. Semita in pedibus ejus non apparebit, The meaning being, as both Jerom and Lyra have it, he shall passe on conquering with so great celerity, that no prints of his feet shall appear upon the ground, his expeditions being rather like a flying with wings, then a going with feet. But the words are verbatim, the way with his feet he shall not go, that is, any beaten way wherein others have gone in their conquests, but by a way before unknown, by death destroying him that had the power of death, that is, the devil, and by spirituall arms of miracles and preaching, the Spirit cooperating, subduing Kings and Nations, and not with force of arms, Psal. 45. it is said, Ride prosperously, vers. 4. not go on thy feet, and Rev. 6.2. a White Horse, and the Word of God upon him goes out to conquer. And because he should thus proceed, it is said, that he should passe in peace, that is, in a peaceable and quiet way, not striving by force, but coming with these words, Peace be to this City, or peace to this House, he shall sweeten souls, and make them subject to him every where. They that expound of Abraham, say, that when he had done pursuing the Kings, he returned in safety with his whole company, not one of them being slain or wounded, which was miraculous, he having never been used to war before, for which it is said, The way with his feet he hath not gone formerly.

Who hath wrought and done it, calling the generations from the beginning, &c. that is, first making man, then chusing an Abel, a Sheth, an Enoch, a Noah, Shem, Abraham, &c. generation after generation, untill Christ, and after him 1 Apostles, 2 Prophets, 3 Pastors, time after time, thus the Cald. Paraphra. in part, and more fully Cyriil and Procopius; and because none can answer but God, saith Jerom, who moveth the Questions, he answereth, I the Lord, the first and the last am he, where as Calvin hath it, he doth not so much mean in respect of his essence, as of his being in continuall action, bringing into the world generation after generation, and ordering and disposing of all things. see the like Rev. 1.8.

The Islands saw and feared. By the Islands and all the ends of the earth, here Jerom understands the Gentiles, whom he had called upon, v. 1. to keep silence, seeing the miracles done in the name of Jesus by the Apostles, they were stricken with fear to see such powerful acts, and so came and drew near to Christ by embracing the faith, after this recounting with indignation, what fools they had been in animating one another in idolatry, as followeth, Chap. 6. and 7. Lyra according to Ensebinus in Chronico, saith, Ninus the builder, of Nineveh, Idolatry begun, how.

Calvin.

the 7. year of Abraham set up an Image of his Father Belus, granting to guilty persons that fled to it pardon, whereupon they obtaining so great a benefit adored it as the Saviour of their lives. After which example other Kings set up to their friends departed Images likewise, calling them after Belus his name, Belzebub, Belpoor, or Baalim. And of these Isaiah speaks, saying, they saw and were afraid, drew near, and came to worship them, being in time moved with reverence towards them, as thinking them Gods and of great power. Therefore they encouraged one another to the making of these Idols, and by speaking of the Smith, the smiter with the hammer, and the former, the one working the matter in the fire to a state fit for hammering, the other forming the parts with an hammer, the third joyning them fitly together, three are intimated who were employed in this work. Calvin, that they saw the mighty acts done for Israel, Abraham's posterity, in the judgements upon the Egyptians, and dividing the Red Sea, and the River Jordan, that is, they heard hereof, and therefore were taken with great fear at the approach of the Hebrews to their Land, as Rahab confessed. But being in this fear what did they? turn from their idolatry? No, but encouraged one another more in it, they drew near, and came, that is, gathered together, and by their mutuall exhortations to one another, were more hardened to go on in their wicked superstition, hoping, the more intent they were and constant in that, which they counted piety to the gods, the better they should be defended from their enemies. That of Jerom seems not so probable: for both the words are forced about the speeches mutually had amongst Idolaters, being expounded as spoken after conversion to the faith, and a plain difference is put betwixt these here spoken of, and Israel vers. 9, 10, 11. These saw and feared, they are bidden not to fear, and by them doubtlesse the seed of Abraham by faith is to be understood. And how by the Islands and the uttermost parts of the earth the Canaanites should be meant, who dwelt upon the firm Land, and that in the midst of the earth, I cannot see: wherefore I prefer that of Lyra, expounding this as nothing pertaining to that which went before, but an intimation of the beginning of idolatry in all the world, for the reason by him rendred, they were moved with reverence towards Idols, out of an opinion growing upon them, as hath been said, that they could do them good, and so combined together to set them up. Or it may be taken as cohering with the former words thus, I the Lord will set up one that is of all power to subdue Kings and Kingdoms, that is, the Messiah. Therefore though all countreys have been so foolish as to adore and reverence the work of their own hands, being upon false grounds drawn hereunto, yet be not thou (my servant Israel) such a fool as to fear their fear, but adore and reverence him only, that is to come, and in respect of his deity now is, who is able indeed to save all them that beleeve in him, and yeeld him due reverence.

Verf. 8.
Hieron.

But thou Israel, my servant Jacob, whom I have chosen, the seed of Abraham my friend. Israel, saith Jerom, is two-fold, either according to the flesh or the spirit, but here he speaks to Israel according to the spirit, whether Jews or Gentiles, that is, such as into beleeving hearts receive the Gospel, for they are Gods chosen and seed of his friend, yea, his friends whom he most dearly loveth, Joh. 15. 15.

Verf. 9.

I have taken thee from the uttermost parts of the earth, &c. Here is further confirmed, that by Israel beleevers of all countreys and Nations are meant, because they are taken out of all parts of the world to constitute one servant, one Israel or Church.

Verf. 10.

Fear not, for I am with thee, &c. I will sustain thee with the right hand of my righteousness. Here is the end of Gods speaking so comfortably to the faithful, abhorring now from Idols, and by teaching Christ, beating them down every where, he fore-seeing how the world both of unbelieving Jews and Gentiles would persecute beleevers, for this confirms them by setting his singular love before their eyes, and his being with them in all times and ages to the worlds end, as he said Mat. 28. 20. and his sustaining them with his right hand, that is, his most powerfull arm, then which what can the greatest friend in the world say more? But it is to be noted, that he saith, The right hand of my righteousness, as alluding to vers. 2. I have stirred up righteousness out of the East; and further proving, that the righteousness there spoken of was not Abraham, because by him the faithfull are not sustained in time of trouble, but Christ, to whom strength or a right hand to sustain doth well agree.

They shall be made ashamed and confounded that provoke thee, &c. that is, both Jews and Gentiles, their machinations and conspiracies to stop the course of the Gospel coming to nothing, Psa. 2.

Fear not worm Jacob, ye dead of Israel I will help thee, &c. he calls the faithful thus, because so much contemned by the wicked world, as David speaking in the person of Christ, saith, I am a worm and no man, and therefore his body the Church may well be so called, and for humility and lowly walking. And dead they are called because in daily danger of death for Christ's sake, according to that Rom. 8. We are counted daily as sheep to the slaughter.

I have made thee as a threshing instrument having teeth. What the threshing instrument then was, see before Chap. 28. 27. and to this are the Preachers of the Gospel compared, and spirituall powers strong and high, as mountains opposing them and stopping up their way, to mountains and hills, which shall before the word be brought to very dust, which the winde bloweth away, 2 Cor. 10. 4. they are called strong holds. The proud and hard hearts of wicked men may also be understood, which are broken by the preaching of the Word. Hitherto according to Jerom, Lyra expounds it as spoken of the Hebrews in Egypt and brought out by a mighty hand, as if he had said, Ye are not Pharaoh's servants but mine, therefore fear him not, and the right hand of his just one sets forth Moses who brought them out of Egypt. And by their enemies fighting against them who were confounded, whom they should seek and not finde, are meant the Egyptians drowned in the red sea. By the worm and dead of Israel, they are meant, who were but as dead men whilest they were under Pharaoh's tyranny, who killed their male children so soon as they were born. By their being as a threshing instrument rearing the mountains in peeces, is meant, their destroying of the Cananish Kings and their people. And he proceeds vers. 16. The poor and needy sought water, &c. that is, in the wilderness, when the Lord soon made waters to flow abundantly out of an hard rock. Vers. 19. I will plant in the wilderness the Cedar, &c. that is, I will give variety of graces to my people, and the thorn which was first sent as a curse for Adam's sinne, but now is a glory to the beleeving Gentiles, their Preachers being hereby set forth, who feel not gently, but prick their hearts, as Alf. 2. Then he goes on, Vers. 22. Let them shew us what shall happen, &c. which they cannot any more at Christ's coming do, for all Oracles then ceased and were mute. But this and that vers. 19. is Glos. Ordin. Lyra by the Cedar and other Trees understands the comfort of the shadow by the cloud in the wilderness, and his provoking of Idols to foretell what shall come to the Idols of Babylon, which being afterwards to be destroyed by the Medes and Persians, they could foretell them nothing of it: applying therefore Vers. 25. I have called one out of the North, to Cyrus, and from the rising of the Sun to the Medes. Sasbon follows Jerom, and saith, that the six Chapters following, do all further set forth Evangelicall comforts by Christ to poor sinners of any countrey or Nation, that by faith and repentance turn to him. Likewise Augustine lib. de Unitate Ecclesie, c. 7, 8. Cyril, Theodoret, Eusebius, Papa, Epist. 1. decret. But Junius follows Lyra concerning Egypt. Calvin, Musculus, and others understanding the Jews according to the flesh, coming of Abraham, say, that the Lord having hitherto inveighed against the idolatrous Gentiles, here speaks to the Jews, as out of his singular grace separated from them to be his peculiar people, and therefore bound more then they to serve, not Idols, but the true God, seeking to move them hereunto by many expressions of his great love towards them. And he saith, that he brought them out of the ends of the earth, either respecting their Father Abraham, in whose loins they were, brought from afar to Canaan, even from Ur of the Caldees, or himself that brought them, who ruleth over all the ends of the earth; but their bringing out of Egypt cannot be hereby meant, so Calvin, neither indeed can his Exposition stand, referring this bringing from the ends of the earth to one Abraham, for though he came from one end, yet he came not from the other also, and therefore if it had been meant of him, the plurall number [ends] should not have been used, but the singular, and to put it out of doubt that he means not him, he saith expressly, the seed of Abraham was brought from the ends of the earth. And for the other way of expounding, that agrees worse, because the ends of the earth are plainly applied to them that were brought, and not to him that brought them. But to the faithfull who are Abrahams true seed, all things do very well agree, and therefore we should do ill forsaking that of Jerom and other Ancients, to prefer another new Exposition, although it seems plausible enough, but only in respect of the place from whence gathered, of which I have spoken enough already, whereunto may be added, that from Vers. 10. &c. he speaks in the future tense, as of a thing not past, as was Abrahams bringing out of Ur, and the Hebrews out of Egypt, but afterwards to be done. Wherefore I rest in the Exposition upon these words first made.

Vers. 17.

When the poor and needy seek Water and there is none, &c. Vers. 18. I will open rivers in high places and fountains, &c. That is, the Gentiles, like unto people in a dry wilderness, shall seek comfort by Philosophers and Wizards, but in vain: for what true comfort can there be in superstition? Idols and their Priests can afford none, but all must be, notwithstanding these, as men whose tongues cleave to the roof of their mouth through thirst. Then the Lord will abundantly supply them with water, yea, rivers of living water, as Joh. 4. 10. Chap. 7. 37. by giving them the holy Ghost to their exceeding great and everlasting comfort, as is Joh. 7. further expressed, and was fulfilled Act. 2. Chap. 8. 10. 19. when ordinarily upon the laying on of the hands of the Apostles, the Spirit was given, and sometime in praying, sometime in baptizing, and sometime preaching, great refreshing and joy thus coming to weary souls.

Vers. 19.

I will plant in the Wilderness the Cedar, and Shittah Tree, the Myrtle, and Oyl tree, &c. Hereby variety of graces being meant, which should be conferred upon the faithfull, being before as a barren and dry wilderness, wherein no Trees grew, but now being well watered fit for planting trees of all sorts. The Cedar, Cypress, and Myrtle Trees are well known to be of a sweet smelling savour: touching the Shittah, Theodotion renders it a thorn, and it is like a white thorn, but singular for durability, without corruption, lenity, strength, and shining, wherein it exceeds all other, and therefore was used about the Ark, and the Elm and Poplar are good to joyn Vines together to them, as it were in marriage, and are fit for works to be made upon them. Lastly, The Oyl-Tree affords light, and is the Embleme of peace. And it is promised that all these shall grow here, to shew, that no good grace shall be wanting in the Church of God, but it shall be as a muscull instrument, not wanting one string to make sweet melody in his ears. Hitherto Jerom and the Prophet saith, rivers in high places, because this is contrary to the course of nature, but spoken of also before, Chap. 30. 25. For it shall be as miraculous a thing for the Gentiles who were void of all drops of grace to abound herewith, as they did since their receiving of the Gospel, as for rivers to flow upon the tops of mountains. And I doubt not, but the Prophet in all this Prophecy from ver. 8. alludeth to things miraculously done of old for Gods people, the seed of Abraham according to the flesh, and so good use may be made of Lyra his Exposition before-going, for the applying of all things here to those Histories. But not to rest therein, as the full meaning of the Prophet, for this were to wrong the Prophecy, sith those temporall and worldly blessings served to set forth the spirituall in Christ Jesus; Then he called the Jews out of Egypt by miracle, now the Gentiles out of all parts to the faith, whereby they might be saved, being before in continual danger of death by the bondage, wherein they were held by the devil. Then their enemies the Egyptians, that came to fight against them were drowned in the Red Sea, and they saw them no more. Now the Jews that persecuted the Christian Religion were destroyed together with their City, and the Gentiles persecutors were likewise drowned by the breaking of a Bridge, together with Licinius their Emperour, being forced by Constantine to flee, after a cruel battel fought betwixt them. Then they had no more strength then a worm, neither were they better accounted of, yea, they were as dead men, when Pharaoh with all his host in so great fury pursued them. Now the Christians life was but as a death all the three hundred years of persecution, but then their enemies were torn as it were to dust, there being not many left after Constantines peaceable enjoying of the imperiall Diadem. Then they being in distresse for want of water, were miraculously supplied out of the rock, now the seed of Abraham amongst both Jews and Gentiles, wanting spirituall water of true doctrine, whereby they might be comforted and live, (because the Pharisees amongst the Jews troubled the fountain with mens traditions, and the Philosophers amongst the Gentiles with naturall reasons) were refreshed by Christ and his Spirit, as by Rivers of water in dry places, when the mysteries of the Kingdom of Heaven were opened to them, and the Spirit of comfort bestowed upon them. Then also they had shade in the wilderness by the cloud, that went before them day after day: now by Trees of all sorts of the best, made to grow in great abundance, where it could not have been expected, viz. graces of the spirit in the hearts of beleiving Gentiles, who were before barren and bare nothing that was good. And here is 1. the Cedar setting forth the grace of solidity, keeping from corruption by worldly things. 2. The Thorn or Shittah Tree setting forth pricking in the heart for sin. 3. The Myrtle setting forth compassion to the tempering of their pain, who are in tribulation. 4. The Olive-Tree, Mercy and Charity. 5. The Fir-Tree growing up on high, Heavenly-mindednesse. 6. The Elm, which sustaineth the Vine, the support of Gods Ministers by secular men ministring of their goods unto them. 7. The Box, which is alwaies green, the Faith in young ones not able yet in works to shew it self, yet keeping green by holding what they have received from their faithfull parents: thus Gregory. Luther putting all these Trees together, faith, they are almost all barren, but good for shade, and therefore serve to set forth peace and comfort to the soul after temptation. Calvin applies it to the Jews return out of Babylon to their own Land, to which end they must go through a vast barren wilderness in the heat of the Sun, but by this enumeration of Trees that should grow there, to be a shadow unto them, he means whatsoever comfort should be necessary for them upon the way. But chiefly the spirituall comforts by Christ, which should abound to miserable men when the conversion of the whole world should be to Christ. And this last, and applying these trees to divers graces, wherein Gregory is most punctuall, is best.

That they may see and know, and consider together, &c. That is, I have spoken and will do all things that have been said before, and hereby all men shall know how great and mighty a God I am. But how impotent Idols and gods of the Heathen are, it shall now also appear to all that will understand, because they have power to do nothing, neither do they know any thing that is to come, Verf. 21, 22, 23. yea, he challengeth them to tell things past, viz. touching Christ and his power, so Jerom, who will have this to be said to those of the Gentiles, that when others embraced the Gospel, refused it, What cause or reason can ye yeeld? yea, I challenge you Idols, If ye be Gods, shew it by speaking of things past or to come, for when Christ was born all Oracles grew speechlesse, both that at Delphos, Delos, Laxe, and Clari. If it be objected, they have foretold many things in times past. Sol. If any thing true, something false withall, as in that to Pyrrhus,

Ob. But the devil can do evil. Sol. He cannot without Gods permission, as we may see in Job and the Gadarens swine. Or it may be said, that the dead and senselesse images of mens bodies, such as the Heathen Gods were, can do nothing, for they have eyes and see not, &c. with Jerom all Expositors here agree, only about telling things past. Origen saith, he meaneth, Tell what God did from eternity before, the worlds creation, Cyril and Theodores, Tell what hath been done touching your selves, when and by whom ye were made, some Tell yee Images, any thing past or to come, for they can say nothing, having mouths but speak not. Calvin, tell, that is, Tell things past before they come, for ye never yet could do it. Let the Reader follow which of these waies he pleaseth, that of Origen seemeth best to me, or if not devils but Images be meant, that which assigns this for the cause, they are dumb, and so can tell nothing.

I have stirred up from the North, and he shall come from the rising of the Sun. He proceeds here to speak to the Gentiles under the time of the Gospel, that would not beleve when others did, but served dumb idols still, meaning by him whom he raised out of the North, some Northern Nation, by whom God would judge them; and they should suffer great miseries, that so they might turn to him that came out of the East, that is, the Sun of Righteousnesse, Christ Jesus, elsewhere called oriens. He shall tread Princes as clay, no power shall be so great but he will tread them under his feet, as the potter clay, making of some vessels to honour, some to dishonour, and this he saith after his challenge made to Idols, who can tell nothing, that contrariwise it appearing that he knew and could do all, even such great things, all men might be drawn to serve and worship him alone. And he speaks of it as already done for the certainty, as is common amongst the Prophets; thus Jerom. But Lyra will have by him out of the North and East Cyrus meant, who together with Darius should destroy the Babylonish Monarchy: because the Persians were Eastward, and the Medes Northward, and Cyrus is said to call Gods Name, because he in his Proclamation made for the Jews return, acknowledgeth, that God had given him all Countreys and Nations, and he is said to tread upon Princes as clay, because he subdued all the babylonish Princes, and disposed of them at his pleasure, as the Potter of his clay: Calvin, by him out of the North, understands the King of Babylon, who should destroy Jerusalem, and carry the Jews away captive, and Cyrus by him out of the East, so that two things are here prophesied of, which none could now imagine should come to passe, but by Gods revealing them. For the Jews were now in amity with the King of Babylon, and there was no such Eastern Potentate till long after. Junius saith, that Christs Church is meant, which under the Gospel should be raised from all parts of the world, North and South, East and West, two being named, and their contraries left to be understood, which should joyn together to destroy the kingdom of darkness. Corn. a Lapide cites Zanchy and Ferrerus, expounding this of Abraham, and approves it most, as if it were a repetition of that vers. 2. but passing this over as most improbable, because there the East only is named; here North and East, and it is spoken in the future tense, as of a thing to come, I approve above all other Expositions that of Calvin, that two men are here meant, the words being as if he had said, I will raise one out of the North, and another shall come from the rising of the Sun, and each one of them shall subdue Princes, and do with them as he pleaseth, even as a Potter with his clay, and shall call on my Name: for so did Cyrus, when he took order to build Gods house at Jerusalem for prayer, and Nibuchadnezzar after that he had been driven from amongst men seven years, knew, as it is said, that the God of heaven ruleth, and therefore it is to be presumed, that thenceforth he called upon him, and before neither of them could any King or Potentate stand, but were subjected by either in his time, and by the North the judgement coming upon the Jews from Caldea, is commonly set forth by the Prophets. As for Ieroms applying it to Christ, I think it may well be taken in as the allegoricall sense, for of him it is said, thou shalt break them in pieces as a potters vessel, and he called men to him in Gods Name, as being sent of him. But Innius his Exposition saith more then the text gives warrant for; wherein, if West and South had been meant also, they might as easily have been expressed; and if a multitude had been meant, the word [shall come] should not have gone in the singular, but plural number. Lastly, For Lyra's, it is not so full as that which I follow; and it is more for the glory of Gods prescience and power, to expound it of two distinct things by so long an interval of time disjoyned, then two conjoyned at one time, especially the scope of the place being by fore-knowing and power to do, to prove God the only true God, and Idols vain things; and because pretended to be gods, when they are but stocks and stones, abominations. And that this is the scope is further manifest by v. 26. Who hath declared from the beginning, &c. that we may say He is righteous, &c. This is God alone speaking by his Prophets, as shall appear when these predictions are fulfilled, and so he shall be justified to be the only true God, but others not, who can foreshew nothing.

Gods

Verf. 26.

The first shall say to Zion, Behold, behold them, &c. Sept. The beginning I will give to Zion, and will comfort Jerusalem in the way. Calvin, more according to the Hebrew, First Zion behold, behold they themselves and I will give a joyfull message to Jerusalem. That is, Do thou Zion first behold and consider these things to be confirmed that thy God is the only true God, and then let Heathens themselves behold, that comparing Gods power, with their Idols impotencie they may be ashamed of these vanities. And for Jerusalem, that is, my Church, consisting of both beleeving, I will give my Gospel, of which they shall all have joy.

CHAP. XLII.

Behold my servant, I will rest upon him, &c. The Sept. Jacob, my servant, Israel, my chosen. But Hebr. there is neither Jacob nor Israel; and Matth. 12. 18. it is applied to Jesus: And the Cald. Paraphrast. hath it, My servant Messiah. The Hebrews expound it also of Cyrus, but absurdly; for to Jesus it excellently agreeth, and to none else. He, saith Ierom. hath this title, My servant, because he humbled himself, and came in the form of a servant, Phil. 2. And upon him was the Spirit sent down in the likeness of a Dove, Matth. 3. and a voice came from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. He shall not cry, nor lift up his voice, because he shall be meek and gentle. He shall make judgement to go out to the Gentiles, and yet his voice shall not be heard abroad; that is, He shall contain himself within the limits of Judea, preaching, whilst he lived upon earth, to the lost sheep of the house of Israel only, but after sending his Disciples out to teach all Nations, who knew nothing before of things pertaining to salvation. The bruised reed he shall not break, for he shall be placable to all, forgiving their sins; and the smoking flax he shall not quench; that is, they that were near quenching out for their sins, shall by him be saved, and their dark blacknes shall be turned into light. He shall bring forth judgement in truth. Not respecting the persons of any, but boldly inveighing against the hypocrisie of the Scribes and Pharisees. He shall not be of a sad or troubled countenance till he sets judgement upon earth, the Islands shall expect his Law. That is, by his terrible look, making any afraid to come unto him, till the last day, when he will execute judgement upon all the world: And by the Islands expecting his Law, he means the Nations imbracing his faith, who were by Persecution beaten upon, as Islands by the waves of the sea; and his Law expected by them, is that Law of which Jeremy saith, I will make with them a new Covenant, that is, of grace and free pardon of sin. Thus Ierom.; from whom Lyra little differing, saith, By his not crying, is meant, with the voice voice of contention, not of preaching or praying, for so he cried, Ioh. 7. and upon the Cross he cried out, Eli, Eli, &c. The bruised reed he shall not break. That is, the Gentiles void of true grace, and shaken with divers errors; as with windes, he shall be so far from breaking, that he will confirm them to stand unmovably in the truth. The smoking flax sets forth the Jews weak as flax against the Romans; the fire kindled by the Romans amongst them, he will not quench any more, till all their edifices be consumed: And by Islands, he saith, Sicily, Brittain, and other Islands imbracing the Christian faith are meant; and his judgement bringing forth in truth, of his difference putting betwixt some, imparting his grace unto them and letting others go. He shall not be of a sad countenance. That is, not understanding it of a natural passion, arising out of the sense of sorrow, for so he said, My soul is heavy to the death; but of heaviness darkening the understanding: Wherefore Hebr. it is, He shall not be darkened. Calvin, Musculus and Junius apply this also to Christs meekness of spirit, in dealing with broken-hearted sinners, He will not by a loud and terrible voice affright them, as is the manner of cholerick Judges; no man abroad shall ever hear of passionate speeches coming from him, for he will cherish and comfort the bruised in minde for their sins, and not break their hearts by despair; and as a man deals with a light, the weak whereof is linen, of linum, if it smoaks and burns not clearly, he puts it not out, but useth means to clear it up; so he will give to such as are clouded with discomforts for their sins, a clear sight of his grace. He shall bring forth judgement according to truth. That is, against hypocrites, such as the Scribes and Pharisees, he shall not spare to inveigh, being nothing milde towards them. He shall not fail nor be broken, untill, &c. The same word כָּרַךְ is here used, that v. 3. being there rendred smoking, and it signifieth to darken: The meaning is, although he shall be so milde to the bruised and darkened through discomfort of spirit, yet this shall not be in him out of pusillanimity, for his courage for the light of truth shall not be broken, by suffering any thing at the hands of wicked men that hate him; neither shall his light shine more dimly, but continually in the like brightness, Till he settle judgement upon earth, that is, by his Apostles and other Ministers, spreading the light of truth all over the world to continue, none being ever able to extinguish it. And the Islands shall expect his Law. That is, the most remote people of the world shall be converted to his faith. And this seems to be the very meaning here; yet for so much as Matth. 12. 18. applies it after contumelious speeches used against Christ by the Pharisees, whose sick seeking to him he still went on to heal, but enjoined them silence, It is not amiss applied, as I have there shewed, to the wicked Jews, who were weak as a bruised reed to withstand Christs power, and were but like the wick of a candle made of linen cloth, being almost out and smoking, yet such was his mildness, that he did neither break nor extinguish them by his immediate judgements, but was patient towards them, and would have nothing reported that he did, to inrage them more to the increase of their sins, till that they being full they suffered by the Romans, for then judgement was brought in righteousness. So also Gregor. Moral. 33. c. 3. The shaken reed was the Kingly stock, which failed when Herod was made King: The flax smoking, was the Priesthood, set forth thus for the linen worn by Priests, and because they had lost then the heat of a true faith, they were not burning any longer, but smoking; that Christ brake not, this he quenched not, because he smote neither of them with the power of his judgement, but tolerated both, by the longanimity of his patience. Basil by the bruised reed understands him that doth good, but not with that sincerity which is required: By the smoking flax, him that doth no duties with that ardency of zeal; the one is not to be rejected, but better taught; the other to be quickened by putting him in minde of Gods judgements against the lukewarm, and his promises to the zealous. And if he be the Lords delight that is milde towards weak Christians or malicious enemies, helping the infirmities of the one, and having patience towards the other, Then it is a grace that we should should endeavour after. Iustinian of this faith, Nihil tam peculiare est imperiali majestati, quem clementia, per quam Deus imitatur. Alex. Severus, when it was objected, that by his mildness he had made his power weaker and more contemptible, answered, But more secure and longer lasting. M. Antoninus to his wife, willing him for his better security to cut off the complices of Avid. Cassius, that had been a Traitor to him, answered, I will spare his wife and children, for nothing commends an Emperour so much as clemency; This made Caesar a god; This consecrated Augustus, and this adorned thy father: Be then secure, the gods will defend me, my clemency is cordial to the gods.

I the Lord have called thee in righteousness, &c. Having prophesied of Christ that was to come, by whom all the faithfull from one end of the earth to the other should be saved; he now brings in the Lord speaking to him, first setting him forth by his Almighty power, in opposition to heathen gods (that the great and miraculous work that he was about to do in bringing such a man into the world, might be the rather credited,) Then the speech concerning him, I the Lord have called thee in righteousness, &c. Ierom, because v. 1. begins with Ecce, behold my servant, but it is not said who spake these words; here it is shewed to be the Lord, who spake so to Christ. *I have called thee; that is, to declare me to the world, to be God both of Jews and Gentiles, who are yet ignorant of me. And will hold thy hand: That is, Working wonders by thee and with thee; according to that, My Father hitherto worketh and I work; I have given thee for a Covenant of the people: That is, in performing my Covenant or Promise that thou shouldst come, made long ago. To open the eyes of the blinde: That is, both corporal and spiritual, which had before no sight of God or of his truth. And to bring the bound out of prison, for sins are as bands. My glory I will not give to another: He saith not, I will give it to none, but, not to another; So cautiously spoken, that it is to be admired. For it is not meant that he would not give it to his Son, for he glorified him with the same, Iob. 12. but not to another God, as is in the words following expressed. Lyra, I will give thee for a Covenant: That is, by suffering death, and the bound in prison he expounds of the fathers of old held in Limbo from the sight of God, who is light. Calvin also and others generally understand it of Christ, whom he is said to have called in righteousness, meaning justly, and therefore he should be established for ever, and for this cause he saith he held him by his hand. Touching the blinde whose eyes he opens, all consent with Ierom, and for the bound in prison, they are the same spiritually blinde, and bound and held by Satan as in a prison, till converted. For Lyra his Limbo, it must first by some plainer place be proved before we receive it; see chap. 61. 1. where the same is again prophesied, and applied to Christ, Luk. 4. so that they who expound in of Cyrus are far wide.*

Behold the former things are come to passe, and I declare new. These words are used to perswade men to beleve Prophecies of things to come by their experience of things before spoken of from time to time by the Lord, falling out accordingly. To Abraham he foretold the multiplication of his posterity, their servitude, and deliverance, and possessing the land of Canaan. To Moses the judgements to come upon Egypt, the dismiss of the Hebrews from thence, and when they had sinned by murmuring, their perishing and long stay in the wilderness. To Ioshuah, that none should be able to stand against him all his daies, and that he should conquer the Land and divide it, &c. all which was fulfilled. Now nothing having failed hitherto, great reason there is to beleve the new Prophecies coming from the same God, before mentioned of the Babylonish Captivity, Babylons destruction, and their deliverance, and of Christ Jesus. And that there should be for him such rejoycing and singing, as followeth, Vers. 10. Sing to the Lord a new song, ye that descend to sea, &c. After mercy promised, as is usual in other places, so here the Prophet sheweth what praise and glory God should have in all parts of the world for sending his Christ; of the

- like see before, chap. 26. and 38, 29. and hereby was intimated, that his Gospel should be preached in all Lands, as was prophesied, Psal. 19. and it is applied Rom. 10. 18. wherefore all the earth is mentioned and the sea and Islands, the wilderness, Cities and Villages of Kedar, that is, Arabians dwelling in tents, and those in rocks and mountains.
- Verf. 13. The Lord shall go forth as a giant, &c. This is spoken, because when the faithfull consider their many and potent enemies, they might fear that the promised joyfull time of their deliverance should never come. To support them then against this fear, causing great sorrow in stead of joy, he declares the irresistible power of God by a Giant, known amongst men to be so mighty, that none can stand against him. And he saith, he shall stirre up zeal, to shew his wrath against his enemies, which seems to be nothing, whilst they are in prosperity or asleep, but when he executeth his judgements upon them, then he stirs it up to their cost.
- Verf. 14. I will cry as a woman in travel. This may seem not so well to agree to the Lord of all power, when he cries out, and comes upon his enemies with force that cannot be resisted, as v. 13. But he puts the person of such a woman upon him, to shew how dear and near his people were to him, even as the childe to the mother in travel with it, who makes but little noise for a time, but keeps within the compasse of soft and low groaning, but her pangs becoming more extream, she can hold no longer from crying out aloud. In like manner the Lord would hereby shew, that he was pained extreamly, as it were, and longed to be delivered by bringing his people out of the danger of their enemies, by destroying them. Wherefore it is to be taken only as an expression of his affection, not of his weakness, as in such a woman, to work for their deliverance, though he had hitherto only silently groaned a little, as it were, through compassion towards them, and done nothing for their deliverance, yet now the time of their deliverance should come, and an end be put to his pain for their miseries, as of a woman in travel, when she crieth out loudest. A notable place of comfort for all the faithfull in their miseries, God is pained, as it were, with them, and therefore will not certainly suffer the wicked alwaies to oppress them, but longs for their deliverance, and it shall not be long delaid.
- Note. I will bring mountains and hills into a desert, &c. That is, By the fierceness of mine anger burning them up that be mine enemies, although like mighty mountains; and drying them, although as rivers, and then they shall become as Islands, firm earth, where water before abounded.
- Verf. 15. And I will leade the blinde by the way which they knew not, &c. That is, saith Calvin, such as could see no way of escaping out of dangers, to them will I lay open a way; which should support us against despair, when our case seems at any time to be most desperate, and we can see no more how we should come out then a blinde man the way that he should go. Jerom expounds the blinde of the same, which were spoken of v. 7. and the way, of Christ, who is the way, the truth and the life; and then the eies of the blinde are opened, when Christ is seen prefigured in the Law, in regard of the seeing of whom therein, they were as blinde men, which was foreshewed in the vail put upon Moses his face, according to 2 Cor. 3. And this I embrace, but reject not the other, because it may well be deduced from hence, if in regard of the way to escape death eternal, God opens the eies of his, that they may see it when they were blinde of themselves and knew it not, he will also shew them a way in his good time to come out of all other dangers, who depend upon him, and wait for his direction, trussing nothing to their own wits.
- Verf. 16. Calvin. They shall be turned backward, and be confounded, who trust in graven Images, &c. This is otherwise and not according to the plain meaning of Isaiah, rendred by Jerom, They are turned backward, and they shall be confounded that trust in graven Images. As if the meaning were, that the Lord said that he would do to the Jews as he spake before, but they through unbelief turned from him, thus making themselves incapable of this great good. For to them doing so and trusting to Idols, he threatneth confusion: Or having shewed their obstinacy at the first, he brings them in as crying out upon such as trust in Images after this, intimating hereby their future conversion. But the meaning is, As the faithfull formerly blinde should be so graciously dealt withall, as hath been said; so contrariwise perfliters in idolatry still shall be made to fall backward to destruction, and confounded for ever.

Hear (O ye deaf) and yee blinde; look:

Who is blinde; but my servant? &c. Having prophesied of the opening of the eyes of the blinde by Christ, in the former part of the Chapter, now he comes to speak to the Jews, who should be blinde and not able to see Jesus to be the Christ, when the Gentiles should see; for who is his servant but Israel? and who his Messengers, but the Learned amongst them? and of the closing of their eyes he spake before, chap. 29. 9, 10. and of their blindness Christ speaks, Joh. 9. Ierom renders the last clause, Who is deaf, but he to whom I sent my messengers? but it is plainly Hebr. as the messengers I have sent. The wicked Priests being hereby meant, as Musculus noteth, whose lips should preserve knowledge, and who is called the messenger of the Lord, Mal. 2. 7. Calvin saith, that all men are here taxed as blinde, v. 28 but specially the Jews and Priests amongst them, for whom it was the greatest shame, because they had all means of knowledge: Yet he saith, that some expound these words, as if they were the words of the wicked retorting upon the Prophet that which he had said to them, Hear (ye deaf, and ye blinde) see: As if they had said, Who is so blinde as thy self? but he rejects it, as it is well worthy, if we consider the words following, v. 24. and in the very 20th verse, Seeing, but not observing, hearing, that he may not hear, as was before threatned to Israel, Isa. 6. 9.

The Lord willing for his righteousness, &c. That is, He is willing to have it otherwise with his people, whom he hath peculiarly chosen, viz. that they should see and embrace the things pertaining to their peace, that no evil imputation might be laid upon him, when it shall fall out ill unto them, as if he were not just to perform to them his promises, when they should suffer such grievous things at the hands of their enemies. That he might magnifie his Law. By drawing mens hearts unto it through benefits conferred upon them, to whom it was committed, whereby it might be gathered that all others, who should live under it and keep it, should also be happy. This was truly Gods good will unto them, but they through their own default were destroyed, insnared, &c. This is by Ierom applied to the destruction of the Jews by the Romans after their blindness and malice shewed against Christ; for then their destruction was the most grievous by farre, and they were imprisoned and captived, as is here further expressed, yea although hidden in the holes of the rocks, they were drawn from thence, and spoiled, and made slaves of, thirty being sold for one piece of silver. But Calvin expounds it of their destruction by the Babylonians, against which maketh that it is after the coming of Christ prophesied of, and therefore it cannot be so understood. Moreover, vers. 23. he foretelleth, that when this destruction of them should be made, they should not know or attain to the sight of the cause, or for what sin especially they were brought to such misery, as vers. 24. But when they suffered by the Babylonish Captivity, they soon came to a sight of their sins, especially their idolatries; only since their crucifying of Christ in this most long space of time they are not come to the perceivance of this to be the cause, but only that they have committed a greater sin then ever before, which hath caused the Lord to leave them longer then ever before without any glimpse of his favour.

- Jews, as if their conversion to come were respected, at the second coming of the Messiah, because they are Chap. 42. spoken of as a people spoiled and destroyed, and even then without hearts to consider the cause. Wherefore to expound these words as spoken to the same, is altogether discrepant. But if we distinguish Israel into two, according to the flesh and according to the spirit, they agree very well to the last, that is, the Apostles and other Preachers of the Gospel sent out by Christ at the first amongst the Jews, and those that were of that Nation converted to the faith by them, of whom it is said, Act. 21. That there were many thousands that believed, or any afterwards converted, or that shall be converted to the worlds end. These he bids not to fear water or fire, intimating great and hot persecutions, that should be raised against them. But the Hebrews by four things here named, water, floods, fire, and flame, understand the Assyrians, Babylonians, Macedonians and Romans, from all which Israel shall be preserved. Lyra understands the faithfull of the Gentiles, who upon their believing become Gods people, and are stiled accordingly Jacob and Israel, as is more plainly shewed Ch. 44. 5. And therefore he saith, Whom I have created and formed, by the spirit working in the preaching of the Apostles to form the new man in them, which is in righteousness and holiness. For going thorow water and fire without hurt, hereby is meant, that they should suffer persecutions of divers sorts, yet the Church should again come out of them, and not perish hereby, but rather flourish more, as it did indeed, when Sanguis Martyrum was semen Ecclesia, according to the old Proverb. Calvin applieth it particularly to the faithfull amongst the Jews, who, he saith, are comforted against the destruction before threatned. I subscribe to Lyra, because these Prophecies begun Chap. 42. are plainly of the times of the Gospel, wherein Israel properly so called, or Israel according to the flesh is not so much respected, but the Israel by faith; and whose shall consider the miseries in the Primitive times, suffered by the faithfull at the hands of Persecutors, cannot but acknowledge, that they had great need to be thus comforted. Yet I would not have the Gentiles so understood as to exclude the faithfull of the Jews, but taking them in also, as appears by vers. 3. and 14. I have called thee by thy name; herein he alludes to his giving Jacob the name of Israel, when he had wrestled with God and prevailed.
- When thou walkest thorow the waters, they shall not drown thee.* As they were not drowned when they went thorow the red Sea, and afterwards the three children were in the fire of Nebuchadnezzars furnace without burning, and in some of the faithfull, saith Lyra, it hath since been fulfilled according to the letter, they have walked miraculously upon the waters, as Christ did, and the flames of fire have had no power to kindle upon them, but have been extinguished, or made to burn up their Persecutors.
- I gave Egypt for thy ransom, and Ethiopia, &c.* That is, saith Jerom, the salvation of the peoples which shall be called by the Ministry of the Apostles, shall be reputed the salvation of their souls. Lyra, They are said to be given for Israel, when by imbracing the faith they are joyned to Israel; or rather, I conceive, they are made the Israel of God. And Egypt and Ethiopia are spoken of in special, because the Gospel was so soon received there; in Egypt by the Ministry of Mark in Alexandria, and by Matthew his Ministry in Ethiopia. Calvin, Egypt and Ethiopia were given for a ransom for Israel, when Sennacherib the King of Assyria being about to besiege Jerusalem, was by a singular providence called away to go against the Egyptians and Ethiopians, to fight against and overcome them, and returning again was shamefully put to flight from Judea, Jerusalem being preserved in safety. And this is the true literal meaning most commonly followed. But of the Ethiopians and Egyptians see more in relation to the Jews, Isa 45. 14. But mystically here is further foreshewed, that the enemies of spiritual Israel should impugn it, and by persecution seek his destruction, but they themselves should be destroyed and this Israel preserved, and Egypt and Ethiopia and Seba only are named, because cause they were the most potent; that were continually at enmity with Israel, all idolatrous persecutors being by them figured out: so likewise Cyril. To apply it to the conversion of idolatrous peoples, at what time they are made Sacrifices to God, according to Rom. 12. 1. c. 15, 16. as some do, were to confound the persons ransomed and made the ransom. And it is improper to say, I will give the Egyptians a ransom for thee; as meaning to be redeemed with thee, for to this sense it should rather have been said, I will redeem them together with thee.

Cyrl.

Since thou wast precious in my fight, thou hast been honourable, therefore I will give, &c. Here a reason is rendered, why the Lord would do for his Israel, as he said before, viz. he was precious and honourable upon his turning Israel, by imbracing the faith, a great encouragement to us to turn, such are honourable, the wicked base.

Vers. 4.
Note.

I will bring thy seed from the East, and gather thee from the West, &c. The like speech is used by Christ Luk. 13. 28, 29. declaring plainly, that by these children the faithfull of all Countreys and Nations are meant, and not the generality of the Jews, for of them he saith, And your selves thrust out. Calvin and Musculus apply it to the Jews captived into divers parts of the world, whom the Prophet here comforts against the fear that might surprize them in their enemies Countrey as farre off lest that being there they should be forgotten, though not at home in their own Countrey; against this fear he promiteth to bring them out of all parts. This I grant may be somewhat here aimed at, but the principal is that which hath been said, whereupon Jerom also goeth, and Calvin.

Vers. 5.

Calvin.
Musculus.

All that are called by my name, for my glory I have created them, &c. This sheweth, That the Israel hitherto spoken of is the Church of Christ consisting of men and women called Christians by Christs name, and to shew that he speaks of the same Israel, he repeats the words of vers. 1. I have created and formed thee for my glory; these words, For my glory being added to shew what glory should redound to God by the conversion of the Gentiles.

Hieron.
Vers. 7.

I will bring out the blinde that have eyes, &c. Here is shewed, how the Lord creates him a people to his glory, viz. by giving sight to them before blinde, and hearing to them before deaf, yet having eyes and ears, which doth most properly belong to the Israelites, that were now converted, because of them it is said, Isa. 6. 9. that they had eyes to see, but not to perceive, and the generality of them remain so to this day, but many amongst them who had the light of the Law and Prophets, which were as eyes to them, saw not the things which in the time of Christs coming in the flesh, they saw to their comfort and believed.

Vers. 8.

Let all the Nations be gathered together, and let the people be assembled, &c. Having hitherto foretold wonderful things to come, whereby it might appear to all the world that he is God, now he challengeth the servants of other gods to do the like, if they will justifie them to be Gods, and not vanities and dumb Idols. Whereas in bidding them declare former things to justifie that they are gods, but this may seem to be a point of small knowledge for gods; see the like before Chap. 42. 22. and the explanation thereof. Or Let them hear and say, it is truth, Hebr. And they shall hear and say truth, Calvin, But let them hear, and they will say, it is true, giving hereupon this good exposition, If they that are most rude and ignorant, would but hear and consider, that the Lord reveals things to come, but none else can do it, they would say, It is true, he alone is God, and none other. Jerom, Let them hear and say, truly ye are my witnesses, adjoyning the words of vers. 10. that is, saith Lyra, Let them hearken and learn, if they can, from their gods, what shall come, and speak of it before to others for the justification of their Deity, but if they cannot truly speak any thing this way, it is plain that those gods are but vanities. Then follows, Truly ye are my witnesses; the word EDN in our Hebrew Bibles, as we now have them distinguished by pricks and verses, being pulled without respect of pricks from vers. 9. and joyned to vers. 10. notwithstanding this disappointing and displacing in their authentical vulgar Latine, restores the word truly to vers.9. giving this sense, which I cannot but acknowledge to be best; Let Idols servants foretell things before they come, and they shall be justified truly to be gods by others that shall hear them, saying Truly they are. But of this Cyril is the first Author. According to my rendering of the Hebrew before, They, that is, some shall hear their Prophets from them declaring them long before, and as witnesses on their side shall be able to say, it is truth, and not a feigned thing, they are gods.

Vers.10.

Thus he challengeth all peoples of the world that were lead away by false gods, and puts them to a non plus, to prove them true. But for himself, he hath many witnesses, as it follows Vers.10. Ye are my witnesses, and my servant whom I have chosen, &c. That is, Ye Jews amongst whom I have sent my Prophets and declared many things formerly, which ye have seen fulfilled, and Jesus my servant shall be my witness above all others, both by having my predictions fulfilled in him, by his averring me to be the only true God, and by the miracles which he shall work in my name.

Joh.17.3.

Vers.14.

For your sakes I have sent to Babylon, and I have brought down all of them bound, or as the Vul. Lat. hath it, All their bands, meaning, those whereby they held the Israelites in slavery, which were pulled off and thrown down, when they were out of that Captivity by Cyrus delivered, and Babylon with the great strength thereof before broken. And he speaks of it, as a thing done, though not done till above an hundred and forty years after, for the certainty thereof, and he instanceth in this of so great note, which was to come long before his beloved sons coming in the flesh, who should bring the greatest happiness to all true Israelites, that seeing this fulfilled they might be in assured expectation of that in Gods appointed time. Why our new Transl. for Bars hath Nobles, I know not, Calvin renders it more agreeably to the words, They are all fugitives for so the Hebrew word also signifieth, and then the sense must be, he hath brought Babylon down, the inhabitants thereof are become fugitives before the Persians, who in times past made all men fear and flee, being most mighty both by Land and Sea, for which he adds, The Caldees crying in ships, that is, shouting in an exulting manner, when they went to any Sea-fight in assured hope of victory, for the Caldees were the inhabitants of the City Babylon.

Vers.16.

That maketh a path in the Sea, and a way in mighty waters, &c. To make it the more credible which he had spoken vers.14. he styles himself their King, recounting the miraculous acts formerly done by him in dividing the red Sea Exod.14. And the river Jordan Josh.3. and the drowning of Pharaohs chariots and horsemen there. Thus he seeks to move them to believe their deliverance from the Babylonish Captivity, by shewing that God had done greater things for them already.

Vers.17.

But from hence Vers.18,19. he proceeds to foretell of a farre greater mercy yet to come after that, viz. a spiritual by Christ Jesus, of whom he had spoken Chap.42.1. And therefore he extenuates both their deliverance out of Egypt and out of Babylon, as not worthy to be remembred in comparison of this, saying, Remember not former things. Behold I do a new thing, I make a way in the wilderness and rivers in the desert, &c. Which is by Lyra expounded of Christs incarnation, and of all Nations as barren in respect of good, as a wilderness, being therefore hereby likewise set forth Cha.35.1. and of the spirit said to be as a river alwayes flowing, Joh.4.14. See also Chap.35.7,8. where the spirit given by Christ is likewise set forth by springs of water, and a way is also spoken of there.

Vers.19.

Lyra.

And for the new thing, he saith, it is also spoken of, Jer.31.22. A woman shall compass a man. Thus also Jerom, who seeks to draw that vers.14. to Christs times also, as if by Babylon were meant the wicked world, and by the bound ones the bound in sinne, and by Caldees devils, who were destroyed by Christs coming, and their captives loosed from their hands. But herein I rather prefer Lyra and others understanding that properly, because he speaks not of the new and most admirable thing above all others,

others, that is, Christ and his Kingdom, till now, and in such words, as plainly exclude the thing related vers. 14. as not pertaining to this Prophecie, vers. 19, 20. So Procopius, Ad. Sastont. &c. But Calvin, Junius, &c. will have it meant of the same deliverance out of the Babylonish Captivity, taking in all the time following, till the coming of Christ, in which time he recounts many admirable mercies shewed to the Jews, for which the doings of the Lord towards them might well be thus magnified, but especially his comforting of them by Haggai in respect of the Lords house built after their return, by this, that he would fill it with more glory, then that formerly built by Solomon, which was fulfilled when Christ came into it. I see no reason, why this should be mingled with other things done before, although all exceeding great mercies, because the Prophet plainly distinguisheth betwixt those outward mercies, and these here promised, by calling these new and preferring them so far beyond them, as to call off from remembering them any more in comparison of these. For if the comparison had been betwixt the old acts of the Lord done for them, and those in bringing them out of Babylon, and such others as followed after, what reason can be rendred why these should be so much extolled above them, being indeed not equal to them, as will easily appear to him that shall consider the many miracles wrought then, and but few now, and the servile condition, that the Jews were almost alwayes in after their return from Captivity, and their free, before, living under some most glorious Kings of their own. And the word New, doth plainly intimate not the like, but another kinde of mercy farre more excellent. Yet in speaking of it the spirit alludes to corporeal mercies before shewed them in their coming through the wilderness towards Canaan at the first, that they might be the more sensible of it.

Calvin.
Junius.

The beasts of the field shall honour me, the Dragon and the Owl, &c. Having compared the graces of the spirit overflowing under the N. T. whereby a way is made for the faithfull to heaven, with the way sometime thorow the red sea, and the waters flowing out of a rock in the wilderness, whereby the Israelites passing were refreshed: now because not only men, but beasts then had comfort by those waters, that the many rivers of grace flowing in the most vast wilderness of Heathen Countreys in stead of one then in one wilderness might not seem to come short of that in any thing, he sheweth here, that beasts should have comfort of these waters also, that is, the most bestial sort of men, and the unclean fowls setting forth the uncleanest of men, because grace coming into their hearts, they are again of beasts made men dear unto God, and chosen by him, as is intimated in the last words of this verse, To give water to my chosen people; To this effect Jerom, who also saith, that Theodorion for Owl hath Thannim, others Syrens, denoting men drawn away by pleasure to become a prey to the devil, because the Syrens allured passengers by sea by their sweet singing to be devoured by the Scillean Dogs. But he prefers the former reading of wilderness-birds, putting yet Ostriches for Owls. Gregory hereupon saith, Dragons are earthly-minded men, creeping, as it were, upon the ground; and Ostriches hypocrites, because they have wings, and yet flee not: but these being converted, or having drunk of this water, do sincerely or seriously worship and serve God. Plato saith, That in man, as in the Trojan-horse, are all sorts of beasts; the Fox, in the subtil and deceitfull; in the cruell, the Lion; in the lustfull, the Sow loving the mire; in the slothfull, the Ass; in the greedy-gutted, the Wolf; in the curious and fine, the Peacock, &c.

meaning, that their prayers and sacrifices were as nothing, forasmuch as their sins made them all abominable, as Chap. 1. 14. So that they serve not God who do duties unto him, but they make him to serve with their sins, as vers. 24. that is, by laying on a load thereof upon him, as Amos 2. 13. which they lookt he should bear by suffering them to go unpunished, and notwithstanding blessing them every way; and he saith, That they wearied him with their iniquities both in this regard, and because that all the time of his forbearing to punish them, he strove with his justice putting him on to punish even till he was weary. Some referre his being made to serve with their sins, to Christ, that for sinne came in the form of a servant to redeem them from servitude. Of the Exposition before-going Jerom layes the ground in brief, taking it also as propheticall of their obduration by unbelief when Christ came, for then they turned not in his name to call upon him; and what they did before in sacrificing was nothing, seeing they were not obedient, and obedience is the best sacrifice, 1 Sam. 15. Some will have this spoken, as alluding to that which was said before of the heathen praising God, but Israel called not upon him, that is, to be accepted. Some take all that which is spoken from hence to the end of the Chapter, as a rendering of a reason, that the good before promised to his people was not of their merit, but of Gods mercy, therefore he here first chargeth them with not serving him so as to be worthy of any thing, but of judgement, because if they prayed or sacrificed, it was done but unwillingly, they not knowing by reason of the Law requiring it how to do otherwise, which is intimated, by saying, Thou hast been weary of me, or wearied in me, as the word יָגַד signifieth, that is by counting it a wearinesse which thou dost in my service, and their sacrifices were accompanied with many sins. Some, saith Calvin, understand this as spoken of the time of their Captivity in Babylon, but he rejects this.

I, I am, that doth away thine iniquities for my self, &c. Upon the ground before laid down of their unworthinesse, and the Gentiles being before their conversion as beasts, he now inferreth, that all the favour done to his spirituall Israel was meerly out of grace; that hereunto only and not to merit of man remission of sins and salvation might be ascribed, as even the Jesuite Cornelius a Lapide yieldeth: see the like Ezek. 36. 22. And Saubont a Papist is forced by the evidence of truth to determine thus. When it is said, I do thy iniquities away for my own sake. It is not thus spoken to teach, that nothing is required on our part, that we may be forgiven, for we must believe in Christ, as Abraham believed and it was imputed to him for righteousness. But when we do, it is still for his own sake that he forgives us, because he both draweth us to faith in his Son, and when being drawn we believe, it is not for the merit of our faith, that we are forgiven, but because to the believer God imputeth not sinne. Again, we must be baptized and repent, but when we do thus, it is not therefore that we are forgiven and set clear from sinne, but for Gods own sake, and his grace, who in meer mercy is thus pleased to justify and save us: If it be said, he forgives us for Christs sake, and because he by his death hath satisfied the divine Justice, and paid our ransom; it is true, but when he forgives for his sake, he forgives for his own, sith he sent his Son, and the Father and Son are one. Thus he, most orthodoxly confirming our tenet of Justification only by grace, and not in any part by works, closing with Paul, Ephes. 1. 6, 7. In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of our sins, to the praise of the glory of his grace.

Thy first father hath sinned, and thy teachers have transgressed against me. To make good what he had said, that he did away their sins for his own sake, he ascends here to the consideration of their and their fathers condition from the very first that he took Israel to be his people; the words rendered, Thy first father, may better be rendered, Thy fathers, the first of them. For it is אֲבֹתָיִךְ not a singular, but a plural, Thy fathers, then אֲבֹתָיִךְ that first whereby he plainly means Abraham, not Adam, as some would, for Abraham was first chosen chosen to be the father of the faithfull, and he sinned before his calling, by Idolatry, as is intimated Josh. 24. 2. See my Exposition upon it. As for their other fathers, from whom the Tribes of Israel had their names, they were notorious for some sins, Reuben for incest, Simeon and Levi for deceit and murder, and all the rest for being helpers herein, and for meditating the death of Joseph, and man-stealing, Judah for incest also with Thamar his daughter in law, yea their very teachers, or Legats sent from God to them to deliver them out of Egypt sinned, for so the word מְשִׁנִּים signifieth, or interpreters, and these were Moses and Aaron, who sinned at the waters of Meribah, for which God was angry with them, and took them away, before they came into the Land of Canaan.

Therefore I have prophaned the Princes of the Sanctuary, &c. That is, the same men, who were over the Sanctuary of God, dealing with them as with the common sort of the Jews, cutting them off for that sinne in the wilderness, as the whole multitude of murmurers, who were all destroyed from twenty years old and upward, and two only saved that opposed them in their murmuring, Caleb and Joshuah; so Jerom. For to be prophaned is to be made like the common sort in their bodily death, and I gave Jacob to the curse, and Israel to reproaches, that is, when they were by the curse of God held in the wilderness forty years, till all the murmurers were consumed by divers judgments, and were faine to hear of their wickednesses to their great shame and reproach, when they were by Moses and Aaron upbraided hereby. And if their fathers and teachers, even the best of them, were not without their sins, yea a whole generation of which they came grossly tainted, and accordingly punished, then it must needs follow, that the great mercies promised before in this Chapter must spring from Gods meer grace pardoning their sins, which deserved the contrary, much more then their fathers had done, as being greater sinners, which is the main scope and end of this commemoration. Musculus expounds this of their fathers in common considered as one body, and their Priests and Prophets leading them on in sinne, till they were destroyed and shamefully enthralled by their enemies, Caldeans, Assyrians and others, who scorned and disgraced them. But because it seems to be an argument à maiore ad minus, it will hold better from Abraham and Moses and Aaron, &c. to them, because they were of eminent holiness, these base Idolaters and debauched sinners. And whereas he for the sin of Abraham refers us to a query made by him, How he should know that he should inherit the Land of Canaan? I see not how it can be counted a sinne any more then Hezekiahs asking a signe, or Gideons afterwards, seeing as to them and to the Virgin Mary a sign was given in mercy without a reproof, so to Abraham. Yea he is set forth above all others, as a patern of believing without doubting through unbelief, Rom. 4.

Only after convincing them of the pardon of their sins coming from Gods meer grace, and telling how he had dealt with Jacob and Israel in judgement, and that not without cause, for they had sinned, as Chap. 43. 27, 28. it seemed good unto him to speak to his spiritual Israel here again, as he had done before, that the difference betwixt Israel according to the flesh, and Israel according to the spirit might be perceived. servant, and Israel whom I have chosen, as Jerom noteth, and the word is varied vers.2. into Jeshurun signifying righteous, Deut.32.15. * And whereas ver.3. after watering promised by way of explaining what he meant, he saith, I will pour my spirit upon thy seed, and my blessing upon thine offspring, by two comparisons setting this seed forth after the water of Baptism poured thereupon, 1. Taken from the grasse. 2. From willows growing by the waters-side, whereby, he saith, are two sorts of people set forth, making one Israel of God, the beleiving Jews, by the grasse, and the Gentiles by the willows, amongst whom these waters shall chiefly flow, being in times past as dry as a wilderness, so that without a miracle no trees could grow there. Verf.5. sheweth as was noted before, Chap.43.7. that the Israel here spoken of, sets forth the faithfull of all Nations, because they shall now begin to be called from the name Jacob, and Israel, and God, as they were not before, according to Hos.1.10. But upon vers.4. note, that there are not two comparisons, but one only to willows; for it is, As the willows grow amongst or between the grasse; the meaning being, that the faithfull now should be to others, that were Gods people before for knowledge and grace, much over-topping them, as the willows do the low grasse. Gregory saith, the faithfull are compared to willows by the rivers side, because they are alwaies green, and being cut down they grow more, so they in affliction. Whereas vers.5. it is said, This man shall write himself with his hand the Lords. Some Popish Expositors apply it to the sign of the Crosse, which he making with his hand, or putting with his hand a Crucifix about his neck, declares himself to be the Lords. But to set to the hand to the Lord, is nothing else but to subscribe to him, which is done, when Paul writes himself the servant of Jesus Christ, and a follower of him, making it good in taking up his Crosse, and learning humility and meeknesse of him. And he that is called Israel hath also his name from the Lord; a sincere Christian is a true Israelite, Joh.1.43. And he that lives in all things according to the Law, a Jew within, pretious before God, Rom.2.29. So that mens calling themselves after Israels or Jacobs name here, doth not countenance the superstitious, now calling themselves by the name of Francis or Dominick; or any in Corinth by the name of Paul or Apollo, &c. as they are taxed, 1 Cor.3.

They that make graven Images are all of them vanity. See before, chap.40.19. & 41.7. and he enlargeth himself more here in shewing the vanity of Idols, as turning to that Israel again, whom he had said, that he had given to the curse, chap.43.28. the cause whereof was this, their most grosse sin of idolatry; yet their idols being but blocks of wood, could foretell nothing, as he both sheweth, that he had done, v.7,8. and after this debasing of the idolater, v.20. sheweth more: For thitherto extendeth his declamation against idolaters. Jerom saith, that Flaccus a Satyrist derides Idols in like manner, as Isaiah doth here.

He feeds upon ashes. That is, The Idolater, against whom he hath declaimed hitherto feeds his with delight in a piece of wood, being fully satisfied, when he hath made, and formed, and worshipped his Idol, which indeed shall one day be burnt into ashes, as the other part of the tree was, of which it was made, v.19. Calvin turns it another way, viz. to feeding upon the winde, as it were, for which he citeth, Hos.12.2. and by this winde he understands the deceitfulness of his own heart, making the next words, a seduced heart inclineth him, an amplification of these. The Vulg. to put it out of doubt, that the matter to which the Idol shall be reduced, viz. ashes, is meant; rendreth it, Part of it is ashes. And Hebr. a word is used signifying either feeding, or a friend or fellow, and in this sense עֵרֵךְ is sometime used; and so it may be rendered, The piece brought to ashes, spoken v.19. was his fellow, for it was part of the same tree; or retaining our Translation the sense is plain, as before; and the the next words, A seduced heart, &c. is a rendring of a reason, why or by what means he is brought to deifie such a contemptible thing, v. 2. because his seduced heart permits him not to see Idols to be lies, that upon this consideration he might repent, and so have his soul delivered from death, of which he is by his idolatry in continual danger, Hab. 2. 18. An Idol is also called a lie, as in this place, A lie in his right hand, that is, working and forming it with his best skill, and thinking that herein he doth most lie, if it be well formed.

I have blotted out as a cloud thy sins, &c. Returning to spiritual Israel again, v. 21. he speaks as at v. 1. 2. stirring him up to attend to this comfort of comforts, the doing away of his sins, as chap. 43. 25. only he here sets this his great favour to the faithfull forth, by a comparison taken from a cloud vanishing before the sun, or dispersed by the winde.

Sing (O ye heavens) for the Lord hath done it. Jerom joyning the two former verses and this together, saith, that he would have Israel remember the vanities of idolaters before spoken of, to flee from this gross sin, prophesying here of the fall and vanishing away of Idols at the coming of the light of the Gospel; as the clouds in the morning having covered the face of the heaven before, yet when the sun is got up to some height, vanish all away before it, and disperse and scatter by the power of the Spirit accompanying this light, as by the force of a mighty winde: For even so did Idols vanish by means of the Gospel inlightning all parts of the world, and the spirit working with it, which being done, joy followeth both amongst Angels in heaven, and men upon earth, as is exemplified, Luc. 2. in the heavenly hoasts singing, Glory to God on high, in earth peace, and good will towards men. And for men upon earth he saith, To lower parts of the earth, because the earth is lower in comparison of heaven, and he means the inhabitants of all Nations in general; and by the forrest, which he biddeth to break out into singing, and the trees thereof, the same Nations being formerly as a desert, dry and barren, but now planted with high growing and prospering trees, as a forrest, that is, men eminent for divers virtues and excellent gifts and graces of the Spirit, according to the allegories whereby he spake before, v. 3. and chap. 41. 18, 19. and chap. 35. 1, 2. The same also is meant by mountains here, which should sing also, some men being magnified or made great and conspicuous for the power to work wonders given unto them, as the Apostles and seventy sent out by Christ. Cornelius a Lapide, by the lower parts of the earth, understands Limbus patrum, wherein the Papists feign that the holy men of God were detained, till the time of Christs ascension, but then carried up to heaven with him, and therefore they are bidden for this to rejoice. But he goeth herein from Jeroms Translation; wherein for the lower parts of the earth, it is extrema terra: And from the sense given by all Ancient Expositors that I have seen, who generally understand thereby the common sort, as by the trees and mountains, the most eminent for gifts and graces; although the Hebrew words indeed do signifie the low parts of the earth, for they are הַרְוֵי אֶרֶץ, whereby nothing else is meant, but as hath been already said. Calvin will have all these spoken to, though inanimate, as bidden to rejoice; to shew the exceeding greatness of the benefit of our redemption, it being such, as, if it were possible, might affect heaven and earth, and all things both high and low.

Thus saith the Lord that maketh all things, &c. Here the Lord not being content to prove himself the only true God by all which he had said hitherto, capitulateth many things together further to confirm it, because he knew that the wicked Jews were so prone to Idolatry, that he could never speak too much against it, or to keep them to the worship and service of him the true God only. Wherefore he saith that he made heaven and earth, and formed man in the womb. And if for all this they would not be moved, he addeth, v. 25. his frustrating the tokens of liars; and to shew whom he meant by liars, saying further, that he made diviners mad, and the wise foolish, that is, Wizzards and Soothsayers, either because they could not see what should come to pass to the destruction of their own Nation, the Caldees, to forewarn them hereof, or if they foretold any good unto them, and gave signs for confirmation, they were frustrated; no good, but grievous evils befalling them: at which these Wizzards were mad to see themselves so much disgraced by this means, as ignorant fots and false prophets, whom all men formerly admired as the only wise men of the world for their sagacity, and extraordinary insight into secrets. Ieron applieth Gods speaking of his creating the heaven and the earth, and forming Jacob from the womb, as an argument to prove, that he could do in destroying Babylon, and rebuilding Jerusalem, as he had promised. For how shall this seem difficult for him to do, that hath done farre greater things? And as for the signs of liars frustrating, &c. he speaks thus, as foreshewing the overthrow of Idols and all false gods, whom most cunning Wizzards sought by all subtle means to uphold as true Gods, but when they should be put down, as they were, at the coming on of the Gospel, what should all their signs formerly shewed, and their seeming wisdom making them to be so highly reputed, then be thought of but as meer vanities and grosse foolishness? Thus also others generally. But because he spake before against the deity of Idols, about whom he is in a controversie in this Chapter, whether they were gods or he only; and having proved them none, but himself God, now for a conclusion of all this, he fetcheth proof from the beginning of the world for it, and goes on to other proofs of things since daily done, and alledgeth the Persians prowess and success for one against the Babylonians, which should as certainly come to pass, as if it were already done, and their King that should do it were now born, although he should not be born till a hundred years after, he nameth, viz. Cyrus. Whereas if the scope of this place were to make it credible, which he promised in favour of the Jews and against the Babylonians their enemies, he would not doubtless have alledged the thing in question to prove it by, as it must needs be yielded that he doth, if the first words, v. 24, 25. be brought as a proof of it, because he continueth in the same strein to the end of the Chapter. Lastly, That the main propositum of the place is to prove him only to be the Lord, appears by his saying, I am the Lord: As if he had said, Those of whom I have hitherto spoken, shewing that they are senseless stocks, are no gods; but attend to that which I shall say, and it will easily appear that I am the Lord, both by my deeds of creating the world, crossing Wizzards, the priests of Idols in their presages, and raising up Cyrus to be the ruine of them and of their country, and declaring this so long before, sith these were the two things whereby Idols were put to it before to prove themselves gods; foreshewing things to come, and doing mighty things surpassing the strength of all creatures. For tokens or signs of liars; Vulg. Lat. and Calvin have, tokens of diviners. But the word 𐤀𐤏𐤃𐤁 signifieth liars; unless because Astrologers, that take upon them skill by the signs of heaven to foretell things to come, yea the great mutations in Kingdoms, are commonly found liars, their predictions not taking effect, as the Lord's by his Prophets do; they be set forth by their proper name Diviners, the sense being more respected then the signification of the word. But forsomuch as the Lord puts the term of liars upon them to their disgrace, we have no reason in our Translations, banking this name, to set them forth by any other. And although Calvin in rendering the words, forbeareth to put lying upon them, yet he utterly condemns the art of judiciary Astrology, as being not only vain, but tending to the robbing of God of his honour of invocation and dependance upon him, and to the establishing of the Stoicall opinion of the Fatall necessity of things. For he saith, that the Lord simply condemned this art, when he forbad the permission of such amongst his people, Levit. 19. 31. Deut. 18. 10, 11. And therefore no certainty is in this Art, but meer imposture, for which it is to be abhorred by all the godly. Ob. The stars are given for signs. Sol. It is true, that by observing how they keep their course, we may glorifie God, who directs them so to do, and they are sometimes signs of judgements to come, that we may be

be moved to repent. But that hereby the ends of principalities and Kingdoms, or notable events in Kingdoms, or to particular persons may be foreseen, is not to be held, neither ought any man hereby to dare to pry into such things to come, it being a wickednesse to search into them, or to finde them out. For let it be granted that all things in the world are subject to the empire of the stars, then Gods tribunal is overthrown, and he is no more Judge to inflict punishments upon sinners, or to shew mercy to men in a desperate condition: Neither is any thing left to him, but all attributed to fate: Thus the judgments of God being buried, all piety is extinguished, and all invocation upon him abolished.

That confirmeth the word of his servant, and performeth the counsel of his messengers. Here, by his servant, Jerom understands Christ, and by his messengers, the Apostles, because chap. 42. 1. he is thus called. But Lyra by his servant, will have Moses meant, whose word about bringing the Hebrews out of Egypt he made good; and by his messengers, the Prophets, and the things by them revealed he calls their counsels, because God at the first declared them in secret unto them, thus making them, as it were, of his privy Council, and in his appointed time fulfilled them all. Calvin thinks, that by his servant, Isaiah is meant, and by his messengers, other Prophets, speaking of our redemption and deliverance by Christ; and by counsel he meaneth the word of God taught by them, for so the word is sometime called, Act. 21. 27. Luc. 7. 30. It is indeed Gods counsel, but called theirs, because by them declared at his appointment. The word מְשִׁיב here rendred confirming, is, raising up; whereupon Musculus noteth, that it is well so said, as implying Christs death and burial, in the time whereof there seemed to be no hope of its taking effect, but the word of promise seemed to lie, as it were, dead and buried. I subscribe to Calvin, that by his servant here is meant Isaiah, and by his messengers other Prophets, disclosing what God in his secret counsel purposed to do, whether in respect of the Jews affairs after the Babylonish Captivity, or the good of his faithfull people of all Countries under the Gospel. All this he saith, that he confirms and performs, and so can no false god do to his servants. For reason requires that having spoken of his frustrating of the signs of the Caldees, those great Diviners, and shewing their wisdom to be foolishness, who promised haply to the King of Babylon, that his Kingdom should be perpetual, and that the Jews hearkening to Isaiah and other Prophets did but hope for a good day in vain: he should now ex opposito speak of his certain performing of the predictions of his Prophets touching the Jews deliverance, that they might by all men be beleaved, and not the other.

That saith to the deep, Be dry, &c. Here another sign is added, the dreaning of the rivers of Babylon by Cyrus King of Persia, by making many dreans, into which they were all let out in one night, and so they entred and took Babylon, which they could not do before, because the waters compassing it about, suffered them not to approach; as I have shewed in my continuation of the history, from Nehemiah, &c. Calvin will have it spoken allegorically of fetching up the Jews, as it were, out of the bottom of the deep, as sometime through the red sea. Musculus, of the Princes subject to the King of Babylon, who were to him as rivers to the deep sea, but now the greatness of them all shall cease.

That saith of Cyrus, He is my shepherd. Vulg Lat. Saith to Cyrus, Be wise. But it is Hebr. וְיִרְעָה my shepherd: And therefore Jerom, although he sets down that as the Translation of the Septuagint, yet he follows this. Here Cyrus is named long before he was born, that things present and to come might appear to be alike present to the Lord; and his shepherd he calls him, because he should tender the good of his people, as a shepherd of his sheep, leading them out of Babylon to their own Country, as a shepherd his sheep into large and fresh pasture, being before shut up, as it were, in a pin, for so had the Jews been in Babylon. The accomplishment of this, see in Ezra and Nehemiah, and how the

Here for five verses together the same Cyrus is further prophesied of, and how the loins of Kings should be loosed, and the gates of brasle broken before him; for the understanding whereof see my Exposition on Ezra 1. Thou saith the Lord to mine anointed Cyrus. Hebr. it is Cores, and so some read it: And some, saith Jerom, To mine anointed Lord. But if the word be turned into Latine, it is commonly rendred Cyrus, both here and Ezra 1. where is the same word in speaking of Cyrus. His anointed he is called, because a King by him set up, it being usuall amongst the Hebrews to stile the King, the anointed, that is Hebr. Messiah, Grace Christus.

Verf. 4.

I have given thee the treasures of darknesse, and for my servant Jacobs sake I have called thee by thy name, though thou hast not known me. The Lord here tels Cyrus, that whereas he subdued Babylon and enjoyed all the treasures thereof, much being hidden in secret for fear of the enemy: it was by Gods gift that he came to them, that he might acknowledge him to be the only true God. And he was thus with him and gave him power to prevail for Jacobs sake, that he might deliver the Jews from the Captivity wherein they had now been held seventy years. And he saith that he named him, as one specially chosen, as he had before named Jacob Israel, though he knew him not, by saying which, he intimated that he was an Idolater, and not the Christ to come to save beleevvers; which makes Jerom admire their folly, that expound the Christ or anointed here, of Christ the Lord, adding also this title in stead of [Mine anointed Cyrus,] especially because, verf. 5. he saith, I girded thee, though thou knewest me not; which can by no means agree to Christ, but to Cyrus only. As it is here spoken to Cyrus, so God in his providence took order, that in due time he saw and read it, being by the Jews shewed unto him, and he hereby stirred up to do by the Jews, as he did; Ezra 1. See my Exposition there. Calvin notes, that the parts from whence Cyrus came, were far remote from Babylon. and the Country a poor place; wherefore it was most improbable that a King should ever come from thence, able to carry forces so far as Babylon, and subdue it, and be infinitely enriched with the treasures of others; but what is impossible with men, is possible, yea easie with God.

Verf. 6.

Therefore he adds, verf. 6. That they may know from the rising of the sun, and from the West, that I am the Lord. That is, In all parts of the world, the East and West being named, and the other two understood: That is, When the same hereof, and that this was done by the God of Israel, should be blazed abroad in all Countries and Nations, which could not be known, but to near dwellers only presently, to all others by their means in processe of time. And coming to know this, how can they but know that God is the Lord, such none but the Almighty can before appoint, and so long after do such mighty things as these?

Verf. 7.

Forming light and creating darknesse, &c. Here he alludes to the beginning of Gods works of creation, Gen. 1. by light understanding comfort and joy, whereby it is commonly set forth, meaning the joy which the Jews should then have for their deliverance out of Captivity; and by darknesse, misery, meaning their Captivity, whereby they had extreemly suffered, yet not without the Divine providence bringing this upon them for their sins. And to these two the two next words answer, I create peace and make evil; that is, prosperity, comfort, and all kinde of felicity in this world and that which is to come, all is my doing, coming from nothing of merit in man preceding, as creating is to make something out of nothing. And by evil is meant the evil of punishment by the sword, plague or famine sent for sins, and all other mi-series which men suffer here or hereafter; not the evil of sin, for of this he is not the Author to any man, Jam. 1. 14. Hos. 13. 9. And therefore having said, Creating peace he varies the word, saying, Making evil; that is, when men are unworthy of peace, by reason of their sins, turning it into misery. Gregory explains it thus, He makes evil, when he forms things well made into a scourge to us for our sins; as poison, meat to serpents, is death to men.

Drop down (ye heavens) from above, and let the clouds rain righteousness. Some (saith Calvin) take this for a form of prayer to be used by the people, till they should attain the salvation before promised; some for the Prophets prayer; some for Gods command of all blessings both heavenly and earthly, to come upon his people, which should be when Cyrus before spoken of should attain to that greatness. But Jerom best, it is separate from the words before-going, as a Prophecy touching Christ; a like place unto which is Psal. 85. 12. where Christ is manifestly spoken of, as also Calvin saith. By righteousness dropping from heaven, the coming down of the Son of God is meant, who came from heaven, Job. 3. And by the earths opening, spoken of in the next words, Let the earth be opened and health and salvation come forth, the Son of man his bringing forth by the Virgin Mary; for what is man but Adam, earth? as Gen. 1. and the woman is the same, for both male and female have one name [Adam] Gen. 5. 2. And that Christ is salvation, see Matth. 1. Luk. 2. Matth. 21. 11. and that he is righteousness, Isa. 41. 2. and The Lord our righteousness, 1 Cor. 1. 30. If it be applied to Cyrus in respect of bodily salvation, and justifying the Jews to be the people of God, and he be said to have come from heaven, because appointed miraculously by God in heaven to this; and out of the earth, because from baseness raised to so great dignity; the words following seem to make for it, vers. 13. but that this is not the Prophets ultima meta, but further in Cyrus, some figure of him, to set forth Christ, appears, vers. 22, 23, 24. where it is said, In the Lord I have righteousness, and all the seed of Israel shall be justified in him: And as intimating the times of the Gospel when this shall be fulfilled, he saith, every knee shall bow to me.

Woe to him that striveth with his maker, the potsherd with the potshards, &c. In this and vers. 10, 11. the Prophet returns to the condition of the people before their deliverance by Cyrus, and afterwards by Christ, knowing how impatient they would be of their sufferings in Captivity, and afterwards murmuring and complaining against God for making them so miserable, and not believing therefore that he would ever bring to passe so much good for them as he had promised. Against this he opposeth, Woe to him that striveth, &c. meaning, that as it were an insolent part in a son to challenge his father for his deformities or infirmities which accompanied his generation; and the pot howsoever mishapen, and to what base use soever it be made, doth not challenge the Potter therefore, for this were monstrous: So no man ought to dare to challenge God or murmur against him, although he creates him darkness and evil, as vers. 7. how long soever he be in misery, but in silence quietly bear all things, till light and peace come. Then vers. 11. he sheweth about what they should rather busie themselves. Ask of things to come concerning my sons, and concerning the work of my hands command me. This last clause to make the sense good is to be read interrogatively, Concerning the work of my hands do ye command me? For he had reproved their insolency against him in murmuring, by two similitudes, of children and pots; now to that of children he saith, Enquire of me future things, concerning my sons what miseries I will make them suffer and why, and how I will again deliver them; this I allow you to do, and it will be profitable to repentance, and for the strengthening of your faith to do so, and this ye may do by the mouth of my Prophets. But concerning the work of my hands, which ye are also, as the Potter is the pot; Will ye take upon you to command me what I should do, or when? Oh do not so absurdly, neither be so petulant, if the Potter be left to himself to do what he pleaseth in his own profession, let me alone much more, to do as I please with all people. Calvin hath this, but thinks it somewhat inforced, and therefore he prefers another, viz. as if all were spoken by way of increpation; When a son will not be so bold with the father to ask an account of him of his actions, ye ask me forsooth, and command me as it were. But I rest in the former, as nothing coact; unlesse keeping to the imperative in the word command, as well as ask; we take it thus, Bid my Prophet Isaiah and other Prophets tell you what I mean to do, and they shall tell you; and thus far will not every father go in making his son acquainted what he means to do. Jerom takes all as ironically thus, Shall not a son be so bold with his father as to ask, as afore is said; ye then are very dutifull to usurp thus over me, to ask and as it were to command me, as if you could teach me what I shall do with my children under the Gospel? ask on therefore and command on, for surely it becomes you well so to do. But neither by this or any other Exposition, can there be any ground for Gods submitting himself to be commanded by men praying, to which some draw it to extoll the force of prayer.

Hieron.

Vers. 12.

I made the earth and man, and extended the heavens, &c. Still he continues in the same argument of taxing such as are so bold to expostulate with him, as ver. 10. For he is not only as an earthly father, but the Creator both of heaven and earth, and all men, therefore intollerable petulancy for any man to reprove his doings towards men, whether in judgement or mercy, for this were for man a worm, to lift up himself above heaven.

Vers. 13.

Hieron.

I have raised him in righteousness and will direct all his waies. Some, saith Jerom, expound this of Cyrus, to speak of whom the Prophet now returns again; and some of Zorobabel; but he of Christ; because the things here spoken of agree to neither; not to Cyrus, for he was not directed by God in all his waies, for he knew not God, vers. 4. neither did he build the City, but Nebemiah: Nor to Zorobabel, for he set not the Captives at liberty, neither built the City; but Christ both built the City of God, which is his Church; according to that, Upon this rock I will build my Church; and this is a City set upon an hill that cannot be hid: and set the captivated in sin at liberty, Isa. 61. 1. and went aright in all his waies, and set the people at liberty without any price paid by them; for he gave himself a ransom for them, Matth. 20. 28. And to this agree Procopius, Eusebius, Origen, Haimo: But Calvin is for Cyrus. The best, as was said before, to expound it of Cyrus as the type, and more fully accomplished in Christ his antitype. And he saith, I have raised him in righteousness; to stop the mouths of any that should say, Why not some Hebrew, but Cyrus an Heathen? and why not before this time? Gods will was to do it now, and this is the most exact rule of righteousness, wherefore all must rest therein. Although Cyrus built not the City, yet he laid a foundation by sending home those that did it afterwards, and he began the race of those Kings that furthered the building of it: And of his free dismissing of the Captivated Jews, see Ezra 1.

Mat. 5.

Hieronym.

The labour of Egypt and merchandize of Ethiopia shall come over unto thee, &c. Here also he rejects the Exposition of this applied to Cyrus, because it is said, They shall make supplication unto thee, and say, God is in thee: And vers. 15. Thou art a God that hidest thy self; which by no means can agree to Cyrus, but to Christ only, as any rational man must needs yield. For is Cyrus a God, besides whom there is none? and was God in him; or how was he hidden? But to Christ all these agree excellently. For in the man Christ, God dwelt bodily, but was hidden under the vale of mans nature, and no God is there besides him; whereby as when it is spoken of the Father, the Son is not excluded; so when it is spoken of the Son, the Father is not. The Jews to elude this testimony touching Christ, say, that Jerusalem being before spoken of, which is the City said to be built; that this is spoken of it, God is in thee, and there is none other: And then by a sudden apostrophe he turns to God, vers. 15. saying, Thou only art the true God, who hast hidden thy self; because not seeming to be of such power to save thy people all this time, but now appearing to be a God of all power indeed. But this is to divide things conjoynd, making vers. 14. to speak of one, and vers. 15. of another, whereas they both speak plainly of one and the same God, Christ Jesus. And by the Egyptians, Ethiopians and Sabeans, he meaneth all Nations, some most notorious for Idolatry, as Egypt and Ethiopia for strength, stature and stoutnesse unsubduable by any being put for all. Their riches served Christ, when imbracing the Gospel they built Temples to his honour, and gave maintenance to his Ministers and poor members most liberally, see more of Egypt and Ethiopia, Chap. 43. 3, 4. and with Jerom agree Procopius, Eusebius, Cyril, Hilary, &c. Yet it is not to be denied, but that it doth in some part belong to Cyrus, of whom he spake before in this Chapter. For Egypt and Ethiopia, and Sabea the chief Province thereof were brought under Cyrus, Xenophon li. 7. & 8. Cyripedia, and then their adoring of him is to be understood of outward honour, and because he did not these great things of himself, but a divine power going along with him, which Heathen men took no notice of, God is said to have been in him, and hidden in him. Vatablus applieth this to the Jews, with whom the Egyptians and Ethiopians seeing God to be, joyned themselves turning to their Religion: so also Hugo. Calvin and Oecolampadius will have Ierusalem understood in these words, Shall come to thee, because it is the feminine gender, and therefore cannot be applied to Cyrus, yet Cyrus should be the means, when having subdued them, and thus gotten riches in abundance, he gave so liberally to the Temple at Ierusalem. But this Calv. saith, was chiefly fulfilled in Christ, when these Nations and all others were subdued to his Gospel, for then their wealth went to serve his Church. And they were lead after his Ministers in chains, when by the spirit coming upon them in hearing they were bound in their minds and affections, as his Captives, to follow the Jews, amongst whom the evangelical Church first was, that is, those chosen ones, the Twelve and Seventy sent out to preach, who together with other faithfull persons were now the only true Ierusalem there. For the next words touching God, and God is hid in thee, both he and Muscus understand them, as spoken properly of God. Only in thee is God, and there is none without thee That is, they shall have the Christian Church in such honour, as conceiving now, as the truth is, that God is in her, although he seemed all this time to be hidden in respect of his power, because he suffered his own people to lie so long subject to many oppressions of Heathens and grievous miseries. For when he helps not, he is said to hide his face, Psalms. 13. 1. and then the wicked enemies of the Church are bold to say, where is now their God? Psa. 79. 9. Lyra applieth all to Cyrus, till we come to these words [in thee only is God] wherein he saith, the Prophet turns to God in way of magnifying him, who did so wonderfully by Cyrus for the comfort of his people, meaning, that God who by Cyrus did all, as being in him by the spirit of fortitude, must needs be for this acknowledged the only true God, although in his Divinity hidden from the eyes of men, or rather he should have said, as he was in Cyrus, hidden and not perceived by carnal men, who attributed all to Cyrus his own valour.

They shall be ashamed and blush, &c. The power and providence of God being hitherto asserted against all Idolaters and their wise men, who stood for other gods, now he returns again to inveigh against them that they might all be ashamed, who had trusted in such gods, as neither knew nor could do ought. Against whom he opposeth Israel, vers. 17. saying, That he should not be ashamed, because saved by his God by an eternal salvation That is, the faithfull of Israel according to the flesh, as the faithfull of the Gentiles shall also be vers. 20. And this the Prophet addeth, saith Calvin, that they might not look only at their deliverance from the Babylonish Captivity, and saving out of the hands of those enemies; but from thence take occasion to look to a farre greater salvation to come by Christ in heaven for ever and ever, being delivered from all spiritual enemies, sinne, death and the devil.

Xenophon.

Vers. 20.

Then repeating again his making of all things Vers. 18. he saith, That although he had been hidden, yet his Word, whereby he stirred up Jacob to seek him in assured expectation of being saved, was not hidden, but plainly set forth by his Prophets, that they might all know it. Jerom having spoken upon these words, He formed the earth to be inhabited; that the meaning is, the inhabitants thereof should hereby come to know and worship him, saith, that the word which he spake to the seed of Israel, not in an hidden place of the earth, was the Law of the ten Commandments, which he spake from the top of mount Sinai before them all, forbidding false gods and images, and commanding to acknowledge, and love, and serve him, or rather the Gospel, though first spoken to the lost sheep of the house of Israel in their Temple and Synagogues, yet afterwards the sound thereof went into all Lands, and they rejecting it, the Apostles turned to the Gentiles. Oecolampadius is for the Law given by Moses here meant, Calvin for the Gospel, but Musculus better for Law and Prophets, and the Gospel also. For as the Law was given openly, so Christ taught publicly, and in secret he said nothing, Joh. 18. 20. and he bad his Disciples Preach upon the house top, Mat. 10. 27. And the Prophet Isaiah is bidden, Cry aloud, lift up thy voice like a trumpet. And Habakkuk must write the Prophecies so plainly That he who runs might read it; whereas 2 Pet. 1. 19. the word of the Prophets is said to be as a light shining in a dark place, the meaning is nothing else, but that herein was a light directing unto Christ, in a time of types and shadows, whereby the knowledge of him was kept in darknesse, Judea it self was then but a dark place in comparifon of the Church under the Gospel, but because there were Prophets they were not without a light. And what was this word that was not in a dark place? Seek ye me, and this was not in vain, none ever sought the Lord in their distresses, but he delivered them, and to seek by Jesus Christ under the Gospel is a sure way to speed, Joh. 14. which condemns seekers to Saints departed. Lastly, he saith, his word was not in an hidden place of the earth, alluding to them that had spirits of divination, who spake out of a Cave, or low dark place of the earth with a muttering voice. The true God doth not so, and therefore they that teach in secret places, or seek to make the word of God obscure by keeping it in an unknown tongue, as Sectaries and Papists, are no true Ministers of God, but rather of Satan, who as he is the Prince of darknesse, loves to have all done in darknesse. Let no man here object and say, The Word is hard to be understood, and the Word rightly understood is the word of God, but till then it is in darknesse; and therefore though translated into a tongue commonly understood, it is still in a dark place. Sol. There is enough in the Word plain and easie to be understood, as that by knowing and believing it a man may be saved, if he deceiveth not himself for want of doing accordingly; neither can the dark places be dangerously mistaken by him that holds him close to the truth set forth in the plain. If it be said, Wherefore then serve obscure places? Ans. To draw the minde from other studies to exercise it self in the study of Gods holy Word, and to shew the necessity of Interpreters, whom otherwise the people would be ready to think superfluous, and their Incubrations hereupon superfluous also; and because the knowledge of divine things most hardly attained is most delightfull, as the kernel is the sweetest of the nut, and treasure within the earth being found, the most precious part thereof, and in digging for this treasure to finde as much of it as he can; to labour, is a wise part, but a foolish to be content without it, sith he is Blessed that meditates in the Word, and exerciseth himself herein day and night; And of the obscurest book thereof it is said, Blessed is he that readeth and heareth the Words of this book; that is, with understanding, for he is elevated more high towards heaven, whilst he lives upon earth, that understands most of the mysteries of God, sith the perfection of heavenly blis is to know perfectly what we know here but in part, 1 Cor. 13.

They understand nothing that extoll the Wood of a graven image, and pray to a God

God that saves not. But in the words before in this verse, he invites the Gentiles also to seek to God, as he had done the Jews before vers. 19. saying, Come ye, draw near ye that are saved of the Gentiles, as Jerom, The escaped of the Gentiles, as the New Translation to the same effect, because the word יִשְׁלָט signifieth escaped or delivered; and here he intimateth, that all the Gentiles shall not be converted together, but when some turned and were saved, others should worship idols still, to whom he speaks in the next words, They understand nothing, &c. Calvin renders it, Subjects of the Gentiles, because the word also signifieth so; and thus without distinction takes all here said to be spoken to the idolatrous Gentiles, whom he calls subjects, not meaning the poorest amongst them, but even the greatest; for by Idolatry even the best are made subjects and slaves, putting their shoulders under the Idol to carry it, and then bowing unto it; and therefore he makes nothing else of this, but a repetition of that which was said Chap. 41. 21. Chap. 43. 9. Others, saith Vatablus, by the escaped here understand the Jews escaping home from amongst the Gentiles, and some actively, Ye deliverers of the Gentiles, as if their Idols were meant, whom they counted their Saviours, although they could do nothing less. The word I grant may without wresting be taken this last way; but if it be understood as spoken to the Idols, the next words will not agree, to the Jews it cannot be applied, because the words are, Ye escaped Gentiles, not Ye escaped of the Gentiles. For the word Subjects of the Gentiles, if we consider what followeth vers. 22. That all the ends of the earth shall be saved, it can have no place here. For who are the ends of the earth that shall be saved, but the Gentiles; who though they come of such, as through their Idolatry perished, yet embracing the faith of Christ they escape damnation, and attain Gods Kingdom? and therefore I doubt not but the same are here spoken of and bidden draw near to hearken, as to the vanity of their fellows stubbornly adhering to false gods still, so the grace that they shall one day partake of, viz. salvation, vers. 22. And in speaking in the later part of this verse of Images, which they pray to, that cannot save, he makes an opposition to that spoken of the true God, vers. 19. My word was not to Jacob, Seek ye me in vain; here they that pray or seek to Idols shall do it in vain, for they cannot save their petitioners.

Having censured Idolaters as void of understanding vers. 20. here he challengeth them in the name of the true God, if they had any thing to say in defence of their Idols, to bring it forth. Who gave intelligence of this from the beginning, and of old, &c. Here is the Lords justification, that he is the true God, his foretelling of many things from the beginning of the world, which have been accomplished, and of salvation to come to the Gentiles, and of the overthrow of the Babylonish Monarchy of old, that is, long before it comes:
 for he that knoweth must appoint all these things, and by his power effect them, and he that doth so is the true God, and there is none other. Then he comes to that greatest salvation of all, vers. 22. Look to me and be saved all ye ends of the earth]. That is, turn from Idols, look not after them, nor seek to them in your distresses, but to me who alone can save you. Yea and that ye shall do so, I do here certainly foretell, I have sworn by my self, To me every knee shall bow, &c. And this is applied to prove the subjection of all to Christ at the day of Judgement to be judged by him, Rom. 4. 10, 11. But as Calvin well noteth, One, that is, the last part of all mens subjection to him, is only named here, all being meant, viz. both the subjection of obeying his Gospel, by believing and making profession thereof, and by humbly submitting to his sentence at the day of Judgement, none daring to mutter against it. And therefore Phil. 2. 6. the same words of bowing the knee in his name are used, to shew, that all should turn to his Gospel from dumb Idols, seeking to the Father in his name and mediation only, and if any shall not voluntarily here, at the day of Judgement they shall bow to him, and crave admission into his Kingdom in vain, whether on earth, as the now living, or under the earth, as the dead and buried, or evil spirits in heavenly places. For as they Matth. 7.21. beg, Lord, open to us, so most probably shall all both wicked men and devils, being stricken with the horreur of hell, in most humble wise. Now the Lord confirms this, as being most hard to be believed, by oath, that no Jews might harden their hearts against it as impossible, to the magnifying of themselves, as Gods only people alwayes, and the despising of the Gentiles, which they were most apt to do. And he swears by himself, because none is greater, and hereby he teacheth all swearing by any other thing to be unlawfull, for all swearing must be by the greatest in all the world only, otherwise the glory of the greatest is taken and given to inferiours to his high dishonour. For he by whom men swear, hath this honour done to him, That he is acknowledged the hearer of prayer, for or against a mans self, and one that hath power to be revenged upon the perjured. And therefore swearing by my name, in the next words, after bowing to me, is added for further expression, how all should bow to him, viz. in praying to him; one case, wherein there is need to pray to him in swearing, being put for all. And here again Calvin notes well, that it is not enough in heart to bow to God, but externally also in prayer, and because this is spoken in opposition to Idols, they sin that bow to an Idol, and deceive themselves, if they think, that forsomuch as their heart is to the true God, they do not ill, though with the knee in some place and company they bow to an Idol. The knees that bowed to Baal in the time of the general overspreading of Idolatry were none of theirs, whom God had reserved to himself.

Note.

Vers. 24.

Only in the Lord, saith he to me, righteousnesses and strength, to him be shall come, and all that rage against him shall be confounded. That is, every one turning to me, as is before-said, confesseth me only to be righteous and omnipotent, and none other to be God, that is, mighty, as the word IN God, signifieth, but worshippers of false gods, who have and shall still impugn God and his truth, shall be brought to nought.

Vers. 25.

Contrariwise they shall glory in the Lord that be the seed of Israel, and he saith, the whole seed, because his spiritual seed, of which he here speaketh, was the elect company both of Jews and Gentiles, now they having abandoned Idolatry and imbraced the truth of God, shall be the most glorious Church in the world, as having the Son of God for their Head.

CHAP. XLVI.

Vers. 1.

BEL boweth down, Nebo stoopeth, &c. The Gospel with the light thereof shining, Bel called also Iupiter Belus, the chief god of the Heathen, and Nebo signifying Prophecy; and therefore most aptly setting forth Apollo his Oracle, being in most high esteem before now, fall to be of no reckoning, because Oracles ceased, and the worship of Bel was had in abomination, and the true God in all countreys only worshipped and served. Their graven images were in the cattel and the beast, that is, they had other gods also, the images of cattel lesse and greater, for so idolatrous were the Egyptians, that they worshipped such Images for gods, Dogs and Cats and Lions, and therefore from them gave divers of their Cities names, as Cuno, from a Dog, Leonto from a Lion, yea by the Delusian religion an Onion and a fart were terrible gods, saith Jerom, Your carriages are heavy laden.

Vers. 2.

They could not deliver the burthen, but themselves are gone into captivity. Vul. Your burthens were heavy in weight, even to weariness: and this agrees best with the Hebrew, the meaning being, that the burthen of Idols were heavy to them that for honours sake unto them carried them, by reason of their massinesse of gold and silver of which they were made, so that their Priests were by bearing so great a burthen much wearied and fainted. Then Vulgar Latin, proceeds vers. 2. They could not save the bearer, but נשן signifieth the burthen then most properly, and therefore the Idol, which was the burthen, is meant, it could not save it self, but went into Captivity, that is, the riches and treasure thereon, being taken and carried away as spoils by the enemy. Hebr. it is, Their soul went into Captivity ] and this Jerom retains, expounding it of the souls of them that carried Idols formerly as their gods, they could not save them; but notwithstanding this great obsequiousness they were led away Captive. But taking it as spoken of Idols, he saith, That souls are improperly ascribed to them, as in the Proverbs, an hand to the tongue, where it is said, Life and death are in the hand of the tongue; and then concludeth, That Idolatry is an heavy burthen, and makes mens souls go into the captivity of the devil. Junius saith, by Bel some understand Jupiter, some Saturn, and some the Sun; to which last he rather agreeth, because Affrians, and Babylonians, and Persians worshipped the Sunne and the Fire, as a God, because a parcel, as it were of the Sunne. The word Bel signifieth Lord, as coming of Baal, Dominus. Nebo he renders a prophesying God, understanding hereby all the rabble of the Heathen gods, giving answers by their Priests standing behinde them, which way of their Oracles answering, he saith, is intimated in these words, The prophesying God is bent back, for so he renders it. For the carriages so heavy here spoken of, all agree that they were Idols of silver and gold, which the Persians having taken laded many beasts with, and so carried them away; and expressing who went into Captivity, he names the Babylonians. But however the fall of the Babylonians Idols be literally meant here, and their impotency to save themselves out of the hands of their enemies, yet the Prophecie extends further, as hath been said, to the foretelling of the ruine of Idolatry in all countreys, when Jesus came into the world, and his faith was preached and imbraced. And to this agreeth Musculus. But whereas the words, They were a burthen to the beasts and the cattel, have been by Jerom expounded of Images of beasts made gods, it hath no place here; but it is meant that the beasts of burthen were heavy laden by them, when they were carried away in Carrs by them. Calvin by Nebo understands some god of the Babylonians, second to Bel, and by these two all others.

Having thus prophesied of the ruine of false gods so certainly, as if they had been then fallen, for he spake in the Preter tense; he now commemorates what he had done for Israel, and what he would do in carrying them in safety from the very beginning of that Nation out of Egypt, and now again out of Babylon, that they might be ashamed to have forsaken him, and to have gone after false gods.

Then laying open the vanity of Idolatry, as he did Chap. 40.25. & 44.9. he exhorts them to recount both that and this, and to do as men that have wisdom and understanding ought to do; and not as foolish Heathens, and so they must needs all acknowledge him the true God and none other; and to be the God alone that foretelleth, and doth whatsoever he pleaseth, and so hath done of old, even from the beginning; of Gods care of Israel from the womb, see before Chap. 44.25. Of his declaring things of old Ch. 45.21. Then coming to that wonderfull thing in particular touching Cyrus, named Chap. 44.28. he now calleth him a ravening bird out of the East, as Chap. 41.25. He had spoken of one to come out of the North, and from the rising of the Sunne. For that by this bird he meant a man, the next words shew, The man of my counsel. But to set him forth, Hebr. there is one word only ו' a bird used, and so Jerom renders it, applying it to Christ, but it is plainly meant of Cyrus, whom in his divine Councel he had appointed to make a prey of the Babylonians and their Idols.

But in the next words he cometh again to the times of the Gospel, vers. 12, 13. Hearken to me ye hard hearted, &c. meaning the house of Jacob before-spoken to ver. 3. But now he calls them hard-hearted, and farre from righteousness, because they hardened their hearts against Christ, rejecting his faith, and consequently righteousness. But he saith, That he would bring it near, and place it in Zion for or to Israel his glory, that is, Christ, who is salvation and glory, for he was near them, because he was in the City of Zion and in the Land of Israel, although their own hard-heartedness they neither attained Justification nor Salvation hereby. Thus Jerom who also applieth it to Cyrus his revenging the Jews wrongs upon the Caldeans, and saving and delivering them out of Captivity. Whereby they came to be most glorious and renowned amongst the Nations. Yet he calls them hard-hearted, and such as were farre from righteousness, although he made his righteousness to come near, that is, because through unbelief they counted not God righteous in promising this deliverance, and so they that then lived when this was prophesied, perished in their sins, but to another generation his righteousness came near, and his salvation when that was performed, which he promised, and they were delivered and made glorious. In the Hebrew Bible these two verses are made the beginning of Chap. 47. as if the Babylonians were here begun to be spoken to, against whom he prophesieth Chap. 47. and I see no reason why they should be taken from that Chapter, and added to this. But rather as the Prophets beginning to speak to the Caldees in the name of the Lord, who did greatly harden their hearts against the Jews to exercise all cruelty upon them; Jerom for [Ye hard-hearted] hath it, robusti corde, Stout-hearted, that relent nothing at the judgements threatned against you for your cruelty against my people, to use any whit the more lenity towards them, as is expressed Chap. 47. 6. And that which further makes it probable that it is spoken to the Babylonians, is his speaking not of them, but to them in the next words Chap. 47. 1. where he foretels their utter ruine, and therefore in reason these words must be premised to stirre them up to attention to hear their doom, although not to profit them, yet to comfort the faithfull Israelites, when it should come to their hands. Moreover at other times when Israel is spoken to, he is named, but here not; only he saith, Hear ye hard-hearted and then as being opposed to Israel, he saith, I will make my righteousness come near, and salvation to Israel. And if it be thus understood, in saying, they were farre from righteousness, he meant They were most wicked, but to Israel, whom they so much contemned righteousness should be near, when by their afflictions God had thorowly purged away their sins, and consequently salvation out of the hands of them their cruel enemies.

CHAP. XLVII.

Vers. 1.

Hieronym.

Vers. 3.

*C*ome down, and sit in the dust, O virgin, daughter of Babylon, &c. In these and the next words it is shewed, that Babylon the head-City of the world, and now as a beautifull virgin in her chiefeft glory, should become as a poor Captive debased with the lowest debasement, and grinding at a mill, which Jerom saith, some apply to spiritual Babylon, Rome, for by this name Peter in his Epistle calleth Rome. Whereas it is added, Thy nakednesse shall be seen, it is meant, that she should be prostituted to the will of others, as an whore; in which sense the uncovering of a womans shame is often used Levit. 18. and this is taken by Jerom as added to grinding at a mill for explanation; so Samson is said to be made to grinde by the Philistims, when they had put out his eyes, by lying with their women to get stout and strong men. But this is only a vain fancy both there and here, if none other words had been added but those of grinding; but here the Prophet intending to set forth the slavish condition of Babylon, not only being put to so hard and base a work as grinding at a mill, but also in continuing his Allegory of a virgin her being forced and ravished as it were by her enemies, and so spoiled of her virginity, and turned into the base condition of a common whore; he doth to shew this use a further expression, Uncover thy lock, make bare thy thigh, uncover thy hip, thy nakednesse shall be uncovered, &c. Here is a description, saith Calvin, of a people in all manner

Vers. 2.

of

of misery, being before curiously deckt as a fair and rich Virgin of Noble descent, her locks curled, and her body cloathed with most gorgeous apparell from top to toe; but now her hair hanging neglected and she being stript naked, no not the privy parts, which nature tels should be kept secret and covered, being spared, and thus forced to go through the waters all filthy and squalidous into Captivity. And in speaking of the waters he alludeth to the situation of Babylon, compassed about with great rivers. Thy nakednesse shall then be uncovered, and thy shame seen; that is, as whilst the body is curiously deckt the blemishes thereof are not seen, but strip it naked and then the deformity appeareth; so a state being in honour the blemishes thereof are hidden by the outward cover of worldly prosperity and glory, cruelty is but justice, oppressing of others, valour; pride glory, and covetousness worthiness to the greater strengthening of the state: But strip it of wealth and power, and bring it under, and then these shamefull vices are seen and talked of by every one, as they are to their shame that are thus blemished. I will take revenge and will not meet man. Some, as a man, whose force may be resisted. Vulg. Man shall not resist me: But Hebr. it is in the first person, I will not meet, or occurre, or come against man. Some, I will not be met by man, although any should come out to intercede when I am about to take revenge, but will proceed. The first is best and least coast: I will not as a man oppose her, but as God Almighty, so that she shall not be able to withstand these my terrible judgements, when the time of execution is come. I that now bid Babylon come down, will make my word powerfull to bring her down: As at the first I said, Let there be light, and Let the waters gather together, &c. and it was so: and as from time to time I speak of any Nation, Be plucked up rooted out, and destroyed: And I am in none of these as a man, whose words are but winde.

Vers. 3.

Jer. 18. 7.

As for our redeemer the Lord of hosts is his name. Having hitherto spoken of the miseries of Babylon, of which also he goes on to speak, vers. 5. he answers a question that might be made here by reason of the last words of vers. 3. I will not come against her as a man. Why, what art thou then? Ans. Our redeemer, who will redeem us out of Captivity when this is done, is the Lord of hosts, with whom no armies or hosts in the world are able to deal; therefore it shall certainly be so. And because it shall be so, Sit in darknesse, O daughter of the Caldees; Babylon being so called, because built by the Caldees: That is, abide in misery, expecting no more dominion over Nations.

Vers. 4.

Vers. 5.

I was wroth with my people, and have polluted mine inheritance. If any man shall say in Babylons behalf, Why is she thus threatned, seeing she hath done nothing against Judah but what God appointed her to do? Ans. She exceeded the measure, as not understanding by what means and for what cause she prevailed. God gave his people into her hands, and made her Lady over their Land, thus polluting or making it common to other Nations, which was the Lords inheritance peculiarly, and his peoples; and this he did but for a time in his wrath, because they had greatly sinned. But the Caldees taking no notice of this that the Lord did it, and that for their correction, not their destruction, proudly tyrannized over them as their vassals, brought thus under by their own strength, not sparing from cruel and contemptuous usage, the very ancient, who by the law of nature are venerable in all Nations. A warning to Victors at any time subduing the faithfull, to take heed of pride by ascribing victory to themselves (for God gives it to whomsoever it happens) and exceeding measure in the cruel and spitefull usage of the vanquished, especially of the ancient.

Vers. 6.

Note.

Thou saiest, I shall be a lady for ever, &c. Here the security of Babylon is set forth, notwithstanding her ill deserts threatening terrible judgements to come upon her, she yet feared nothing, either widdowhood or losse of children; but he threatneth her with both in one day, for her sorceries and enchantments so greatly abounding. And this was fulfilled when Babylon being taken by Cyrus, her people were slain, none being suffered any more to inhabit there; and

Vers. 7, 8.

- Hieron.* and her King at the same time, viz. Belsazzar, Dan.5. for he was, as it were, her husband, and the people her children: Thus also Jerom. And full of forceries and enchantments she was, because full of Wizzards and Astrologers, deeming themselves to be the wisest men in the world, as being able to see into, not only things present, but to come long after, by the constellations, whereupon I have touched before, chap 44.25.
- Verf.10.* Thou hast trusted in thy wickednesse, &c. Here he calts that which the Caldee Astrologers counted wisdom, wickednesse: They could see no evil coming upon them by the starres, and therefore feared none; for which he saith, Thy wisdom hath deceived thee. And verf.11. Evil shall come upon thee and thou shalt not know. If not, let them prove it otherwise by saving thee and themselves, verf.12,13. which he sheweth that they should not be able to do, because, as fire burneth the stubble, so should Gods judgements consume them, verf.14. and then it is added, There shall be no coal to warm at, whereby he meaneth that they should be consumed as straw to ashes, not as wood that must be longer in burning to coals; whereby both the suddennesse of their destruction is set forth, and their utter destruction, nothing combustible remaining to Babylon after this any more, as there did not to Sodom or Gemorrhah, which were turned to ashes. Jerom saith, that the Hebrews by a coal not remaining to the Astrologers, understood a coal or spark to give the least light; but it is not said, coal to give light, but to warm them, fire to sit before, Hebr.
- Verf.15.* Thus shall they be to thee with whom thou hast laboured, even thy merchants, &c. Vulg. Thus they are made to thee in whom thou hast laboured, thy merchants. That is, Thy Astrologers are become, as then shall appear, evil negotiatours for thee, changing thee from better to worse, and so leaving thee finally to destruction. And he speaks of their labouring about Astrologers, because they had that art in esteem, and laboured therefore to promote it, and to increase their number; and he compareth them to Merchants, because as they, so Astrologers had all crafty waies to beguile those that had to do with them.
- Calvin.*

CHAP. XLVIII.

- Verf.1,2.* HAVING chap.47. threatned Babylon with destruction, whereby deliverance should come to the Jews; now lest they should for this think highly of themselves, and the better of their Idols, as if by their help this great work had been done; he chargeth them with gross hypocrisie, that they made a shew of piety in calling upon the Lord, and calling themselves Jews from the waters of Judah, that is, his seed of which they came; and holy, from Jerusalem the holy City; but he saith they did it not in truth nor righteousness. Then he inculcath his declaring before that these things should thus come to passe, that they might have no colour, as he knew they otherwise would, of ascribing them, when they should come to passe, to the Idols, whom they treacherously served, and he knew would seek to honour above the true God, who alone doth all. And he doth not only shew that it is he, and not Idols, that declares thus long before the destruction of Babylon, but that he had used from the beginning of the world to declare things to come, as Noahs flood, Sodoms burning, the Canaanites spewing out of the Land, and the Israelites enemies prevailing against them round about in case of their transgressing, v.3, 4,5,6. but also this new thing hitherto concealed but now revealed, touching Babylon, and themselves delivered thence; that if their hardnesse of heart, and perversnesse hindered not, might be good for them to know to make them turn to the worshipping of God in sincerity, verf.6,7,8,9. Jerom takes all this to be spoken, as if the Lord had called upon them to hear, not what he did of old in Egypt, in the wildernesse and in the Land of Canaan, casting the Canaanites out and planting them in: But a new thing which he was now about to do, whereby it might yet further appear that he was the true God, and none other.

For my Names ſake I will defer mine anger, &c. The condition of the Jews being ſo bad, as hath been ſaid, if any ſhall marvel why they were ſpared ſo long, and that judgements cut them not quite off before this time, he ſheweth here, that he hitherto deferred for his own ſake, as chap. 43.25. as being tender over his own name and glory; not becauſe they deſerved not utter deſtruction from their very beginning to be a Nation. And now that he did put them into the furnace of adverſity by the Caldees prevailing againſt them, He ſaith, that he tried them not as ſilver, that is, till all dross was purged out, none but pure metall remaining; for that he could not do without utterly ruining them, leaving none alive, becauſe there is nothing pure in any man, but what God giveth him, and that by afflictions, for which he ſaith, I have choſen thee in the furnace of affliction: Thus alſo Calvin. But why did he thus favourably by them, being ſo vile and ſinfull, for his own ſake? Sol. verſ.11. How ſhall my name be prophaned, &c. As if he had ſaid, I cannot do otherwiſe, unleſſe I ſuffer my Name to be vilified, whiſt that giving my people over to utter deſtruction by the hands of idolatrous enemies, they ſhall ſay That their Gods are moſt mighty, and the God of Israel of no power; for this were giving his glory to another, as is here ſaid, and chap.43.8.

Hear me (O Israel) my called, &c. Having hitherto called upon Israel to hear of his ſins and unworthineſs, that he might acknowledge whatſoever ſhould be done for him in deferring his puniſhment or delivering him again from it, to come from Gods meer mercy; now he calleth upon him to hear again, and to beleve what he heareth touching his deliverance, which might ſeem impoſſible: And he beginneth 1. With his ſpeciall calling to be his peculiar people, for which they might beleve that they ſhould never be utterly caſt off. 2. With his power ſhewed in making the whole world; and his eternity, being the firſt and laſt.

Then he ſaith, All ye aſſemble your ſelves and hear, and hear. Whereby Israel muſt needs be meant, being before called upon twice by name to hear, verſ.1. and verſ.12. Which of them hath declared theſe things, the Lord hath loved him, &c. That is, Which of the Caldee Aſtologers could foretell of the things concerning Cyrus, to whom the Lord ſhewed ſo much love as to bring the Babylonian Empire into his power, and ſo to inable and ſtirre him to the building of his Temple? Verſ.16. He ſtirres them up again to hear it; for he ſaith that he ſpoke it not to be kept ſecret, but by his people to be divulged to their comfort and his glory. From the time that it was, I was there. About theſe words, ſaith Calvin, much doubt is made who is meant by this word [I] but he thinks, God, who made all promiſes of comfort to his people, and by his power effects all things in his due time, that nothing may be aſcribed to chance. Some, ſaith Musculus, draw to Abraham; ſome to Chriſt, and ſome to Isaiah, as if he were preſent by the Spirit when theſe things were done; but this laſt is by Calvin mentioned and rejected, as coaſt; but to me it ſeems moſt genuine, if we put this Paraphraſe upon it. This prediction touching Cyrus doing the will of God upon Babylon, was never ſecretly uttered when it was firſt ſpooken, for God made me the inſtrument ſo ſoon as it was his pleaſure that it ſhould be publiſhed, to ſpeak openly unto you of it; and now the Lord and his Spirit ſends me again further to confirm you touching the ſame. That it cannot be underſtood of ancient promiſes, but of this promiſe only, is plain from the words, From the time that this was; and then it worſe agreeth unto God to refer it to him, that he was from this time, who verſ.12. ſaith, I am the firſt and the laſt; and therefore long before the going out of this decree, even from everlaſting. Jerom, who expounds all of Chriſt, as myſtical-ly meant by him, verſ.14. that he ſhould do all his will upon the Caldees, that is, upon the devils, understands this of Christ also; He was with the Father then when he so loved him, and when he came in the flesh it was by his sending, and in all that he did, spake and suffered. But the last words, And now the Lord God and his Spirit hath sent me, are manifestly spoken by the Prophet of himself, that he might have them to beleve his Prophecie.

I am the Lord which teacheth thee to profit, Hebr. to make thee profit. Here is shewed why the Lord so often calleth upon his people to hear his word, viz. not that any benefit shall hereby redound unto him, but to themselves, if the fault be not their own, great shall be the benefit; for hereby they shall be directed in the way of blessing and life; which should stirre all men up with all diligence to hear to be directed; not saying with the wicked in Job, We care not for the knowledge of his waies, What profit shall we have if we call upon him?

Job 21.14.

Verf. 18, 19.

That it might appear what profit cometh by Gods teaching, if they would have been directed thereby, vers. 18, 19. he saith, Oh that thou hadst hearkened to my commandments! then thy peace had been as a river, &c. That is, in abundance, because then thy righteousness should have been as a flood to make this river to runne full; as it is said, That the fruit of righteousness is peace, Isa. 32. 17.

Verf. 20.

Go ye out of Babylon, &c. This he speaks for their greater comfort, as if it were now in doing, which should not be till above an hundred years after; and he stirs up to talk much of it, that it might be commonly known and expected.

And vers. 21. to make them expect then a comfortable passage, and the supply of all necessities even miraculously, he remembers them of the rocks flowing with waters in the wilderness, through which they came, when out of Egypt, Exod. 17. Numb. 20.

Verf. 22.

There is no peace to the wicked. That all might not promiscuously lay hold upon the comfortable promises beforegoing, but the faithfull only, sometime called the remnant whom the Lord will save; he thus concludeth against the multitude of the wicked, that they may never expect peace or comfort, whether of the Jewish Nation or of any other. They may have present prosperity indeed, but yet none of Gods servants stumble at this, to be made the more remiss in their piety, but considering what horrible destruction shall at length come unto them, be constant even under sufferings in the good way to the end, lest fainting and falling off, they come into the same danger.

CHAP. XLIX.

Verf. 1.

Listen ye Isles, and hearken ye people from far, &c. Having spoken in the former Chapter to Israel, to comfort the Jews in respect of their deliverance to come out of Babylon; now he speaks to the people of all Countries and Nations, of another greater deliverance to come by Christ Jesus, because it concerned all Nations, as is plain, vers. 6. I will give thee a light to the Gentiles, that thou maist be my salvation to the ends of the earth. Yet the Hebrews saith Lyra, apply it to Cyrus, but Paul and Barnabas to Christ, Act. 13. 47. And Simeon, Luk. 2. 32. And therefore all Christian Expositours agree about it, amongst whom Calvin saith, that they who divide the Prophecies of Isaiah into Books, make the sixth and last to begin here, wherein Christ is plainly spoken of, who was before set forth more obscurely. Yet R. Salomon agreeth that the Messiah is here prophesied of, but not he in whom we beleve, but one who they imagine is yet to come. But Jerom divideth these Prophecies not into six, but into eighteen Books. Junius saith, that two deliverances are spoken of by this Prophet, one from the Babylonish Captivity, chap. 40. and hitherto; the other by Christ, from hence to the end of the Prophecie. Howsoever I assent not to him in the first, because both deliverances are touched in the premises; yet I do in the latter. And with him I take these words, Listen ye Isles, as spoken in the person of Christ, intimating, that his Gospel should be preached to all Nations, Nations.

Nations, even the furthest off from Judea, as well as the nearest; that is, to the Islands, for they were furthest off: And therefore Musculus noteth, that by the Islands and those afar off, are meant the same, and not divers people: see the like compellation, chap. 41.1.5. 34.1. From the bowels of my mother he hath made mention of my Name. For so it was said by the Angel to Joseph, the husband of Mary, when she was with childe, Thou shalt call his Name Jesus.

Matth. 1.18.
Vers. 2.

And he hath set my mouth as a sharp sword. Christ is here set forth by two comparisons, 1. Of a sharp sword. 2. Of a bright and sharp arrow, to shew that his words should not be vain, but piercing into mens hearts, galling the malicious wicked, as the Scribes and Pharisees, and pricking others to their conversion. Of the Pharisees see Matth. 21. Of others Joh. 7.36. So the word is also compared, Heb. 4.12. and it appeared to be so in the mouth of his servant Peter, Act. 2.37. when his hearers were pricked in their hearts: and out of Christs mouth is said to come a two-edged sword, Revel. 1.16. And, as for a sword, there is a scabbard; for arrows, a quiver to hide them in: so Christ was sheltered under Gods protection, till that voluntarily he went to his passion; thus Calvin and Musculus. But Jerom expounds his hiding of his Divinity, hidden under the flesh, which he took, as in a quiver; see chap. 45.25. Thou art a God that hidest thy self. And he saith that the Apostles were arrows to wound the hearts of them to whom they preached, but he a chosen arrow above them all; and that there are more arrows, is implied by saying, a chosen arrow; that is, one more excellent amongst many, and Pf. 45. Thy arrows are sharp, and thy enemies shall be subdued unto thee. And he is a sword to divide between the good and the bad, for which he saith, I came not to send peace, but a sword.

Hieron.

Thou art my servant (O Israel) in whom I will be glorified. Here God the Father speaks to his Son, calling him his servant; for so Christ said of himself, that he came to minister, Matth. 20. or to serve; and Phil. 2.6. he came in the form of a servant; and Israel, because he came of Israel, and was most worthy of this name of all others; for not all that come of Israel according to the flesh, are Israel, though of Israel, Rom. 9.6. But one specially is honoured with this name, and who can this be but he, who is singularly said to be the seed of Abraham, that is, Christ, Gal. 3.16. and in and through him all the truly faithfull, being his members; who yet I cannot think are together with him here meant, as Calvin contendeth; and this the next words evince, vers. 4. I said I have laboured in vain. Wherein the Son and not the whole body of the faithfull, answereth to the Father, saying before, My servant in whom I will be glorified: But alas, saith he, how shall this be, seeing I labour for this indeed, but in vain, seeing so few were converted to the faith by his teaching. And few, saith Sasboni, to this day, will take time to consider his labour in preaching, in prayer and fasting, and suffering a cruel death for us; for if they did, they would be more affected with love towards him that loved them so dearly. Yet my judgement is with the Lord, &c. That is, to judge betwixt me and the people, with whom my labour takes none effect for their conversion, pronouncing on my side that I have done all that could be done for their salvation; and denouncing against them damnation, who would not be moved to repent and beleve, what pains soever I took to bring them hereunto. By which words, saith Jerom, he intimateth a liberty of will in them, which because they abused to make them averse from Christ, they shall be most justly condemned. And my work with my God. That is, the reward of my work; for although the Jews, through the hardness of their hearts beleaved not, his labour was not lost, but highly rewarded, when he had a Name given him above all names, Phil. 2.6. Neither shall the labour of any faithfull Minister of his be lost, although uneffectual to those amongst whom, through their own malice.

	their conversion; according to which he saith, I am not sent, but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. But when they in stead of imbracing his doctrine, sought to kill him and did kill him, as is set forth in the parable, Matth. 21. of the husbandmens having the Vineyard let unto them, then this doom against them took effect; that he intended the gathering of them no more, but he sent his Apostles to the Gentiles. And whereas the Septuagint hath it, and I Israel shall be gathered, And Aquila, so skilfull in the Hebrew, That Israel should be gathered to him; he censureth both, as eluding a most pregnant testimony against the Jews, of their obduration and being forsaken, after that they had been a while by Christ preached unto; saying that it is not nor, and not not to him, which is here used: and therefore Symmachus and Theodotion render it not also. The Hebrews say that there be fifteen places in the Bible, in which ל is put for ל, and this is one, and therefore in the margin it is ל; hereby Aquila is thought by Jerom to have been deceived; but we must take heed how we be led about all the rules of the Jews; so Sasbous. Retain we therefore the reading in the text in the sense before going, and yet neglect not that in the margin, being haply apposed to intimate their future conversion, when they shall cease to be abdurated any longer, Rom. 11. 2 Cor. 3. I shall be glorious in the eyes of the Lord, that is, Although Israel be not gathered, as in our N.Tr. and, being rendred by although. These words are added to shew how Christ should not lose his labour, of which it was spoken before, vers. 4. for he should be glorious notwithstanding, and of great power amongst other Nations; as is immediately shewed, vers. 6. Having turned some of the Jews first, he shall be a light to lighten the Gentiles, &amp;c. upon which I have spoken before, vers. 1.

Verf. 7.	Thus saith the Lord to him whom man despiseth, &amp;c. Here, as vers. 5. the Lord replieth to his Son Christ again, comforting him in this, that although he were contemptible to man, yea to the Nation of the Jews, and used like a servant by their Princes, Herod, Annas, Caiphas, and Pontius Pilat; that is, basely; yet Kings and Princes should see and rise and worship him; that is, saith Jerom, first, at the day of judgement; but by and by better, imbracing his faith, and so doing him reverence, as the Son of God. But some, he saith, by the despised here, understand the Jews, whom he also calleth an abominated Nation, and this is followed by Musculus and Calvin, referring it to the contempt wherein the Jews were had under the Babylonish Kings in the time of their Captivity, being made their servants: But when Cyrus the Persian was King over all, the King himself and his Princes rose up for honours sake to them, and in so doing they are said to worship him, that is, God. But he preferreth the former, as there is good reason. Junius is also for Christ, here understood by the contemptible soul; for so it is Hebr. and whereas Calvin renders the next words, The abominable Nation, he whom the Nation abominates, meaning the Nation of the Jews; but Calvins reading being admitted, as agreeable to the Hebrew, and followed by the Vulg. Lat. yet it is not necessary to understand the Jewish Nation here spoken of: But as Lyra hath it, The Christian had in abomination by the Jews, for beleiving in Christ, and made servants by being condemned to the mines by Heathen Emperours, for Christ and his Church are one. But when the whole current of the Prophecie is touching Christ, it is altogether from the purpose to bring the Jew in here delivered by Cyrus, especially their obduration being before prophesied of, vers. 5. It is therefore undoubtedly spoken of Christ and his Church, the miracles done wherein when Kings should see, they should rise up and turn Christian also, and worshippers of Christ, as Constantine the great and other Emperours after him. But Christ might well be called a contemptible soul or man, because so hated by the Jews; that, as Jerom saith, they cursed him in their Synagogues three times in a day.

Verf. 8.	Thus saith the Lord, in an acceptable time I have heard thee, &amp;c. Here the Prophet goeth on to speak more comfort to Christ, who was by the wicked Jews despised, despised, and in despite crucified. The Lord saith, that he heard him in an acceptable time; that is, saith Jerom, when hanging upon the Crosse he cried out, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? For God made it appear, that he heard him and forsook him not, in that he raised him from the dead, and gave him for a Covenant to the people, that he should raise up the earth, &c. For thus S<sup>t</sup> Paul applieth it, 1 Cor. 6. 2. Having chap. 5. 2. said, He made him to be sin for us, that knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God through him. He here to prove it to be so saith, For in an acceptable time I have heard thee, &c. That is, through thy death to be so reconciled to all that beleeve, as to iustifie them by thy righteousness, and to save them. For accordingly he gave him for a Covenant to the people, that is, to such of the Jews as beleeved: And stirred up the earth, that is, men of other parts of the earth, who lay buried in the error of idolatry, And possessed the dissipated inheritances, or desert inheritances: So called because they had not God dwelling in them, but now he takes them into his possession when they are converted. And he saith to them that are bound, Go out; that is, bound with sin and in darkness of ignorance as in a dark dungeon; Be refreshed with the light of saving knowledge. They shall be fed in the way, That is, with wholesome instructions out of the world whilst they live in this world, for here we are in the way, and afterwards in heaven they shall neither hunger nor thirst any more, but enjoy perpetuall satiety of joyes and pleasures unspeakable; see the same, Revel. 7. And I will set all my mountains for a way for them. That is, heightening low places, that all their way may be plain and so delightfull. Lastly, shewing who they be with whom he will deal thus, he saith, Behold these shall come from farre, these from the north, and the sea, or West, and these from the land of Sinim, that is, the South; and then those from afarre, are from the East. But the Septuagint, for the Land of Sinim, hath, the land of the Persians, which is East, and then they from afar must be South. Thus Jerom, saying, that it is here prophesied of the conversion of peoples in all parts, East, West, North and South, and consequently of their salvation according to that of our Lord, Luk. 13. 29. They shall come from the East, West, &c. and sit down in the Kingdom of heaven. Lyra differs little from Jerom, and whereas it is said, They shall be fed in all plain places. He saith, hereby are meant the good examples of the Saints, which are more available to teach simple people then the instructions of the word: And he is said to be a Covenant to the people, because they came by him to be in Covenant with God. They shall be brought to the fountains of water. This implieth full rest in the good attained in heaven: So Calvin applieth all this from, v. 8. to v. 13. Christ, that he draweth almost all first to the Jews delivered out of Babylon, and generally to all Gods faithfull people, both Jews and Gentiles. For first, In an acceptable time I have heard thee. This is manifestly spoken to the comfort of every beleever, and to Christ in relation to his Church, the good whereof he sought and not his own continually; and so it is applied by the Apostle, 2 Cor. 6.

Neither sun nor heat shall smite them. This is spoken in allusion to the pillar of a cloud shadowing them in the wilderness: And whereas he speaks of their feeding upon high places, he assimilates them to sheep, and Christ to a shepherd, leading his sheep into divers pastures; intimating that every where there should be pasture enough, even upon the tops of hills. Here the Vulg. having it, In plain places, is to be amended, for the word □̄ here used is high places. Vers. 11. I will make all my mountains waies, That is, I will remove all impediments from before them. Vers. 12. Some by Sinim understand mount Sinai, and hereby the South, because it was southward; some Siene, under the tropick of Cancer: But without contending further about it, we may rest in that which hath been already said.

in complaining, The Lord hath left me, &c. to that it is here replied. Now Zion or Jerusalem, saith Jerom, is taken four waies; 1. For the place properly so called. 2. For the Congregation of Saints, both of Jews and Gentiles; of which it is said, the Lord loveth the gates of Zion more then all the habitations of Jacob: For hereby cannot be meant Zion properly, which was long ago destroyed, but that Zion which God loves cannot be destroyed. 3. For the company of Angels, according to Heb. 12.22. Ye are come to mount Zion; to the heavenly Jerusalem, to an innumerable company of Angels. 4. For that Jerusalem which shall be, spoken of Revel. 21. and 22. of which our Judaizers speak many things which they understand not, and upon the description of it, Ezek. 44. Here, by Zion, of which God will be so mindfull, the Congregation of Saints is to be understood. Thy builders came, which destroyed thee, they shall go out of thee. Who were the builders but the Scribes and Pharisees? for they were the builders which refused the Stone, which is the chief Stone of the corner, building by traditions of men, and so destroying those that were thus built by them; for they compassed sea and land to make one Profelyte, and then he is twofold more the childe of hell then themselves. But now they shall go out from the true Zion, the Church of Christ, and so shall all hereticks, for the Church shall not follow such any more in their teaching, but separate from them. Lift up thine eyes and see, all these are gathered to thee. To this our Lord alludeth, when he saith, Lift up your eyes and see, the regions are already white unto the harvest. As I live, saith the Lord, thou shalt be clad with all these as with an ornament. Here for more assurance the Lord confirms by oath, that the faithfull Jews, that is, Apostles and other preachers shall convert the Gentiles to the true faith, and the great multitudes of them that they converted shall be as an ornament making them glorious in all the world in the eyes of beleivers, as a brides ornaments doth her of the spouse of Christ, the Church thus adorned, see Pf. 45. Her cloathing is of gold, wrought about with divers colours, For thy desolate places and wildernesses shall be streight for thy inhabitants. That is, The Gospel being so readily every where received by so many. And they that devoured thee shall be driven far away; that is, false teachers before said to destroy her, And the children of thy barrennesse shall say in thine ears, the place is too streight, &c. That is, whereas thou wert formerly barren and despairedst of ever having any children, thou shalt now have so many as that it shall drive thee into an admiration how thou camest by them. Calvin and Musculus understanding Zion literally of the inhabitants of Zion; the Jews say, that this is spoken for their comfort, although their City should be destroyed and lie long desolate; yet God did not all this time forget it, no more then a man doth the signet upon his finger, the continuall seeing whereof maketh him that he cannot forget it. Wherein it is alluded to that precept which God gave of binding the commandments to their right hand. And because he also addeth [Thy wals are continually before me] But when they should afterwards see the City lie in ruinous heaps seventy years together, they might despair of this promise, saying, Alas our wals are all down and lying in ruinous heaps: He saith, vers. 17. Thy builders make haste, thy destroyers shall depart far from thee. That is, The Persians taking care to build the Temple and City again, when the time which God hath appointed shall come, shall provide for the doing of it with all speed; and the Caldees their enemies, who destroyed and kept them under, shall go out of their Countrey, as having nothing to do there any more. Here the reading of the text, I confesse, is more according to the Hebrew then that of Jerom, so that it needs to be corrected. But being thus corrected, the sense will be good of the Evangelical Church, Thy builders hasten; for the Apostles went preaching from place to place, and being persecuted in one City, went to another; and false teachers, who had formerly misled the people, and so indeed were their destroyers, continued not in any credit amongst the faithfull any longer, which is meant by their going out of thee. But whereas he speaks of the people returning to Zion in great multitudes, multitudes, as an ornament unto her; Calvin noteth rightly, that when the Church of Christ hath many children, that imbrace the truth from their hearts and live accordingly, she is adorned and beautified indeed, but not when the Temple is decked with glorious Images, which the Papists count great ornaments. So St Paul calleth the Corinthians his crown, and Cornelia a great Lady in Rome, as I remember, her two sons, the Scipio's her ornaments; saying to a noble man that shewed her the costly furniture of his house, they coming in in the interim, Et hec sunt ornamenta mea. And vers. 19. finding that the great multitudes of children making that Jerusalem was too little to contain them, cannot be applied to the Jews returning from Captivity, for Jerusalem had so few inhabitants, that they were constrained for a supply to provide by laws for the peopling thereof out of the Countrey, he applieth it with Jerom to the times of the Gospel, and likewise vers. 20. where the Church is brought in admiring at her own so numerous a brood, all true children that any knew of, failing, and the means of begetting them, true doctrine, till Christ and his fore-runner and Apostles came. Whence note how vain the Papists are in making the perpetual visibility of the Church a mark thereof, seeing at Christ's coming she was so destitute of children, and so shall be at his second coming, of which he saith, When the son of man cometh, shall he finde faith upon the earth? And the Churches lying hid in the wilderness before that 1260 dayes argueth the same, that none be deceived hereby.

Verf. 19.

Note.

I will lift up my hand to the Gentiles, and set up a Standard to the people. This is spoken in answer to the Church complaining of her barrennesse, but comforted with a Promise of a most numerous off-spring. Here it is shewed, how this shall be, even as a King by setting up his Standard, gathers multitudes of men about him to encrease his Army; so he saith, that he would by the Gospel lifted up by his hand of miracles, and made so glorious that Nations should desire it, draw innumerable multitudes out of the Nations to the faith of Christ herein set forth. Jerom thinks the sign of the Crosse to be meant by this Standard. Of lifting up an ensign, but for another end, see before Chap. 5. 22. Sasbont, the first sign lifted up was the Gospel, the second, the whole word of God, the third, the sign of the Crosse. And they shall bring thy sons in their arms, &c. That is, saith Lyra, their children to be baptized, and thus to be made sons of the Church, for which he saith, Thy sons and thy daughters, he meaneth, that they should first by hearing believe, and be admitted into the Church by Baptism, and then all their little ones also, as it is commonly said, Believe and thou shalt be saved and all thy house, and he was baptized and all his house. A plain place against them that deny the baptizing of Infants; for to whom is salvation promised, but to him and all his family upon his believing? and what were his children but of his family? When he was baptized then, and all his house, who can deny that his children were baptized also? If any man shall say, haply he had none, we may more certainly affirm, if he had, they should have been baptized, because otherwise all his house should not have been saved, because not all baptized; and yet I say not, that all are saved that are baptized, but whomsoever we would have saved, we ought to baptize upon this ground. And Parents cannot say of their children to the Church, They are thy children, unlesse they bring them in their arms to be so made by Baptism. I know that it is by some expounded metaphorically, as Dent. 32. 10. God is said to have carried the Hebrews in his bosom, Hos. 11. 3. But it is a rule in Theology, That when any sentence of Scripture may be taken properly without absurdity, it is so to be understood; as when children were brought to Christ to be blessed, and he took them up in his arms; so here there being no absurdity to say that Parents carry their children in their arms to be baptized, the literal sense is to be taken, and no need to flee to a metaphorical. If it be objected, he saith not Theirs, but Thy children, speaking to the Jew; Sol. He saith Thine by anticipation, meaning such as I will presently making them to be of Israel, whereby the children of Zion; that is, the

Providing that the Preachers thereof may have sufficient maintenance, that they may not need to trouble themselves about worldly things. 2. For the maintenance of Schools of good literature, as Seminaries of godlinesse and learning, that the Church may thence have a continual supply of able Pastors. 3. For the relief of poor Widows and Orphans, and other impotent persons, that none may be suffered for want to wander as vagabonds, which is a disgrace to Christianity: and to this end to build Hospitals and Alms-houses, and indowing them with means. 4. Defending the innocent from oppressors by judging righteously, and the Church in general from enemies, that seek to overthrow it, either by force of arms, or to corrupt it by any kinde of heresie. They shall worship thee with their faces bowed to the ground, &c. That is, Christ Jesus, believing him to be the Sonne of God and very God. For although the speech be directed to Zion, that is, the Church, yet when any thing of adoration is brought in, it is to be referred to the Head thereof, who cannot be considered as separate, but joyned as one with his Church. Wherefore it is meant first, That Kings and Queens, as well as common people should serve Christ with all reverence. 2. Bow to the truth taught by his Ministers becoming in all things obedient unto it, and submitting themselves to hear it with fear and reverence, and such Kings as do not these things are unworthy of Christ, and the inestimable benefits coming by him. But this is not to be applied to any man of the Church or men, though never so eminent, as if Kings and Queens were bound thus out of their piety to bow to him or them, as the proud Bishops of Rome apply it to Peter, and to themselves: But if they would look into Act. 10. and see how Peter would not endure Cornelius to bow to him, they would be greatly ashamed of this their pride, whereby they rather represent Heathen Emperours who were ambitious of divine honours, then Christs Ministers, whose greatest glory is humility towards one another; and therefore much more towards Kings and Princes. Neither can it be hence commended for Kings to be profuse towards any of Christs Ministers in respect of worldly honours or riches, because he saith, They should be nursing Fathers, and honours of this kinde, are plainly interdicted, Matth. 20. and a Bishop must not be given to filthy lucre, 1 Tim. 3.

Shall the prey be taken from the mighty, or the captive justly taken delivered? Having spoken hitherto of the deliverance of the faithfull by Christ, that it shall certainly be, and of their glorious condition after this deliverance, now he removeth an objection against it, and so seeks further to confirm it. Although it be not commonly done, that the prey is taken from the mighty, or the captive taken in warre justly without agreeing upon a price, yet as the Jews had this performed to them, when they were pluckt out of the hands of the King of Babylon, who had made a prey of them, and delivered out of Captivity gratis, so Gods chosen people of all Countreys and Nations being before made a prey by the devil, whilst they lived in Idolatry, and so justly taken captive, although held by a strong man armed, were taken away by a stronger, and by him delivered, he being destroyed in respect of all his strength against them by his death. And he renders a reason hereof, verf. 25. I will contend with him that contends with thee, &c. And the Lords power is irresistible.

And I will feed thy spoilers with their own flesh, &c. That is, as they had destroyed

stroyed his people the Jews, thus feeding, as it were, upon their flesh, and drinking their blood, so they should be destroyed, their feeding upon the flesh of others according to this sense being turned into feeding upon their own flesh, when they should be slain in great multitudes, as they had slain others in most cruel manner : they are then threatned Lege rationis, and it is not necessary as Musculus and Calvin do, to expound it of their falling together by the ears amongst themselves, thus by their swords mutually devouring one another, as sometime the Edomites and Moabites did 2 Chron. 20. For God makes them to feed upon their own flesh, to whose ravenous desire to eat the flesh of others, he putteth an end by destroying them by whomsoever, and making them to fall thick one upon another, and to lie deep in their own blood. For the Babylonians never ate so their own flesh that we read of, but this was done when the Persians overcame Babylon, and according to this Thomiris the Scythian Queen did sometime to Cyrus, when having cut off his head she put it into a vessel filled with his and his mens blood, with this exprobaton, Satia te sanguine quem diu sitisti, Fill thy self with blood which thou hast long thirsted after. Neither did the Heathen afterwards, who had shed the blood of innumerable Saints under the New Testament, pay for it by destroying one another, but the Christians under Constantine overcoming Lycinius, and his Army, and under Theodosius the idolatrous people that came against them.

CHAP. L.

V Here is the bill of your mothers divorcement that I have put away? &c. Here by mother Jerom understands Jerusalem, whom the Lord suffered to be destroyed, and then by her children must be understood children according to the flesh. And he saith, it was not through harshness in the Lord giving her a bill of divorce without cause that this came unto her, but by her own sins.

Wherefore When I came was there no man, none to answer? And this he applyeth to Christ coming in the flesh, to whose calling none of the carnal Jews answered, and he noteth that he saith [no man] because they were all turned into beasts, Herod their King into a fox, some into a generation of vipers, some that are fleshly and lustfull and sensual into swine, the impudent into dogs, for which it is said, Cast not your pearls before swine, &c. and he called them, by saying, Come to me all that be weary, and, If any man thirsteth, let him come. And to this agreeth Cyrl, Procopius, Eusebius, Ambrose and Origen, who upon Matth. 26. saith, that the whole Church consents about it. The same also appears by Lyra. Yet some understand it of the Jews in Captivity : But we may well rest in the first, taking it, as further spoken to the complaint made Chap. 49. 14. of being forsaken. Only there the faithfull amongst the Jews complain and are comforted, here the carnal are challenged for laying the fault upon the Lord, that Jerusalem was destroyed by the Romans. If so, he bids them shew their mothers bill of divorce, whereby it might appear that the fault was in the Lord and not in her that she was put thus away. For as Calvin hath it, a woman being put away by a bill of divorce from her husband, was hereby justified, that it was not for her fault, but through his morbidity that she was put away. Wherefore he bids them if they can to bring forth such a bill, but this they could not, and therefore the cause was manifest, their sins. The Jewish Church had been the Spouse of God, but now she is for her sins put away, and the Church of the Gentiles called to this honour. And this was her main sinne, that he calling to the faith of the Gospel, none would answer, but all hardened their hearts. And being hereupon put away, when for the Jews refusal the Apostles turned to the Gentiles, her destruction soon followed. For the cause of this could not be any inability in God, or mutability in respect of good will: For his hand he saith was not shortened; and to shew how able and willing he was he recounteth his drying up of the sea, that is, the red sea to let them go thorow upon dry Land, thus delivering them from the Egyptians that pursued them, his drying of rivers, that is, Jordan in like manner, and smiting the rivers in Egypt that the fishes died, and covering the face of the Heaven over that Land so with darknesse, that they could not see for three dayes. Salsbont expounds this only, as shewing what God can do. Lyra varieth only about covering the Heavens with darknesse, referring it to the darknesse upon all the earth at the time of Christs passion. The Hebrew words are all of the future tense, whereby I think with Salsbont, that God can do it when he pleaseth, and being able to do these things he can doubtless deliver his people also, not only from Babylon, but from sin and death by his Son Jesus Christ.

Matth. 7.
Joh. 7.
Matth. 11. 28.

He hath given me the tongue of the learned, that I might know in season a word exciting to the weary. Thus it is Hebr. and the meaning is plain, how to speak a word of comfort to the weary, whereby their drooping spirits might be stirred up and cheared. And although the Hebrews, and Thomas Aquinas, and Calvin apply this to Isaiah and other Prophets of God in general, set to comfort his afflicted people after threatening and reproof, yet I doubt not but with Jerom and all other ancient Expositours, to referre it to Christ, as Junius also doth. For having declared his power to save verf. 2, 3. challenging the hard-hearted Jews for their obstinacy, of whom none would answer, when he came into this world, and taught, and did wonders amongst them, shewing therein so great power indeed, as that they might easily gather him to be Almighty, and so able to do all the things mentioned there. Now he is brought in further speaking of his admirable gift in teaching; for it is said, That he taught with authority, and not as the Scribes, and the Officers sent to take him, said, Never man spake as he did; and for the weary in particular, Come to me all that be weary and heavy laden. And whence this admirable faculty came, he sheweth in the next words, Morning by morning he shall stirre up my ear, that I may hear as the learned; that is, God makes me from day to day to hear, and so to speak what he biddeth me, and how. For so Christ the son of man often saith, That he did and spake nothing but from his Father, and what he heard of him. And well may his speaking seasonably to the weary be here spoken of; and whence he had this learning, now that he is declaring his power. For his comfortable speeches were not bare words, but words accompanied with power, to heal the sick, to give sight to the blinde, to cleanse lepers, to cast out devils, to appease tempests, to make fishermens labours prosperous, when they had before toiled all night for nothing: And which is above all; to raise the dead, and even the dead in sinne, and to forgive sins, wherein the greatest comfort in the world lieth to such souls as feel the load of sinne, and are weary of it. Moreover the words following ver. 6. I gave my back to the smiters, and my cheeks, &c. do most notably agree unto Christ, whom they whipped, and buffeted, and spit upon, but of any such thing done to Isaiah we read not. Whereas Calvin saith, Neither were Dauids hands or feet pierced, neither had he gall and vinegar given him to drink, &c. as Psa. 22. many things that were done to the servants of God of greatest note, not being set down, and therefore these things might be done also to Isaiah, though we read not of them; It is of no force to justify the exposition applying it to Isaiah: for we are sure that they were done to Christ, but know not that they were done to Isaiah, and it is improbable that those things Psal. 22. were ever done to David; therefore the most certain understanding of both places is of Christ in Pf. 22. typified in David, or by him spoken of in the person of Christ, here properly, as brought in speaking. And it is to give advantage to the Jew to apply this place otherwise, who will not endure to hear that Messiah should be thus misused, but reign as a King in great glory, subduing all the Jews enemies to them; which made them to despise Christ when he came so poor, and suffering himself to be such a scorn and reproach amongst men And the like is manifestly spoken of Christ Chap. 53. expounded thus, As. 8.

he

The Lord hath opened mine ear, and I was not rebellious. That is, He hath not only given me learning to speak to others by opening the ears of my minde to hear him instructing me, but to obey his will in keeping all his Commandments, yea the very hardest, even by suffering death upon the Crosse. And herein every Minister of Christ should make him his patern, 1. By endeavouring to be taught of God to speak most effectually, to this end praying for the assistance of his Spirit, and not depending upon words taken out of Books. 2. To live in all things in obedience to Gods will. 3. Constantly to bear sufferings in what kinde soever.

For the Lord is with me, therefore shall I not be confounded, &c. God was joyned with man in the person of Christ suffering, and therefore he could not be confounded, how shamefully soever abused. And God, he saith, justified him, therefore none can condemn him, as suffering for his own sins, for he suffered all to save his people, as Chap. 53. For which cause he challengeth his adversaries to contend with him, and prove the contrary if they could, but because they could not, and yet laid wickednesse and deceit to his charge, he threatneth them, that they should be as a Garment eaten by moths, a similitude often to set forth the utter destruction of the wicked, from which there is no recovering again. Of this, or the worm that never dieth, read again Isa. 66. for Jerom makes them both one, gnawing upon and stinging the conscience for their evil doings. But Lyra better saith, because Pilate and the Priests condemned Christ unjustly, they were destroyed as a garment by moths; Pilate being banished by Tiberius, and the Priests by Jesus burnt in the Temple, sorrow eating upon the one, and fire upon the other, of whom Titus said, That it was fit that they which served in the Temple, should perish together with it.

Who is there amongst you that feareth the Lord, that walketh in darknesse? &c. Having threatned Christs enemies vers. 9. now he layeth all the fault of the destruction threatned upon the wicked Jews themselves, challenging them to say, if they can, whether there be any amongst them that fear the Lord and hearken to Christs teaching, who are left in darknesse, that is, to sink in the foresaid misery: No, let such trust and stay themselves upon God, for when this time of destruction cometh, they shall be safe, as indeed they were, the Christians a little before the siege of Jerusalem being by a voice from heaven called out to go to Pella; so Iosephus.

All ye that have kindled a fire, &c. That is, The fire of Gods wrath by your sins, as ye have made it burn about you, so ye shall walk in it to your torment, And lie down in sorrow, that is, perish miserably, and this is said to have come to them from Gods hand, because that although the Romans destroyed them and their City, yet it was by Gods arming them so to do, and in revenge of their malice and cruelty against Christ and his faithfull servants. To this effect Lyra, and Jerom saith the same upon ver. 11. but upon vers. 10. That walketh in darknesse and hath no light; these words are by him referred to Christ, as a description of him, being the servant before-spoken of, to hear whom is commended to all that fear the Lord. And by his being without light he understands the light of outward glory, for this was hidden under the form of a servant, wherein he appeared, as the light of the Sunne being hidden by a thick dark cloud, and whilst it is so walks in darknesse. In this sense it is an exhortation to such as fear the Lord, that is, with such a fear, as to flee all sinne, and hearken to Christ to believe in him, though nothing outwardly appeared in him to induce them to it, to trust in the Lord and to rest upon his help in the midst of greatest dangers that should come, for in so doing they should surely be in safety. Innim refers it to them, whom Christ called to faith and repentance, that walked in the darknes of ignorance, & of Pharisaism, but now gave ear to Christs teaching. Sabour, Who is there that feareth the Lord, which hath walked in darknesse, but now heareth his servant Christ? Verily none; if there be let him trust in the Lord. But I propound this in vain unto you, for ye make you a fire to burn you by obstinate going on in sinne, instead of being moved by any good instruction to fear the Lord. Of all these I preferre the first, taking it as a consolation to such as fear God, though for the present in the darkness of miseries, and without all light of worldly comfort or prosperity.

CHAP. LI.

Look to the rock whence ye are hewn, and to the hole of the pit, &c. Having stirred up the faithfull to trust in God Chap. 50. 10. although they should lie long in misery, here he seeks to confirm them by the example of Abraham, who was, as it were the rock out of which they were hewed, and he is so called for his firm faith. Of the like to which when Christ heard from Peter, he said, Upon this rock I will build my Church, which although I do not expound of Peter, but of Christ, as the main foundation and the corner Stone, yet neither he, nor the rest of the Apostles are to be excluded, for we are built upon the Apostles and Prophets, Jesus Christ being the chief Stone of the corner, Eph. 2. 20. and Abraham and Peter may as well be said to be rocks for their admirable faith, wherein they began to others, the one in the Old Testament after the flood, the other under the new by a communication of the name from Christ the rock of us all, as other believers Christi, or anointed from him, the anointed above his fellows. And by the hole or cavern of the pit, out of which they were digged, Sarah is set forth, who was also famous for her faith Heb. 11. and so had power in her old age to conceive and bring forth a son, of whom Israel, and all Israelites descended. Some think that it is alluded here to the water coming of the rock Numb. 20. but this cannot be, because hewing is here spoken of. They render a better reason, who, because a family is like unto a building, think Abraham to be compared to a rock, and Sarah to a pit, for the materials of which a building is made stone out of a rock, and cement out of a pit. The difficulty also of their being begotten and brought forth is intimated, as it is hard to hew stone out of a rock, and to dig stuff for buildings out of a pit that is deep, for so Isaac was brought forth, when it was thought by reason of Abrahams and Sarahs age impossible. Now to these he bids them look, that their faith might be stayed, because to Abraham the promise of inheriting Canaan was made four hundred years before the accomplishment, and therefore although many years passed before the Messiah came, in whom the comfort of all that feared God lay, they might well be comforted, even untill the accomplishment of that most blessed Promise. Touching the rock here spoken of and the pit, excellent is the saying of Cyril, As it is a most hard thing out of a solid rock to cut stones, and to draw out of a deep pit; so, that a sonne should be born of an old man, and a barren old woman; but this was done beyond all mens opinions by the command and beck of God. Calvin thinks all this is spoken in respect of the encrease of the Jews again after their diminution, and that they were brought to so few by the Babylonish Captivity. For God could as easily multiply them again, as he did Abrahams posterity formerly. This I deny not to be true, but cannot understand it of the encrease of Israel according to the flesh, because in shewing how they should be so greatly encreased, he saith vers. 5. The Isles shall wait upon me; and Chap. 49. 22. I will lift up an ensign to the Gentiles; upon which see what hath been written.

Vers. 2.

For the encrease of Abrahams seed, that it is meant is plainly shewed v. 2. I called him alone, and blessed, and encreased him. Whereby he intimates that he could do so again in respect of spiritual children, who only are his true seed, Gal. 4.

Vers. 3.

For the Lord will comfort Zion. That is, spiritual Zion, the Church, re-erecting ting her decayed buildings, by the conversion of many in all Countries to the true faith, of which the Church shall have great joy.

For a law shall proceed from me, and I will make my judgement to rest for a light of the people. This law, saith Lyra, is the Gospel, which went out as a light to all peoples, as also the words following declare. Yet some Christian Expositours do herein more judaize then the Hebrews themselves, expounding it of the Decree going out from Cyrus, for even their rare Rabbins do not so understand it, but of the Messiah. Judgement is the same with the Law, the same being sometime called by one of these names, sometime by another; and by this that it was a light to peoples or Gentiles, the preaching of the Gospel is often celebrated.

Lyra.

My righteousness, or righteous one, that is, Christ, is near, Mine arms shall judge the people; that is, by my strength overcoming the devil they shall be delivered out of his power; according to that, Now is the judgement of the world, now is the prince of this world cast out.

Verf.5.

My salvation shall be for ever. Here is a comparison made betwixt this world consisting of heaven and earth, and salvation to come by Christ, these shall wax old and vanish, but that is everlasting. Jerom takes occasion here to speak of these creatures, as not quite to vanish, but to be burnt unto a change into better. But of this I have said enough upon 2 Pet. 3. 10. and upon Rom. 8. 21.

Verf.6.

Unto this taken from the heavens, &c. he addeth another from men, the enemies of his people, whom he biddeth them not to fear, for the moth shall eat them as a garment; of which before, chap. 50. 9.

Verf.7,8.

Awake, put on strength thou arm of the Lord, &c. Because the Lord had made such gracious promises, verf. 6, 7, 8. here the faithfull are brought in, saith Jerom, stirring up the Lord by his Almighty power to do as he had promised, recounting his ancient mighty acts, Art not thou it that cut Rahab, or as he reades it, The proud one, expounding it of Pharaoh the King of Egypt, called also the Dragon, both here, and chap. 27. 1. See a like place, Psal. 74. 13. and of proud Egypt set forth by Rahab, Psal. 87. 4. and Pharaoh again by a Dragon, Ezek. 29. 3. and the word Rahab signifieth strength or pride. And that Egypt is meant hereby in this place appears, because the mighty acts done of old recounted here, were in drying the sea to make a way through it, and the bringing it upon the Egyptians, and the striking of Egypt with divers plagues before that, for then that proud Nation was cut, and their King being terrible before as a Dragon near the river Nilus destroyed. As for the words, Awake, awake, it may be taken either for the Prophets prayer, teaching us how we ought to seek the accomplishment of Gods gracious promises by prayer, and not to say, He that hath promised will perform, whether we seek to him or no; or for the Churches prayer, not calling upon the Lord here set forth by his arm, sometime by his eyes, ears, or his name to awake, as if he slept at any time, for he that keepeth Israel neither slumbereth nor sleepeth: But because as when the Champion sleepeth, they that should be defended by him are endangered by the enemies coming, he must be awaked to save them; so the Church is brought in calling upon the Lord when she is in danger, and so continueth long and no help yet appeareth, and that after the manner of men. By the arm of the Lord, some understand Christ, who destroyeth our proudest and stoutest spiritual enemies, because, verf. 6. he speaketh of the salvation for ever, and that is by Christ: and of this Zachary speaking saith, He hath raised up for us a mighty salvation; and what is this but the arm of the Lord? And indeed both, I take it, are here meant, the power of God, whereby, as by his mighty hand and stretched out arm he brought his people out of Egypt, and his Son by as great power delivering from sin, death and the devil. And to shew this, it is added, The Redeemed of the Lord shall come, with singing to Zion, and everlasting joy upon their heads, as before, chap. 35. 10. intimating the redeemed by Christ, and not only from the Babylonish Captivity, for their joy was but temporary, neither was it ever so full.

I, even I am he, who art thou that thou shouldst be afraid of a man. The Church having called upon the arm of the Lord to awake, vers. 9. now the Lord answereth; I am he that comforteth thee, &c. That is, by promising deliverance from all enemies, yet thou art afraid of the least of them all, Of a man that shall die; that is, Thou (O my Church) of men stirring up persecution against thee, and he challengeth the Church for fearing not a brunt for a little time, but daily and continually because of the fury of the oppressour: And as if this were a thing not to be feared, he saith, Where is the fury of the oppressour? As if he had said, it is a thing of naught, such his power is but over the body, and this shall soon have an end also; see the like Matth. 10. 28. and how much they forget the confidence that David had in God against all men that sought his destruction, I trust in God and will not fear what man can do to me. Vers. 14. He shall soon come that goeth to open, and he shall not slay to death, neither shall his bread fail; Thus Jerom. N.Tr. The captive exile hasteneth, that he may be loosed, and that he should not die in the pit, nor his bread fail. Junius, He will hastily bring forth his bound one afar off, who is to be loosed, he shall not die in the pit, neither shall he be failed of his bread. And Jerom accordingly expounds it of the Son of God, as if it had been said, My Son shall soon come and open thee the way of victory; when thine enemies rage most, and yet he will not slay them to death, but save such of them as shall be converted; and his bread of heavenly doctrine feeding the souls of them that are saved, shall never fail, but be in his Church plentifully. Vers. 15. But I am the Lord thy God, which trouble the sea, and the waves thereof arise. Here by an apostrophe, God the Father turns from speaking to the Church, to his Son, telling him that the troubles of his Church, as of the sea, did not arise without him, and therefore he could easily appease them again: And he addeth, I have put my words into thy mouth; according to which Christ saith, that he spake only what the father bad him speak: That thou shouldst plant heaven and earth, and say to Zion, Thou art my people; that is, that new heaven and the new earth. Hitherto for the most part Jerom. For the divers readings of vers. 14. the Hebrew will bear any of them; but forso much as vers. 13. speaking of the fury of the oppressour, he saith, lastly, Where is it? This verse seems to me to answer it better, being understood of the Son of God hastening the opening of the prison to the bound. For it is, as if he had said by way of answer, His fury is nothing, because his oppression shall not continue, forso much as the opening of the prison to the bound there shall speedily be, so that he shall not die there; and until this time he shall want no bread, as poor prisoners in bands use to do. And that this sense may be more apparent, we may render it thus verbatim, The bound is hastened to the opening, he shall not make him die in the pit, and his bread shall not fail.

For Which trouble the sea. N. Tr. Which divide the sea, for so the word signifieth; and he meaneth the red sea, of which he often speaks, as most remarkable, that they might not be unbelieving; and this verse is to be read as coupled to the other by the word and, not but; another act of the person, who is said there to open to the prisoners, &c. being here mentioned to make that the more credible, That thou mightest plant the heavens and found the earth. This is by Lyra expounded, the heavens of contemplative men, and the earth of active. By Sabsont, of the Apostles and other Preachers addicted only to heavenly things, and of other Christians, who although they be conversant about earthly things, yet their hearts are lifted up to heaven. But the best Exposition is by Musculm made thus, I will send you forth to preach my word, the power whereof shall be so great, through the Spirit accompanying the same, that the world shall hereby be renewed; and because the world consists of heaven and earth, he calls this renovation the planting of the heavens and earth. For the Evangelical Church is often called the Kingdom of heaven: And in respect of this, saith Augustine, that we have souls from heaven and bodies from the earth, we may be called both heaven and earth. Therefore purge out the earth, that is, earthly affections, from thy heart, and thou shalt be heaven;

ven; thou bearest flesh indeed, and so art earth, but in thy heart thou art heaven. Again, God dwells in heaven, and he dwells in all the righteous and holy. Therefore the Apostles, though they were in the earth in the flesh, were heaven, and God sitting in them walked all over the world; in Psalm. 122.
 2. The faithfull are called heaven, because of an heavenly life, and earth, because firmly founded by faith, as the earth that cannot be removed.
 3. That they are called heaven there is another reason from the name of heaven, Lat. Cælum, quasi cælatum, carved or adorned with stars; so the faithfull with graces that shine more brightly: so Varro etymologizeth heaven; or as Isidor, a cælando from hiding, because in them much more virtue is hidden then appears. Græcè δυσκοῦ ab ὀψω to see, because it was the first of visible things; or ὅρις a boundary, because it is the utmost bound of all things visible, according to Philo; so the faithfull are, as it were, the bound or end of Gods creating all things in this world. 4. Bernard likeneth the faithfull to heaven, in whom virtues shine as the stars there, yet as the stars are not seen in the day, but in the night, so their virtues shine most in adversity. 5. Chrysostom saith, We are made heaven, when we are alwaies clear by virtue as the heavens; for when it looks dark, it is not through any change, but because the clearnesse is hid from our sight by clouds. 2. When we are so high lifted up in our minds, that as the heavens are not corrupted by rain or tempests, because they are above them, so our faith and grace is not impaired by Persecution. To conclude this verse, there is no need with Junius to, going from the native signification of the words, to turn them, that I will plant, but to render it, I will put my words into thy mouth, to plant heaven, &c. as they properly signifie; for it is ἵνα ad plantandum.

Awake, awake, stand up (O Jerusalem.) As vers. 9. the faithfull stir up the arm of the Lord to awake, so the Lord doth the Church or company of the faithfull here, recounting what they had suffered to vers. 21. and he thenceforth comforteth them to the end of the Chapter: Thus Junius, Calvin and our other new Writers generally. But Jerom and others following him expound the first words of awaking, and rising up by repentance, as if old Ierusalem were meant, hardening her self in sin and infidelity, but moved earnestly under the Gospel to turn therefrom; which because she did not, the Prophet sheweth what miseries should befall her, both temporally by the Romans, and spiritually by the enemies of their souls carrying them on in blindness and hardness to everlasting destruction. And Sasbon argueth from vers. 18. There is none of her sons to guide her. That it must needs be meant of Ierusalem suffering by the Romans, and not by Nebuchadnezzar, because then she had Prophets meant by these sons to guide and instruct her, sundry Prophets; but in the time of the Romans not one Prophet more. And vers. 21. a conditional deliverance only is promised, saith Jerom, viz. if the Jews would turn. Dionys. Carthu. that they should turn towards the end of the world is here prophesied. Sasbon, that it is spoken of a remnant of them only who imbraced the Gospel, the rest being hardened. But I prefer the first, expounding it as a stirring up to be comforted against the miseries shortly to be suffered by the faithfull in that common destruction of the Jews by Nebuchadnezzar; because the same afflicted City is spoken to, vers. 21. as having been drunken, and now promised that she should be so more, but the enemy should after this have his turn of drinking of this cup of Gods wrath. As for that which is said v. 18. that she should have no sons to guide her, it may well agree in the sense before spoken of; if by sons to guide or govern, we understand Kings to rule her, for the Jews were alwaies after their Captivity under the rule of others, although by the permission of the Persians they had Princes to rule amongst them of their own Nation, yet not in that absolute power, which they had formerly had in the time of David, Solomon, Asa, &c. For which he saith, they had no sons to rule, that is, but only permissu superiorum. The scope of the place being thus cleared, that it is to comfort the faithfull by the promise of a full and final delive-

- deliverance from all evils by which they should first be grievously pressed, that they might in all extremities stay themselves upon this as a sure anchor-hold. The sense of particular passages will now be easie to be understood. Thou hast drunk at the hand of the Lord the cup of his fury, &c. That is, thou hast suffered grievous things; but although he speaks of them as past, it is in a Prophetical manner, whereby things to come are spoken of as present or past, and this cup was drunk when Ierusalem was so cruelly destroyed by the Caldeans, and afterwards by the Romans. For such a great judgement is often called a Cup, because as a cup of wine mingled with intoxicating things, operates strongly upon the brain, making such as drink sometimes very sick, so that the power of nature is overcome and sudden death follows; so the Lords judgements stupifie and trouble the heads of the judged, that they cannot devise any good counsel to escape, but perish under them. Verf. 18. hath been expounded already, only the misery of Ierusalem is here aggravated by a comparison from a mother in distress, which had sons able to help her, but now none, when she hath most need. Verf. 19. These two things shall happen to thee in one day, desolation and contrition, famine and sword. That is, famine bringing desolation, and the sword contrition; there be four things named, but they are only two coming by the other two, and in this misery he saith there should be none to pity her, but contrariwise insulting over her and deriding her; as is also shewed, Psal. 137.
- They be at the head of every street, as a wilde Bull in a net: Or, as Jerom, Oryx a kinde of Goat,* taken by hunters, so the Jews by their enemies.
- Thou drunken, but not with wine.* Musculus here noteth that there be two sorts of cups that make drunken; the one of sin, when the head is intoxicated with infidelity, error, pride and corrupt affections; and the other of Gods judgements, making such to stagger and fall and to be taken, as being without all power to help themselves against their enemies, as Belshazzar and his Babylonians that night in which they were taken by the Persians and destroyed. And this cup of Gods fury is offered, and men are made to drink it by God, as a punishment for their other drunkenness in sin and error.
- I will put it into the hand of thy oppressours, which say to thy soul, Bow, &c.* Here, and verf. 22. an end of the Jews miseries by the Babylonians, is prophesied of, and their coming into the like, as was fulfilled at the destruction of Babylon; and the condition wherein the Jews were when they were under them, their souls, by which word yet their bodies are meant, as the next words declare, lay as the way in the street, upon which men tread and go, not being moved with any compassion hereat, so without all mercy had they been under their enemies feet. But now the Lord promiseth a blessed alteration, and this may well be extended to the Church under the Gospel, which after many miseries long suffered at the hands of Persecutors, had their case likewise altered by Constantine the Great, to their great joy and comfort; and so shall it be with all the faithfull and their Persecutors, that now tread Gods people under foot, and despise them as most base, they shall be brought down in like manner, and these despised ones shall be had in honour, as is promised to the Church of Philadelphia, Revel. 3. 9.
- Note.

CHAP. LII.

- Verf. 1.* A Wake, awake, put on strength (O Zion.) Here the Lord repeateth again that of Chap. 51. 17. but for Ierusalem he saith both Zion and Ierusalem, meaning hereby one and the same, viz. the Church of God consisting both of Jews and Gentiles, when she shall be most purged from uncleanness; according to that which is here further added, There shall no more come into thee the uncircumcised or unclean; of which see before, Chap. 35. 8. He goeth on to Prophecies of Zions joyfull condition, which is fulfilled when a strict care is had had of separating the notoriously wicked in any kinde from others, and not permitting them promiscuously to the holy Ordinance of the Lords Supper, as hath been done in the Primitive Church, and is now done in Churches most reformed, and endeavoured to be done in the Church of England.

Ye have sold your selves for nought and shall be redeemed without money. In the former verse he bids her shake off her dust in alluding to the Metaphor begun, Chap. 51. 23. where she is said to have lien down to be troden upon on the dusty ground, and to cast the bands off from her neck, implying her bound estate then, but her deliverance and advancement now; for so the advanced by God from a most low estate, are said to be raised out of the dust, Psal. 113. In this third verse he sets forth by another Metaphor what her condition had been, viz. as of those that are sold for slaves, but they take no price; for so indeed the Jews for their sins were made slaves to their enemies, and now he promiseth that they should likewise be set at liberty, nothing being paid for ransom; see the like before, Chap. 41. 13. where their being set at liberty by Cyrus is plainly spoken of, and therefore this is likewise to be expounded. But a spiritual application is to be made of all, the things done then not being only aimed at by the Prophet, but under them the spirituall deliverance of the faithfull from the sordes or dust and bands of sin by Christ, figured out in Cyrus, both by justification and sanctification, whereby this filth is shaken off, and there is newness of life. And as men sell themselves for slaves to sin and the devil, receiving nought, so beleivers are again delivered; the devil, by whom they were held, receiving nought therefore; and yet to satisfie Gods justice a great price is paid, even Christs most pretious blood, 1 Pet. 1. 18. If profits and pleasures which men have for their souls sold by sinning, shall seem to be somewhat, they all verily are nothing, being compared unto the soul, because they are momentary; the soul everlasting, they earthly and inferiour, the soul spirituall and supernall, as coming from heaven, and so of a condition so farre excelling, that if all earthly things be compared hereunto they are as nothing, for which our Lord saith, What shall it profit a man to win the whole world and to lose his own soul?

And the Assyrians oppressed them without cause. He commemorates here, first their going down into Egypt, being inforced by famine, and then speaks of their going into Assyria as Captives, upon no such occasion; for which he saith Without cause, yet not excluding a cause in themselves, viz. their sins; whereby, as was said before, they sold themselves into their hands.

Now therefore what have I saith the Lord, that my people is taken away for nought? their rulers make them to howl, and my Name is every day blasphemed. The Lords people being carried away for nought, he here asketh what he had, as meaning that he had nothing; it was not a bargain of his making, but of their own, they had sold themselves, not he them, for then he would surely have taken a price for them. And having shewed that he was not the cause of their oppressions by the Assyrians, and coming into their hands, he next sheweth who were; Their rulers make them howl: Which Jerom expounds of the wicked Priests and Elders of the Jews, who stirred them up to cry against Christ, Crucifie him, crucifie him; and the blaspheming of Gods Name daily, of their custom in their Synagogues three times a day to blaspheme Christ Jesus constantly ever since. Junius, Their rulers howl, as if he had said, Not only the common people suffer grievously, but even men of greatest eminency, their rulers, to the making of them to cry out and howl, And my Name is daily provoked. But forsomuch as the word is in Hiphil, this cannot stand. Calvin expounds it of the rulers set over them by the Assyrians, who oppressed them so greatly, that they made them even howl under their oppressours, and hereunto was added daily blaspheming on the enemies part, being ready to detract from their God, as if he were not able to deliver them, which is spoken in way of shewing the cause why the Lord would now deliver and restore his people, as being full time so to do, lest he should seem to those Heathens most contemptible. This I grant is good, but when Rom. 2.24. I finde the last clause otherwise applyed by the Apostle, the best Interpreter of the Spirits meaning, viz. against the guides and leaders of the Jews, teaching well but practising the contrary, to the opening of the mouths of the Gentiles against their God, as if he were a patron of licentiousness and all manner of wickedness; I cannot subscribe to him, but hold that the rulers making of them howl here spoken of, was their own rulers misleading them (of whom it is said before, They that rule over thee cause thee to erre.) and consequently bringing them to all the miseries, under which they lying, cried out most lamentably. And likewise of blaspheming on the enemies part, who upon this, that his people came into their power, vilified him as unable to help them, or seeing their wickednesses exclaimed upon him as a God of adulterous, sacrilegious and theevish people. And because the Prophet in speaking of the Jews miseries, suffered by the Assyrians and Caldeans, had a further aim withall to speak of things done under the Gospel; that of Jerom may well also have place here, They like wolves howled against Christ, and blasphemed his Name, and then God in his just judgement left them to the destruction of the Romans.

Vers. 6.

Therefore my people shall know my Name. Because God had been vilified, he would do so for his people; that is, all such as should beleve in Christ, that they should know him to be such a God as he published himself to be, that is, Almighty, by his saving them and confounding their enemies. And hereupon the Prophet crieth out, as if he then saw John the Baptist going before, and Christ coming soon after, proclaiming salvation to all that repent and beleve.

Vers. 7.

How beautifull are the feet of them that bring glad tidings of peace, &c. And this is shewed by the Apostle, Rom. 10.15. to extend also to all other preachers of the Gospel. In saying, How beautifull are the feet, he alludeth to the long travel of the Apostles on foot to preach the Gospel into other Countries and Nations, whereby their feet were indeed fouled and worn; but in the sight of those to whom they came and were converted by them, they seemed beautiful and amiable. But it is said here, How beautifull are the feet of him, although Rom. 10.15. it be of them, for Christ is first and chiefly meant, and then the Apostles, by whom also he preached. For all honour and blessing indeed is to be ascribed to him, not his instruments, as he taught when he answered the woman that blessed the womb which bare him, &c. Nay rather blessed are they that hear the word of God and keep it. Yet even their feet are said to be beautiful, because so joyfull a message was brought by them that walked upon these feet: As we say of a box having in it the Kings pardon of a condemned person, a blessed box bringing so great a good in it. Upon the mountains. This is inserted to shew both whence this preaching first came, and where it first was, viz. in Zion standing upon a mountain, and how easily all might hear, as from a mountain one speaking is heard by all round about, Chap. 4.9.

Vers. 8.

Thy watchmen shall lift up their voice. That is, the Apostles and other preachers said to watch for your souls, Heb. 13.17. For the Preacher stands, as it were, upon a watch-tower, and tels the joyfull news of Christ coming to save, expressed here by singing, which is the expression that joy maketh commonly; and so John the first Preacher of Christ said, that he was the friend of the Bridegroom, and that he heard his voice and rejoiced. Whereas it is added, [They shall see eye to eye] it is meant that they should not go upon the report of others, so that the thing declared and joyed in by them should be uncertain, but they should be eye-witnesses thereof; according to which is that 1 Job. 1.1. That which we have seen with our eyes, &c. declare we unto you. When the Lord shall bring back Zion. That is, saith Calvin, first out of Babylon, to declare which some went from thence to Judea first, and after that by a spiritual bringing back of sins captives by Christ figured out thereby. After this he stirreth up to rejoycing again for the Jews deliverance and salvation coming to all Nations, v. 9. 10. as he had done chap. 51.17. and 49.6.

Calvin.

Vers. 9, 10.

Depart,

*Depart, go ye out from thence, touch no unclean thing. Chap.48.10. the same is spoken in other words, go out of Babylon; and here to shew that not only the Jews going out thence is meant, but separating from idolaters, it is added Touch no unclean thing, which is thus applyed, 2 Cor. 6.16. Whereas in the words following they are bidden to be clean that bear the vessels of the Lord. Hereby are meant the Priests and Levites, to whom this office belonged. But in speaking to them he meaneth all the people, they being named, as who ought to go before others in holinesse, and indeed all Gods people are here spoken to, who under the Gospel are made Priests unto God, Revel.1.6. And if they purge themselves, they are his vessels of honour.

His visage was marred more then any mans. This is spoken of Christ, whom he calleth his servant, vers.13. and chap.42.1. saying that he shall deal prudently and shall be exalted very high; see Phil.2.10. how this was done. But before that his visage was so marred, being in the form of God he came in the form of a servant, that the Jews were ashamed to own him for their King and Messiah. But he shall sprinkle many Nations. Though the Jews rejected him, yet the Gentiles shall imbrace his faith and be sprinkled or baptized in his Name, and by his blood be cleansed from their sins, as the phrase is used, Heb.10.22. and this is now fulfilled in our Church, wherein we Baptize either by dipping or sprinkling; and therefore although we do but sprinkle on water in baptizing, here is good ground for it; his Ministers sprinkling is his sprinkling, and therefore he will not have it be in vain no more then if the party Baptized were washed all over. Kings shall shut their mouths, for that which had not been told them they shall see. That is, Shall, renouncing their own wisdom, whereby they formerly spake against Christ and Christians, commanding that they should be rooted out of their dominions, silently and reverently submit unto him, as holding him worthy of all honour; and this, he saith, shall be at the sight of things to which they had not formerly heard the like, that is, the miracles wrought by his Ministers in their Countries. For the power of working miracles continued five hundred years after Christ, even till the Saxon Kings here in England were converted. And their reverent submitting to Christ may well be set forth by their silence, because thus servants commonly reverence their Masters, and children their Parents, when they are in their presence.

VV* Ho hath beleaved our report, &c. Here the Prophet further amplifieth the strange thing touching Christ before declared, chap.52.14,15. that his visage was so marred, and yet he should so mightily prevail, that Kings should submit unto him. And he beginneth with the Jews infidelity touching the same, as if he had said, We the Prophets of God have sufficiently set forth Christ, the power and arm of God, to come, and by powerfull miracles shewing himself to be the Son of God, and an arm to save all that beleeve in him, but few of the Jews will beleeve this, and to few shall he be revealed to be such. Of the arm of the Lord spoken of in this sense, see before, Chap.5.9.

For he shall grow up before him as a tender plant, and a root out of a dry ground. By this name of plant or branch, he was set forth before, chap.11.1. and he is here prophesied of as a root out of a dry ground, to intimate his coming forth out of the Virgin Mary, a Virgin, that knew no man, being like unto the dry and barren ground in respect of fruit-bearing. Of this he spake before more plainly, chap.7.14. He hath no form nor comeliness: of which chap.52.14. and it is chiefly to be understood of him being poor and despised, and hanging upon the Crosse. - Verf. 4. Surely he hath born our griefs and sorrows. That is, he made not a shew only, as hereticks say, that he was sorrowfull, but was verily and truly filled with sorrow, as he had a true humane body, but not for any sin of his own, but only for ours whom he came to redeem, but we, saith he in the person of the Jews, judged him to be smitten of God, for they traduced him as a notorious deceiver, a drunkard, and one that wrought by the devil.
- Verf. 7. He was oppressed and afflicted, yet opened not his mouth. That is, He patiently bare it, as the History of his quiet suffering at the hands of his wicked enemies sheweth.
- Verf. 8. He was taken from prison and judgement, and who shall declare his generation?
- Hieron.* This is by Jerom expounded two waies, either of his being unjustly dealt with, when he stood before Pontius Pilate to be judged, as if the meaning were, He was taken away to execution, there being in him found no cause why, but the Jews malice and rage against him, that would needs have it so: Or of his taking away by God, soon after his unjust being condemned, into heaven: And this last is followed by Lyra and Sasboni, the first by Junius, expounding judgement yet of Gods righteous judgement, of whom it came that Christ was cut off by death, for he fore-appointed it to be so out of his infinite mercy for the saving of us sinners from death everlasting: And by the former word W by him rendred [coarctation] he understands all his sufferings before his execution; and by the next words he understands his glorious living in heaven after his passion: Who shall declare his generation? that is, the glory that he attained to after this his base usage, for it is unspeakable. With Junius consenteth Musculum; but Calvin with Lyra, and I with them: For it were a strange manner of expression, to set forth his being taken to death, by saying, He was taken from judgement; it should rather have been said, by an unjust judgement, if it were so meant: Therefore the words being From prison and from judgement he was taken, we must needs understand his deliverance from both, by being raised again after this, and set on the right hand of God in heavenly glory, which cannot be sufficiently declared what it is; which is meant by his saying here in the next words, Who shall declare his generation? Wherein I assent to Junius, and so doth Calvin also, holding that Phil. 2.6. to be a further explication of this; for after speaking of his humbling to the death of the Crosse, he addeth, Wherefore God hath exalted him and given him a Name above all names. He was taken so from the judgement of death, by being raised to life as never any man was before, for now he liveth and never dieth any more, and that in glory which never any other man did being raised, for all others dye again; so Calvin. But I rest in that of Junius before touching this clause, not holding Calvins expression to be so good, because all his members shall be raised also to life after their sufferings, never to dye any more, but to live likewise in unexpressible glory. Some understand by his generation here spoken of, his generation of God the Father; some of his Incarnation, and some of the generation of Beleevers to come of him, being after this begotten by his Word and Spirit in all Countries and Nations, being a company so numberlesse, that none can declare how many they are, as is said Revel. 7.9. And for this Sasboni reasons strongly, as being confirmed further, vers. 10. where it is said, He shall see his seed, when thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin; and I see not how this may be rejected, but received also to make up the full meaning. For it is not only said, He shall see his seed, but also, He shall prolong his daies; as if both his exceeding glory, and innumerable offspring following after his passion were meant by his generation. And then the next words in this verse and v. 9, 10, 11, 12. are to be understood as an exegetis and declaration in more words of the two things already briefly spoken of, these and those v. 9. of his judgement, 10, 11, 12. of this high exaltation following in his seed and and in his glory, his sufferings being again repeated in way of the remuneration whereof he was thus honoured. For he was cut off out of the Land of the living: That is, he suffered death as sentence was given against him.

He made his grave with the rich, and with the wicked in his death. Vulgar. He will give the wicked for his grave, and the rich for his death. Calvin, He will expose his grave to the wicked, and to the rich his death. Hebr. He shall give the wicked his grave, and the rich in his death: If the particle וְ be taken only as a note of the Dative case, as it should seem it is here, because it is dabis, he shall give. Yet it is sometime put also for cum, and then the first reading stands firm, and the sense will be easie, he was crucified together with the wicked thieves, suffering where such notorious wicked persons commonly did, viz. without the gates of the City, for the grave and death are sometime set forth by one and the same word וְ as Psal. 49. 15. and Joseph of Arimathea, a rich man laid him in his own Sepulchre; thus also Vatablus. Jerom and others following him, expound it of Gods taking revenge upon the wicked Jews for his death; by the wicked being meant the common sort, and by the rich the chief Priests and Elders, all of whom were given over to destruction for their malicious conspiring against him; and thus the reading in Vulgar Latin indeed soundeth, and the particle וְ hath this signification, pro for also. But because the Prophet speaks only of his death and deliverance in this place, and not of the judgements against his enemies, it is better to expound it by cum, as we have done. Marlorat contends that by his grave here is meant nothing but his death, and so the sense is, That he was left to the will of the wicked, and of the rich to be crucified and slain, the same that are called rich being also called wicked, because rich men are commonly wicked, as being proud and oppressours of the poor. The particle I grant will also bear this reading, He gave to the wicked his grave. But if one and the same were meant by the wicked and the rich, why having spoken of the wicked in the plural, doth he speak of the rich in the singular number, as of one? I conclude therefore for the former exposition, from which me thinks we should not go for the events sake so aptly answering to the Prophecie, when rich Joseph laid him in his own sepulchre in his garden.

Vatablus.

Having spoken hitherto of Christs sufferings vers. 10. he beginneth further to declare, what his generation so unspeakable was, touched upon vers. 8. When thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed, and prolong his dayes; That is, an innumerable company shall be converted unto him, who because they are begotten by his Word, are before called his generation, here his seed, and being risen again he shall live long in the highest glory, yea for ever and ever. And the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand; That is, the Gospel, to preach which he shall send out his Apostles into all Nations, shall prevail for their conversion and his Kingdoms encrease. But it is to be noted that he saith, He shall make his soul a sacrifice for sin, which is varied 2 Cor. 5. 20. He made him sinne for us that knew no sin, &c. for when he suffered for us; our sins were laid upon him, as by the law of sacrificing of old the sinner was to lay his hands upon the head of the beast confessing his sins, and then the beast was slain and offered for expiation; thus having the mans sins, as it were, taken and put upon it, and hereby made the sinner, the man righteous. Whereas it is said, He shall see his seed, it is well noted by Musculus, that his living again after death is implied, or else how should he see them? But here is a wonderfull thing spoken of, that a man should have any seed after his death, and that the same whom he calleth his brethren and Spouse should be called his seed, but he being dead liveth again, and begetteth them by his Word and Spirit, they being therefore in this respect called [his seed] and in respect of the exceeding great love which he bears to them, his Spouse and his brethren for his participating with them of flesh and blood. faithfull are begotten by his Word, he is called the everlasting Father, Isa. 9.6. Calvin by the will or pleasure of God prospering in his hand, noteth that by his hand he setteth forth his Ministry, wherein he served to the death, this prospereth when we are hereby delivered from our sins, and from his death vertue cometh to us to make us die to sin and live to righteousness.

Vers. 11.

Of the labour of his soul he shall see, he shall be satisfied. Here in other words he expresseth the same that he had said before, for when by his Word preached souls are begotten, it is the fruit of his labour by his Ministers, which his soul thirsted after, and now it is satisfied: a notable expression to shew how our conversion and salvation is by Christ longed after, and taken pleasure in, even as one hungry takes pleasure and is satisfied with his meat. By his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many; That is, by knowing him to be the true Sonne of God, and believing in him so, as to rest wholly and only upon the merits of his death. For justification and salvation, and not in any part upon our own or other mens, we are justified before God, and so shall stand and appear so at the last day, none of our sins being once remembered to endanger us in respect of the second death, but in his righteousness we shall live for ever. According to this it is said Job. 17.3. This is life eternal to know thee to be the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent. For he shall bear their iniquities] That is, of all them that know him, as hath been said, all their iniquities being put upon him, as the common sacrifice for their sins, as he was called verf. 10. and when our sins are taken and put upon him, what strange thing is it to say, that we are perfectly righteous, against those that count it absurd to say that we are righteous by the righteousness of another? For this is righteousness that will hold, when that which is by entering into this or that religious order, or doing the works of the Law, or any good deeds being trusted to, will prove but like a broken reed.

Vers. 12.

He shall divide the spoils with the strong. One and the same thing is set forth by these words, and those immediately before them in this verse. I will divide a part unto him with the great ones. The meaning being, I will impart unto him such glory and riches after his sufferings, as conquerours use to have, and he shall have them, as a reward of his conflict with reproach and death by him undergone, as is expressed again in the next words, Because he poured out his soul to death, &c.

CHAP. LIV.

Vers. 1.

Sing (O barren) thou that didst not bear, &c. After Christs passion undergone for our sins, and a generation or seed soon coming from him after this spoken of Chap. 59. here the Nations amongst whom this seed should be begotten, are stirred up to joyce in it; so that these words are directed to the Church of the Gentiles, as Paul also teacheth Gal. 4.27. being a Prophecie of the great increase of the faithfull amongst them, and he saith, That she had more children then a woman having an husband, hereby meaning the Church of the Jews, whose husband God had been, forso much as they had his testament, whereby he bound himself to them, and they likewise were bound to him, but now through infidelity she was divorced, and the Church of the Gentiles taken in her stead, which abounds much more with children then ever she did.

Hieron.

Lyra.

Thus Jerom standing so yet for the Church of the Gentiles so to be meant here, as that the believers of the Jews be not excluded, but both together understood to make her that is bidden to joyce. So likewise Lyra. The Church of God which is alwayes one and the same, because consisting of them that hold the same faith from the beginning to the end of the world, of what Countrey or Nation soever, whether Jews or Gentiles, is here spoken to, and she is set forth as barren and without an husband first, but then on the sudden made made most fruitfull, which may best be referred to that part of the Church first, which consisteth of Gentiles. Then she that is spoken of as having had an husband, but now in widowhood vers. 4. setteth forth that part of the Church which consisteth of the Jews, whose husband God is often said to have been, when there were many of them living in all righteousness, but she had a time of widowhood and barrenness, when Christ being preached to them, they rejected him and his faith, having before maliciously crucified him, whereupon Paul leaving them went to the Gentiles. But both parts of this one Church are here comforted with a promise of fruitfulness in children beyond all that ever the Church had since the beginning of the world. Some, saith Lyra, understand this of the Jews in Captivity so many years, when their state was like unto both a barren woman and a widow, unlikely ever to flourish again, and to encrease in their own Land, yet after their return out of Captivity they flourished and filled the Land; but this, he saith, cannot stand, because although they encreased then, yet nothing so much as they had done in former times, neither had they so much cause of joy, as at some other times before, when Kings of their own reigned over them in greatest prosperity, for now they lived in subjection to strangers. Yet Calvin understands it so, as if the Church of the Jews had been called barren in respect of Babylon, which flourished so greatly when the Jews were in misery, but then he saith, That the state of the Church spoken to here, is to be considered from the Jews coming out of Captivity to the end of the world, before which all that is here promised shall be perfectly fulfilled. Some again, saith Lyra, understanding the Church of the Jews, referre it to the destruction made by the Romans, after which she is barren till the coming of the Messiah, but then shall abound thus with children again. But this is a Rabbinical dotage, that will not be beaten from the expectation of the Messiah yet to come. And for that of Calvin, the order of the things here prophesied of after Christs being made an offering for sinne, and seeing his seed, sheweth plainly, that nothing is meant done before, but after Christs death. Then the barren being before without an husband living in fornication by multifarious Idolatries, was converted to the faith, and the Church, that is, the Congregation of the faithfull both of Jews and Gentiles encreased so as is here said, but specially of the Gentiles, the Nation of the Jews for the farre greatest part living still, as it were, in widowhood.

Calvin.

But this reproach he saith also shall be done away vers. 4. For thy maker is thy husband. Verf. 5. That although for a moment he forsook her, yet he would shew her everlasting mercy, amplifying this from the waters of Noah, which he saith shall no more drown the whole earth, yea he hath sworn to it, so wrath shall no more come upon her, yea the mountains shall rather be removed then the Lord will be moved to displeasure against his Church, being once fully gathered, as it shall be before the end of the world. Neither indeed will he ever be moved to displeasure so against his Church, as to destroy her, as he did the old world, or the Jews being unbelievers, only she shall be temporally chastised, but continue still inexpugnable by the gates of hell to the worlds end, and then attain a full fruition of Gods favour for ever and ever. But to what time is it to be referred, that he saith, For a moment I have forsaken thee? Ans. If by the Church we understand, as hath been said, the company of the faithfull in all times and ages, we must begin our account of the time that God forsook her in respect of her greater part, that is, the Gentiles from the dayes of Noah. For soon after the flood men being again multiplied forsook God for Idols, and then they were forsaken of God, being left in a most miserable condition to run on to everlasting destruction, untill that by the preaching of the Gospel they were converted and by faith married to God, or taken by him to wife again, as they had been for some time after the flood, till they degenerated and were cast off for all that long intervall of time betwixt that and the Gospel. But this may seem to be too long to be set forth by a moment being two thousand years at the least, yet being compared with eternity, it is but as a moment; and therefore the Promise being here of everlasting favour, and never casting off again world without end, that time may well be thus set forth. The Jews indeed deride this Exposition as improbable, but in applying this moment of time to their being in desolation till the Messiah cometh, whom they have now expected in vain sixteen hundred years, they deride themselves as much as us Christians; yea our Exposition is made good by the event, but theirs shall never be made good. According to this Exposition also vers 6. where the Church is called a wife of youth, or young wife, but refused, agreeth very well, for such was the Church of the Gentiles taken by God to wife betimes in the beginning of the worlds renovation after the flood, but soon after refused, Abraham and his seed being chosen, to the fifty year of whose age Noah lived.

Behold I will lay thy stones with Saphires and fair colours, &c. Here Jerom having spoken somewhat of the different reading of the stones mentioned betwixt the Septuagint, Symmachus and Theodotion giveth this for the sense, Christ is the most precious stone, having in him the fair colours of the most excellent, and upon him as a foundation I will build my Church, which shall be most glorious, and other parts of this building added to him are the Apostles, and other faithfull persons, who together make a perfect Temple of the Lord compleat in respect of all parts: For it is common in holy Scripture to set forth Christ as a stone elect and precious, and the foundation and corner stone, and the Prophets and Apostles also, as a foundation, and the faithfull generally by the name of living stones. So that the beauty of the Church, and fair stones of her foundation, windows and gates here spoken of, set not forth a flourishing estate of the Church and rich in this world; but in respect of righteousness, as is further intimated, where varying the words he saith, vers. 14. Thou shalt be built in righteousness. And for the stones in particular here mentioned, the Jasper is of a sky-colour, setting forth the heavenly-minded, and such as by studying the holy Scriptures soar highest in divine knowledge, and are strongest to hold up the truth against all oppugners. For Agates he hath Crystal, setting forth purity and clearness. By Carbuncles being of a red colour like fire, fiery Doctrine purging out error. And he finally expounds all this of the Church triumphant in heaven, of which only the next words are true, They shall be all taught of God, because then all shall see God, and be always in his presence, as Lyra further expresseth, The Church here described being the same with the new City Jerusalem, Revel. 21. And being thus understood, the stones here spoken of are the Saints in heaven in their severall mansions and degrees of glory; but if of the Church militant, of holy men shining diversly by graces and gifts most excellent of the Spirit. I take it to be meant of the Church militant upon earth, because this Church hath been hitherto described by the multitude of her children, which was before barren and forsaken, but now received and with all love imbraced; and because he speaketh of one made to stay after this vers. 16. and of weapons formed against her in vain, vers. 17. And whereas he saith, Her children all taught of God, hereby is meant, That all the true children of the Church shall not only be taught outwardly by the Word, but also inwardly by the Spirit, becoming such as they are taught to be, for divine knowledge, and all graces; see the like Jer. 31. 33. Calvin and all ours generally agree to this, and he renders it, I will lay thy stones upon the Carbuncle, as the word יד also signifieth as well as Stribium, that is, a painting, wherewith women paint their faces to make them shew fair. And vers. 12. whereas N. Tr. hath, I will make thy gates of Carbuncle, he hath it, Ex lapide rutilante, of a stone looking red; but the word signifieth a Carbuncle, although the word of which it cometh signifieth to burn, but the Carbuncle hath the name from burning, because it looks like a fiery cole. Here be three parts of the spiritual building, that is, the Church spoken of, the foundation, the windows and the gates: the foundation is Christ, the the windows the Apostles and Prophets, by whom the light enters, the gates Gods protection, continually defending it; so Musculus. Now because all the stones of which this building is said to consist, are precious stones, some gather, that the Church under the New Testament consisteth only of Saints; and therefore it is no true Church, which consisteth of precious stones and common, good and bad persons together in one Congregation; for which cause they hold it necessary not to rest in any Congregation in England, but that there should be a gathering together of Saints only into companies, and for him that will be saved to joya with such a company leaving all others. But the meaning is not so, but that the Church under the N.T. should be more glorious and beautifull then that under the Old, as Hag. 2.9. is shewed under the types of the Temple built by Solomon, and that built by Zorobabel after the Captivity, concerning which last, he saith, That it should be of greater glory then the former, and how should this be, but for the light of knowledge, being now greater. (in regard of which the time past is called the night Rom. 13.) and of the graces of the Spirit much more illustrious in the faithfull, and the abundance of the Saints, in whom these graces shone more then in former times, there being then also but few in comparison of the Saints under the New Testament, and all being put for very many, or the farre greater part, as it was indeed in the Apostles first beginning to preach, they being above three thousand, were altogether of one accord or minde. Of the Temple built after the Captivity it cannot be understood, because that was never of so great glory, as Solomons. But to return to our argument in hand, the Church continued not long in that glorious condition, but corrupt members intruded themselves, as is shewed Jud. epist. Act. 5. 1 Cor. 5. & 15. Gal. 1.5, &c. This Prophecie then was accomplished in respect of the outward constitution of the Church only, as hath been said, and the like is never again to be expected in this world; and therefore whereas a perpetuity is promised, it is to those only that are sanctified in heart, who are visible to God alone and not to us, amongst whom are so many hypocrites undiscernable by the eie of man. The company of the truly sanctified shall have this Promise made good unto them to the worlds end, and then in heaven everlastingly, when indeed all the stones of this building shall be precious, not one excepted for ever.

In righteousness shalt thou be established. Having spoken before figuratively by stones, now he telleth plainly what he meant thereby, viz. righteousness, by which word alone are meant all graces, as by unrighteousnesse all vices, vers. 13. he shewed what manner of persons he meant by those precious stones, viz. her sons, who were all taught of God; here what qualities, viz. righteousness, graces, which are also set forth by gold, silver, and precious stones, 1 Cor. 3. 12. And he meaneth that her righteousness, that is, taking divine Doctrine to heart, and living accordingly, shall be her establishment, so that she shall not fear the violence of her enemies, or coming into such miseries again any more, because God is a protectour of the righteous; for which cause it is said, Chap. 52. 17. The effect of righteousness is peace, &c. being the same in effect which is here said; thus also Haimo. A notable place to be lookt at by all rulers: Would you have your Kingdom enjoy stable peace, and not be brought into danger of ruine? establish it by righteousness, let judgement be administred to all men alike in justice and equity, and encourage all your righteous subjects, but punish and discountenance all the wicked. Calvin understands that which is opposite to oppression practised hitherto against them by their enemies, whereby they could not stand but fall; contrariwise God that had promised would now be just of his word to do, as he had said, not only by restoring peace unto them, but also to keep them in peace and quietnesse for ever. I preferre the former, as being most agreeable to the words before-going, and to the place before-cited.

I have created the Smith, &c. To shew that his Promise of keeping them from oppression shall be made good, he here declareth this further by giving them them to understand that whereas nothing can be done against them, but by weapons of warre, and not by weapons without the hand of man, having power hereby to destroy, there shall neither be weapons made, nor an hand to destroy therewith against them. For weapons must be made by Smiths, and God makes Smiths, and giveth them their skill this way; and he giveth power to men to destroy, when ever they have power; but neither shall Smith make a weapon, nor man go forth with weapon against them to prevail; yea if the tongues of any did but rise against them power should be in their hands to judge and do execution upon them, Vers. 17. And to shew that this shall not be for a time only but for ever, he saith, It is the heritage of the Lords servants, and their righteousness, whereby they come thus to walk in his wayes, and consequently enjoy so safe a condition, is of the Lord, because of his Spirit, as chap. 32. 15. for we of our selves are averse herefrom, and then only encline to it when we are moved by Gods Spirit. Some by tongues speaking against them, which they should judge, understand the tongues of hereticks, who are to be judged and censured by the Church, and the authority set up therein, and not only that peace and safety, but the gems before-spoken of shall be made as firm to the faithfull as an inheritance, and by righteousness the reward thereof being given by the Lord, that is, the reward before-spoken of, and what he will give is given indeed against all men that seek to frustrate it.

CHAP. LV.

Vers. 1.

O Every one that thirsteth, come to the waters, and he that hath no money, let him come, and buy and eat. Having concluded the former Chapter with these words, Thy righteousness is of me, saith the Lord. Now he sheweth how it may be attained, viz. the Spirit, which being received into the heart worketh all grace, which giveth a sure settling in peace, viz. if we thirst after it. For it is common with the Lord to set forth himself and his Spirit by waters, as before Chap. 32. 15, 16. Job. 4. & Job. 7. 37, &c. But to intimate the dulnesse and backwardnesse of men to thirst after this drink, though ready to perish for want thereof, he saith, Ho, he that thirsteth, after the manner of one making Proclamation, or of a Crier that crieth aloud (O yes!) But what meaneth he after calling to the waters the thirsty, to bid them buy and eat, he should rather one would think bid them buy and drink? Sol. Although waters only be first named, which are to be drunk, yet milk is also immediatly spoken of, and bread ver. 2. which are to be eaten, and hereunto he hath relation when he biddeth eat. The speech is concise, being as if he had said, Let every one that is thirsty come to the waters and drink; Let the hungry come and buy milk and bread and eat; Wine is also named, because this water is as much chearing the heart as wine. And the Spirit is thus variously set forth, to shew the full satisfaction that is to be had herein by those that receive it, for wouldst thou being dry drink water to moisten and cool thee? the Spirit is living water. Wouldst thou drink wine to put away the heaviness of thy spirit, and to cheer thy heart? the Spirit is wine. Wouldst thou being young and tender have milk to nourish thee? the Spirit is milk. Wouldst thou have bread or other strong meat to strengthen thee? the Spirit is bread, and the only bread. For which he saith ver. 2. Why do ye spend your money for that which is not bread? And by bread in Scripture all food is commonly set forth. But what meaneth he to bid us buy, and yet without money? Sol. By buying here is nothing else meant, but getting, and because this is the common way of getting food, he saith Buy, as also Revel. 3. 18. It is no more then but as if he had said, Get ye wine and milk; to explain which further he saith, Without money or price; therefore not properly called a buying; so also Musculus; It is a getting of this spiritual food, as a poor man that is hungry and thirsty getteth an alms by by begging; so we must get the Spirit by thirsting first, and finding the great need that we have; yea that our need is so great, that if God extend not this charity to us, we must needs perish; and secondly begging most earnestly at the throne of grace for the Spirit, and then we shall be sure to have it given us, as the Lord saith Luk 11. God will give his Spirit to those that ask him. And of our so great poverty we must be perswaded by hearing it laid open in the preaching of the Word, and also hunger and thirst, and beg thus, as therein we are moved to do, least any should say we neither do nor can finde; that our danger is so great of perishing for want, but are rich and want no grace that is sufficient for us; or if we do, we are of our selves blinde, and so cannot see or know it, much lesse thirst and beg so earnestly for it. And to move to get this food, he speaks as if all food else without this were nought worth; Why do ye spend your money for that which is not bread, and your labour for that which satisfieth not? By labour men get money, and with money they buy bread for the body, yet the body thus carefully provided for, must to the dust and to rottenesse, and whilest nothing is gotten for the soul, that it may live for ever, all that food whereby the body is fed with so much pleasure is in fine nothing beneficial. Eat that which is good, and let your soul delight in fatnesse. Corporeal things, as daintiest food, and apparel, and riches, are not good, but vertue and grace only, and these worldly things are good to the good, evil to the evil. Then doth a man eat of the fat and best, when he receives the Spirit of God bringing joy which passeth understanding: so that poverty or impotency, or any other bodily misery is not evil in it self, by the reason of contraries; but to the wicked; to this effect Jerom.

Revel. 3.

Incline your ear and hear, come to me and your soul shall live. Here the Lord doth further inculcate the same; which he before exhorted to in other words, somewhat enlarging himself, and shewing how we should come; as he had moved vers. 1. viz. Encline your ear to hear, and to whom, Come to me, and to what end, And your soul shall live; whereby is intimated, that to the end we may hunger and thirst after righteousness, we must be forward and diligent in hearing the Word of God, a thirst after this is a beginning of the thirst after the spirit. But we must hear to come to God who calls us to him in his Word, which is when we believe and obey him in all things, And thy soul shall live, in which words he sheweth to what end the food before spoken of, is to be thirsted after, viz. that soul might be fed and live for ever. And I will make an everlasting Covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David. Hereby he meaneth the Covenant of the New Testament confirmed by Christs blood, which is not temporary as that of the old made by the blood of beasts, but everlasting. And what this Covenant is the Psalmist sheweth, saying, I have made a Covenant with David, and sworn, Thy seed will I establish for ever. Psal. 89. 3, 4. vers. 28, 29, 34, 35. by which seed he meaneth Christ, who is also called David, that should be sent to feed his people, but herein is the difference, this David died, he liveth for ever, he fed them by ruling them aright for a time; Christ the second David with his own flesh and blood, and by ruling them righteously for ever. After the death of that David they suffered many miseries, and were long left to the will of their enemies for their sins, and were finally brought to desolation, but this David dying rose again and reigneth in all the world so, as that his faithfull people shall alwayes be preserved, and continue as a Fort impregnable here, and everlastingly in heaven hereafter; and that not for their merits, but for his mercies, for which he calleth this Covenant, The sure mercies of David. But this Covenant, as Calvin noteth, is all one in effect with the old, for thereby God bound himself to Abraham and his seed for ever, but being broken by his seed according to the flesh, he as need required renewed it with his seed according to the spirit both of Jews and Gentiles to continue for ever and ever.

mentioned vers. 3. because as witnesses serve to confirm; so by him was this Covenant made by God with his people abundantly confirmed, and accordingly he telleth Pilate, For this cause came I into the world, that I might testify the truth. And to Nicodemus, We say what we know, and testify what we have seen; and Revel. 1. 5. he is called The faithfull witnesse; so Musculus, and A commander to peoples. The same Christ who was said Chap. 53. to have been as a sheep before the shearer, is here said to be a Leader and commander, as Lord and King. And over what peoples he should be thus advanced is shewed vers. 5. Thou shalt call the Nations whom thou hast not known, and the Nations which knew not thee shall run unto thee. That is, the Gentiles called by the preaching of the Gospel, for they knew not God in former times, and God passing by them as if he knew them not, rendred the Israelites, and taught and delivered them, and put them into a most fruitfull possession. For such as God neglecteth and puts away, he is said not to know, Mat. 7. 21, 22. See the like speech uttered by David in the person of Christ, Psal. 18. 43. it being hereby further confirmed, That David spake there of Christ, as I have also shewed upon that place. And here the misery of the unconverted or uncalled is shewed; till they come to Christ, they neither know God, nor are known of him, nor regarded whatsoever evils befall them, no, though they call and cry unto him, as is shewed in the same Matth. 7. 21. and Psal. 18. 41. But when Christs voice calling them is heard by their hearts being opened, as was the heart of Lydia, they do not come but runne unto him, as in the next words. Wherefore if any think they will come by turning from sinne, but they need not make any such haste, Christ hath not yet spoken to their hearts, though he hath to their ears, they have no dramme of grace in them, but continue such as he will not know at the last day. All that hear with their hearts runne unto him; neither can the pleasures of Sodom make them delay one moment longer, because they now know and see so much glory and happinesse in Christ, that all the profits, pleasures and glory of the world are nothing to it, as is shewed in the next words, For the Lord thy God, the holy One of Israel, who hath glorified thee. The faithfull do see so great glory in Christ, through whom they are united unto the Father, when they come unto him, as that this is a spur to make them runne to him without any delay. Now God made him glorious in his Birth by his Angels, in his Baptism by his speaking of him from Heaven, as his beloved Sonne in his Transfiguration, in his Resurrection, and ascent into Heaven.

Seek the Lord whilst he may be found, call upon him whilst he is near. Having shewed how the Gentiles should runne unto Christ, he here stirreth up the Jews to do likewise, whereby their slownesse and backwardnesse in coming to him is intimated, for which they had need to be prickt on. For these words, Whilst he may be found, Hebr. is, in making him found meaning, that to finde him is to seek him, for he that seeketh findeth, and how we ought to seek him, the next words shew, and with what speed, Call upon him whilst he is near. He is indeed alwayes near to every one of us, Act. 17. 28. in respect of his universal presence, whereby he is every where: but then he is said to be near according to the meaning of this place, when he offers his grace to the penitent and believing; so his Word is set forth as most near, Rom. 10. 8. But he is near only to day whilst he is offering it by the Ministry of his Word, whether he will be near thee to morrow or no, knoweth no man. Wherefore he that will turn from prophane to a devout caller upon God whilst he is near, must do it to day, lest to morrow he be further off, and hear not. And it is to be noted, That whoso seeks the Lord calleth upon him, and dares not sin any more, lest he pray in vain, forsomuch as God regardeth not the prayers of the wicked, Isa. L. 12.

And therefore vers. 7. the wicked is charged to leave his evil wayes and thoughts also, and so to come to the Lord.

For neither are my thoughts your thoughts, nor my wayes your wayes. This is by

by Musculus understood of Gods thoughts and wayes of mercy; and of these he saith thus, meaning that he was not implacable when he was angered, as men commonly are. Jerom. That he was not like unto men, to purpose one thing now, and after to change his minde, or to have in his thoughts to do a thing, and not to be able to perform it, as men: and this is spoken, lest they should doubt of his performing what he had promised, in calling the Nations to his grace, who had gone so long away from him; or in shewing mercy unto, and pardoning the Jews, who had so greatly sinned against him. And thus indeed these words will answer well to those immediately before-going, He is mercifull and will abundantly pardon. But if they be referred to the former, Let the wicked turn from his wayes, and from his thoughts: These words will more aptly answer to those wayes, to wayes, and thoughts to thoughts, and then the meaning will be, Till ye turn from your wayes and thoughts, and come into my wayes; ye cannot partake of my mercy, for my wayes and yours are contrary, yours earthly and sensual, mine heavenly. So also Ezek. 18. Gods wayes and mans wayes are opposed, and whoso will live is required to turn from his wayes, which be the wayes of unrighteousnesse, into Gods wayes, which be the wayes of righteousness; and these wayes are so high above mans wayes as heaven is above the earth, and therefore he must be much elevated in his minde by heavenly thoughts, as Col. 3. 1. and in his conversation, which must likewise be heavenly, that would have his former sins pardoned, and be made a vessel of mercy. And for the last words of vers. 7. those of vers. 10. and 11. do better answer; and to those before-going also vers. 5. where he promiseth to call the Gentiles to his grace, and to pardon the Jews, and bring them out of their misery, if they turn; for though this might seem to men impossible, yet as the rain coming from heaven effects that for which it is sent down, and returns not frustrated of this end, viz. the making of the earth fruitfull, so shall it be in respect of any word or promise that cometh from the Lord by his Prophets that shall certainly be effected, that is thus spoken of whatsoever it be. Yet if these words, My thoughts are not your thoughts, be referred to both this of earthly and heavenly, and to that of constancy and power to do as in mercy he promiseth; we have for this last a like comparison in speaking of Gods mercy made Psal. 103. 11. And some look yet further back to vers. 3. where a promise is of making an everlasting Covenant, and will have these words of the sublimity of Gods thoughts above mans spoken, as answering to that. As if the Lord had said, Doth any man ask how this everlasting Covenant shall be made? I answer, The way whereby is so high that man cannot reach unto it; Believe it therefore, and rest in expectation of the accomplishment of it, for the Lord whose wayes are so high, hath said it, and therefore knoweth the way, and will do it undoubtedly. I have nothing to except against this, and therefore conceive that the sense may extend to that Promise also.

For ye shall go out with joy, &c. That is, Ye both, the called of the Nations, and converted of the Jews, from your own wayes shall go out of them with joy, because there is no joy to that which comes to mans heart by the Spirit of grace entering, as is prophesied Isa. 9. and fulfilled Act. 8. in Samarita. But in saying, Ye shall go out, he alludes to the Jews going so joyfully out of Babylon in Cyrus his dayes. And this is the fruit of the rain of Gods Word, according to that before-said vers. 10, 11. for then it took effect, when the Jews in great multitudes believed, and the Gentiles embraced the faith preached amongst them. For the rejoycing of the mountains, see before upon Chap. 49. 13. And for the Trees it is hyperbolical, For the thorn the fir-tree, the Vulgar Latin Pro salinca abies; which salinca is described to be low and bushy, but sweet, and therefore doth not so aptly set forth the condition of man before grace cometh, but the thorn and the nettle for their baseness do, but now they are turned into Firres and Myrtles, that is, whereas their mindes were set upon things below, now they are lifted up to things above, and whereas by the harshness of their manners they did prick and sting as thorns and nettles, now they are gentle as myrtles. Gregory, This is done, when for the baseness of earthly thoughts the height of supernal contemplation doth arise, and hereby the itching desires of the flesh tending to vice are extinguished, a better temper of the whole man being attained. The Cald. for wicked shall spring up righteous, and for ungodly such as fear God.

Some will have the sign of the Crosse, meant by this sign; some the scars in Christs body being unto it a greater glory; as also the marks of the sufferings of his Martyrs; some his Baptism which he instituted for our Regeneration that we might be compleat Christians. But I rest in the first.

Verf. 1.

Thus saith the Lord, Keep judgement and do justice, for my salvation is near. Having comforted the faithfull in shewing the happy and joyfull condition to which they should come by Christ Chap. 55. Now lest any should think to partake of this happinesse, and yet live still in sinne; the Lord here exhorts us all that would have joy of salvation by Christ, to judgement and justice, that is, to do righteously in all things, and specially such as are in place, to judge righteously betwixt man and man, and to stand for the just cause of the poor, without respect of persons or bribes. And to this he moveth from this consideration, that his righteousness, Christ Jesus, who is also the salvation whereby we are saved from our sins, is near; as when Christ came indeed, he cried, Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand; because there is a remedy in Christ against sinne, the wicked are the more licentious, saying, Let us continue in sinne that grace may abound. But the faithfull know, That the grace of God hath appeared, that denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live temperately and righteously, because as he is salvation, so he is righteousness and sanctification, not saving any, but such as are first made just and holy as well by inherent as imputative justice.

Blessed is he that doth this and layes hold upon that. That is, doth justice, and by faith layeth hold on this salvation. That keepeth the Sabbath, and his hands from doing any evil. Besides righteousness towards men, every one is exhorted to keep the Sabbath, which then was a sign betwixt God and his people, and he speaketh to men then living, and both then and alwayes a Sabbath is to be kept, that is, a rest from doing evil, which is the devils work. And to intimate that the Apostles and other faithfull persons kept such a Sabbath, and no six working dayes, Christ saith unto them, Ye are not of the world, meaning, as Jerom hath it, Ye are not of the world made in six dayes, to work the works of sinne in them, but every day's a Sabbath perpetually to you, or must be. The keeping of the Sabbath was not then to rest only, and in idleness to keep at home, for God takes no pleasure in this. But to rest from labour, to attend to duties of devotion; and thus, saith Musculus, the Lords-day is now to be kept, and that by keeping the Sabbath, as wherein all duties of piety are to be performed, all such duties are meant, wherein a man must be daily conversant that will be blessed, as is here promised.

Hieron.

And let not the son of strangers say, &c. Here because such might fear, that the blessednesse spoken of was nothing to them, but belonged to the Jews only, and hereby be discouraged from a godly care of righteousness, he bids them them not thus to despair, or the Eunuch, as if he were a dry tree, that could not spring up, as was before said, Chap. 55. 13. that for Thorns should come up Fir-trees, &c. For the Lord promiseth even to such, if they keep his Sabbaths and please him, a name better then of sons and daughters. And this is spoken, saith Jerom, not of Eunuchs gelt by men, but of those that make themselves chaste for the Kingdom of heaven, as Christ afterwards speaketh. For such if they refrain from women indeed, to live the more freely to God, and to care for the things of the Lord, are famous in the Church, yea more then they that beget many children in whom their name is continued; because that although they have no natural, yet they have many spiritual children, wherein they are more blessed. Calvin by Eunuchs understands all such as had any note of disgrace, because to be barren was counted a curse amongst Abraham's posterity, one of whose blessings lay in the increase of posterity. But here are two sorts spoken to, 1. Sons of strangers, 2. Eunuchs, both which were basely accounted of amongst the Jews: For the reason before said. Eunuchs and strangers, because out of the Covenant made with Abraham and his seed, of which they were not. And the time was coming wherein all that contain, should be exhorted to it, as they were Matth. 23. 12. Therefore to move men the rather to do so that could; Eunuchs, others of strangers children, that is, of the Gentiles turned to the faith, are thus encouraged to use their gift. And although the Prophet began with sons of strangers, and then came to speak to Eunuchs, yet in promising he speaks first to Eunuchs, as whose devoting of themselves wholly to God, refusing for his sake to take such pleasures as lawfully they might, was most highly accepted of before him; and then to the Gentiles converted of all sorts, vers. 6, 7. comforting them with the like comforts, of bringing them to his house, and accepting their Sacrifices, thus making his house an house of prayer to all Nations, that is, not the Temple, for that was destroyed together with the City not many years after that the Jews had wickedly crucified Christ, but any house built in any Countrey for divine worship. Wherefore this is a Prophecie of the conversion of the Gentiles, betwixt whom and Jews believing now there is no difference, but all are one in Christ, Gal. 3. 28. The Papists here and upon Matth. 19. take occasion to extoll too highly the single life of Priests and votaries, and to debase the married life; but in so doing they have no ground in either place, or 1 Cor. 7. for Virginity is no where so commended that marriage is on the contrary side any whit blemished, but pronounced honourable in all men, Heb. 13. 4. and no more difference put between the married and unmarried, but that the one doth well, the other better. Alwayes provided also, that the Eunuch or unmarried be a keeper of the Sabbath and of the Covenant, and please God in his wayes, as it is in this place; otherwise his forcing of himself to this seeming continency being mean while incontinent and defiling himself with harlots, is most damnable hypocrisie, taught him, not by God, but by the devil, whose Doctrine it is said to be 1 Tim. 4. of which sort there are so many of the Priests and Votaries in Rome, that all Writers cry shame against them therefore.

The Lord who gathereth the out-casts of Israel, I will yet gather others to him, Hebr. Above him to his gathered ones. That is, the Lord, who gathereth together the dispersed Jews, bringing them from Babylon into Judea, will as certainly to the Jews gather Peoples, Countreys and Nations all over the world to be his Church in the time of the Gospel, in which sense also Christ said, When the son of man is lifted up, he will draw all men to him.

All ye beasts of the field, come to devour. Having hitherto spoken comfort by Christ, now to the unbelievers and persecutors of Christians amongst the Jews he speaketh terrour, especially to their Priests, the greatest adversaries of the Gospel. The beasts, whom he inviteth to devour, are the Romans, the people to be devoured, the Priests, Scribes and Pharisees, and other unbelieving; so that this is a Prophecie of Jerusalem's destruction to come by Titus:

Thus Jerom, Cyril, Theodofius, Sasbon, &c. Neither doth Calvin or Muscolum dissent, but that Calvin will have not only the destruction by the Romans here prophesied of, but by Antiochus Epiphanes and the Caldees; but chiefly by the Caldees; and they understand beasts properly, by inviting of whom is intimated a great destruction of the Jews to be made by their enemies, so that their dead bodies would suffice all beasts of prey coming from farre or near. Orcolampadisa is for men cruel and bloody called beasts; and I see no reason but that it may be taken either way; see the like Jer. 7.33. chap. 34. 20. but that the destruction by the Romans was chiefly meant, seemeth to be implied, ver. 10. where he crieth out against the watchmen as the cause; and that not by reason of their Idolatry, as when the Caldees destroyed Jerusalem, but of their blindnesse and ignorance wherewith Christ oft upbraided them, their drunkennesse and coverousnesse and other notarieties following thereupon. For when the Romans came against Jerusalem, all abominable sins, saith Iosephus, did so abound, that if they had not come and destroyed by wicked a City, fire and brimstone must needs have come down from heaven upon them as upon Sodom. All the watchmen are blinde, they are dumb dogs. So Christ said often to the Scribes and Pharisees, calling them fools and blinde, Mat. 23. and dumb dogs, the Prophet saith they are, which lay sleeping, because as the dog which should by barking keep the Wolf from the flock; but if he lieth sleeping and barketh not, so that the Wolf cometh and makes havock of the sheep, is worthy to be hanged, especially being scarefull and given to devour excessively that he should not also; in like manner if such as are appointed to watch over the Lords flock, do nothing lesse then by sound and diligent teaching chase away Wolves or Lions, as devils are called, that they may not devour; but contrariwise by their ill example teach them riot and intemperance, and make it all their labour to get worldly gain, they shall have the great Judge of the world most insense against them to the hanging of them in hell for ever, as they are well worthy.

CHAP. LVII.

Verf. 1.
Hieronym.

The righteous perisheth, and no man layeth it to heart, &c. This is by Jerom applied to Christ and his Apostles, thus. The righteous man Christ is put to death by means of the blinde watchmen before-spoken of, who instigated the people against him, and by much pressing of him prevailed with Pilate to condemn him, although by his wife he had warning to do nothing against that righteous man; and amongst the Jews there were few or none that considered it afterwards to repent. But they generally took him to be justly cut off, as one that wrought by the devil and deceived the people. Yet the true cause, as the Prophet assigns it, when he repeats again, The righteous is taken away, by reason of malice, Heb. מלכות הרע, which if we render it word for word, is, from the face of the malefactor, or malice. To the Apostles he applieth the next words, Mercifull men are taken away, none considering it. For as they persecuted Christ, so they did them who preached and offered the greatest mercy in the world, Forgiveness of sins, to all that would believe in Christ, and were so mercifull that they could not be made to curse, but prayed for their Persecutours, as Christ had done, and it is expressed that Stephan the first Martyr did.

Verf. 2.

He went away in peace, they rest in their beds, he that walketh before him. Jer. In directione ejus, because the word signifieth either Before him, or right over against him; that is, keeping equipage with him, as when one friend walketh with another. N.Tr. That walketh in righteousness, respecting rather the sense then the words. He, that is, Christ, went away in peace, as being Prince of peace, and bequeathing the legacy of peace to his Disciples a little before, saying, My peace I leave unto you: They, that is, the Apostles cut off by persecution rest in their graves, as in beds, every one that walks before him, and is upright upright shall also do likewise. But the Jews, saith he, understand all this as spoken of the righteous slain by Manassah, or of Isaiah himself, who was cut asunder with a saw. Others understand any righteous persons, who are taken away a little before greatest misery coming upon their Countrey, that they might not see it, as Josiah, and Augustin before the enemies taking of Hippo his City. But all things do so aptly agree to Christ and his Apostles, that I cannot but think Jeroms exposition most genuine, and to him agree Cyrl, Procopius, Theod, Tertullian, Justin, Cyprian, Rupertus, Lyra, &c. Yet touching these words בְּכַחַשׁ רָעָה, which may also be rendred, Because of evil] there may be another Exposition, Christ died for the sins of his people, which otherwise would have destroyed them, as is expressed Isa. 53. If any man shall apply this Text to the righteous in general perishing by the hands of the wicked, or otherwise evil, being now ready to invade his Countrey, or when such die they are but taken away from evil of sinne and misery to the good of sanctity and glory, I shall readily assent unto him: only the first, as I take it is the most proper meaning of the place.

But come hither (ye sons of the sorceresse) ye seed of the adulterer. Having spoken to the comfort of the righteous, vers. 2. now he turns himself to wicked persecutors of Christ and his servants, the malicious Jews, whom he calleth the seed of the adulterer for their spiritual adultery with Idols by worshipping them in every place, as is expressed vers. 5, 6, 7, &c. For such were the Progenitors of the wicked Jews which persecuted Christ and slew him. And he challengeth them, saying, Against whom do ye sport your selves and make a wide mouth? wherein he pointeth at their scoffs, He saved others, let him save himself, &c. and Hecrieth to Ely, and reproaches, He casteth out devils by none other but Belzebub the prince of devils, &c. Thus Jerom. And this is further confirmed from Psal. 22. 7. 13. wherein the person of Christ it is said, They shoot out the lip at me, they gaped upon me, &c. Calvin. After comfort to the righteous, here followeth terrour to wicked and rebellious idolaters, who survived after that the righteous were taken away, and because they escape hitherto, think of impunity for ever. By bidding them [Come hither] he meaneth, that they shall come to judgement; neither shall they be able to lurk in any place without being found out and brought to severe punishment. And he upbraids them by their parents to meet with their high conceitedness of themselves in respect of Abraham their father, calling them witches children, &c. as Christ afterwards tels them, Ye are of your father the devil. He calls them the children of wizzards or witches, saith Lyra, because in the dayes of Manassah, and of other idolatrous Kings, they were much addicted to divinations, as indeed idolaters commonly are; and therefore to Jeheram was objected by Jehu the abundance of his mother Jezebels witchcrafts, as well as whordoms spiritual. But he, as Jerom, applieth all against Christs persecutors; but Calvin, Musculus, &c. to the wicked Jews of those times, understanding their mocking and contemptuous speeches of which they are accused to have been against Isaiah and other Prophets of the Lord, as 2 Chron. 36. 16. But in asking them Against whom have ye put out your tongues] he intimates, that it was not so much against them as against God their master, that they might be terrified to think upon it, and all other wicked despisers of Gods Ministers at this day. Which is indeed a good and pious application, and will hold as well if it be expounded of the persecutors of Christ and his Ministers, as was said before; and so I take it, we shall best go with the sense of the Prophet. And he calls them also a lying seed] because they falsely gloried that they were the seed of Abraham, who, as Christ said unto them, did not so; therefore he tels them, That they were of their father the devil, adding, that he was a liar, and so in effect pronouncing them a lying seed for the same reason, as in this place.

Only Isaiah in setting forth these abominations continueth his Allegory begun, taken from adulterers and whores, who commit their wickedness in beds, and in secret behinde doors being shut, v.7,8.

Vers.9.

Thou wentest to the King with oyl, and didst encrease thy perfumes. Here also he goeth on still in the same Allegory. For an whore anoints or paints her face with oyl, and takes to her much sweet perfumes to make her the more amiable to the adulterer: so he sheweth that wicked Idolaters, who served Molok, which signifieth the King, did; and this was the Idol of the Ammonites, to whom they sacrificed their children, as is said before vers.6. The oyl and perfumes with which they went, were offerings which they brought to that Idol. And thou didst send thy Messengers farre off, that is, to the Assyrians, whose gods thou didst also worship, of which more is spoken Ezek.16. and of those of the Babylonians. And debasedst thy self even to hell ] by such an humbling, as where-by Amon humbled Tamar, of which Jerom saith, A great humbling, from the light and height of chastity, to the darknesse of the Stews. Calvin expounds it of forraign and remote Kings, whose friendship they sought by sending them gifts of oyls, most precious and sweet odours, wherewith their Countrey abounded, as to the King of Assyria sometime, and then to the King of Babylon, because they were most mighty, as they thought, to defend them: and to intimate this, Legats are said to be sent farre off. But because the whole scope of the place is to declare them to be grosse spiritual adulterers with all sorts of false gods, whether of the Nations near or farre off, and killing their children was before mentioned, which is notoriously known to have been done to Molok the King; I rather assent to Jerom in the first; and for Messengers sent farre off in this negotiation, which implieth nothing, but that as they committed adultery with Molok, the God of the Ammonites, who were near, so they had their factours to bring in Idols also, such as they had amongst the Heathen in Countreys more remote.

Yet saidst thou not, There is no hope, thou hast found the life of thine hand, therefore thou wast not grieved. Vulg. Non dixisti, quiescam. But the Hebrew word signifieth desperatum est, there is nothing but despair, if I go on thus still. Thou hast found the life of thy hand, that is, hereby thou hast been hardened to go on in these abominable wayes without repentance, because thy wealth which is as a life to thee is great, making thee prond, and to sleight all admonitions of the Prophets without being moved to grieve for thy sins: Of the like obstinacy taxed, see Jer.18.12.

Hieronym.

Of whom hast thou been afraid, that thou hast lied? That is, saith Jerom, Consider since thy heart hath been hardened by reason of thy wealth wherein thou hast trusted, and hast not been grieved for thy sins, that thou mightst call upon and turn to me, what other Potentates thou hast feared, who indeed have been a terrour unto thee; and if then being by necessity enforced, thou hast sometime sought unto me, Thou hast lied, for thou hast not in truth remembered me then, but thy heart hath still been towards thy Idols: Have not I held my peace of old, and thou fearest me not, Hebr. Am not I silent even from everlasting; the meaning, As I have not been called upon, so I have left thee in misery at all times most anciently, And thou hast forgotten me; or forgetting thee, as thou hast forgotten, and put me out of thy minde. Thus Jerom. But the Hebrew, Thou hast not feared me; and the sense is given otherwise thus by Calvin, Have not I shewed as much patience as any God could shew in forbearing all this while to execute my severest judgements upon thee, and yet thy hard heart is not wrought upon to fear me?

Calvin.

And this seemeth to be best, because vers.12. he saith, I will shew thee thy righteousness and thy works, and they shall not profit thee; As who should say, I have not hitherto done it, as now I will, but have held my peace, as it were,

in

in times past, and have not spoken by the voice of so great and long-lasting judgements, as now I will for all the judgments of God against Israel in former times were nothing to that by the Babylonians; and afterwards by the Romans, which is specially meant, for he chargeth them with their despising of his dear and only Son, 24.

When thou criest, let thy companies deliver thee. Symmachus, for companies or congregated ones, as the Septuagint have it, render it, Thy Synagogues to the same effect, that is, the company of gods which thou hast gathered together, and made thee from all Nations farre and near, according to that which hath been already said. Thus Deut. 32. 37, 38. they are bidden to do likewise; and Elijah biddeth Baals servants to cry aloud to him; and Elisab. Jehoram, to get him to the gods of his father and mother, 2 King. 13. but when they did so so, he sheweth that it should be vain, onely such as trust in God shall not do it in vain, but possesse the Land, as it followeth in the next words.

Cast ye up, cast ye up, prepare the way. Having said, that the faithfull should possesse the Land, he now sheweth how a way should be made for them; see the like before, Chap. 40. 1. 62. 10. It is a metaphorical speech taken from the making of a cause by casting up the earth high; and because great stones sometimes lying in the way hinder passengers by their stumbling at them, it is further added, Take up the stumbling block out of the way of my people; Chap. 62. 10. the stones; whereby, saith Jerom, the Jews understand the removal of all impediments of the way, that they might safely and without any let return out of Babylon to Mount Zion according to the letter; but it is rather and more agreeably to the premisses to be understood of the Church of Christ, which is commonly compared to a mountain, as Matth. 5. 15. and Isa. 2. 1, &c. and because it is such, it is said, Cast up, cast up, as intimating, that the way must be made high to come to this high mountain: And then is every stumbling block and stone, at which men might stumble, taken away, when all things obscurely set forth in the Word, are by the industry of the Pastours of the Church made plain; and hereby Christ is made manifest to be the Messiah that was to come.

For thus saith the high and lofty One, &c. Having promised to such as trust in him, that they shall inherit his holy mountain, and have a way made thither, now he sheweth a reason why it should be so, viz. because he that dwelleth on high, dwelleth with the humble and contrite in heart, who are the onely men that have this grace bestowed upon them to trust in God, according to that, God despiseth the proud, and gives grace to the humble; see the like Chap. 66. 2.

For I will not contend for ever, nor be alwayes wrath. As if he had said, I have indeed striven by my judgements with these my humble servants to bring them to this grace, but now I will do so no more. For if I should be extream this way, all the souls that I have made must needs perish.

For the iniquity of his covetousnesse I smote him, &c. It was not because I delight in the destruction of sinners, but to correct and amend them, that I might pardon their sins and save their souls after that I have thus judged their bodies. But what is meant by covetousnesse here? Some understand it of that love and desire of money, which is said to be the root of all evil, some of an inextingible desire of sinning, as the word is used Ephes. 4. 19. and some of sinfull desires of the heart in general, which God punisheth as well as acts, because they make men guilty before him, but this differs little from the former, and according to either of them, if for covetousnesse we render it desire, it will be best.

I saw his wayes, and will heal him. That is, even when I smote him I saw his obstinacy and incorrigibility in sinne, yet I thought I would not proceed in judgements any longer, but allure him by mercies, delivering him from the miseries of which he is even sick unto death under the hands of his enemies.

And he saith, That he will comfort him and his mourners, whereby some few godly persons amongst the Jews were meant according to Ezek 9. who mourned for the sins of the Land, and not only for external miseries, of whom it is said, Blessed are they that mourn for they shall be comforted.

I create the fruit of the lips, peace to the farre off and the near. The conceit of some mentioned here by Musculus, because ἡ ὥ signifieth a bank of a river as well as a lip, that the abundance of peace is meant, running as a river full of water between two banks is not so well agreeing, because neither is a river any where called the fruit of two banks (for the word here used is of the dual number) implying two; neither is this word put for any thing but two lips. To follow therefore the common reading, hereby is meant either the event of Gods gracious promises made by the mouth of his Prophets, for these bring forth their expected fruit, as it were, when it is peace according to the promise made, the enemies being quite subdued. And this he saith, to declare how they should come to have so plain and open a way, as was said, vers. 14. there should be all peace, and therefore no enemies to keep them from their so much desired Countrey; Thus Jerom. Or hereby is meant, that such as came to bring tidings should bring the glad tidings of peace; or that the Prophets and Apostles should thenceforth preach and comfort, whereas the Prophets had been formerly so much in denouncing the judgements of warre and destruction: So Calvin. By the farre off are meant the Gentiles, by the near the Jews; or if it be in any part referred to the Jews, some taken and carried into Babylon, and some left to till the ground, the farre off were those in Babylon, the near those at home in Judea. But it is applied to Jews and Gentiles, Ephes. 2. 17. the Jews being made the farre off there, because rejected for their unbelief, and the Gentiles near, Act. 2. 39. the afarre off are the Gentiles, because to be called, but not then called.

But the wicked are like the troubled sea that cannot rest. Lest such should lay hold of this promise of peace they are here cut off from so doing, such as by true repentance turn shall have the peace promised vers. 19. but the wicked going on presumptuously still in sinne shall be restlesse as the sea, which is continually tossed with tempest after tempest; so they with one misery after another, after miseries upon earth with miseries in hell for ever and ever. And if any wicked man hath peace external and prosperity as some have sometimes, yet he never hath such peace as is called the fruit of the Prophets lips springing from faith which justifieth, that is, peace of conscience, which is said also to be peace with God. For although he seems to himself sometime to have this peace, because his cauterized conscience doth not for the present accuse him, yet indeed he never hath it, but is like to a condemned person suffered to live for a time; but when the Judge cometh again is full of fear of being condemned: So he, whensoever God will, shall have his conscience set a work to do the office by remembring his sins, and aggravating them against him to the making of him fear even to desperation, as hath been the case of many at sundry times, who to avoid the horror of a troubled conscience have most unnaturally laid violent hands upon themselves, as Judas did. Jerom assenting to this, that it may thus be understood of all the wicked, yet saith, it may more particularly be understood of the Jews who were restlesse in persecuting Christ, crying with one consent, Crucifige him, crucifige him; and therefore have ever since been restlesse in respect of miseries; and thus, as the sea by being troubled is made to foam, and that foam turns into dirt, so the Jews are of all men conculcated and trodden under foot as mire and dirt in the streets. ## CHAP. LVIII.

CRy aloud, lift up thy voice as a trumpet.* Having condemned the wicked Jews in the former Chapter to perpetual iniquitude, now he cometh by Gods direction to declare aloud that all might hear what the sins be that make men so wicked that they can have no peace, as hath been said, particular persons with God and their own conscience, whole Nations with God or men, for the foundation of the peace of a Nation is righteousness, as hath been said before Ch. 32. 17. therefore the wickednesse of a Nation causeth dissensions and wars, so that there can be no lasting peace. And he calls them his people yet, to shew his inclination to mercy, if they would turn, and if not, that they might know what a gracious God they lose by obstinate going on in sinne. And the Prophet is bidden to lift up his voice above the ordinary tone, to shew how deaf they were to hear to conversion; and the similitude of a Trumpet is used in alluding to that which was done when the Law was given Ex. 19. 16. and which shall be done, when the Lord shall come at the last day to take revenge upon the transgressors of his Laws, that men thinking the voice of the Preacher to be a summons to present repentance, or like the trumpet that shall last sound upon earth, a summons to judgment, might be stirred up by turning without delay to use it as a summons to repentance, and not stand out, lest it prove a summons to judgement, unto which how nigh he is even then no man knoweth.

Yet they seek me daily as a Nation that delights to know my wayes. Here he sheweth, that for their coming diligently to the Synagogues, or care to learn the Laws and Ordinances of God, they were singular; and Josephus saith of them, that they could as readily give account of them as of their names; yea, and they fasted also, vers. 3. Why have we fasted, &c? But he sheweth immediately the cause, why all this notwithstanding, they were rejected by God as wicked, In the day of your fast ye finde pleasure or desire, that is, your own evil lusts and desires are still afoot, for ye afflict not your soul, that is, your bodies (for so by an Hebraism the body is often called, because of the soul within it, and animating it) to the mortifying of your sins as ye should, but ye go on still in them, and this whoso doth, his fasting is vain. Wherefore Gregory saith excellently upon the words of Joel chap. 2. Sanctifie a fast; what is this, but other good things being adjoynd to shew abstinence worthy of God, let anger cease, let chiding be sopited: for the flesh is macerated in vain, if in the minde it be not refrained from fleshly lusts. And ye exact all your labours, or sorrows; or as others turn it, All your worldly goods, Omnes facultates vestras, being so called, because gotten with labour and sorrow, saith Pagnin; or because being lent to poor men, it was to their sorrow, that they were rigorously required of them again, as by that servant to whom his fellow-servant ought an hundred pence. And this is one sinne, from which God looks that we should turn, or else our fasting is vain, the exacting of our debts with rigour, putting our poor debtors to as much charge and trouble as we can, and using no patience, or in case that they be so poor that they have nothing to pay, not forgiving them; or so much as their necessity requires, accepting of what they have for all, and forgiving the rest, if without fraud, or first breaking for a colour as many do, they faithfully declare what they have. He that requires debt of him that hath nothing to pay, saith Jerom, doth violence to God, meaning surely, because he doth violence to one of Christs poor members.

Ye fast to strife, and to smiting with the fist. As a man that is fasting is more cholerick and quarrellsome and ready to strike naturally, because choler doth the more abound in an empty body, so they being lead more by corrupt nature ture then by grace grew more impatient, the flesh prevailing above the Spirit, in which case nothing can be expected save death; but if by the Spirit we mortifie the deeds of the flesh, we shall live: for what profits paleness in the face by fasting if envy be in the heart? or humbling thy body by fasting, but in minde to be lifted up with pride? to which effect Jerom speaks, Ye shall not fast as ye do, to make your cry to be heard on high: That is, either the cry of your prayers made with a voice lifted up on high for ostentation of extraordinary zeal, or the cry of the poor debtor being thus cruelly exacted upon by you, for the cries of the oppressed come up into the ears of the Lord of hosts to provoke him to take revenge, as Exod. 22. 23. In saying therefore, Ye shall not fast, &c. he admonisheth us not to do so, therefore the Vulg. renders it, Do not fast as ye do.

Verf. 6.

Is not this the fast that I have chosen, to lose the bands of wickednesse, to undo the heavy burdens? The Septuagint which Jerom rather approveth for expressing the true sense, The obligations of violent cautions, whereby were meant written obligations, whereby usurers bound their debtors to pay them the unjust gain of usury: for this was a burden complained of in Nehemiahs time, which they were not able to bear; and this was the hundredth part a moneth, that is, twelve pound in the hundred for a year, one pound a moneth monethly to be paid. It is not in the Scripture sense an heavy burden laid upon debtors, to require of them in any Court of Justice, when it cannot be otherwise gotten, our due debts, for then such Courts should be abettours of oppression, because kept purposely to provide that every man may have what is justly due unto him; but either, as hath been said, or debts made so by forged writings, or by the like deceitfull way wronging a man in any part of his estate. To let the oppressed go free, and to break every yoke; that is, servants unjustly kept after seven years expired, for this was amongst the Hebrews unlawfull, and therefore an oppression; therefore he requires if they would not fast in vain, that they would let them go free, or in any Nation, the time of service agreed upon being expired. To break every yoke is also rendered by the Septuagint, To cancel every unjust writing, which is by forgiving poor debtors that have nothing to pay, not casting them into prison, as is the manner now, nor compelling them to be servants, as in those dayes.

Verf. 7.

To break thy bread to the hungry. This is added for him that shall say, I have no debtors or servants, what shall I do? yet thou hast bread, one at the least, give, I say, not all, but part of it to the hungry; and if any shall say, I have no bread, it is added, Bring the poor Wandring into thy house. Thou hast yet a place to harbour in, bring him in thither to be sheltered; and he addeth further as a motive, Despise not thine own flesh for every one loveth his own flesh and cherisheth it, and we took all flesh from Adam, who was but one, to shew that we are one, and so should love as one. To this effect Jerom, noting the sweet consent betwixt the Old and New Testament, shewing that they both came from spirit; for as there, so here, to feed the hungry, to fear to cast the poor into prison, or to do violence to any, or to oppress servants, is strictly forbidden; but to shew pity, and that to strangers, as to near neighbours, is enjoyed in that Parable of the man that travelled from Jerusalem to Jericho, &c.

Hieronym.

Then thy light shall break forth as the morning, and thy health, &c. That is, saith Jerom, The Sunne of righteousness, as Christ is called, with healing in his wings, Mal. 3. 2. because by him we suddenly are healed of all the sores of our sins, to shew which it is here added, Thine health shall spring forth speedily. Heb. Thy murthery sore shall hastily heal, and thy righteousness shall go before thee; that is, thy charity, for this is often set forth by righteousness, as Psal. 112. 9. Dan. 4. 24. Alt. 10. 35: in saying that it shall go before him, he meaneth to make him gracious to God, so that he will have him in remembrance to protect him, as followeth, And the glory of the Lord shall be thy reward; Hebr. The glory of the Lord shall gather thee; so likewise Jerom, it being meant, that such such shall be gloriously protected, as was Moses sometime being in danger of the murmurers, the glory of God appeared at the door of the Tabernacle, whereby they were daunted. But for thy light breaking out as the morning, it is more generally understood of a comfortable and prosperous estate in stead of a miserable; for light is often put for prosperity, and darknesse for misery: So Luther. For the sore, or wound soon healed, this is the same in other words, for a man in misery is, as it were, wounded; but his case being altered, as was said before, he is healed. By righteousnesse going before thy face, he meaneth the righteousness in our dealings and mercy before-spoken of, they shall make manifest that we are not feignedly but truly pious, as Officers with ensigns of honour going before honourable persons, shew them to all that are present to be such; so Zuinglius. By the glory of God gathering thee, some understand a mans gathering to the Congregation of Saints in heaven after death; but Musculus rejects this, because all the good here promised is in this life, and saith, that nothing else is here meant; but whereas when thou didst bear the punishments of thy sins thou wert in disgrace, now being delivered and brought into prosperity, thou shalt be honoured, God bringing it thus about, for which it is said, His glory shall gather thee, thou shalt be by him brought into the number of the honourable.

If thou shalt take out of the midst of thee the burden, the putting out of the finger. Vulg. The chain or band, being by Jerom accordingly expounded of the chains of our sins; for so Peter said to Simon, Thou art in the gall of bitterness and bands of iniquity. The putting out of the finger at those that we would disgrace. But the same word נָתַתּוּ here used and vers. 6. sheweth, that the same thing is meant, viz. the burden of oppression, whereby a man of mean estate is brought down lower, according to the signification of the word, which is to decline. The chain of our sins then is not hereby meant, but any oppression of the poor. By the putting out of the finger, some understand wicked confederacies, some smiting with the fist, as vers. 4. but because here are other words used, I think that any way of disgracing others is meant, either by pointing with the finger, which is one, or by any other gesture, as making mouths, imitating another in his imperfections, or by jesting or mocking at him, one way of disgracing being put for all. Lastly, vain words must also be put away, where by idle words that profit not, as the Vulgar hath it, are meant, or deceitfull to circumvent his neighbour, or cursed speaking. And it is to be noted, That God will not hear us to make our estate prosperous, unlesse we put away all these evils.

Hieron.

If thou shalt pour out thy soul to the hungry. He spake before of breaking thy bread to the hungry, vers. 7. but now he sheweth that it must be done out of the bowels of compassion, love causing a sympathy and chearfulness in doing this. For without love the giving of all my goods to the poor is vain; and God loves a chearfull giver. Then thy light shall rise out of darknesse. To the same effect with vers. 8. for misery thou shalt enjoy prosperity and joy.

And they shall build from thee. That is, which descend from thee, Thy children shall build the old waste places; that is, shall not only have enough to live plentifully upon, but also wherewithall to build this ruinous City of Jerusalem, as indeed the children which came of some of them that now lived, did after their return out of Babylon. So that here is implied misery and ruine to come to Jerusalem, but withall a repairing of these ruines thereof promised, and not only of Jerusalem, and other Cities of Judah, but of the world by building men and women upon the foundation Christ Jesus, that they might be a glorious Temple, who lay before as it were, upon ruinous heaps, when they were by reason of their Idolatries and other abominations under the curse bringing inevitable ruine. And these children of theirs were the Apostles and other Preachers, who went out from Jerusalem into all countreys repairing the breaches, which were made amongst men by sinne, for this is done when Heathens attain Justification by faith, wrought by the preaching of the Gospel, as they then did every where. For the Apostles and seventy sent out to preach, and to cast out devils, are called their children in that saying of our Lord, If I by Belzebul cast out devils, by whom do your children cast them out? And the next words, The foundations of generation and generation, that is, many generations, they shall raise them up, that is, foundations having lien ruinous generation after generation, which doth not so aptly agree to Jerusalem, because it lay desolate but seventy years, but to other Nations which had lien desolate in respect of the knowledge of the true God, and his grace, being left to be tyrannized over by devils, no buildings of his being all this time amongst them, but Satans strong-holds only, and that generation after generation ever since Abrahams time, whom and his seed God chose peculiarly, passing by the rest of the world. But now by these Ministers of the Gospel they were built. Musculus I know and Calvin expound these words The foundation of many generations, of the time to come, as if it had been said to last from generation to generation; as if it were meant that the spiritual building reared up by them should never be ruined again, and this we are sure shall be so, for Christs Church is built upon a Rock, &c. And therefore not excluding it, I hold that foundations lying in the ruines are also meant here, and so Varatilius hath it. And then it is as if he had said, Peoples and Nations having lien desolate many generations by sinne and unbelief, they shall raise up to a Temple of God, and this building shall stand, not as the Temple at Jerusalem many hundreds of years, but generation after generation to the worlds end. And thou shalt be called the repairer of the breach; that is, the Jew shall be famous, as being used by God for an instrument of so great a work; and this he attributeth to the Jews, because the Apostles and seventy were Jews, who went about repairing these decayes, and the breach whereby the Gentiles were broken off from being the people of God, for now the partition-wall is broken down, and there is no breaking off of any any more; but in every Nation all that fear God and believe in Christ are accepted alike before him. And in the same sense it is added, The restorer of paths to dwell in, or to habitation, Vulg. Turning paths into quietnesse, and that not disagreeably to the Hebrew, for the meaning is, As in time of warre bringing ruine, the very wayes are dangerous to travel in, by which means Cities and Towns lie unfrequented, and the wayes thither are overgrown with grasse, now by means of peace they should be renewed again, and by travellers frequented. And this is no small glory to men to be happy instruments of so great a blessing, and therefore it is spoken of accordingly in praising the Apostles, and who so turns any to God from his sins, participateth in the same honour.

Verf. 13.
Hieron.

Calvin.

If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, &c. Jerom will have no strict keeping of a day here meant according to the sound of the words, both because it cannot thus be fulfilled, that a man should sit still and not stirre from his place an whole day together, as is here said, If thou shalt turn away thy foot, and because not one day of seven must be kept in refraining from our sinfull pleasures and wayes and words, but all the dayes of our lives. Wherefore he understands it of this kinde of rest, as before also upon Chap. 56. 2. neither do any of our Writers dissent from him herein. When the Lord next unto mercy and charity commends unto us the worthy keeping of the Sabbath both here and in other places, saith Calvin, he meaneth not so much the external rest of the body upon a day, but a continual resting from walking in sinfull wayes, doing sinfull works, or speaking vain words, and then we consecrate the Sabbath as honourable, when our minds and affections are taken off from worldly things, and lifted up to heavenly. Wherefore they erre that understand these words as forbidding any other thoughts or talk upon the Sabbath-day besides heavenly, expounding finding pleasure of any other pleasure besides that which is in hearing, praying, &c. and doing thing own wayes, of doing any worldly thing though lawfull, and speaking words of words touching worldly things. For as in describing a true fast that which is said is not peculiar to one day, men being at liberty to do otherwise the dayes following, as is intimated vers. 5. Is this a fast for a man to afflict himself for a day, &c. So touching the Sabbath, and therefore all things here must be so understood, as agreeing to the Sabbath day, and to all the dayes of the week following, for we must no day finde our pleasure, that is, as was before expounded, vers. 4. in drunkenesse or whoring, or any other unlawfull thing that we delight in, or do our own wayes, that is in oppressing, deceiving, unjust dealing in any kinde, or speak words, for so it is Heb. that is, swearing in our common talk, lying, cursing, railing, being obscene or scurrilous, or flattering herein. Touching the external keeping of the Sabbath, it was no part of the Prophets purpose to prescribe how that should be done, but rather to tax hypocrites who stood so strictly upon that, that they regarded it only, thinking if they kept it outwardly according to the letter, yea more strictly, they highly pleased Almighty God. But that without this perpetual Sabbath-keeping is nothing, and this is most highly pleasing, and who so keepeth such a Sabbath is in the right way to an everlasting Sabbath or rest from all sorrow in heaven in all joy and glory.

I will make thee to ride upon the high places of the earth. See a like passage to this Dent. 32. 13. Jerom renders it, I will lift thee up above the heights of the earth: giving this for the sense; If thou shalt keep the Sabbath, as hath been said, Thou shalt delight thy self in the Lord, that is, have delight and joy unspeakable in him, and be exalted to the new earth above, which is far higher then the highest parts of this, touching which it is said, Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth, where by earth it is plain, that this earth is not meant, because Psal. 37. 11. this being promised: Vers. 18. it is said, That he shall delight himself in the abundance of peace, And inherit the earth for ever. And vers. 29. this inheritance is said to be everlasting, which cannot agree to the earth upon which we now live. And this is further confirmed by the promise of long life in the Land or earth which the Lord giveth them made to children that honour their parents: for this cannot be understood of this earth, because many such children die young, and so it is not fulfilled to them. It is the new earth then above, that is both there and here touched upon, according to that of Peter, We look for a new heaven and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. And I will feed thee with the heritage of Jacob; that is, such food as eye hath not seen, nor ear heard of, neither hath it entred in mans heart to conceive. Yet not according to the opinion of the Millenaries, who hold eating and drinking and marrying, and living in corporeal pleasures a thousand years, whereas we are taught, that we shall be as the Angels, neither marrying nor giving in marriage, and that this happinesse shall last not a thousand years only, but for ever and ever. Thus Jerom, with whom consenteth Cyrl and Procopius. Some others number three benefits here promised, 1. Thou shalt delight thy self in the Lord, and having joy in the holy Ghost which passeth understanding, and whereunto he that hath it thinks no joy comparable. 2. I will carry thee above the altitudes of the earth That is, thy minde being thus filled with spiritual joy, thou shalt look upon the earth and all earthly things, as farre below, to sleight and despise them in comparison. 3. I will feed thee with the heritage of Jacob, that is, give thee actual possession of all the good promised to all true Israelites in the world to come. Which because it is bound and sealed for a truth by these words, The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it, it sheweth, that there are very few mercifull and righteous persons, because so few have this joy to contemn earthly things therefore, and for this cause few shall have that heritage. According to this exposition Gregory saith, It is a priviledge of the elect, that they know they are now come to high things, for which they trample upon all worldly things, as being under them. And hence it is that the Lord saith by the Prophet to the soul that follows him, I will lift above the heights of the earth. And what are the heights of the earth, but gain, flattery of Subjects, sublimity of honour? &c. But when the heart is fixed in heaven it is soon perceived how abject these things are, which before seemed so high. And in another place speaking of himself, when he lived solitarily, giving himself wholly to divine contemplation, desiring nothing and fearing nothing in this world, me thought I stood as it were upon the top of all, and that the saying of the Prophet was fulfilled in me, I will set thee above the heights of the earth. And this is favored by the words here used, which may as well be rendred, I will make thee to be carried above the heights of the earth, as I will make thee ride upon, because רָכַב signifieth as well to be carried as to ride. Yet it is not to be denied, but that the Prophet alludeth to what Moses saith God would do for his people in Canaan, but not resting here he certainly soareth up higher, as hath bin said. But herein, I confess, I go from Calvin, Musculus, &c. who dwell upon the sense that leadeth only to a promise of a worldly benefit, to be brought out of Babylon, which was low in comparison of Judea, and where the Jews were of low condition, into Canaan again, the ancient inheritance of the sons of Jacob, there to live in liberty and abundance. But alas what had this been in comparison of the happiness whereby this place hath been expounded, and what to the promises by Christ to the faithfull of all Countreys, of whom the Prophet plainly speaks, as well as of the Jews, even from Chap. 40. hitherto.

CHAP. LIX.

Vers. 1.

Hieronym.

Vers. 3.

Vers. 4.

Vers. 5.

Vers. 6.

THe Lords hand is not shortened, that it cannot save, &c. Having made so excellent a promise chap. 58. to the mercifull and righteous, now he cometh to shew what was the cause of theirs, and the Nations so great miseries before the fulfilling of this, viz. sinne so greatly abounding, and not any want of power in God to hear and to help the miserable calling upon him. But sinne, as Jerom saith, makes a partition-wall betwixt God and us, that keeps the reaching of his hand to us away, and likewise his hearing, for he heareth not sinners. Then vers. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. he capitulateth their sins, 1. Plainly, Cruelty acted with their hands, lying and other wicked speaking with their tongues, vers. 4. their sins of omission, none stood for justice or truth, thus seeking shelter from God against the storms of adversity that were coming, but they vainly trusted in their wealth and worldly power, conceiving that by reason thereof they should be safe, whatsoever the Prophets threatned against them, for this he meaneth by saying, They trust to vain things, &c. 2. Allegorically by a similitude taken from a Basilisk, the most poisonous of all serpents, and of a Spider which is also full of deadly poison; so that it hath been observed by some that a Spider hath poisoned and made a Toad to swell, and a Basilisk kills by seeing. Now to shew how dangerous to bring death in stead of help, the devices of the wicked were to those that follow them, he saith, They hatch the cockatrices or basilisks egge, and weave the spiders web: he that eats of their eggs shall die. Vers. 6. And their webs shall not be a garment, &c. as he had said, vers. 4. They conceive trouble and bring forth iniquity] That is, which tends to more trouble in stead of delivering out of trouble, and makes both them and others that trust to such conceptions fuller of trouble and misery, which are the fruit of iniquity, and therefore are here so called. For as he that eats the Basilisks egge dieth as by poison, and he that trusteth to a Spiders-web for a covering, if a storm cometh shall finde it to be none; so he that animates himself to go on in sin, bearing himself upon such vain imaginations, that by some worldly means he shall be preserved, friends being made hereby, or such defensible towers, as that the enemy shall not be able to break into, shall contrary to his expectation be suddenly destroyed, as one that lieth open to a dart without any cover that is able to retort it. The word rendred, They hatch, signisignifieth properly to break, and because in hatching the egge breaks, it is rendred to hatch, the Vulgar retains the word break; but they that follow it do some of them expound it by hatching, some by breaking to eat thereof, as if it were an hens egge, as Jerom; because some by being deceived receive such evil imaginations of others into their minds, and are poisoned to death hereby. And this is best, as for which the words following make. He that eats their eggs shall die, because eggs are not hatched to be eaten, but broken. And whereas this hath been before applied to the imaginations of worldly great men, and danger by enemies, he applieth it to them that are still in expectation of Christs coming, saying, These are they that talk vanity, conceive trouble and bring forth iniquity, as indeed they do, for a world of troubles have come upon the Jews by this means, and great is the iniquity upon this conception acted by them in crucifying the Lord of life. And they that have and do take this conceit into their minds at this day, as if they had broken and eaten the Cockatrice egge, die and perish for ever in great numbers; and their arguments whereupon they harden their hearts in infidelity, though they seem to them a goodly contexture or well-woven web, yet it is but a Spiders web, and insufficient to cover them from misery. And thus I think it not amisse to apply these things in the second place, as mystically implied here, and so in every passage some touch is given touching Christ and his Kingdom, in prophesying of whom he began to speak Chap. 40. and continueth to the end of his Prophecy, as hath been already said. But whereas the same Jerom following the Seventy expounds breaking this egge, of their breaking it, that having thus done presently perceive by the stinch what it is, and abhorre from it, I see not how it can agree, because the same who are said to conceive trouble and to bring forth iniquity, or the like unto them, are said to break the Cockatrice-egge, and are threatened with death, and are further set forth, as most abominably wicked, vers. 6, 7, 8. The Vulgar Lat. for Cockatrice hath Viper, some the Asp most like unto a Cockatrice for incurably poisoning, for against all other Serpents to tast of a Frog, saith Elianus, is a present remedy, but none against the biting of an Asp. Hitherto allegorically of their sins, next he returns again plainly to inveigh against them, making a long catalogue both in this sixth verse, and 7, 8. Their works are works of iniquity, &c. Their feet runne to evil, they hasten to shed innocent blood, destruction and calamity is in their way, &c. Whereby their sinne in crucifying Christ and persecuting the Prophets are chiefly meant, for these works were indeed works of violence in their hands, as it followeth here, vers. 6. and then more particularly, saying, They hasten to shed innocent blood, as is also objected to them, Matth. 23. 23. and by Stephan, Act. 7. Destruction is in their way, and the way of peace they have not known, for in rejecting him that came and preached peace unto them, yea the prince of peace, they overthrew their own peace, and ran headlong the way to destruction and calamity, as they have since found by wofull experience. And partly from hence, and partly from Psal. 14. the Apostle draweth an argument to convince the Jews of as great guiltinesse, if not greater then the Gentiles, Rom. 3. 10. Neither is there judgement in their goings; because there is no peace in their wayes, for in rejecting him, in whom all true peace lieth, they put judgement also from them, seeing this is he, of whom it was said before, Behold my servant in whom my soul delighteth, he shall bring forth judgement to the Gentiles. Where judgement is put for the judgement of absolution from sinne, and of inviting in mercy to his grace here, and his kingdom of glory hereafter.

Verf. 9.

Therefore judgement is farre away from us; and justice layes not hold upon us. Here after the wickednesses of the Jews declared, and indeed generally of all men, for all are grosse sinners, he inferreth, That for this cause God left the Jews whom he had most favoured, to the fury of their enemies, and stood not to avenge their quarrel. The fault was not in God, or in his want of mercy, but altogether in themselves and their abominable sins: Wherefore though they looked for the light of prosperity and comfort, there was nothing but darknesse of misery and sorrow.

We grope for the wall as blinde. Jerom referring all to the light of the Gospel, faith, That the Prophet having laid open the sins of the Jews, cometh vers. 9, 10, &c. in their person, to teach them what to say and confesse, to acknowledge that the light of saving knowledge was farre from them now that the Gospel is by them rejected and gone to the Gentiles. For by this means they are destitute of all true judgement and righteousness, and are in darknesse of minde in stead of light, having the Scriptures in their hands, but not able to feel or finde out the truth touching the Messiah therein set forth, as the blinde gropeth for the wall, when it is nigh to him, and cannot finde it.

We roar like bears; and mourn like doves. He compares them to two sorts of creatures of contrary quality, the one cruel, the other fearfull, yet both agreeing in roaring and mourning, the Bear being robbed of her whelps, or taken in a pit, roareth; the dove continually mourneth. To be like the Dove for innocency is commended to us, but not without wisdom. The Jews mourn simply now, and are Dove-like full of fear and trembling, but they have no wit to know the original cause hereof, their crucifying of Christ, and tearing his flesh like cruel Bears, this light shineth brightly in all the world, but they alone have no eyes to see it; so Jerom. And I doubt not, but as in other passages, so here he hath a further reach then to set forth the outward calamities by the Jews suffered, and to teach them to mourn for their sins in general, as the cause thereof; and what can this be, seeing he is prophesying of Christ, but to bring them, if it may be, to a sight and sense of that most foul and deadly sinne of all other, to lament and confesse it, that it might be done away, and they might be converted? Some expound roaring of crying out with a great noise, and mourning with little noise, it being sought to suppress the grief. Some by the roaring like Bears, the impatient cryings out of the wicked, and by the mourning like Doves, the sorrow of the godly. But seeing he saith, We all roar, here is no place for this distinction, but the lamentation to be made by all for their wicked fact done out of cruelty and fear, that if they let Jesus alone all men would follow him, and then the Romans would come and destroy them and their City, is here set forth.

Verf. 12.

Verf. 12, 13, 14. are nothing else but an Argument of the confession which the Prophet teacheth them to make of their wickednesses grown to that height, that as he concludeth, vers. 15. Who departed from evil made himself a prey. Wickednesse was grown to that height, that if there were any one that would not consort with them in their unjust and malicious proceedings, they would like savage beasts fall upon him, and spoil him of that which he had, and tear him as enemy to the state, as the wicked Lacedemonians sometime had a kinde of banishment called Ostracism, for any honest and temperate man; and this is by Jerom specially applied to the Pharisees, who cast them out of their Synagogues that departed from their evil wayes and believed in Jesus, as we may see in the blinde man receiving his sight, Joh. 9. and in Stephan persecuted to the death meerly for standing to the truth, and reproving their wickednesse. And the Lord saw, and it displeased, &c. Here after sinne laid open and judgements coming therefore, the Prophet proceedeth to shew how displeasing this was to God, and for the comfort of every one that departed from evil and suffered therefore, that God himself would be a Saviour to such, in whose resolution to save every just man might safely confide. And therefore this part of the verse is well by Jerom divided from it, and put to vers. 16. as the beginning of that which there followeth, He marvelled that there was no intercessor. Jerom, That there was not one that occurred; And the Hebrew is occurring or coming out to meet, the meaning is, That they were so universally wicked, that there was scarce one to be met with, that stood right and firm in the truth spoken of vers. 15. see the like Jer. 5. 1. and he meaneth eth not only one just through eschewing evil, but one opposing the unjust proceedings of the wicked against such, that was a man of power in the Commonwealth, as the inference made hereupon intimates, Therefore his arm brought salvation to him. When there is no mighty man of courage to save the just from being made a prey, the power of the Lord shall do it, and his righteousness, that is, his righteous judging their malicious and bloud-thirsty enemies. For which vers. 17. he proceedeth saying, He shall put on righteousness as a breast-plate, and the helmet of salvation, after which follow the garments of vengeance, and his repaying them according to their deeds, as to his adversaries, vers. 18. and this Jerom expounds as a Prophecie of the Jews destruction by the Romans; neither is it to be disliked, because the Lord seemed then to be more enraged against them then ever, and the just One, who is the head of all the just, and the fountain of justice or righteousness, had his bloody passion by their hands most remarkably revenged: as they had crucified him, and cried out, Let his blood be upon us and our children, so it came unto them, and thus they were recompensed according to their doings, as is here threatened. But what is this, that it is said, The Lord marvelled? The Hebrew signifieth, he was astonished, and through astonishment was as dumb for a time, which is so spoken to set forth the strangeness and prodigiousness of the thing, able to make any man amazed, that such abominable wickedness should overspread all so, as that there was not one that opposed it, that men being so generally corrupted might be astonished in themselves to think upon it, and some at the least in the corruptest times be forward to oppose violence offered to the innocent.

He shall recompense to the Islands. That is, not only to his enemies in Jerusalem, where Jesus was crucified, saith Jerom, but also to the other Cities of Judea, which were to Jerusalem as Islands to the continent. But because the word Islands is no where else used in this sense, I rather subscribe to them that expound it as meant of the inhabitants of Islands properly, that is, the remotest parts, and he meaneth, That revenge shall be taken upon wicked oppressors of the righteous there, as well as in any other parts, for God will be alike such in what place so ever, as by his providence administering justice alike in all parts of the world. And if any shall say, But how is this to bring salvation to him, of which he is speaking? Ans. The destruction of the wicked enemies of the Church is the salvation of the faithfull; and therefore it is observed, that some tyrants being at the point of death have ceased persecuting, as Antiochus Epiphanes of Syria, and Valerius and Maximianus Roman Emperors, who raised the tenth and most bloody persecution against Christians; or if not, their mighty enemies being destroyed, they are saved, as were the Jews by the fall of the Babylonians by Cyrus a friend, coming to the highest height of power, in stead of an enemy an oppressor, the King of Babylon.

Therefore they shall fear the name of the Lord from the West, &c. This shall be the effect of Gods judgements against the enemies of his Church, that peoples of all Countreys and Nations all the world over seeing it, shall fear the Lord, and turn worshippers of him, as the Gentiles indeed did, when the Apostles leaving the Jews to their deserved destruction went and preached to the Gentiles. When the enemy shall come in as a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a Standard against him. The Vulgar, The Spirit of the Lord compelling, Hebr. The Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a Standard in him, or by him, which makes the sense more easie, when the Romans shall come against the Jews as a violent flood that beareth down all things, they shall not come without the Lord and his power, and so they shall be irresistible; for that it is meant of Jerusalem, see Dan. 9. 26. the end whereof is said to be with a flood. Some expound the last words, as if it were meant, the Spirit or power of the Lord shall repress him, when he shall come like a flood upon the righteous drowning all by his Almighty power, yet he shall be turned back with confusion.

Calvin questions of what enemies this is spoken, and neither liketh of their opinion, who restrain it to the Jews only destroyed for their obstinacy against Christ, nor of theirs that restrain it to the destruction of Babylon by Cyrus, saying that it may best be understood of the whole time of Gods proceeding in severity against the enemies of the Church, from the time that Babylon was overthrown to the time of *Jerusalem*s destruction.

Vers. 20.

There shall come a Redeemer to Zion, and to them that turn from iniquity. This is by the Apostle Rom. 11. 16. applied to the Jews to prove their conversion to come, about which he also argueth otherwise in that Chapter at large, and layeth this in fine as a ground of it, The gifts and calling of God are without repentance; Upon which I have there written. But it is to be noted, lest it should be thought that all Zion shall be saved, that it is added for further explication, To them that turn from sinne in Jacob; so that none shall have benefit of this redemption but converts, who cast away their transgressions and believe, for which also Christ came preaching Repent and believe.

Vers. 21.

My Spirit which is upon thee, and my words in thy mouth shall not depart out of thy mouth, or thy seeds or seeds seed for ever. Here after a Redeemer promised to Zion, that is, the Church or Congregation of the faithfull, vers. 20. The Lord is brought in speaking for the greater assurance of this Church, This is the Covenant that I make with thee, My Spirit and my words, &c. whereby the same in effect is promised with that which our Lord speaks of, I will send the Spirit of truth unto you, and he shall lead you into all truth. God was pleased first to make a Covenant with Abraham and his seed according to the flesh; now he fore-tels of another Covenant with Zion after the coming of the Redeemer, of which also Jer. 31. 33. and the meaning is, As a thing covenanted betwixt man and man stands firmly, so farre forth as the covenanters have truth or power in them; so this shall continue ratified for ever, that the words of the Gospel, and the Spirit being once put into the Apostles and their mouths to preach them, shall never die any more, but there shall be a seed of faithfull preachers generation after generation, going on to preach the same to the worlds end, and in them the Spirit of truth, so that they shall not erre therefrom at any time. Wherefore although the representative Church, that is, a general Council convened, may possibly erre in some things, yet the universal Church can never erre, but still there shall be some faithfull souls holding the truth constantly and not corrupted, when errors do most abound; as in the dayes of Elijah, when he thought none of the true servants of God to have been left, but himself alone, the Lord told him that there were seven thousand left in Israel, whose knees never bowed to Baal, &c. And the like is observed in the corruptest times under the Gospel by him that wrote the book called Catalogus testium veritatis, upon which I have touched in my Catechism in speaking of the Church; so that although the Church of Rome in present calling her self the Catholick Church be degenerated and gone from the truth, yet Christs promise faileth not, Upon this rock I will build my Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. See also upon this my Antidote against Popery. This seed may indeed sometime be very little as the name of remnant, whereby it is called, and A very small remnant, doth imply, but it is never quite extinct, and although it lieth hid from the world for a time, yet it lifts up the head again, and is conspicuous, as a City set upon an hill. And blessed are they that be of this seed, for such only are redeemed, and are one and the same Zion, to which the promise is made, whether Jews or Gentiles; and it is not being an Israelite or a Christian by outward profession that makes a man one, but still he may be accursed. Wherefore let none be moved by the marks of this seed reckoned up by the Papists, Universality, Visibilty and Succession, &c. But is the Spirit in the Apostles at the first, and the words in their mouths, in the mouths of your Priests and none other? then ye say something, otherwise not, but the despised Protestants having the same words in their mouths shall prove this seed and continue, when ye with your vice-god the the Pope shall go into perdition. The Hebrews, that make nothing of this but a command, as if it had been said, Let them not depart out of thy month, or thy seeds for ever, do manifestly wrest the Text, and obscure a main ground of faith, and mark of the true Church. For whatsoever might be said of words, it cannot carry any good sense to say of the Spirit, Let it not depart, for it is not in mans power to hold it.

CHAP. LX.

Arise and shine, for thy light is risen upon thee, and the glory, &c. Having spoken of the Redeemer coming to Zion, Chap. 59. now he proceeds to apply this to the comforting of the Church. For when Christ came and went about Galilee preaching and healing the diseased, Matthew noteth, That the people who sat in darknesse had a great light arisen upon them; and Simeon calleth them, A light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel. As it followeth vers. 3. The Gentiles shall come to thy light, and Kings, that is, by Christ being made Kings and Priests unto God, Revel. 1. 6. By the anointing of the Spirit getting dominion over the flesh, and offering up themselves in sacrifice to God by mortifying their members upon earth, that they may offer an acceptable sacrifice unto him. Yea and Kings indeed came to this light, and were nursing fathers to the Church, Isa. 49. 23. See the like unto this before Chap. 52. 1. But before that Chap. 32. 18. My people shall sit in the dust; and to Babylon it is said, Descend, sit in the dust, Chap. 47. 1. The meaning then is, That the Church of believers beginning amongst the Jews, of whom Christ and the Apostles were, but enlarged by the coming in of the Gentiles, should after great dejection have great exaltation. And here it is to be noted for the confuting of them that would restrain it to the Jews, that although in the Septuagint and Vulgar Jerusalem be here named, yet it is not in the Hebrew, but without naming any particular the Church left to be understood, consisting both of Jews and Gentiles; but as hath been said, of the Jews indeed first; and therefore it may be taken as spoken to the Jew, that is, such amongst them, as believed and published the faith to others. For they were at the first a poor little company, not above an hundred and twenty, Act. 1. but this Church arose, as she is here bidden, to great splendour, shining in a short time all over the world.

Darknesse shall cover the earth, &c. To magnifie the mercy of God the more towards his Church in this shining light, he amplifieth it in comparing the condition of all others in the world with hers. All else are in darknesse, that is, spiritual darknesse, only in the Church there is light and true saving knowledge, in which alone there is comfort indeed, which was sometime shewed as in a figure, when light was only in Goshen, and in all Egypt besides palpable darknesse representing hell.

Then thou shalt see and flow together, and fear. The word rendred flow, is by Calvin rendred, Thou shalt shine, for flu signifieth either. I preferre flowing, because he is speaking of the Gentiles gathering themselves to the believing Jews round about, as waters gather together till they make a great flood, and then the place to which is said to flow with water; so the Church with multitudes coming from all parts. But what meaneth he by adding Fear, and be enlarged in heart with joy? But fear, as Calvin well noteth, is put for astonishment at the first, as not perceiving what this flowing in of the Gentiles meant, because it should be sudden, but perceiving it to be to fulfill the Congregation of Christians, the heart is by and by enlarged with joy. For it is great joy to all true Israelites, to see their company increased, and Countreys and Nations coming in to Christ as subjects of his Kingdom, as a thing that tends to his his glory, and to the making of the Church the more illustrious, for the amplifying whereof and prosperous condition by the superabounding of grace all good Christians daily pray. The Vulgar for fear hath, Thou shalt wonder the abundance of the sea, the strength of the Gentiles shall be gathered to thee; Calvin, The riches; but the word signifieth strength or fortitude, as the Vulgar Latin renders it. By the abundance of the Sea, meaning abundance of people, for their excessive greatness compared to the vast Ocean; and by the strength of the Gentiles, such as were mightiest and greatest amongst them, and not the common sort only, which was fulfilled in Constantine's time.

Vers. 6.

The multitude of Camels shall cover thee, &c. That is, so many shall come with Camels and Dromedaries to tender their service and gifts to the Lord, as that they shall cover the Land, he speaks according to the manner of those times, wherein none appeared before the Lord empty, but all with their gifts, as the Magi coming out of the East to worship Christ brought and presented to him in way of homage, Gold, Myrrh and Frankincense, the most precious things of their Countrey, so here, they shall bring gold and frankincense. But his meaning is not, that according to the letter the Church should have it thus done unto her, but then Camels and Dromedaries came in such abundance, when men that are wealthy, and great multitudes of such submit themselves, and all their substance to be at the Lords disposing, liberally relieving his poor members, and giving full and sufficient maintenance to his faithfull Ministers, a taste whereof was given by some Act. 2. who communicated to the Apostles and poor believers all that they had. So that they, who understand it of abundance of riches conferred upon Church-men and other religious persons, are much mistaken, seeing the glory of the Church lieth not herein, but in mens ready submission to the Lord in all things, as hath been said, and in faith more precious then gold, and holiness and righteousness. For the places here named, they were all Eastward, and had their names from Abrahams children which he had by Keturah, for Midian was his son by her, and Ephab the son of Midian, and Seba likewise.

Vers. 7.

All the flocks of Kedar shall be gathered together unto thee, and the rammes of Nebaioth. Kedar and Nebaioth were parts of Arabia, where the Ismaelites inhabited, and they abounded with herds and flocks of cattel greatly; now the Prophet here foretels of their conversion to the faith under the similitude or metaphor of flocks, and rammes that should be gathered together to Zion, that is, the Church. Before he spake of other Eastern parts, as Midian and Ephab, &c. Under the metaphor of Camels and Dromedaries that should come in, now of the Ismaelites thus set forth, because they most abounded with flocks; wherefore in naming beasts he meaneth men, and sets forth their coming, as an acceptable sacrifice upon the Altar of the Lord. For the time of the Gospel, touching which these things are spoken, is no time to have Altar or carnal sacrifice, but on'y the living Altar Christ Jesus, by whom the faithfull of all Countreys offer the sacrifices of praise to God continually, Heb. 13. 15. Shall come up acceptably to my altar. Musculus here noteth three words, 1. Come up. 2. Acceptably. 3. Upon my Altar, intimating that then men come and offer themselves to God as they ought, whenas, 1. They are elevated to heaven in their minde, as the Sacrifice of old was lifted up. 2. When there is faith in them that praise God, which only can make a Sacrifice acceptable. 3. When in the name of Christ, who is our Altar. And I will glorifie my house of glory, that is, not the Temple built of wood and stone, but the Church his house, 1 Tim. 3. 15. for then is the glorious when abounding with faithfull and holy people.

Musculus.
Note.

Vers. 8.

Who are these that flee like a cloud. Here the Prophet goeth on by similitudes further to illustrate the argument in hand of the thick and threefold coming in of the Gentiles to the unity of the Christian faith at the preaching of the Gospel, for a cloud covers the sky farre and wide, and fleeth more swiftly then any bird; so he means that the people coming in to Christ as his Church, should be

be a wonderfull great company able to cover a large Countrey, if they were all gathered together to one place, and this their coming should be with incredible celerity, for which he saith, Who are these that flee as clouds? as wondering at it, as indeed it was wonderfull and exceeding all credit, that when the Jews had been taught so long and were not moved, that the rude Gentiles who never had teaching before, should be so docible as upon the sudden to turn in so great multitudes. Again, Doves flee together in great companies to their Dove-house-windows, and very swiftly also; & herein they differ from all other fowls that flee in companies, for they flee but from the open fields in one place, to the open fields in another, but these to the house where they are fed, and are by this food and the neatnes of the house drawn to it, and being got in are sheltered from being a prey to the Hawk. And therefore most aptly are the faithful compared to Doves, for their diligent and speedy coming to Gods house to be fed by his precious Word and Supper, and to be safe from spiritual enemies, that seek to devour them, having this house in estimation for the ordinances therein beautifying it, and making it more glorious in their eyes, then any other building, to say nothing of the Doves innocency, chastity, clean feeding, continual mourning and being without gall, as not pertinent to this place, but rather to Mat. 10. 16.

Surely the Isles shall wait for me. As the continent before-spoken of, so the Isles shall come in to wait upon the Lord; and hereby, as hath been said before, the furthest parts of the world are meant; and because they cannot come to Zion, but by ships, he addeth, The ships of Tarshish first, or In the beginning, whereby is intimated the conversion of the Islands at the first going out of the Gospel, as ancient History saith, That this our Island of Brittany was by Joseph of Arimathea coming hither, and Philip, and then their sons and daughters are said to be brought by the ships of Tarshis, or of the sea, for Tarshis signifieth the sea, or is the proper name of Tarsus a City in Cilicia, famous for shipping; and therefore hereby may be meant ships of all parts, one being named, and others understood. And sons and daughters of Zion are brought in them, when the inhabitants of the Islands occupying ships are converted, because the faithful of all countreys are sons of the Church; and the bringing of them in ships is spoken of only by way of Allegory, and likewise the bringing of their silver and gold with them, because they coming to be children of the Church, their riches must serve for the necessary use of their poor brethren, who are fellow-members of Christ with them; see vers. 6.

Vers. 9.

And the sons of the strangers shall build thy Wals, &c. He goeth on still in the Allegory begun, and because the Church is set forth under the name of Zion, the wals whereof needed building, and in the Temple there some must minister, he speaketh accordingly touching the Church under the Gospel, whose wals the sons of strangers build, when Preachers are raised up of the Gentiles to edifie Gods people in knowledge and grace, and Kings minister to her, when by their power they are alwayes ready armed to defend her, as all Christian Kings at their inauguration are sworn to do. For I was wroth with thee for a time, this is said in respect of the Babylonish Captivity, whereby the Church that then was, suffered, which was partly the same under the Gospel, viz. as it consisted of believing Jews, to whom the Gentiles being joined in the same faith, were one and the same, Gal. 3. 28.

Vers. 10.

Thy gates shall stand open continually. This is spoken for the great multitudes of comers in by believing, The Nations that will not serve thee shall perish, that is, by being obedient to the same faith, and defending it against all oppugners, because he or they that believe not are damned everlastingly.

Vers. 11, 12.

The firre and pine tree, &c. Whereof chap. 41. 19. & 55. 13. it is spoken in alluding to a material building, to which timber of all sorts is brought to adorn it, so the spiritual Temple with excellent men, sometime called precious stones, sometimes Cedars, Firres, Pine-trees, &c. I will make the place of my feet glorious; So the Temple of old was called Gods footstool, and the heaven is his throne, the earth is his footstool, but those parts specially where the Gospel is imbraced, and they are said to be the place of his feet, that we might be moved to look up higher to Heaven, where his seat is. For although his footstool be high and glorious, yet his seat is much more; the meditation whereof, and that we shall once come thither, is most comfortable.

Vers. 14.

The sons of them that afflicted thee shall come bending unto thee. See the like Revel. 3.9. here he prophesieth of the conversion of Kings children, whose fathers before were persecutors, and spake reproachfully of Christians, which was long ago fulfilled in all parts, when Emperors and Kings so greatly revered the Church of Christ, and so highly accounted of being children thereof, as Theodosius, who professed that he joyed more that he was member hereof, then the head of many Nations. For then do Kings bow at the Churches feet, when they esteem thus reverently of her, and submit to her teaching and discipline thereof.

Vers. 16.

Thou shalt suck the milk of the Gentiles, and the breasts of Kings. There is something like unto this Chap. 49. 23. of Kings being nursing fathers, and of their bending and bowing, as vers. 14. is said; for the further exposition therefore of both these passages, the Reader may have recourse thither. Only here is one thing more. Thou shalt suck the milk of the Gentiles, whereby is meant, that they should not only be sustained by Kings of the Nations, but also by the precious and most excellent things of their Nobles and other principal men of their Kingdom, as sometime Artaxerxes and his seven counsellors gave precious gifts to the Temple. And because milk was one of the things by which the Land of Canaan was commended, for in praising it, it is said to have flowed with milk and honey, the precious things conferred by the great ones of the earth upon the Church under the Gospel are set forth hereby. For that by milk things most precious in this world are meant; see vers. 17. where coming to enumerate them, he saith, For iron I will bring gold, for brass silver, &c. Which is spoken in alluding to the materials of the Temple of old, but meaning, that the Church sustained and protected, as hath been said, by Kings, should shine by the Ministry of the Word therein, being more precious then gold and silver, as Psal. 19. and Revel. 1. the Churches are set forth by the similitude of golden Candlesticks. For understand it carnally of abundance of wealth wherewith the Church should be endued, and what glory were this, but vain and transitory? whereas Peter gloried in this, that he could say, Silver and gold have I none, and Paul wanting these, yet saith, he abounded, yea, and that he and other believers being not only poor, but persecuted, and all the day long killed, were more then Conquerours.

Act. 3.

Vers. 18.

Thou shalt call thy wals salvation. That is, whereas wals serve to secure the inhabitants of a City, and gates for Judges to sit in of old, that by executing Justice and Judgement there all may be kept in peace and righteousness, and so be safe from violence and wrong; in like manner he that is the salvation of his Church should be as wals about her continually, and by means of righteousness flourishing there, and wickedness suppressed, her gates should be called praise, for the joy in Gods favour and continual praise ascribed unto him in every Church for all this, as the place where Jehoshaphat and his people sometime praised God so much was called the valley of Beracha, or blessing, long after.

2 Chron. 30.

Vers. 19.

Hitherto the happiness of the Church in respect of riches and honour from men, and safety through his everliving protectour, now followeth her happiness for the light of Gods countenance alwayes upon her, set forth by this, The Sunne shall be no more a light to thee by day, &c. For the Lord shall be an everlasting light unto thee. Not meaning indeed that no Sunne should shine any more, but because they should have greater comfort, and more light by Gods Grace and Spirit bestowed upon them in their hearts, then the world

bath by the Sunn, so great and comfortable is spiritual light in comparison of worldly; see something like it before, where it is said, The light of the Moon shall be as the Sunne, and the light of the Sunne sevenfold. For it is common with the Prophets to set forth comfort and prosperity by light, and misery and sorrow by darknes. And the Lord shall be thy glory, As the Sunne and Moon are to the world, so the Lord to his Church, a glory, no company being for this so glorious as he is. This passage seemeth to have been made use of by John the Divine, Rev. 21.

Thy people also shall be all righteous. Like unto this is the saying before, No unclean person shall enter in there; which is not spoken, as if any Congregation in this world were pure and without any wicked persons in it, for the sheep and goats shall ever be mingled together here; but this is spoken to take away the confidence of such as apply the comforts before-going to themselves, because they are of the true Church, although they live still in sinne. The meaning therefore is nothing else, but that the true Zionites shall excell for this, that they shall be all righteous; so that if any live in sinne they are none of this number, although of the Church, for all are not Israel that are of Israel, and there are some censured for going out from us, of whom it is said, That they were not of us. Ob. If it is said, What superexcellency is it above that of the faithfull in all times? I answer, it is spoken in regard of the paucity of such in the old Church of the Jews, and the great number of such true Israelites of all Countreys under the Gospel, and it shall be according to the words verified by that time Christ hath done purging of his floor, and having fanned out the chaff, burnt it in unquenchable fire, as Calvin well noteth, by Zion, whereunto this promise is made, understanding the professors of the faith of Christ of all times and ages, whilst the world standeth, and at the last day considered altogether. If then there be any in Christian Churches that layeth hold upon this comfort, who is unrighteous still, he is utterly mistaken, because all to whom it belongs are righteous. And they shall inherit the Land for ever. This is no new promise but such as was made Psal. 37. The meek shall inherit the earth, the meaning being, not that the Jews converted to the faith, should dwell again in their own Land for ever, for he is speaking now of Jews fearing God of all Nations, for such are Jews within, Rom. 2.29. and comforting all such by this, that they should as heirs of promise hold these worldly things, all the powers of hell not being able to root them out of the earth to the worlds end, and not by the right of stewardship only, as the wicked do that must give an account, and be turned out at last, because they are not able to do it. So that here is a ground of Christians continuing as long as the world lasteth; of which also see a ground chap. 59.21. and of the difference betwixt the righteous and the wicked in respect of these earthly things, the one sort have them as heirs, the other but as stewards. A branch of my planting] He also thus set forth the Christian Church, to shew that it cannot be rooted up, because a plant planted by our heavenly Father, there a contrary reason of such, and of a plant not planted by him, which our Lord saith shall be rooted out.

A little one shall become a thousand, and a small one a strong Nation. This is added to shew, That although the Christian Church at the first were very small, yet it should encrease to admiration, as hath been also before-shewed in other words.

THe Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me, &c. - upon me, which is to be understood as spoken by Christ as man, as the former words by him as God. For so we read Matth. 3.16. That the Spirit of the Lord came down upon him in his Baptism, and this was his anointing spoken of Psal. 45. and of the same see before Isa. 11.1. and that it was spoken of Christ, Luk. 4.18. where the Lord applieth it to himself, To binde up the broken-hearted, the opening of the prison-doors, &c. For this see before Chap. 42.7. & 49.9. and of the acceptable year of the Lord, Chap. 49.8. And the day of the vengeance of our God, that is, as Jerom rightly, against the unbelieving Jews, upon whom vengeance was taken soon after by the Romans. And if this was fulfilled then, as Christ saith it was, Luk. 4.18. How say some, that they are yet to be fulfilled at the conversion of the Jews, unless it be meant in more perfection? So Jerom. To comfort them that mourn, that is, for the hardness of the Jews hearts, as Paul did Rom. 9. for he upon whom was the Spirit, pronounceth comfort to all such, saying, Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted.
- Verf.2. Hieronym. Beauty for ashes. A figurative expression of the same that was spoken plainly before. For in time of mourning they put on sackcloth and ashes in those dayes, therefore he saith contrariwise in speaking to comfort; Beauty for ashes, making filthy and foul, And the garments of gladness for the spirit of bea- vineffe] that is, goodly apparel setting forth the body in most decent manner for sackcloth worn in heaviness, making it uncomely; it is a periphrasis of joy restored for sorrow to such Jews, as being touched with compunction for their own sins, and the sins of their brethren, turned to the Lord, of which sort we read that there were three thousand at one time Act. 2. and not only to Jews, but to all other of what Countrey or Nation soever that mourn likewise, for all come under the name of inhabitants of Zion.
- Verf.3. Strangers shall stand and feed your flocks. Here I omit vers. 4. being the same with chap. 58.12. And chap. 60.10. in other words saith the same with this, The sons of strangers shall build thy walls] For preaching the Gospel is sometime set forth by building, and sometime by feeding of a flock, and the Preacher is both called a Builder, 1 Cor. 3.11. and a feeder of a flock, 1 Cor. 9. neither is the meaning of the next words any other They shall be thy husbandmen and vine-dressers, for as we that be Preachers are builders, so we are husbandmen, as is implied, where the Apostle saith, We are labourers together with God, ye are Gods husbandry, and Gods building. And by saying so it is implied also, that we are vine-dressers, which is one part of husbandry, as plowing is another; see also Mat. 20. Joh 15.
- Verf.6. And ye shall be called the Priests of the Lord, the Ministers of our God. Here the Prophet seems to make a distinction, as if by those whom all should serve, as hath been said vers. 5. and chap. 60.12. the Nation of the Jews were meant, and that when they shall be converted to the faith, they with their King should reign over all Countreys. Thus indeed some of late dayes have gathered: but Jerom saith, That this is spoken to the very small remnant of them, which appeared for Christ, and preached him, when others persecuted him, viz. the twelve Apostles, for they as Priests or Princes, for the word כֹּהֲנִים signifieth either, ruled in all countreys, where the Gospel was imbraced, and were highly accounted of, as the Ministers of the living God, as she that had the spirit of divination said of Paul and his fellows. Others without this distinction referre to all the faithfull generally, alledging Revel. 1.6. where it is said, He hath made us Kings and Priests unto God, and 1 Pet. 1.9. for before the Jews themselves were not all Priests, but only some of the Tribe of Levi. But if this Exposition be admitted, why doth the Prophet make a distinction, as he doth? Verily this cannot otherwise be answered, but as by Jerom before, All lawfull Preachers are Ministers of God indeed, and both they and all the faithfull, Priests unto him, but the twelve Apostles above the rest; and a like distinction must needs be alwayes in the Church, or else she cannot be well governed, and for want of government, all will go to confusion.

In their Land they shall possess the double. For the double shame which they had, the Jews for their infidelity, and the Gentiles for their Idolatry in their Land, that is, the Land promised for inheritance to the meek, they shall have double comfort, 1. In this life by believing, 2. In the life to come by actually enjoying. Or by double shame with Luther we may understand, before God and before men, for till a man be converted he doth that which is shameful before God, and for a reward is put to confusion by being abased amongst men; and contrariwise the double in their own Land, of honour before God, exalting them by a prosperous estate, and by his grace first, and before men, both good, who honour grace in whomsoever they see it, and natural, who honour those that are lifted up to dignity. Some expound it of the Ministry, called before singularly, The Priests of the Lord, holding the double to be the double honour spoken of, 1 Tim. 5. 17. Calvin without any exact distinction, for abundance of shame and misery, and abundance of spiritual comfort even in this world, not for a time, but for ever, this world being denoted in these words, In their Land, that is, the Land where the wicked worldling thought that he only should have a portion, and that the power should ever be in his hands, and the everlasting continuance of their joy, expressed in the next, Everlasting joy shall be unto them. The Hebrew may well be rendered, For your double confusion and shame, they shall joy in their part or portion: And expounded thus, for your great shame and reproach (O ye holy Apostles) which ye have had at mens hands, to whom ye have gone preaching, they being converted shall be glad of their portion in spiritual comfort through believing coming to them hereby, and good cause, for they shall have double in their Land, that is, heavenly comfort, which is twice as much as any worldly that they could have before, and this shall never end.

For I the Lord love judgements and hate robbery in a burnt-offering. That is, out of the love which I bear to righteousness, and the hatred of rapine, that is, of any gain coming in unjustly, though it be employed for burnt-offering, I will turn the condition of the righteous, as hath been said, from shame to glory. And will direct their work in truth, Heb. Will give their work in truth; so also Vulgar Latin; here the word אֱמֶנֶת truth, signifieth also firmnesse and stability, the meaning being, I will make their work stable, that is, this work wrought upon them to their so great joy, so that it shall not sit and vanish again, but continue for ever, as unto which I binde my self by an everlasting Covenant, as in the next words.

Verf. 8.

And their seed shall be known amongst the Gentiles. By their seed meaning eminent Christians like unto the Apostles shining in grace and virtue, whom all men that esteem of the vertuous shall count the blessed of the Lord. I will greatly rejoyce in the Lord. In this and vers. 11. the Church is brought in praising and exulting in God for all the gracious Promises preceding, acknowledging that hereby she was most gloriously clothed above all other Congregations. And to shew her nothing doubting of the performance, she concludeth, That as things and seeds having life in them, spring commonly out of the earth; so she firmly beleaved, That righteousness and praise should spring forth before all Nations, that is, upon the preaching of the Gospel in all Nations many should be converted and grow famous for their eminent shining in grace, as was before promised.

CHAP. LXII.

Vers. 1.

Hieronym.
Calvin.
Musc.

For Zions sake I will not keep silence, Hebr. For Zion I will not. That is, for the exceeding great love which I bear to the Church; I will not, I cannot hold my peace, nor cease from speaking of her Saviour, saith the Prophet over and over, if any man should ask, why, having already spoken so much of him, he still went on to speak more till her just one cometh as brightness: thus the Hebrew and Vulgar, but Calvin, Till her righteousness, but it cometh all to one, for Christ is hereby meant, as Jerom saith, although others expound it as meant of actually declaring Zion to be righteous in Gods acceptance, which was when the Jews were delivered out of their long Captivity, in the time whereof no such thing appeared, but then it came forth, as it were, as is here said, and was as manifestly seen by all men, as the brightness of a burning Lamp. But Marlorat resteth not here without adding Christ, as chiefly hereby meant, as there is great reason he should be, such the joy for Zion in respect of her deliverance by Cyrus, was nothing to her justification and salvation by Christ. But how is it said, that he would not be silent, till he came, whose coming was not till many hundred years after? Ans. Isaiah continued speaking by his writings, which by Gods providence were preserved till Christs coming, and since to this day.

Vers. 2.

Calvin.

And the Gentiles shall see thy righteous one. That is, Christ, who came of the Jews; which they did, when he being preached unto them, was believed in. And thou shalt be called by a new name. Most of the ancients agree, that this new name, is the Church of Christ. Whereas before the faithfull were called Israel, Zion or Jerusalem; some unaptly say, The new name here meant is Jesus, as if it had been spoken to Christ, when as it is spoken to Zion. But some more rightly will have by this new name meant that which is set down by way of explication of this, Hephzibah, My delight in her, vers. 4. Calvin seems to think nothing else to be meant, but that the Church shall be spoken of as renewed, which was before so greatly decayed; so that as a City new built out of the ruines, hath a new name by the builder given it, in like manner the Church being re-built by the Lord, hath by his mouth a new name; and forso much as he hath expressed what it is, why should we doubt what it is? and not rest in the name before expressed, a Church dearly beloved of God, as a woman new married of her husband: for that the Church is so now, see Ephes. 5. 30. And the name Ecclesia or Church, is not found given to the faithfull, till the N.T. and this name implieth a calling out from all parts of the world, a company peculiar to God and precious for holiness, in regard whereof this company is otherwise set forth by the name of Saints. Wherefore think upon this (all Christians) which is also another most excellent new name, whereby ye are called, and be ashamed to bear a new name, and yet live after the old man in all manner of vile lusts, for whilst ye do thus, ye have a name from Christ, but none other benefit by him, as being still out of him, such he that is in Christ is a new creature.

Note.

Vers. 4.

Thou shalt be called Hephzibah, and thy Land Beulah. Vulg. My will or pleasure in her, according to the signification of the word, for Chephsi is my pleasure or complacency, and bah in her, as it was said of Christ the head of the Church, so through him of her, In whom I am well pleased, or if it be rendred by his will, the meaning is, My will is done in her, because she prayeth daily for this, Thy will be done in earth, as in heaven; and every true member of the Church desires from his heart to be continually doing of it, and doth it so, that he is not in the course of his life like the wicked, there being betwixt him and them this manifest difference, He that is born of God sinneth not, but he that committeth sinne is of the devil, 1 Joh. 3. 9, 10. And for Beulah, the Vulgar hath inhabited, but Pagnin and Vatablus, married; the word נָכַח of which it cometh, signifieth to possesse or to hold, as a Lord or Master Land; and therefore it may best be rendred (possession) for as the Land of Canaan was of old called the Lords inheritance or possession, so now every Countrey where the faithfull inhabit, is his possession also, whereas before it was desolate in respect of good inhabitants, but now is inhabited by many such, as is said in the next words.

The young man shall dwell with the Virgin, &c. That is, there shall be marrying amongst the faithfull, whereof shall come many children filling the Land, the Parents being Christian shall have children Christians also, and by reason hereof even when hot persecution arose Christian Lands were not desolate, but had a daily encrease of young ones coming on in the room of those that were by persecution cut off, to prove which to be so, it grew into a Proverb, Sanguis Martyrum semina Ecclesie, as seeds sown many come up for one, so proved the martyred Saints in the Church. Our New Translation, As a young man marryeth a Virgin, thy sons shall marry thee; but the Vulgar before-going better, for a young man and maid shall inhabit, children shall inhabit. For so it is in the Hebrew, being a reason, as <sup>2</sup> noteth, of the name Benlah before-going, whereas if it be taken for marrying, the sense is marred, sith it is improper to say of sons, that they shall marry their mother.

I have set Watchmen upon thy Walls (O Jerusalem) which shall never be silent. Here is shewed, how it should come to passe that there should never be a desolation in the Land, where the Church is, but children still coming on to inhabit it, there shall alwayes be watchmen, otherwise called Pastours or Prophets, who by daily inculcating the Doctrine of the Gospel, should as by immortal seed, hereby beget children from time to time unto Christ. But in saying that they should not be silent night nor day, he intimateth the duty of watchmen, to be not rarely now and then to preach, but very often, and not only in the day, but when need requires, as in the time of persecution, in the night also, as Paul preached till mid-night, viz. in times of persecution, wherunto he alluding saith, Preach in season and out of season. To that make mention of the Lord, keep not silence. Having prophesied of the zealous and painfull Preachers, which should be under the Gospel, now he exhorts them and all others, Prophets of his time and after, to pray also without ceasing unto God, that Jerusalem might be made a praise in the earth, which is by the coming of Christ; and therefore the Prophets before are exhorted to pray for his coming in the flesh, and the Prophets since for the propagation of the Gospel into all parts, and for his second coming in glory, as John doth Revel. 22. For then is Jerusalem a praise in all the earth, when Christ, who came of the Jews, shineth by miracles, and glory and praise is ascribed to him in all Lands, and finally he shall appear to the view of all men in glory, attended by the holy Angels. These things shall be, yet it is the Prophets duty to pray for them, and the duty of the whole Church, otherwise we cannot shew our faith and earnest desire after them, because faith and zeal cannot but utter themselves in prayer, as it is said of Saul, so soon as he believed, Behold he prayeth, Act. 9.

I will no more give thy corn to be meat for thy enemies. This the Lord swears by his right hand, and the arm of his strength, that is, his fidelity, a token whereof is giving one the right hand, and his almighty power, Hebr. For I will not give it, is, If I shall give; being a form of an oath thus to be supplied, If I shall give thy wheat, &c. let me not be counted faithfull or omnipotent. He alludeth, saith Jerom. to what had been formerly done in the dayes of their oppression by the Midianites Judg. 6. and should be done by the Babylonians, for of these last it was said, Chap. 1.9. Strangers devour your labours, but he means the Churches meat, which is the meat and life of the soul, and by their enemies, devils, who are said to have devoured it, or of whom it is said, that it was meat to them, because in time of blindness and superstition they offered to Idols, which were devils, whereby their bread became meat to these their enemies, and because they counted it meat unto them thus blindly to lead them them in the truth. Calvin and Musculus understanding all literally, expound it of an established peaceable estate of the Jews after their return out of Babylon, when their enemies should no more eat what they had laboured for, as was threatned Deut. 28.33. But forsomuch as this was not verified according to the letter, for they were under enemies sometimes again after that, Egyptians, Syrians, and Romans, and he is speaking not of an Entopia of Jews, but of the Church of Christ, whose prosperity is not so much worldly, or in the enjoyment of worldly things, but spiritual and heavenly, I rather preferre the allegorical sense before-going.

Vers.9.

And then the place where it is said vers. 9. They that laboured for it shall eat it, In the courts of the Lords house, sets forth the Church, wherein the Communion celebrated by bread and wine is eaten and drunk, and heaven afterwards, where the faithfull shall sit down feasting with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob for ever, not with material bread and wine, but spiritual joyes and pleasures at Gods right hand. In saying, In the courts of the Lords house, he doth but allude to the old manner of feasting when they brought peace-offerings in way of thanksgiving, meaning the like to be done by Christians in their Churches or Oratories, in eating and drinking the Lords Supper, and then as it is here said, They shall praise the Lord; so Christians do, calling this solemnity from hence Eucharistica. And this corn and wine is not given to our enemies to be meat, when all the powers of hell cannot hinder, but that this feast is kept by the faithfull from time to time, till Christs coming again, as he hath commanded. But when either through persecution or trouble arising in the Church, it ceaseth at any time, or upon any other deceivable ground, as at this day, in many Churches of England, it is meat to our enemy the devil, who rejoyceth over them that are thus drawn to neglect it. And because the Word preached is bread, Amos 8.11. and wine, Isa. 55.1,2. the same is to be held touching it, if at any time it be not preached in any Church at due times, it is meat there to the devil; but God that hath sworn it, will provide that it shall never be so in the Church universal to the worlds end; for which see also before Isa. 59.21. The Word preaching, and Supper of the Lord, shall never fail in his Church, neither shall Satan be able to hinder any of Christs faithfull people from eating and drinking that which they have laboured for, in heaven, as is promised, Heb. 6.7. God is not unfaithfull so forget your labour in the Lord. To be noted against them that teach falling away from grace into damnation; and the Papists applying that of Daniel of the ceasing of the continual Sacrifice three years and an half, to the Lords Supper to be so long intermitted, when Antichrist shall reign, which is contrary to that which the Lord here swears, for it is without limitation of time that he will make this feeding of his Church good, and not for a long time, or many generations onely.

CHAP. LXIII.

V Who is this that cometh from Edom with died garments from Bozra? &c. Some, saith Jerom, expound all that hath gone before from Chap. 60.1. hitherto, and these words also, of the time when Christ shall come to judgement. But because chap. 61.1. Christs first coming in the flesh is plainly spoken of, he understands all of that time, and this in particular of his Ascension into heaven, about which the Angels are here brought in wondering, and saying, Who is this that cometh, &c? for the incarnation of the Sonne of God, his death, and after that his Resurrection and Ascension into heaven was to them a great mystery at the first, which caused them to break out into this admiration. Lyra excepts against this, although he saith, that Dionysius de Hierarchia Angel. is for the same also, 1. Because Christ ascending after his death came not from Edom, but Jerusalem, and Mount Olivet. 2. Because the Angels at that time had not his Incarnation, or Death, Resurrection or Ascension hidden from them, for they had before published his Birth, ministred to him in his Death, declared his Resurrection to women, and his Ascension to his Disciples. 3. Because the words following shew, That the blood wherewith his garments are said to be sprinkled, was their blood whom he had trodden in the wine-press of his wrath, v. 3. wherefore he rather expounds it of Christs destroying Antichrist about the end of the world, and his adherents, which because it was done beyond all expectation of men, Antichrist being then in his greatest strength, which Bozra, a Munition denoteth, is here spoken of by way of admiring. But R. Salomon he saith, will have it meant of the Messiah yet to come, who shall destroy the Jews enemies, and set them up above all Nations. And Lyra saith, That after Antichrist destroyed the Jews shall admire it, and be converted unto Christ. Calvin and Musculus, and others of our Expositors understand these words, as spoken of God to the comfort of the faithful in Israel, and against their deadly enemies the Edomites, against whom see the like spoken of before, Chap. 34.6. Therefore the Lord is here set forth as coming from the slaughter of the Edomites, and Bozra the chief City of Edom with his garments died red, and sprinkled with the blood of the slain, which yet, because it betokened victory, he saith, were comely, although otherwise blood is a defiling of garments: but this last can have no place here, because things concerning Christ only are spoken of Chap. 61, &c. to the end of the Prophecie; and to what end should any thing touching Edomites, or other enemies of the Jewish Nation come in here? And that of Lyra expounding it of Antichrist destroyed, as if he were yet to come, whenas he hath been already long acting his part, cannot for this reason stand, neither doth it agree, because when Antichrist shall be confounded, it shall not be done so, as that Christ may be said to come up from his slaughter, for He shall be abolished by the brightness of his coming. It remaineth therefore to be considered, which is brought by Jerom, and generally followed by all the Fathers; viz. that this is spoken of Christ rising again and ascending after his bloody death and passion in a most glorious manner into heaven. And this will appear to be true, if we look back to Chap. 62. 11. Behold thy Redeemer cometh, and his reward with him. For to this nothing can more aptly answer then these words, wherein the Redeemer or Saviour is described by his garments made red with blood, plainly intimating one coming from a bloody passion, wherein yet he suffered not so much, but he made his enemies and the enemies of our salvation to suffer much more by destroying them. For so it is said, Heb. 2. 15. By death he destroyed him that had the power of death, that is, the devil: And Col. 2. 14. He made a shew of principalities and powers, and triumphed over them upon the Crosse. For the exceptions of Lyra, they are easily taken away. 1. In saying, From Edom and Bozra, the Prophet respects not so much the places properly so called, as the signification of these words, he is said to come from Edom, signifying red, because his flesh, the garment as it were of his Deity was red with blood running down from his hands, side and feet; and from Bozrah signifying a vintage for the same reason, he being now as one coming from treading the Wine-press all besprinkled with the blood of grapes. 2. In saying, Their blood, as denoting not his own, but the blood of others, he calls it their blood, because it was so mightily turned to the slaying of devils, and powers of darkness, although to speak properly they have no blood, yet forasmuch as shedding blood is commonly put for killing, it may well by a Metaphor be thus spoken of these enemies. And so when he was, as it were, in the wine-press, he at the same instant trod the wine-press, and the blood came out and died and besprinkled his garments, this being yet no disgrace, but an honour to him in the eyes of the holy Angels, and of all his people the Zionites, who as well as Angels may be understood to be brought in thus speaking and asking in way of admiration, Who is this? having his garments died with blood, and yet in appearance most glorious, not going like another man, but as one of greatest might and power.

come

Hieronym.

I will tread down the people in mine anger, and make them drunken. Not much unlike to Chap. 59.18. which Jerom also applieth to devils, although he denieth not but that it may be taken, as spoken of the Jews his persecutors, for they were the devils instruments, as it is said, Satan put it into the heart of Judas to betray him to them, and when they were about to crucify him; now, saith he, is the power of darkness. And they are said to be drunken, because being in great numbers destroyed by the Romans, they lay in pools of blood, as it were, over head and ears, and so drunken, as it were, with the abundance thereof.

Vers. 7.

Junius.

I will mention the loving kindneses of the Lord towards us. Having opened the great mystery of our salvation by Christs destroying our spiritual enemies in the words before-going. Now the Prophet in the name of the Church prayeth thoroughout the residue of this, and all the 64 Chap. and Chap. 65. brings in Christ answering, as Junius well analyseth all. And of this prayer he maketh four parts, 1. A confession of mercies formerly shewed to his Church, the remembrance whereof tends to the confirming of her faith for time to come to the end of this Chapter. 2. A Petition, Chap. 64.1, &c. to v.10. 3. A confession of unworthiness on her part, and great goodness on Gods part, vers. 10,11,12. 4. A motive to move the Lord to compassion from vers.12. to the end of that Chapter.

Part 1.

Vers. 8.

Lysa.

Calvin.

For the first, here is a general commemoration of Gods benefits towards the Jewish Church of old, and vers.8. of the ground thereof, He said, they are my people, children that will not lie, &c. For hence it was that the Lord shewed them so great loving kindness, because they were his people chosen in Abraham, Isaac and Jacob their fathers. For these words Hebr. That will not lie, Jerom hath, Not denying, which Lysa expounds of their not denying God in Egypt. Calvin, because they are my people so freely chosen above all other Nations, they will not deceive my expectation by doing and denying otherwise then becometh my people, and in this expectation I have been a mighty Saviour unto them. But they have rebelled, as is said vers.10. Now the Lord is not to be understood in speaking thus confidently, that they would not prove false, as if ever he thought so indeed, for he cannot be deceived in any, and long before he spake of their wickedness, whereby they would break out contrary to their duty to which they were obliged by his admirable mercies, Deut. 32.15. but he speaks after the manner of men touching those to whom their favour hath been extraordinarily, surely they will not henceforth turn false unto unto me, because they are so strongly tied to me by my great benefits. And to shew yet more how they were obliged to him, he addeth, vers.9. In all their afflictions he was afflicted] By reason of his bowels of compassion towards them, not that they could be afflicted without his permission, for he long before decreed, That they should be servants in a strange Land, and be hardly entreated four hundred years, in the last two hundred of which years this was specially verified in Egypt, as I have shewed upon Gen. 15. but even when he had decreed, that thus it should be, and they were in that misery under Pharaoh, he through his tenderness over them beheld it not without a fatherly compassion, and finally sent his Angel to slay all the first-born of Egypt, that they might be delivered; and when they were come out, the Angel of the Lord went betwixt them in a cloudy Pillar by day, and a fiery by night to save them from the Egyptians pursuing hard after them. By his clemency he carried them; see the same Metaphor Dent. 32. 11. and Isa. 40. 11. this is added to magnifie his compassion the more towards them, that the hainousness of their ingratitude to so good a God might the more appear, and they be made ashamed of it to repent, at the least some of them.

But they were rebels and provoked his holy Spirit, therefore he turned enemy to them, and fought against them. Whereby is meant, That he brought enemies against them, the Assyrians and Babylonians, besides the Syrians and Philistines, &c. formerly, who oppressed and destroyed them, and because they did it not without God, he is said in them to have fought against them, so that it was impossible but that they must needs be destroyed. For as they whom God protects, may say, If God be on our side, who can be against us? So contrariwise, if God be against us, what strength is there in any forces to resist? Of their provoking his Spirit, see Psal. 95.

Then be remembered the dayes of old, Moses and his people. Calvin, Wherein Moses was with his people; but Hebr. it is only Moses, his People] Some refer this to God, but Calvin better to Israel, and Musculus takes the Preter-tense to be here put for the Future; so that here is shewed what Israel should do in their Captivity into Assyria and Babylon, viz. lament to think upon the happiness of their Nation in times past under Moses, bringing them out of Egypt, and their present miseries, fighting after the like deliverance again, and repenting and praying for it, as it is our duties in our miseries always to doe.

As a Beast descendeth into a valley. He useth two similitudes to set forth the safe going of the children of Israel down into the bottom of the red Sea without any harm, 1. From an horse lead thorow a wilderness, vers. 13. 2. Of a beast going down from a mountain into a valley to feed; for their going down into the sea was none other in respect of any danger wherein they were, till they came out again in safety to the opposite shore. And after this the Spirit or almighty power of God gave them rest in Canaan.

And hitherto the first part of the prayer, and here Junius ends this Chapter, putting the five verses following to the 64, in which and nine verses more is the second part, viz. the Petition.

Behold from heaven, See from thy Sanctuary, &c. Here the Church being in affliction prayeth for help and deliverance to the Lord only, and not to Saints departed; Nay this is expressly disclaimed, vers. 16. Although Abraham knoweth us not, and Israel acknowledgeth us not, yet thou art our father. The faithfull here shew their great confidence in God, to whom they pray that he will not deny to be still as a father unto them for their manifold sins, from which they now desired to turn, because that he never breaks with them with whom he hath made a Covenant, although he afflicts them sore, and in this confidence they pray, as vers. 15. For the next words, Although Abraham knoweth us not, &c. the meaning is, If they should for our sins, wherein we have done so unlike unto them, deny us to be their children, yet thou wilt not. A most apt expression to shew the constancy of Gods love towards his, it is greater then then that of most loving and godly parents, who are not bound by nature only, but by Religion also to love their own children, and though they for their sins correct them, upon their turning and craving pardon, to love them still. For they haply may be hardened, and by many and often provocations be made unnatural, yet God will not cease to be as a Father to his. Thus Chap. 49.15. the Lord sets forth the constancy of his likewise. Thus Calvin and Musculus very well, and P. Martyr also. Moreover this may be taken, as implying, that they did not trust to this, that they came of Abraham and Jacob, or Israel's Ancestours so gracious with the Lord, as the Jews still in their sins did, saying, We have Abraham to our father, Luk. 3. Joh. 8. And then it is, as if they had said, Thou art our own father, in whom we trust, neither do we hold that it will avail us in the day of wrath, if Abraham and Israel should acknowledge us to be their children, if thou beest angry with us for our sins, and then the word 'O may be rendred for, as it also signifieth. Lastly, saith Calvin, it cannot hence be proved, That the Saints departed have no care or regard to those upon earth; for he saith nor, They acknowledge us not, in this sense, but they will not own us being wicked, so as that we shall fare any whit the better for our coming of them. Yet it may well be hence gathered, That all our trust should be in God only, and not in the most excellent of the Saints, seeking by their intercession to be commended unto him, as the Papists do. For it is commanded, Call upon me in the time of trouble, and for Advocates with God we have none, but an Advocate, who is the propitiation for our sins; and Jerom saith, It is enough for us that God is our Father, for then certainly he will not leave us in misery, if we call upon him. And may it not be gathered, also, That the Saints departed know not things done upon earth, nor who, or when men pray unto them? Yes doubtlesse, for if Abraham knoweth not, none in his bosom know, and if they did, unlesse one of them were omniscient, he cannot know who call upon him in ten thousand places at once in all the Countreys overspread by Papists. The sense then is not so to be restrained to that before-going, but this may be taken in also, especially if we read, For Abraham knows us not, sith this also is a truth. Whereas Abraham and Israel are here named, but Isaac not, it is not because Isaac is not as honourable, but the first and last are named, as to whom God more often appeared, and the middlemost left out to be understood; so Jerom.

Why hast thou made us to erre from thy wayes, and hardened our hearts from thy fear? It may seem strange, that the Church should challenge her most holy Father thus, when as he tempts no man to evil, and it is his proper work to give an heart of flesh, that is, tender and soft. But hardening is here and elsewhere ascribed unto him, because by his mercies and forbearing to punish severely, men are hardened, as is intimated, where he saith, I will not visit upon your daughters their fornications; and contrariwise in Hosca, when he would shew mercy, I have hedged your way with thorns; that is, stopt you by sharp afflictions from going in your sinfull wayes. But touching Gods being said to harden men, see more upon Rom. 9. Some think this to be spoken not by the faithfull, but by the wicked laying the fault of their erring upon God, and some acknowledging it to be the voice of the faithfull, take it for a pleading with the Lord to put an end to their grievous afflictions, least being kept under over-long, they should grow desperate, and so cast away the fear and love of God, as either not caring what becomes of them, or not able to help them, and this last mentioned, but not approved by Musculus, seems to me yet the best. For both the like prayers are made, or things said, Psal. 73. 3. 10. 13. 14. Psal. 125. 3. to shew the danger of this temptation to make men fall from God; and it is not so agreeable to reason, that by their being made to erre should be meant for want of severe judgements, when their miseries were so great, and of so long continuance. But it may be understood as the same Musculus hath it, Why hast thou made us to erre by withdrawing thy Spirit, which should guide us aright? because this being done, who can but erre and be be hardened in his evil waies? Yet the word rendred hardened, as Varabius noteth, doth more properly signifie to make to go back. Turn for thy servants, the tribes of thine inheritance, New Translat. For thy servants sake the tribes, Calvin, To the tribes; The sense is in pity to them, whom thou hast bound thy self to by Covenant, and who are thine own peculiar people, turn and shew them favour in delivering them from their heathen enemies.

The people of thy holiness have possessed it but a little while. This is spoken, although a thousand four hundred years passed since their coming into the possession of that Land, because even so long a time is but little in respect of the time promised for ever, Gen. 17. and chap. 48.

I have been of old, thou hast not been Lord over them. The Church here pleads from the disparity betwixt them that now had the Land in possession and Israel, the Lord never chose them to be their King and Lord peculiarly more then of other Nations, as he had done Israel, therefore some reason to plead this, that their dispossessing, and his people possessing of the Land might be hastened. Then he concludes (Oh that thou wouldst break the heavens and come down) an expression of a most earnest desire of Gods miraculously shewing himself upon earth to be on his Churches side, as of old he did by judging Aegypt, dividing the red Sea, and appearing in a Cloud and Pillar of fire, &c. For to speak properly, God moves not from place to place, for he filleth all places at once; but then he is said to descend, when by his power he doth wonderfully for his Church, being thought by carnal men when he doth not, but suffers his people in misery to be cooped up in heaven.

Vers. 18.

CHAP. LXIV.

As the melting fire boileth. Here Calvin begins this Chapter, and saith, that by the Hebrew it is so begun, the words before-going Chap. 63. 19. being all one verse, and not distinguishing, as verses use to be. But Jerom and Septuagint and New Translat. begin it at the words before-going, Oh that thou wouldst break the heavens! respecting rather the sense then the Hebrew distinction, and so indeed these and those words before-going so hang together that they cannot well be parted. To take them therefore together, though dis-joyned, Jerom understands this longing of the Church after the Lords descending from heaven, of the Son of God his coming down by taking flesh of the Virgin Mary for our redemption, as wherein her greatest comfort lieth. For when this was done and proved by many miracles, the hearts of many Jews, being hard and high before as Mountains through pride and disdain of him for his poverty, melted, when after the coming down of the holy Ghost they were pricked in their hearts, Act. 2. 37. And herein it is alluded to the Lords coming down upon Mount Sinai. But Jerom applieth this of the Mountains melting to the enemies of Christ and his people, alledging Psal. 97. 5. which may indeed be understood of both together, sith one was not done without the other, all adverse powers to mans salvation were confounded and amongst men such as were appointed to life were confounded, and had their hearts prickt or melted with sorrow, to their conversion, who before were stiff enemies. It followeth here, As the burning fire things melted, the fire boyling waters; Thus Hebrew, Jerom, As by burning fire they would melt; the waters burn with fire. A similitude to shew, how even great, and hard, and high Mountains would melt away at Gods presence descending, they being no more to him a consuming fire, then wax or water congealed into ice, or any other thing that will easily melt, to common fire. So that as the Lord coming down upon Sinai, it trembled as ready to fall off the foundation before him, and to be dissolved to nothing; in like manner the Sonne of God coming, hills fell, and were made low, when proud hearts were humbled at his Gospel to make a plain way for him to goe on herewith with speed throughout the world.

When thou didst terrible things that we looked not for, the mountains melted before thee. Here is a commemoration of things wonderfully done by God for his people in former times, to make way for them to come into the promised Land, that they might believe the deliverance now promised. For if this be beyond all expectation of man, and hope that was likewise, yet done by his almighty Power who promised it, and therefore this was not to be despaired of, but certainly to be expected. The mountains melted, or flowed down, that is, whatsoever stood in the way to hinder that which God would have done, he easily removed and made to vanish, were it as Mountains.

Vers.4.

From the beginning they have not heard or seen, &c. Here the Prophet rendereth another reason, why the Church should by faith expect the fulfilling of his most gracious Promises in Christ to come, though exceeding mans capacity, viz. none ever heard of such a God amongst all the Nations, that did so for any people, as God for his; wherefore there is no reasoning from hence, there was never the like seen or heard of, that hath been before promised: it is true, but the promiser is the almighty God of heaven and earth, and not like Idol-gods or devils, who are never able to do such things. For the citing of this and applying it otherwise by the Apostle, 1 Cor. 2.9. See there what I have already written upon it.

Vers.5.

Thou mettest him that rejoiced and did righteously in thy wayes, they remembered thee, thou art angry and we have sinned, in them is eternity, and we shall be saved. Here the Church in affliction compareth her self with her in prosperity in the dayes of godly Judges and Kings, or of Joshuah, when the people served the Lord, and had joy of their enemies expelling before them; for the Lord is said to meet the righteous when with his blessings extraordinary making them glad and joyfull, then they remembered the Lord in his wayes, that is, walking in them, for so a foundation is laid of all happiness. But the Church in affliction complaineth, For our sins thou art angry with us, and we are made heavy by judgements instead of joying in thy favours, yet herein is our comfort, that in thy wayes is eternity, thy wayes, I mean, of grace towards the people whom thou hast chosen; and therefore although we be kept under sore judgements for a time, we shall at length be saved and delivered out of them all, and from all our sins. For by the wayes of the Lord, that the way of his grace is meant towards his chosen people, see Rom. 11.33. compared with vers. 29. and other verses before-going, as well as the wayes of his Commandments appointed for us to walk in, that we may be in expectation of mercy, as was said before. For the Apostle having spoken of Gods constant love towards Israel to graff them into the true Olive again, yeeldeth this general reason, The gifts and calling of God are without repentance; and in admiring this after such a judgement laid upon them, he saith, How unsearchable are his wayes, &c. for eternity, New Translat. hath continuance; Calvin, saeculum, Heb. עולם which I render Eternity, because עולם is for ever; and in other things there is continuance, but the wayes of God are everlasting. For the first words Vatablus saith, some expound them of Moses in a contrary sense, as if it were meant, thou mettest with him in the way to Canaan, and didst cut him off, and Aaron likewise; but this is farre from the scope of the Prophet. And for these words [In them continuance] whereas Calvin besides the exposition brought, hath another, referring continuance in them, to continuance in sin, but yet, saith he, we are saved, thus magnifying Gods mercy the more, it cannot agree with the words before-going, which are, Thou art angry and we have sinned, not [We are full of sins] which if it had been, there were some reason to refer in them to sins, but now none, but rather, as hath been said, to take them for a ground, and setting forth of the cause of our being saved, as hath been said, for of such as continue in sinne it abhors from all true Divinity to say, they are saved; yet this is favoured in the Vulgar Latine,

We are all as unclean, and our righteousness as a filthy garment, Or as a cloth coming from a woman in her disease, here the Church returns again to bewail her sins, which were not only in other actions touching the world, but even in all our righteousnesses, that is, righteous acts of justice, charity or piety, for corruption and weakness by reason of the flesh, goeth from us, and is mixed with them all, for which, as Jerom saith, the righteousness of the Law being compared with that of the Gospel is unrighteousness, alledging also Phil. 3. 8. where Paul saith the same touching this righteousness of walking according to the Law in himself, calling it dross and dung. And we fade as a leaf, falling off, or being blown away by the winde, so we by thy judgments, if thou shouldst proceed against us according to our sins.

CHAP. LXV.

I Am sought of them that asked not for me, I am found of them that sought me not.

Here is the Lords answer according to the division before-going, and that this is spoken of the Gentiles appeareth plainly Rom. 9. 24, 25. & chap. 10. 20. that the words of vers. 2. are spoken of the Jews, As a stiff-necked and gainsaying people. And Jerom noteth it to answer fitly to that part of the prayer before-going, where it is said, Behold we beseech thee, we are all thy people, &c. vers. 9, 10, 11. To this the Lord answereth here, I am ready enough to hearken to my people calling upon me in their miseries, as appeareth by this, that I am found even of those that sought me not, but upon better information seek me, although none of my people; therefore if my people Israel seek to me aright, I am not certainly inexorable, but according to my natural inclination to mercy towards the greatest sinners, should be ready to hear, and to help them. But herein lieth their fault, That the Gentiles obtaining mercy they obtain none, because they live still impenitently in their sins; and this the Apostle calls their seeking of justification by the works of the Law, and not by faith, for exclude faith and exclude repentance, such that no man will be moved to repent of his sins, that believeth not that he shall thus obtain remission of them by our Lord Jesus Christ.

A people that sacrificeth in gardens, and burneth incense upon altars of brick. Of their Gardens, see before Isa. 1. 29. here the Lord sheweth what the sins were that they lived in, they sacrificed in forbidden places, for all sacrificing was commanded to be in one set place, Deut. 12. 7. and a golden altar was appointed to burn incense upon, but they did it upon one of brick, thus debasing and vilifying this service; so Cyril and others.

Which lodge in mountains and remain amongst the Sepulchres. Hereby a gross heathenish superstition is taxed in them, viz. That they sometime lay all night in a Sepulchre, sometime in an Idols Temple built upon a Mountain, for that Idols were in such places worshipped, appears, because worshippings in high places are often taxed, and godly Kings are said to have broken down high places. And it is meant, that they would go and lodge in such places, believing that so they should dream dreams divinatory, or have revelations in the night, by the help whereof they might make ostentation to the people, as if they were holy Prophets of God, and so not of the ordinary sort, but of a far more high condition. For thus Jerom saith, That the Heathen would lie all night in the Temple of Esculapius, when they were diseased, that they might be healed, and some that they might have revelations; and Pomponius Mela saith, That the Heathens would get into sepulchres, thinking that by lying there there all night they should have things to come, by dream revealed unto them. And that they might well be there, is not incredible, because sepulchres were then spacious enough, and the man possessed by the legion, abode in the sepulchres and the mountains, the devils possessing him, enforcing him thus to do, as who delight greatly in such superstition. Against consulting with the dead, that seemeth here to be taxed; see also Chap. 8. 19. Dent. 18. 11. Tertulian also mentions it as an heathenish practice, saying, That the Nasammonæ did seek proper Oracles by remaining at the sepulchres of their parents, as Heracledes writeth, and that the Celses lodgeth at the places of burning valiant men for the same end, as Nicander affirmeth. The Vulgar Latine, for lodging in the mountains, hath in delubris idolorum, which is בְּלִבְיָהוּ in rocks or desolate places, therefore Calvin hath it, In deserts which eat Swines flesh, and pottage of polluted things; that is, of meats used in peace-offerings the third day after, contrary to Levit. 7. 15. the words signifie pottage of abominable things. Some apply mystically all these things to the Pharisees in Christs time, whenas indeed the Jews were not given to Idolatry, although they were about the time when Isaiah wrote this, which was the cause of his charging them with these abominations. But they may well anagogically to be applied to the people of our times, They sacrifice in gardens, whose devotion is most to pleasure, being lovers of pleasure more then of God, and burn incense upon brick Altars, which cost little, who would have the service of God go on indeed, but with the least cost, being therefore satisfied with Mechanicks for Preachers, They keep in sepulchres, &c. that ambitiously aspire to the office of Prophets, having no competent learning; And eat swines flesh, that turn swine, by making their belly their god. And the broth of abominable things, That turning their ears from the truth, receive and relish errors, the decoctions of unstable brains.

Which say, Stand by thy self, come not near, I am holier, &c. Calvin, For I sanctifie thee, and so the Hebrew may be rendred, but the meaning is the same, because by the Prophet or Priest, who is more holy, others are sanctified; so these superstitious wretches counting themselves such as were sanctified by the spirit of Prophecie, by the evil means before-spoken of attained, did disdain all others in comparifon of themselves, as being unclean; wherefore the Vulgar Latine to expresse this, hath it, Stand farther, or Draw not near to me, for thou art unclean, these are a smoke in my nostrils, a fire burning all the day; that is, Cause mine anger to smoke and burn continually, which was when the Romans burnt their City, and shall be in hell for ever by the fire and brimstone burning there, and causing a black and dark smoke without end, for which it is set forth sometime by fire, and sometime by utter darkness, when the Saints during all that time enjoy, as it were, one everlasting day of light, as not being lighted by the Sunne, as now, but by the Lord, and the Lamb.

As the new Wine is found in the cluster, and one saith, Destroy is not, for a blessing is in it, so I will do for my servants sake, &c. Having hitherto spoken terror against the wicked Jews, of which sort the most of them were, now he comforteth the righteous, being but as a cluster of grapes upon a Vine, very few in comparifon, by promising that they shall not be destroyed in the common destruction of the multitudes; of the like to which, see before Chap. 1. 9, &c. Vulgar Latine, for new wine, hath, seed or grain in a cluster of grapes; and is by Jerom and others expounded of grapes trodden under foot, yet if but one seed remaineth whole, it is preserved and set that it may grow into a Vine, and bring forth many clusters of grapes again, which is favoured by the words following, Vers. 9. A seed shall spring up out of Jacob; and this seed must be the Apostles and others, sent out by Christ to preach the Gospel, for from them sprung up many believers, who shall not perish; nay, they were miraculously called from Jerusalem ready to be besieged, to Pella, and so were preserved. Yet the word properly signifieth new wine, but hereby may well be meant such seed, as hath been said, from which a Vine and grape may grow again, and so we may understand new wine in a little seed, and to this the words added agree, A blessing is in it, for what is this, but the blessing of multiplication and encrease? as God is said to have blessed Noah and his sons, and bid them encrease and replenish the earth. And this he saith he will doe for his servants, that they may not be utterly destroyed, viz. for Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, that their righteous seed might never fail.

And Sharon shall be a fold of flocks, &c. Hieron. The fieldings shall be folds, saying, that the proper name Sharon it used here to set forth fields, because Lydda and Joppe meant by Sharon, were such. And the valley of Achor, where Achan was burnt with all that he had, having his name therefore from trouble, as he had troubled Israel, he saith, yet shall now be a quiet place, hereby it being meant, that under the Gospel Christians wheresoever like flocks of sheep should be quiet through peace with God by Jesus Christ, even in times of greatest trouble; and because Sharon was most fruitfull of grasse to feed cattel, plenty is here also prophesied of according to Musculus of Sharon, Chap.33. *Psal.*35.1.

But ye are they that forsake the Lord, and forget the holy mountain. Now he turneth again to the multitude of the wicked, upbraiding them by their abominations of preparing a Table for that troop, and mingling a cup to that number. Jerom for troop hath fortune, but for what reason I know not, for ל signifieth a troop or company, therefore when Leah gave one sonne after many others the name Gad, she said, A company cometh, thus yeelding a reason thereof. The troop then here spoken of, and number, are all one, viz. a great company of Idols, to every one of which they offered drink-offerings, thinking that thus they should be the more blessed, when they omitted none, but did this honour to them all, counting the number of them. Symmachus for to the number, hath, not to me, because the word is ל, where the letter ל hath a privative signifying from, and ל signifieth me; but there is a word ל to number, from whence it may better be derived; and this is generally followed by others, and Jerom passes the word over without translating it, because, as I suppose, he took the same to be meant that by troop; the Septuagint for to that number, hath, to the devil. And for the better understanding of this superstition, he saith, That the Egyptians had an old custom, and specially they of Alexandria the last moneth of every year, and the last day of the moneth, to furnish a table with variety of dainties, and cups mingled with wine to all the gods, as a means of fertility the year following. Some for troop here, turn it host, as meant of the host of heaven, which I mislike not, sith Idolaters worshipping of the host of heaven, the Sunne, Moon and Stars, is oft spoken of. And whereas he saith, Forgetting my holy mountain, hereby is meant, the worship of one only true God, which they neglected, to worship Idols.

Therefore I will number you to the sword. As they had prepared a table, and set drink-offerings thereon to that number, so he threatneth that they should all be numbred to the slaughter, which was done by the Romans: Like sinne like punishment; they were carefull to practise all kindes of Idolatry, being blindly led for their greater prosperity, therefore it turned to them all to misery; wherefore ye that would not be of the number given to the sword, be not of the number of wicked Idolaters, either grossly, as these, or any other way.

Therefore my servants shall eat, and ye shall be hungry. For their spending of their meat and drink upon Idols, here is also threatned a sutable punishment, they should starve through hunger and thirst, for there was amongst the Jews a very great famine, when Jerusalem was besieged by the Romans, of which many thousands died, and the Christians that escaped before to Pella, had enough, and were glad for their timely coming away out of that danger, for the question made by some here, how this is verified generally, sith Gods servants are often in want, and the wicked abound, I think it not so proper to this place, and therefore I referre thee to Psal.37. where I have in a fit place resolved it. For the joy spoken of it is spiritual through the spirit of faith here, and eternal in heaven, of which the Lord saith, Blessed are ye that mourn, for ye shall be comforted, but woe to you that laugh, for ye shall weep, that is, feast and are merry in abomination.

Vers.15.

And ye shall leave your name as a curse to mine elect. Hereby is meant, that the name of Jew should be most odious amongst Christians, so that when a man would curse one, he shall say, God do so to thee as he did to the Jews, then the judgements upon whom there were never in this world greater, see Jer.24.9. chap.29.22. it is said likewise of two Jews in particular, Ahab and Zedekiah, and how notoriously is this fulfilled at this day? And I will slay thee and call my servants by another name; of which see before Chap.62.2. By a new name.

Vers.16.

He that blesteth shall blasse himself in the God of truth. Hebr. In the God Amen. And so Jerom reads it, and herein Christ both God and Man is notably pointed at, who was wont often to say, Amen, Amen; and Revel.3.7. He which is holy and Amen; and Revel.22.20. he concludeth, I come quickly, Amen; from hence therefore it is plain, That Christ is God; and he is thus called, because in him all Gods promises are Yea and Amen, that is, have their accomplishment. And according to this Prophecie, we say, Christ blasse you. So Adam Sasbont, &c. and in this name S<sup>c</sup> Paul blesteth those to whom he writes, saying, The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you. And Grace and peace from God the Father, and from our Lord Jesus Christ; And in this name all prayers must be made for blessings, yea and in it all things done, Col.3.17.

Vers.17.

I create new heavens, and a new earth. In the former verse having promised new blessings, whereby former curses and judgements should come to be forgotten for the joy that should be of Jesus Christs coming into the world: now he sheweth a reason hereof, viz. all things shall be new: yet he meaneth not, saith Jerom, that they shall be forgotten for want of memory, but by the succession of things so farre excelling them, as Augustine saith, By the forgetfulness of experience, not of science; but then, not the straits or troubles, wherein the Church formerly was, must be understood, but rather good things then promised and bestowed, when the Church flourished most, set forth in this verse, in these words, The former shall not be remembered; that is, the former heaven and earth, for having said, A new heaven and earth, these words are added in opposition to them, the condition of the Church of Christ shall be so excellent that the state thereof under the Law shall seem nothing to it, because the chief blessings thereof most spoken of, were but blessings which these visible heavens and earth afforded, viz. abundant fruitfulness, outward peace and prosperity, but spiritual blessings coming by Christ excell them as farre as the new world to come excelleth the present in glory. The meaning therefore, when he saith, I create a new heaven, &c. is, I will put a new face, as it were, upon all things here, by bringing in better, and abolishing the old, to the filling of the true Christian heart with such joy and comfort through faith in Christ, as that he shall seem to himself to be already in heaven. Thus it is said, 2 Cor.5.17. Old things are past, all things are now become new. Whereas the Apostle Peter speaks of this as a thing yet to come, We look for a new heaven and a new earth, which shall be when this earth shall be burnt, and the visible heavens shall passe away; it is to be understood that the new heaven and earth here spoken of is but now begun to be created, and as yet possessed but by faith, whereby yet we are said to sit with Christ in heavenly places, and shall be perfected at the consummation of this world, when all the Saints shall inhabit there for ever. Yet I mean not by perfecting, that it is now imperfect, for it hath been from the beginning, but because not so revealed, revealed, till the time of the Gospel, for the faithfull to take comfort therein, nor yet made so manifest, as it shall be at the end of the world; these visible heavens, which are as a curtain drawn before it, vanishing, that the glorious face thereof may appear, and the souls of the Saints departed having their bodies restored to them, and such Saints as shall be living upon earth being changed may enter in, and to this effect almost speak all Expositors Christian, although the Hebrews referre it to their return from the Babylonish Captivity. If any man shall demand, Whether by the new heaven and earth lookt for by the faithfull after the burning of this? 1 Pet. 3.19. be meant an heaven: and earth, which yet is not, or the heavens and earth that now are, renewed after that burning to greater glory; it hath been by me already resolved upon 1 Pet. 3. to which it most properly belongeth. Or by the words vers. 16. understand the former distinction of Jews from Gentiles shall be no more, but all the faithfull, of what Nation soever, shall be my people.

I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy. Jerom will have these words added to the former, to shew, that not only a new heaven and earth shall be created, but Jerusalem shall also be made new, a City all of joy and rejoicing, according to which we read, Revel. 21. of a new Jerusalem, which shall be at the Resurrection. For he saith, There shall be no more a childe in years, and an old man, &c. that is, there shall then be no difference of men in respect of age, the childe being raised in a body of perfect stature, and the decayed old man renewed in his age, that all may be alike. Other Expositours generally take this, as a further explication, what is meant by a new heaven and earth, viz. The Church of Christ, often set forth by the name of Jerusalem; herein then he saith shall be so great joy amongst all true believers for justification from sinne, and salvation by Christ, as if all were made of joy.

There shall be no more the voice of weeping. This is not perfectly fulfilled, till we come in heaven, and the Church militant be turned into triumphant, and therefore Rev. 7. this is applied to the souls there in their long white robes of glory; but it is partly fulfilled here by faith, whereby we have peace with God, and in tribulation, which commonly causeth sorrow, joy.

There shall be no more a childe of dayes, nor an old man that hath not fulfilled his years. Calvin expounds this according to the letter, as if nothing else but the blessing of health and long life were meant, wherewith the faithfull should be blessed through Christ, none dying in childehood, but having his life prolonged, and none waxing old, dying under an hundred years, although Psal. 90. it was said of mans age, that it was but seventy years, or eighty at the most, yet that promise, Psal. 103. Thy age shall be renewed as the Eagle, is fulfilled to Christians of living longer. And whereas few attain now adayes to those years, he saith, the fault is in themselves, because they live not so strictly according to the rule of Gods word, as they should. Others understand it spiritually, There shall not be a childe in knowledge and grace in the Church of Christ, but every one, though young, as it were of fourteen or fifteen years of age, should be as one of an hundred years old in true wisdom, but a man of an hundred years old being a childe in knowledge and grace, shall die, as is farther explained in the next words, A sinner an hundred years old shall be accursed; for what is a childe in graces, but a sinner being without all strength to do well, and being strong only to do evil? And according to this none are Citizens of this City the Church, or accepted for such before God, be they young or old, unlesse they be for grace and knowledge like men of years and strength. And therefore so much time only is to be counted for the time of a mans life, as he hath lived in the fear of God, and been in the state of grace, the life of a man before this being but a death, for which it is said, Thou hast been quickened being dead in sins, &c. Therefore Barlams answer was good, which he made to Josaphat asking him, how old he was, I am forty five: to whom it being replied, Thou seemest by thy wrinkled face to be above seventy, he answered, I am indeed, if I compute the time wherein I lived with the Flies in the world, but computing my life only by the time that I have lived unto God, I am but forty five, and truly I count all the time that I lived in vanity, rather a death then a life; and to this Exposition agreeth well the word W A young man here used, the former rendred Childe, W a sucking Childe. But to give the sense of the words briefly from vers. 17. hitherto. Although with Jerom I conceive, That the new heaven and earth is meant the Countrey to which all the faithfull shall come at the end of the world, which is begun to be possessed now by faith, yet I see not how by Jerusalem, created a rejoycing, the same should be meant, according to others; but the state of the Church under the Gospel called Jerusalem, because begun there, yet not at all times, but when she had peace and joy in the dayes of Constantine the Great, and sorrow for bloody persecutions was ended: for then truly Jerusalem was made a rejoycing, unlesse any had rather referre it to the time of the Jews conversion to come. And whereas the long life of this Cities people is now spoken of, I understand not, as others commonly do of particular persons, but of the people of God in general, brought into this joyfull plight, for it may be read of them as joyned together in one, And the people there shall not be any more a childe of dayes, or an old man not fulfilling his years; or, she shall not be from thence a childe, &c. as the words may properly be rendred, that is, not in a short time put again from their joy, by coming under the power of their persecuting enemies, the Heathens again, but shall long in this condition continue and flourish; even as one that lives in his strength to an hundred years, which is the longest period of this life. And the event answered the Prophecy, for the joy of the faithfull begun in Constantines time was exceeding great and of long continuance, none of the Emperors since Augustus reigning so long in peace as he, viz. forty years: And although the peace of the Church was by hereticks and the Apostate Julian somewhat disturbed soon after this; yet godly Emperors succeeding brought great and long joy to the Church again many generations. Yet lest any sinner in the Church should hence take comfort to himself, it is added, A sinner that liveth an hundred years shall be accursed; although one of this people outwardly. If any shall preferre that of A childe in wisdom, let him consider, how few be old in this sense, that have fulfilled their years when they depart hence, if account be made from the time of their conversion. Yet because he may be said to fulfil his years that perseveres in righteousness to the end, take this in also. But if any like best to apply it to the time of the Resurrection, let him consider how to such that can be applied which is added, A sonne of an hundred years shall die a childe, seeing after the resurrection men die no more. Lastly, for understanding it literally of Christians living all to this age, agreeth worst of all, sith the best livers amongst them have some of them been soon cut off by persecution, and it is rare for any such to attain to an hundred years.

As the dayes of a tree the dayes of my people, and mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands. For a Tree, Hebr. is, The tree; whereby, saith Sasbont, is noted that tree of life in the garden of Eden; and for these words, They shall long enjoy the work of their hands, Hebr. They shall wax old, the work of their hands; that is, having built and planted in hope to enjoy their houses and vineyards so by them built and planted, an enemy should not soon come and dispossesse them, as in times past, but they shall dwell in their houses so long, that they shall wax old before they leave them again departing into a better life. Calvin renders it not unaptly, They shall perpetuate the work of their hands; but herein the sense is more respected then the signification of the word. And for the former word, As a tree, the Septuagint hath it, As the tree of life, adding the word life, as taking it to be so meant, as before is said; and Jerom hath both it and another which I rather approve of, viz. as the Palm tree, by which comparison the righteous flourishing in their old age are set forth, Pf. 92.

Before they call I will answer. This and vers. 23. and 25. set forth other great comforts of Gods elect people under the Gospel. And he beginneth with their labouring and bringing forth of children, that is, the Apostles and other Preachers of the Gospel, whose laborious endeavours to convert souls are likened unto a womans travelling to bring forth, as where Paul saith to the Galatians, My little children, of whom I travel in birth again, till Christ be formed in you. Now this labour, saith he, shall not be in vain, for children shall be brought forth in great numbers, and not with any great trouble, God making their preaching powerfull by miracles, and the holy Ghost accompanying it. And the trouble that is shall be counted no trouble, because the children now brought forth are all a blessed seed, as in the next words, And a wise son glads his father, but a foolish is an heavinesse to his mother. There are that travel with iniquity and bring forth trouble and sorrow, but who so travels as hath been said, shall have comfort. After this here follows another comfort of answering before they call, which Jerom expounds of the Lords readines at the prayers of the Apostles to work miracles, as Act. 4. and Act. 9. Act. 13. &c. where at their praying, a sign was given of Gods hearing them, and the sick were healed, and dead raised to life. And such confidence may every faithfull person have, especially the Presbyter according to 1 Jam. 5. 16. Or rather by his answering before they call, understand his being gracious to the Gentiles, according to vers. 1. being found of them before they sought him. Lastly, The Lamb and the Lion shall dwell together, vers. 25. of the exposition, whereof see before Chap. 11. 6, 7. whereas Calvin, and Musculus, and Marlorat apply all things here to their return out of Babylon, yet not without reference to the Gospel, I cannot herein subscribe unto them, as if literally womens travelling with childe were meant, &c. for if it be so applied, neither did the event answer the Prophecie, nor these words to those, vers. 16. of Gods calling his people by another name, which do plainly shew, that this Prophecie of so much and long continued joy, is not of things to be done at that return, but under the Gospel when the name of Gods people was changed, and they were called not Israel, but Christians.

CHAP. LXVI.

IN this Chapter the Prophet returns to the like expostulations with the wicked Jews for their confidence in their Temple and Sacrifices, how wickedly soever they lived, as he had begun withall, Chap. 1.

Heaven is my throne, &c. This is spoken against them that trusted to this, that they had built and maintained not without great cost a Temple to the Lord, and supplied it with Sacrifices from time to time by a continual charge, for which he was so bound to them that he could not leave them to be made a prey by their enemies, as he threatned. But the Prophet here sheweth, That all this their cost was nothing to make God propitious to them as long as they were proud, and stout, and rebellious against him in their lives, for what is an house upon earth to heaven, or one house to the whole earth? verily nothing, but the whole earth makes but a footstool, and the heavens a seat for him; and therefore such thoughts were base and vain, to think by giving a mite to him that hath a world of treasure to oblige him to them so, that they might have leave to serve their own lusts, and to neglect his Laws.

Verf. 1.

And I look to him that is humble and of a contrite spirit. That is, saith Jerom, as to the Temple that I best accept of, and delight most to dwell in; for he that fears God is the Temple of God.

*Verf. 2.
1 Cor. 6.*

He that kills an Ox is as if he killed a man, &c. That is, saith Jerom, now under the Gospel it being a time for all Sacrifices to cease, it is as abominable to sacrifice or to offer incense as to murder or to offer to Idols. And accordingly he he expounds the next words, They have chosen their own wayes, &c. of their sacrificing after Christs coming, taking them as a reason, why their offerings were so vily spoken of. But herein Calvin more rightly, who saith, the Lord doth not here condemn sacrificing under the New Testament, as some think, but only taxeth it when it came from the wicked, as Chap. 1. wherefore by their own wayes he meaneth their sinfull wayes, which they delighted in, and were wedded to, as also appeareth by the same complaint renewed, vers. 4. I called and no man answered, but they did evil, &c. which goeth before, Chap. 65. 12.

Vers. 4.

I will chuse their illusions. Because he had said, they chose their own waies vers. 3. now by a Paronomasie he deals with them likewise, I will choose your illusions, I will deal with you in your kinde, ye have hitherto deluded the world, and your own selves, and thought by your sacrificing to keep me from seeing your sins, and so to delude me also; but I will lay you open to all men what ye are, by bringing condigne punishments and terrors upon you, so that men shall deride and mock at you for your vain confidence in outward things.

Vers. 5.

Hear the word of the Lord ye that tremble at his word. Having hitherto reproved and threatned the wicked, now he turneth to them whom he comforted, vers. 2. the tremblers at his Word: And here he beginneth to renew his Prophecie again touching Christs coming, and the encrease of his Church, and the joy that the faithfull should have in him. Your brethren which hate you for my name, and reject you, say, Let the Lord be glorified, that is, whereas some amongst the Jews hearing the terrible threatnings of Gods judgements denounced, trembled and sought apart unto the Lord for mercy; this was by the prophane multitude noted, and for this they hated them, and rejected them, as unworthy their society, saying in derision, Let the Lord be glorified, let him appear in such glory for you, as Isaiah hath prophesied of, and glorifie his justice upon us, we fear it not; to this effect Calvin, who also mentions another exposition of the word glorified, brought by some, Let him, or he shall be heavy, because the word נָחַם may be taken both wayes, as if it were meant, that he would be heavy in his judgements against these few singular persons, hereby to deterre them from that their singular piety, but he reſteth in the first, as there is good reason: See the like to this, Isa 5. 19. Jerom takes it as spoken by the unbelieving Jews to the Apostles preaching Christ so poor, as if they had said, Tell not us of a Messiah poor and contemptible, but shew us one magnificent and glorious, and then we will believe.

Calvin.

Vers. 6.

A voice of noise from the City, a voice from the Temple. Here, saith Jerom, he prophesieth of the destruction of Jerusalem and the Temple by the Romans in way of revenge from God upon the proud and hard-hearted and malicious Jews, who despised Christ because he came in so poor a manner, and cast out those that believed in him. For now the Romans breaking in after a years siege, a noise was in the City of women and children, crying out for fear, and in the Temple of the armed Jews that fled thither, and defended it as long as they could, but then some setting it on fire, great shrieking and crying followed by reason of the fire destroying them; whereunto adde, that there was a miraculous voice sometime heard before from the Temple, saying, Migremus hinc, Let us go hence. Luther also applieth the words v. 7. to the primitive Church so soon bringing forth a most numerous off-spring, and these words, as hath been already said. But Calvin to the destruction of the Temple and City by the Babylonians, whereby the Lord took revenge upon his enemies, viz. the wicked in Israel, before-mentioned, that mocked at such as trembled at his Word, Josiah like: and that so sudden bringing forth to the sudden change in the time of Cyrus, sending home so great numbers of Jews out of Captivity beyond all expectation to replenish Jerusalem again, which had lien so long waste, but by this means had many children at once, without travailling after the manner of other women. But seeing the Prophet had done long before with prophesying of those things, and now for many Chapters together hath been prophesying of Christs coming, I rather assent to Jerom, and other Ancients, understanding the Lords coming to their joy, and the confusion of those that hated them, of Christs coming with the joyfull tidings of salvation to such as feared God, and after that being despised by the proud and hypocritical, in terrour to them, causing such cries both in City and Temple, as are here spoken of. Then turning again to the despised godly souls, he saith, Before she travailed, she hath brought forth. And Vers. 8. Who ever heard the like? Shall the earth be brought forth in one day? For her bringing forth it is exprest also who is this she, Sion no sooner sorrowed then she brought forth her children; But vers. 7. She brought forth a male; as speaking of one, that is, Christ, whom a Virgin in Israel bringing forth Zion, or she is said to bring forth, for Zion and Israel are used promiscuously for the Church. Or I see not why by she the Virgin Mary in particular may not be understood, who doubtlesse brought forth her Sonne Jesus without pangs, contrary to the course of other women, because he was without sinne, and sinne causeth sorrow, and sorrows are threatned to women that conceive by mens conjunction with them, but she was with childe by the holy Ghost, and her husband Joseph knew it not, till she had brought forth this her first-born. Now soon after this Jesus calleth and sendeth out Disciples to preach, and multitudes both of Jews and Gentiles are brought forth, especially Act. 2. when in one day three thousand were added to the Church by hearing one Sermon. For then most remarkably was this Prophecie fulfilled, the earth, or a land or countrey full of people being brought forth at once: for to shew, that by the earth a countrey full of people is meant, when he had said, Shall the earth be brought forth in a day? he addeth, by way of exegesis, as Calvin well noteth, Shall a Nation be born at one time? And then varying the phrase before used, which was, Before she had pain she brought forth a male, into this, When Zion had pain she brought forth her children; he sheweth plainly, Children brought forth, besides the male before-spoken of, that is, a multitude of believers, but not without labour on their part, who did the office of a mother, though with more speed then other mothers generally in bringing forth their natural children of their bodies. If any man will understand these words otherwise with Calvin, of the Jews filling Zion upon a sudden at their return out of Babylon, let him give a reason of varying the phrase, as hath been noted, and why her bringing forth of a son is first spoken of, and then of sons of him without sorrow of them, with some labour, although with expedition they were brought forth many at once? Will he say, by the male is meant an off-spring full of courage? if nothing else, why are not sons spoken of at the first, as well as at the last? And if this could be answered, yet the other query cannot; and therefore I conclude, as I begun, the coming of Christ into the world is here first set forth, and then the sudden replenishing of the world with Christians, as a most populous Nation filling all the earth.

The next words are nothing but an amplifying and assuring the faithfull of the same thing, because it is the Lord that hath thus promised, and who shall hinder him from effecting it? Therefore as if it were already done, he exhorteth to rejoyce with the mother Jerusalem.

That ye may suck and be satisfied with the breasts of her consolation. That is, with the sweet milk of the Gospel, as it is compared 1 Pet. 2. 2. and this Allegory is used, because he had spoken before of children brought forth: for what is the next thing done by children born into the world, but to suck? And by adding, That ye may be delighted with her glory, he sheweth the Church of Christ to be exceedingly glorious, as it is said to be even above the old Church, 2 Cor. 3. and this is common to all her children; yet this glory is not to be understood in worldly respects, for so she is sometime poor and despicable, but in respect of true wisdom, that makes the face to shine, and excels gold and precious stones, that is, faith, said to be more precious then gold, and holinesse inseparably annexed hereunto; and the faith of miracles, making Paul and Barnabas to seem as gods in the likeness of men.

Vers.12.

For I will extend peace to her as a river, and the glory of the Gentiles. Of peace so great, that it should be betwixt the Lion and Lamb, see before Chap. 11. and Chap. 65.25. for the glory of the Gentiles, hereby is meant the coming in of them from all parts as a flowing stream, because such abundance should be converted, and that only of the vulgar sort, but also Kings and Nobles, as they were, the Emperour being first brought to embrace the faith: for their being born upon her sides and dandled upon her lap, see before Chap. 49.22. Chap. 60.4. he alludeth still to the great tendernesse wherewith mothers use their sucking children, and their delight in them, vers. 13, 14. the same is further set forth in other words, to shew, that the Lord was most intent to the comforting of his people, so that they should not need to doubt of it.

Vers.15.

For behold the Lord shall come in fire. As his manner hath hitherto been, after speaking comfort to the faithfull he turns again to speak terrour to his and their wicked enemies, for such are all the wicked, and therefore set forth as well by the name of haters of God, as of breakers of his Commandments, and he makes way to this vers. 14. where having spoken of his favour to his servants, he addeth, But indignation to his enemies. Touching the coming here spoken of with fire, and a whirlwinde, and a chariot with four horses, Hebr. בַּמִּרְכָּבִים in quadrigis, In chariots drawn by four horses apiece; A metaphor taken from Kings marching out with men, chariots and horses to fight against their enemies. So to increase the terrour of the wicked, he sets forth God coming against them suddenly, mightily and with fire to cast upon their houses to burn them and their inhabitants together; see the like Psal. 50. Joel. Jerom. takes it as meant of the Lords coming to Judgement at the last day with his holy Angels, and yet changing his minde by and by he expounds the fire and sword vers. 16. of the fiery operation of the Spirit purging out sinne; and the Word as a sword piercing and slaying the old man. Calvin is either for the judgements of God upon the Babylonians, or for the last Judgement. Lyra following Jerom. by his sword understands his sentence of condemnation, Go ye cursed, and this is followed by Augustine and others. But because he speaks only of many that shall be now slain, vers. 16. and vers. 18. the calling of all Nations is spoken of after this, I rather think that the destruction of Jerusalem is meant by fire, the Romans coming with men, and horses, and chariots in great multitudes and suddenly against them, and burning their City, for their fire was the fire sent by the Lord, or wherewith he came, and their chariots his, and their sword his, as enemies brought against the Jews for their abominations are commonly called. If also their destruction by the Babylonians be taken in as meant here, I see none incongruity in it.

Vers.17.

They that purifie themselves in gardens. These were the old sins of hypocrites and Idolaters amongst the Jews, of which see Chap. 65.3. only here it is added after one in the midst, by some supplied, Behinde one tree; by others, After another, as if he had said, One after another, which I think is best, They wash themselves one after another in gardens, and so they thought themselves purified from fleshly uncleannesse better then by legal washings. To eating Swines-flesh, the Mousse another unclean thing forbidden, Levir. 11. is added, but most probably the Dormouse is meant, which as Varro saith, was counted a delicate meat amongst the Romans, and provision was made for the nourishing of them in Parks. Now because these were the sins of the Jews, and not of all Nations, which shall be judged at the last day; and it is said, that they shall be consumed with fire, I cannot think that the fire of the last day is meant, but as hath been said.

Varro de re rustica, l. 3. ca. 15.

Vers.18.

It shall come that I will gather all Nations. Here again he returns to his former Prophecy of calling the Gentiles.

I will

I will set a mark upon them, that is, as Ezek. 9. whereby they may be known and preserved in time of common danger, as Exod. 12. it was done when the Egyptians were smitten, and the Hebrews saved; and Revel. 7. they that are saved of every Tribe are sealed. So here it is meant, that for the bringing of the Gentiles to Christ some Jews should be marked that should escape the common destruction of that Nation, and be dispersed to all countreys to preach the Gospel, as the Apostles were, some to Tharsis, that is, Cilicia or Africa, some to Pul, that is Assyria and Parthia, some to Lud, that is, Lybia, or Asia minor, to Tubal and Javan, that is, Italy and Greece. And what should be the event of their going into all parts, is shewed vers. 20. viz. the bringing of all their brethren for an oblation to the Lord upon horses and chariots, &c. Whereby he meaneth not according to the letter, that the Jews dispersed into all parts shall thus be brought home to Jerusalem, properly understood; but converts of all Nations dwelling farre or near, should by the power of the Word and Spirit be brought to the unity of the Church. Wherefore in alluding to the manner of men, who when they will bring others from a farre, do it by chariots, mules, &c. he speaketh of these means, the sense yet being nothing else but what such means are for transporting passengers, the Gospel preached shall be to bring to Christ a multitude of people, wheresoever they inhabit.

Verf. 19.

Verf. 20.

I will take some of them for Priests. That is, some of those that are converted of the Gentiles shall be as Priests unto me to teach others, and this seed he saith shall remain as the new heaven and earth, that is, the faithfull of the Gentiles shall never faile or be cut off, as the Jewes were.

Verf. 21.

Verf. 22.

And all flesh shall come from moneth to moneth, &c. That is, some of all Nations shall keep a daily Festival of joy through a good conscience, and not by intermissions, as the Jews of old did, but by ceasing from evil works all the dayes of their lives, as Chap. 58. 12.

Verf. 23.

And they shall goe out and see the carcases. This is spoken in alluding to those that after victory gotten, go to see the slain enemies, lying and rotting upon the ground in a loathsome manner. COMMENTARY
 UPON THE
PROPHECIE
 Of the Prophet
J E R E M I A H.

THE PREFACE.

After that Isaiah (who had long laboured to convert the wicked Jews in vain) was dead, and the State grew much worse by the Idolatry and Tyranny of Manasseh, and his son Amon succeeding him, and then Josiah an excellent King had reigned twelve years, Jeremiah being very young was made a Prophet of the Lord to reprove again the Jews, still fearfully sinning, most sharply, and to threaten them with the Babylonish Captivity, wherewith Isaiah had before threatened them, that wanting neither admonitions long before it came, nor immediately before, they remaining still incorrigible might be without excuse. If Isaiah died, as is most probable he did, in the former years of Manasseh his reign, there passed sixty four years between him and Jeremiah, in all which time the Jews seeing no such carrying away, as was threatened, hardened themselves in their sins; and although they had now a godly King, yet the book of the Law was wanting all the time of his reign hitherto, yea and four years after this, for it lay covered in the rubbish of the Temple till his eighteenth year, at what time Josiah going about to repair it, Hilkiah found it, and it was brought and read before the King. So that they were without that necessary light most probably sixty eight or sixty nine years, ever since that in Manasseh his time such as feared God and shewed any piety towards him and his Law were persecuted, and had their innocent blood shed in such abundance, that Jerusalem is said to have been filled with it. For it is not to be thought, but that the godly being rooted out, the books of the Law which spake against Idolatry, were suppressed, and none being suffered to read therein, an utter failing hereof soon followed. And when no light of the Law was, but all overspread with darkness, we cannot conceive but that the works of darkness still more abounded all over the Land to the provoking of God the more against it. Wherefore the Lord out of his graciousness thought good now again before he would destroy them, to send them another Prophet to warn them, if by any means they might be brought to repentance, and he continued prophesying a long time, even forty or one and forty years, when in the eleventh year of Zedekiah, Jerusalem was taken by Nebuchadnezzar, and the City destroyed, and after this in Egypt, whether they forced him to go with them, divers years more, till that at length they being enraged against him, slew him, by stoning him to death, the fourth year after he was carried into Egypt, and had prophesied of Nebuchadnezzar's taking and subduing Egypt, as he had done

Judea.

Judea, at what time he threatned, that the rebellious Jews, who contrary to Gods command went into Egypt for safety, should be cruelly destroyed. Yet their madnesse could not avert this judgement, but it came the sooner upon them even the year following; thus Jerom, Tertullian, Dorotheus and Epiphanius de vita Prophetarum, and he saith also, that he was but fourteen or fifteen years of age when he began to prophesie, which disagreeeth not with his own saying, Chap. 1. that he was a childe. And if he were so young indeed when he began, it was the more admirable, there being a King so young, viz. at sixteen, setting himself to advance piety, and now a Prophet so young, of such undaunted courage to inveigh against and threaten the wicked with Gods judgements. Being killed, as is before-said by the Jews, the Egyptians honoured him so for the benefits that they received by him, that they built him an honourable Sepulchre, and resorted much unto it for devotions sake, because that by his prayers Asps and Crocodiles, and other hurtfull things were chased out of their Land, and after his death those superstitious people took of the dust of his Sepulchre and used it, not without effect, to the same ends: Thus Isidor, &c.

Isidor.
Epiphani.

For the order of his writing, he keeps it not according to the times wherein, but placeth some Prophecies before that were after, and some after that were before, as one hath observed diligently and made a Chronotaxis hereupon. Yet he sets down all things in order of time, in respect of the Kings in whose dayes they were done, viz. all contained Chap. 1, 2, 3, &c. to the end of the 14, in the dayes of Josiah. From thence to the end of the 24, in the dayes of Joiakim. From thence to the end of Chap. 26. in the dayes of Jechoniah, and from thence to the end of Chap. 53. in the dayes of Zedekiah. From whence to the end of the Prophecy in the dayes following, the subduing of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar and carrying away Zedekiah into Babylon. Besides his book of Prophecies and Lamentations, Jeremiah wrote a Lamentation for Josiah, 2 Chron. 35. which continued till the time of Iosephus, as he saith, but now is not. 2. The first and second books of the Kings; so Procopius, Isidor, &c. 3. Together with Ezekiel, Psal. 65. and alone Psal. 137. yet this is not assented to by some. He is also said to have fore-told the Priests of Egypt the ruine of their gods, when a Virgin with her sonne should come into Egypt, whereunto they gave so great heed, that they kept an Image of a Virgin with a childe in her arms in a secret place of their Temple.

CHAP. I.

THe Words of Jeremiah, who was of the Priests of Anathoth, &c. This was a little Town, saith Jerom, three miles northward from Jerusalem, given to the Priests out of the lot of the Tribe of Benjamin. Of Anathoth, see 1 King. 2. 20. and how Abiathar being put from the high-Priesthood was bidden to go and dwell at his house there; and Iosh. 21. when Cities were given to the Priests, these four are said to have been assigned to them in Benjamin, Gabaon, Gaba, Anathoth and Almon. He was the son of Hilkiah, yet not of that Hilkiah of whom we read, 2 King. 22. 8. that he found the book of the Law in the eighteenth year of Josiah, the first after Jeremiah his beginning to prophesie (although Clem. Alexand. Strom. 1. and Jerom in heb. quast. 1. paral. think that he was) but of some other ordinary Priest of that name, because that Hilkiah was high-Priest, and the high-Priests dwelt alwayes at Jerusalem, as Iosephus saith, Antiq. l. 20. c. 28. this man at Anathoth, and to shew, that he was but an ordinary Priest, he saith, Of the Priests of Anathoth; thus also the Caldee Paraphrast, who saith, That he was one of the four and twenty ordered by David to serve at the Temple by course, 1 Chron. 24. So likewise Calvin, Junius and most of our modern Writers. The thirteenth year of the reign of Josiah, who reigned thirty two years, so that he prophesied in his time nineteen years, and twenty two years after, when the King of Babylon subdued Judah, in 1010 one and forty years, besides the years after this, whilst he lived in Judea and in Egypt. And it is to be noted here, because his words might easily have been contemned, that he addeth, To whom the Word of the Lord came. And there was need of this addition, especially in a time so corrupt and sinfull, as was before noted in the Preface. And it is further to be noted, that he was of the Priests, from amongst whom it was more rare for a Prophet to come forth: for Isaiah was called out of the Court, and Amos from amongst herdmen to prophesie, the Lord herein giving a check to the Priests for their great wickednesse and ignorance, in that leaving them, whose lips should preserve knowledge, he sought him Prophets amongst others.

Vers. 5.

Behold I knew thee in the belly, and sanctified thee to be a Prophet, &c. Of the like spoken touching Isaiah, see before Isa. 49. 1. 5. and of Paul, Galat. 1. 15. and of John Baptist, Luk. 1. 15. But what is meant hereby? Did he come holy and free from sinne into the world? Answe. No, but God in his prescience appointed him to be a Prophet, and set him apart to this holy Office before he was born, and to be set apart from a common to an holy use, is to be sanctified in the Scripture-phrase, and when a man is in Gods prescience set apart and separated from the community of men to be a chosen vessel to carry Gods name to the world (as it is said of Paul, Gal. 1. 15. 16.) he is said to be sanctified. Some, because it is added, I ordained thee a Prophet unto the Nations] think it to be spoken of Christ, but it will appear afterwards in this Prophecie, that Jeremy was thus ordained, for he prophesied not only to the Jews, but also to divers Nations about, although he went not amongst them, but by his writings, untill that being perforce carried into Egypt, he prophesied there. And it is by Calvin noted, that he saith not barely, the Lord said unto me, that he knew me in the belly, &c. but to purchase the more authority to that which he said, he brings the Lord in speaking, Before I formed thee, &c. because men will be moved more by hearing the Lords own words, for which cause he spake with a lively voice upon Mount Zion, and in other places both in Jeremiah and in other Prophets the Lord is brought in speaking, and who so will not by this be moved, have hearts hardened more then the Adamant to their more just condemnation for ever and ever.

Vers. 6.

I cannot speak, for I am a childe. Of the age of Jeremiah at this time, whether he were indeed a childe or a youth in years, I finde no certainty in ancient Writers, yet many take it to be spoken properly, supposing him at this time not to have been above fourteen or fifteen years old, but Calvin will have him a man of a middle age, and that in saying he was a childe, he meaneth only in understanding. But why might not the Lord call him to this Prophetical Office so young, as hath been said, as well as Samuel and Daniel? And if he meant, that he was as unfit as a childe for his understanding, he would rather have pleaded against it, as Moses did, and not have objected his youth. Lastly, Why the Lord should not send him being but a youth, as well as a man of years, I see no reason, but rather of his sending him so young, that men of years to whom he should prophesie, might be confounded to see a childe thus obedient to the Lord, and bitter against sin, to go from which they could by no threatnings be moved. And a youth, and a man in the case of being a Prophet are all one before the Lord, for so much he speaketh by them, and giveth the propheticall mouth at his pleasure; neither hath a man of years it at his own will. For his excusing of himself, saying, Ab Lord God, I cannot speak hath Ab. Ab. Ab. which some expound of the Trinity speaking to him; some of his three-fold defect, 1. Of Age, 2. Of Ability to speak, 3. Of Courage; these as Phantasies without ground are well rejected by Lyra, because there is in the Hebrew no more words but Abah an Interjection, shewing either admiration or grief, with which Jeremiah was stricken, when the Lord spake thus unto him. A great difference is here betwixt Jeremiah

Lyra.

Jeremiah

remiah and Isaiah, Chap. 6. who offered himself, yet Moses likewise shewed avernesse, when he was called. Reasons see there, and upon Exod. 3.

Then the Lord put forth his hand and touched my mouth. To Isaiah a Seraph came with a live coal, saith Jerom, because he was a man and had complained of his lips being polluted, that he might know that they were now purged, but to Jeremiah being a childe, who had not yet lived so long as to pollute his lips much by evil words, God puts forth his own hand of power, because he had complained of childish weaknesse, to shew that he had now endued him with strength enough against all wicked enemies, that when any of them should with his hand strike him on the mouth, he might remember this almighty hand, and not be daunted at it. Calvin saith, That by relating this Jeremiah further confirms his calling to his propheticall Office. For in laying, That the Lord put his hand to his mouth, he meant, that by this sign the Lord shewed, that the words which Jeremiah should speak were not his own, but the Lords, and accordingly to be revered; and herein every Teacher must be like to Jeremiah, having a care that whatsoever he teacheth be not his own, but the will and word of the Lord. And the people ought accordingly to receive it.

I have set thee this day over Nations and Kingdoms, to pull down, &c. That he might not timorously go about this office, the Lord sheweth him the Dignity and Authority thereof, that when fear should begin to arise in him at the sight of men great in this world, he might look upon them, as men under him, yea Kings themselves in reprovng and threatning them, and at himself, as set over them all by Gods almighty hand, whose footstool the whole earth and all the Kingdoms thereof are. And in this authority doth every teacher of the Word participate with Jeremiah, nor that he should hereby be puffed up with pride, but being in humility a servant to all, that he may not for fear flatter the greatest, or most beneficent unto him, or spare to reprove and threaten them sinning; but herein be without all respect of persons, as God is, in whose name and authority he cometh. Provided alwayes, that he speak nothing but Gods Word, making it evident from the holy Scriptures. For the Pope abuseth this place to prove himself above Kingdoms and Nations; but it is to be noted, That here are two things joyned together, 1. I have put my words into thy mouth, 2. I have set thee over, &c. and those whom God hath joyned together must not be separated. Let him come then with the words of God in his mouth, and we will acknowledge his superiority, but going from the Word in this his challenge we cannot but take notice of his arrogancy. And it is further to be noted, that every one who cometh with Gods words is not thus set up, but such only as are sent, or by some Paul or Barnabas ordained, which whoso is not able to prove, is a usurper and false prophet. To pull down, to destroy, &c. If nothing else had been added, as to build and to plant, who would have been moved to hear such a Prophet? By speaking of pulling down first, he intimateth, that by long continuing in sin, there were strong holds of sinne set up in them, and these must first be pulled down that a new building might be set up, wherefore he begins with pulling down, and then comes building up, and he useth many words of pulling down, destroying and rooting up, to shew the deep rooting that sinne had taken in them, for the rooting out of which a little inveighing thereagainst, and threatning will not suffice, but judgements must be threatned, and the hainousness of their sins aggravated divers wayes; sometimes by similitudes, whereof he hath thirteen, and sometimes by Prophecies, whereof he hath thirty four, as will appear to him that shall count them. But touching this rooting up and building, it is not to be understood, that Jeremiah or any other teacher is set over Nations Emperor-like to destroy in his wrath, and then in being well pleased to build again, but only to denounce this, leaving it for God to do by Nebuchadnezzar his servant, whom he would employ in this work of pulling down, and to Cyrus and his successors the Kings of Persia, to build up, as all Ancients agree. And this to be the sense is further shewed, Chap. 12. 14, 15, 16, & 24. 6. & 43. 18. But it is generally agreed, that pulling down and rooting and building here, is to be understood spiritually of pulling down sin, and building up in grace, for which the foresaid Authors apply it to Christ, who only is able to do this, and the Preacher only by his help, through whom St Paul saith that he can do all things, and overthrow strong holds, and cast down every high imagination, exalting it self against Christ. And he saith well, Kingdoms and Nations, for every vice hath its Kingdom and its Nations belonging to it, as Luxury is a kingdom in a riotous liver, having Gluttony, Drunkenness, Lasciviousness and Fornication as its Nations. Pride also is a Kingdom having vanity in apparel, painting and curling, boasting and ambition. And Covetousness is a Kingdom, having as its Nations, oppression, deceit, lying, stealing, swearing, hard-heartedness, and unreasonable tenacity of worldly goods, as Origen hath it, and these is every Preacher set to pluck up and pull down, and not to think his work done till he seeth the ruine of these Kingdoms in his people, and the Kingdom of God built up in them, which is when his Word ruleth in their hearts and lives in all things.

I see a rod of an Almond tree, I will hasten to perform it. Here is Hebr. an elegant Paronomasia, I see, saith Jeremiah, an almond-tree W, and the Lord saith, I am W vigilant, or hastening to perform my Word; let the first words be rendred according to the proper signification, and they are, I see a vigilant or hastening rod but the same word serveth also to set forth an Almond-tree, for the speedy coming out of the leaves thereof, even before any other tree, and is commonly so used. Hereby then the Lord shewed, that the judgments which Jeremiah should threaten, should not be deferred long, but come speedily. According to this Vision almost Diodorus writes of a rod or staff (for the same word signifieth either) with an eye upon the top of it, used by the Egyptians, as an embleme of divine Providence seeing and ruling in all things; so by this vigilant or hastening rod seen, the Lord shewed that he would not sleep, but be vigilant to accomplish his word of threatening with all speed. The Caldee Paraphrast and some others understand by this rod Nebuchadnezzar, as he is called Isa. 10. 1. which differs little. Calvin thinks, that not only the hastening of the judgements threatned is here set forth, but also of the promise made, for his Word, over which he saith he will be vigilant, equally respecteth pulling down and building up, which was spoken of vers. 10. whereunto I readily assent, noting as well for the comfort of humbled and penitent sinners, as for the terrour of the impenitent, that the comfort promised shall come speedily to the one, as judgements threatned to the other, yet first plucking up, and then building, according to the order before-going.

I see a seething pot towards the North. See the like Ezek. 11. and Ezek. 24. Jerusalem being hereby set forth, which as a pot had fire put under it by the Babylonians coming out of the North, when Nebuzaradan burnt the City, so that by these two, the vigilant rod (as the Vulgar renders it) and the seething pot, one and the same thing is meant. Thus some, but Calvin takes that of the rod of a watchman, as he renders it, for a further illustration of that which was said before, that he had set him over Nations and Kingdoms to pull down, &c. for to this end he sheweth him his rod, whereby as having power enough, the foresaid Kingdoms should be pulled down, as Egypt was sometime by Moses with his rod. And therefore in alluding to these words of the rod of a Watchman, he addeth, I will watch over my word to do it, that is, Question not thou, saying, How shall this be, that I a childe should overthrow and build up Kingdoms? thou seest my rod or scepter, the ensign of my power, Go on therefore to speak according to my directions, and doubt not but that I, who set thee a work, will be as ready and vigilant to perform by thee that which thou speakest, as thou canst desire. Thus Calvin. Neither doth doth Jerom differ much from him, and is indifferent about rendring the words either A rod of an Almond, according to Symmachus and Theodotion, or the vigilant rod, according to Aquila; because (saith he) a Nut or Almond hath an hard shell, and mult with hard knocking be cracked to come to the kernel, and that is bitter, but the kernel sweet; so the rod of God which is harsh and bitter, 'brings a sweet fruit of vertue and joy at the last, according to that saying, The roots of learning are bitter, the fruits sweet. And this seems to me to be best, and therefore, although it be hereby shewed also, that judgements threatned by Jeremiah at the word of the Lord should come speedily, yet the sign next seen, and this, are not all one but divers, this extending further both to pulling down and building, and to confirm that which was before-said in setting up the Prophet in so great authority, that being restrained to the judgements to come by Nebuchadnezzar. The boiling pot now seen, is by some, saith Calvin, interpreted of Nebuchadnezzar, but indeed Jerusalem is hereby set forth, together with all other Cities of Judah. For as fire put to a pot with flesh in it makes it boyl, and in continuance of time to waste away; so the Lord would hereby shew, that it should be done to the Jews in Jerusalem, and in all the other Cities of Judah by the Babylonians, who together with the Assyrians, now being one Kingdom, dwelt northward, and possessed all other parts, except the east, where the Persians and Medes lived: To expresse which he addeth, From the north cometh evil upon all the inhabitants of the Land, that is, the Land of Judea, as is further expressed, vers. 15. Some say, That the Kings of Babylon and Persia had fire carried before them in a pot, that by the winde and rain it might not be extinguished, having it in great veneration, as a god; and if it were so, then here is an allusion made to that custom. But it is not said, a pot boiling or burning coming out of the north, yet as much in effect is said, The face thereof from the face of the north; and the word readred boiling, signifieth either blown up, or burnt with fire; and the Vulgar Latine hath it, Ollam succensam, and therefore I cannot but like well of the fore-going Allusion, and of applying the burning pot to Nebuchadnezzar, who came from the north, it being common with the Hebrews, when they would set forth coming from any part, to do it by saying from the face thereof, whereas if Jerusalem, to burn which he came, had been meant, it would rather have been said, the face thereof was towards the face of the north, from whence the judgement came. And the Lord himself expounds it not of Jerusalem, against which, but of the judgment coming, and for this exposition is the Caldee against all others, who commonly take it for Jerusalem, but herein one speaks more rightly then many. But why after a rod is there seen a burning pot? Sol. To shew, That they who will not be reformed by Gods rod smiting them, shall be in danger next of his fire destroying them utterly. Gregory makes a moral hereof thus, Mans minde is the pot, that which from the north sets it on fire is the devil, by inflaming it with evil lusts, and then he setteth up his throne therein, as in the next words, vers. 15.

And I will bring all the families of the north, and they shall set each one his throne, &c. Here he amplifieth his judgement by Nebuchadnezzar threatned, by mentioning the Nations and Kings that should come with him against Judah: for that many Kings should help him is intimated, in saying, They should set their thrones in the gates of Jerusalem, that is, sit there as Lords and Kings after the subduing thereof.

I have made thee this day a defended City, and an iron pillar. To confirm Jeremiahs minde that he might not fear his oppugners, how violent soever they should be against him, he compares him not to a most strong house, but a most strong City, as the Church is compared to a City set upon an hill, that is impregnable, and to an iron pillar, which is yet longer lasting, as not being subject by fiercest winds and tempests to be demolished or hurt, in which sense the Church is called, The ground and pillar of truth; and Cephas, James

Vers.5.

I Remember thee the kindnesse of thy youth, &c. Jerom, I have called thee to minde, pitying thy youth. But it may with more sense be rendred according to the Hebrew, I record the mercy shewed to thee in thy youth, and the love of thy espousals; that is, I call to minde and compare my great mercy shewed to thee, whenas bringing thee out of Egypt, and through a barren wilderness, causing thee to follow me, as a wife her loving husband, and taking care of thee, as my first fruits, which are most holy to the Lord, so that I brought evil upon all that went about to eat and devour thee. When I compare, I say, this my gracious dealing with thee, and thine apostasie and forsaking me together, as followeth vers. 5, 6, 7, 8. I cannot but as I have great cause challenge thee therefore, and call thee to an account to give me a reason why thou hast dealt thus by me, and if thou canst give none, to make thee ashamed that thou maist yet repent, being otherwise ready to deal with thee according to thy deserts, vers. 9. &c. Ezek. 16. this comparison is set forth more at large, both touching Gods mercy most undeserved on the Jews part, and the abominations committed against him on their part. Calvin expounds the first words of vers. 2. as I have done, viz. not as implying any love or goodness in them, whereby the Lord was moved to deal so graciously with them, but it was the meer mercy of God, from whence it came that he espoused Israel to himself, and the history of their murmurings and rebellions from the beginning of their deliverance out of Egypt, sheweth the same. Wherefore these words, The love of thy espousals] are to be understood passively, not actively as if their love towards God, but his love to them were hereby commended. And this, he saith, is here spoken of, to shew, why he now sent a Prophet again unto them, before he would destroy them, to move them to repentance: Because to such as upon whom he placeth his affection, his love is constant, making him never to leave dealing with them about Reformation, till that they being desperate and incorrigible, he must needs deal with them by judgements to their destruction, but still when he is forced to this, he will finally upon their repentance, to which he drives them by judgements, shew mercy again unto them in greater measure then ever, Isa. 30. 18. Chap. 49. 65, 66. Thus also Jerom, Rabanus, Thomas Aquinas, Vatablus. Others, as mercy is first spoken of, and then love, and following the Lord in the wilderness; so understand the mercy of God, wherein he began to Israel in Egypt, being miserable and without all form or beauty, in bringing him out, and then the love of their fathers, whereby they answered the Lords mercy at the first bowing and worshipping him, and willingly following him, and professing to yeeld all holy obedience to his Laws, so Caldee, Lyra, Hugo, Dionysius, and to this do I subscribe, as most probable. And then Israel was Holinesse to the Lord and his first fruits, as being adorned with holy Laws and Ordinances above other Nations, as a bride hath glorious Ornaments put upon her to increase her beauty, and to make her more amiable to her husband, and she being then in the prime of her youth also, intimated by the word [first fruits] And the Lord to shew his love towards her would suffer none to wrong her, but rebuked even kings for her sake, as the king of Amalek, Moab and Midian, of the Amorites and Basan.

What iniquity have your fathers found in me that ye are gone after vanity? Having before mentioned Gods mercy towards them, and their fathers answerable love and submission at the first, now he challengeth them for that leaving him him they followed after false gods, contrary to that which they were bound to do for his great mercies formerly recorded to have been shewed to their fathers. And then in speaking of his mercies more particularly, he saith, Which brought them out of Egypt through the wilderness, a land of deserts and pits, of drought and the shadow of death, where no man liveth; yet they being above six hundred thousand were here kept alive forty years by Gods feeding of them miraculously.

I brought you also into a fruitful land, but ye defiled it. Priests, Pastors, Teachers of the law, and Prophets prophesying by Baal, for the last of which the four hundred Prophets maintained by Jezabel, and prophesying to King Ahab, were most notorious, where ye may see what Baal was in my Commentaries upon that place. Hereby it appears, that the corruption was universal, overspreading both People and Priests, who were Pastors and Teachers of the Law also. The words setting forth Teachers here, are לְרִי שִׁירָה holding the Law, for such were the Priests by their Office, Mal. 2.7. which made their sinne the greater, as S<sup>t</sup> Paul reasons against wicked teachers, Rom. 2.21. By Pastors, Rulers in the Commonwealth are as well set forth as Priests, who were spiritual Pastors, of these it is complained that they transgressed; of Teachers, that they had not known God, or enquired after him, they were idle and ignorant, and the Prophets prophesying by Baal were such, as though they did not professedly serve Baal, but pretended to speak from the Lord, yet they spake not by his Spirit, but by a lying spirit, the devil, to make men secure in their sins, for what are Idols but devils?

Therefore I will yet plead with you, and with your childrens children. By saying Yet, he intimateth some judgements brought upon them already, for which they haply thought that they should now go scot-free, God being satisfied by the punishments, which he had already laid upon them. But he contrariwise threatens, that he will not thus make an end, nor having brought more upon them, but if their children and childrens children went on in their sinnes, he would goe on in punishing generation after generation.

Pass over to the isles of Chittim. That is, of Grecia; By Grecia, all the Countreys of Europ being meant. And to Kedar, that is, the Eastern parts of Asia, where they knew not the true, but worshipped false gods, yet for their constant cleaving to the gods at the first received by their Ancestours without change, they shewed, that if they had had the knowledge of the true God, they would much more have cleaved alwayes to him only, whereas the Jews receiving from their Ancestours the worship of one God, were fickle and inconstant, changing his glory into that which profited not, that is, in stead of him the most glorious God of heaven and earth, worshipping Idols in whom is no help, as in such as have ears and hear not, eyes and see not, &c. For as Xenophon saith, It was an Oracle of Apollo, that those gods are rightly worshipped, which were delivered of Adcestours; And this he greatly applaudeth: And it was a maxim amongst the Heathen, No novelty pleaseth God. But in condemning the Jews inconstancy in their Religion by the Heathens constancy in theirs, he doth not commend them or any, that being in a way of superstition will not go from it; but only he sheweth, that the judgment of the Jews shall be far more heavy, because they were more stupid, and did more grossly then they; as Corazin is threatned by Sodom and Gomorrah, Mat. 11. Touching the word Chittim, it doth also signifie Italy, as Num. 24.24. Dan. 11.38. or Cyprus the Island, as Jos. 1.1. antiq. c. 11. or Grecia, 1 Mac. 1. c. 8. 5. So that it may well be taken for all the western parts, as Kedar (which hath the name from Kedar the second son of Ismael, Gen. 25.15. who with his Kedarrens and other Ismaelites and Arabians inhabited the eastern parts) is put for all the eastern Countreys. The meaning then is, Go to the farthest parts west set forth by the Islands of Kittim, and again into all parts lying eastward, and learn to be ashamed of your most unreasonable lenity and inconstancy in matter matter of divine worship, which is a thing of so great moment, and be the more confounded by thinking how little their gods have done for them, and what great things I have done for you.

Be astonished, O heavens, at this, and be ye horribly afraid. As Isa. 1. the Prophet bids, Hear (O Heavens) as having no hope that the Jews would hear or be moved; so Jeremiah in this place turns to the heavens, as if so horrible a thing were done in the sin wherewith they were before charged, that the very dumb and senseless creatures could not but tremble and be amazed at it, for the provocation of the almighty Creator hereby. For when a father is angry and storms against any of his children, all the rest fear. Be ye desolate, Jerom, Be astonished, and gates thereof be desolate. For the word וַיִּשְׁתְּ may be taken either for his gates as Jerom renders it, viz. having a prick above ו to the right hand, but on the left it signifieth fear, and thus it is here pricked, and therefore best expounded so; and if we expound it with Jerom, by gates, the particle ו agreeth not with וַיִּשְׁתְּ heavens being of the plural before-going. The word rendred, Be desolate, signifieth also, be dry, or barren as a desert, another expression of the greatest commotion through terrour that may be, causing the airy heaven to go from it wonted nature of humidity to moisten the earth and make it fruitfull by being turned into the likeness of a dry wilderness. And indeed the horrible sins of men reach up in their poisonous quality to heaven to make it to degenerate into driness, like that of brasse or iron. As a man through amazement is for a time like a stone ceasing to do the actions of a man, so the heavens to do theirs.

Verf. 13.

They have forsaken me, the fountain of living Water, &c. That is, by leaving the true God, who likeneth himself to a Well of living or spring-water, because such were most necessary for the sustentation of life in those dry countreys, as appeareth in Isaacs digging of Wels, and his joy at the finding of springs, the benefit whereof the Philistims envying him stopt them up, whereupon great strife sometimes arose. For which cause also Christ calls us to him, as such a fountain, saying, He that thirsteth, let him come and drink of the Water of life freely. But false gods were as broken cisterns that could hold no water, the water that is in them is pudly and not clear, as coming by the fall of the rain, and it also consumeth soon away, if the cistern hath rifts; so are Idols to those that serve them, in a drought of judgements coming they can stand them in no stead; but the true God is alwayes to such as serve him as a spring of water in the greatest drought, and so it is well with them when others perish through thirst, Psal. 37.

Verf. 14.

Is Israel a servant? an homeborn slave? Why is he made a prey? As if he had said, Doth any man ask the cause now, why Israel is in misery, being made a slave and a prey to other Nations? It is not because he was so born, he was by Gods adoption and grace a son, an heir, lifted up above all other Nations, when God chose him for his peculiar people. Therefore the cause is plain why he is now in this misery, viz. that before-shewed, his forsaking God the fountain of living water, &c. The Lions shall roar upon him, &c. that is enemies like Lions; for taking him as a prey, it is a Metaphor made more plain in the next words, wherein they are said to burn up his Cities, and to leave them without an inhabitant: for so it happened after unto them afterwards in Zedekiah in his time by the Caldees.

Verf. 15.

Verf. 16.

The sons of Taphanes and Noph shall break thine head. Noph was the Metropolitan City of Egypt, and Taphanes another like it, wherein Pharaohs Court was, so that hereby destruction is threatned by the Egyptians, with whom they made confederacies, and in whom it is often objected against them that they trusted for horses. Their head that was broken by them, was Josiah, who rashly going against the King of Egypt, was slain by him, and then he put the Jews to tribute at his pleasure.

2 King. 23. 29.

Verf. 17.

He concludes as he began vers. 13. by forsaking me they have brought this upon themselves, and then admonisheth them against the Egyptians evil manners, ners, saying, What hast thou to do in the way of Egypt to drink the waters of Sihor? When they were in danger by the Assyrians, they went to Egypt for help, and when by the Egyptians to the Assyrians, and they being both grosse Idolaters, to please them, as they had need to use the help of either of them to curry the more favour, they set up their Idols. This the Prophet here reproveth, as one would do a man in his misery that seeketh to such as cannot help, but to increase his misery, leaving him that alone hath power to help indeed. For by going to the waters of Sihor, or troubled waters of Nilus in Egypt, as the word signifieth, he meaneth their seeking help from Egypt, and by the river of Assyria next named, that is, Euphrates, seeking help from them, in both which they did rather against, then for their own good, as experience had and should teach them.

Vers. 18.

For of old I have broken thy yoke, &c. Hieron. Thou hast broken thy yoke, expounding it of the yoke of wedlock, whereby the Lord had yoked Israel to himself. But in the Hebrew it is, I have broken thy yoke, and so the sense will be best, if it be understood of the yoke of their bondage in Egypt. The Lord hereby sheweth, what little reason they had to forsake him for new gods, or in seeking help from Egypt or Assyria, because he had done mightily for them in bringing them out of Egypt, yea and not only so, as Calvin hath it, but when any other Nation put an heavy yoke upon their neck, as we read in Judges that many Nations did; upon their crying to him he from time to time delivered them. And thou saidst, I will not transgresse. So it is in the Margin of the Hebrew Bible, but in the Text, I will not serve. Thus also in divers other places another word with some difference is put in the Margin, as I take it, for further explication; for take it as in the Text only, I will not serve, and the sense will be left ambiguous, whom wilt thou not serve? but by the word in the Margin it is made plain, I will not transgresse by serving Idols, for so Israel had often done, and was brought into bondage, and cried to the Lord, at what time doubtlesse they renounced the service of Idols for a time, yet, as here followeth, they soon went after them again upon every high hill, and under every green tree, which were places chosen by the Heathen for Idolatry, as hath been often shewed.

Vers. 20.

Calvin.

Yet I planted thee a noble Vine. Here after plainly reproving their Idolatries, he doth it further metaphorically, saying, I planted thee a noble Vine, set forth Heb. by Sorech, of which see Isa. 5. and as there, so here he is accused for degenerating to the bringing forth of sour grapes.

Vers. 21.

Though thou wastest thee with niter, and takest much sope. Niter and Sope, or the Herb Borith, as it is in the Hebrew, and rendred by Jerom, grew in those countreys in moist places, and was used by Fullers to make things spotted and foul white, there being the same virtue in it and in niter. - They by reason of their sins are here compared to cloaths all filthy and spotted, and so much as that these scouring and cleansing things in a great quantity being used in washing them, they cannot be made white: so they that have long been accustomed to live in foul sins cannot by temporal castigations be cleansed through repentance, but must endure the burning of the fire at that day, when the fire shall try every mans work; so Jerom; but in this last how unsoundly, see in my Commentaries upon 1 Cor. The meaning of this place is, That the pretences whereby the Jews coloured over their sins, either denying them, or pretending themselves to be holy, because peculiarly chosen of God, and they had his Laws and Ordinances, and were frequent about them, or whatsoever else they could devise to say in their own justification was, but to seek with outward things to wash away inward spots and blemishes, such as those of sin were, to do irritum opus, to labour in vain. For still their sins remained as black brands before God, although they might be whited over before men. A thing to be considered by all those that outface their just reprovers, and impudently justifie themselves in their evil doings, they do but wash a Blackmoor, to the all-seeing eye of God they are as black still as ever; yea

by denying and justifying themselves their sins come to be marked of God never to be forgiven, where, in confessing and forsaking them prevails for mercy.

See thy way in the valley, know what thou hast done; a swift Dromedary traversing her wayes. Calvin, Corripit vias suas; but the word signifieth properly running over her wayes; Jerom, Levis cursor explicans vias suas, expounding it of a Doe most swift of foot in running after the prey, which she desireth; and the like he saith of the wilde Assie running after his pleasure, whom none will pursue to stay, as knowing it to be but lost labour, in her moneth they shall finde her, that is, in her filthinesse. So the Jews by denying their sins, and their going after Baal, thus thinking to wash away the blemishes thereof, are yet known very well enough to God to be swift as a Dromedary to go upon the way, that is, most earnestly carried on after such abominations, and no Prophets of the Lord by admonishing them can stay them from running wildly on in sin, any more then such as pursue a wilde Assie in the wilderness can stay him. But as that Assie is in her moneth found in her filthinesse, so after much labour and pains taken in seeking to reclaim the wicked, they are found still in the end in the filthinesse of their sins. Calvin understands this, as spoken to the Jews for denying themselves to be Idolaters, as long as they worshipped the true God, and acknowledged Baalim to be but lesser gods of an inferiour rank, even as the Papists say touching their Idols, they worship God only, and use Images but as remembrances, and therefore in so doing they cannot be charged with sin. Of their way in the valley he speaks, because there as well as upon hills, they had their Idols Temples set about with green Trees and placed nigh pleasant rivers. And for the Dromedary he saith, That not her swiftnesse is so much respected, as the violence of her lust, when she is carried thereby. For the she-assie likewise when she is in the wilderness snuffing up the winde in her nostrils, feeling her self to be at liberty, no man pursuing after her can take her, for she runs on both uncertainly and unweariably, therefore men cease pursuing her, waiting for her moneth, when she is biggest with foal, and so heavy to the bringing forth that she cannot runne, and then they take her. So the wicked Jews were so without all regard of propheticall admonitions, or threatnings carried on in their sins, that their case was even desperate, nothing could now be expected, but that the time coming, when God should see them big with sins, their sins being grown to the full, he should then seise upon them with his judgements, there being no means now to escape, but through the heavy load of sin they must be necessitated to lie under them, and perish for ever.

Withhold thy foot from being unshod, and thy throat from thirst. That is, either travel no more into Egypt or Assyria in vain for help, but stay at home and quietly repose thy self upon me, or go not on in sin and rebellion against God, till he being provoked deliver thee into the hands of thine enemies to be carried away Captive bare-footed and thirsty. For the first of these waies Calvin understands it, yeelding a good reason, that by their vain travel into farre Countreys, they did tear out their shoes, and suffered much thirst, because of their going into Egypt, to drink of Sihor, and into Assyria he had spoken before vers. 18. but by sitting still at home in obedience to God, that labour and travel, and their sufferings thereby might be spared. For the second Lyr, and I see not but that the Prophet might herein have respect to either. Jerom is only for a mystical sense, saying, That when they eat the Pascheover they were commanded to have shoes on their feet, and likewise they that were sent out to preach, are bidden to have sandals on their feet, and all Christians to have their feet shod with the preparation of the Gospel of peace, and we are bidden to come to Christ, and drink of the waters of life, and so we shall thirst no more.

In requiring us then to keep our feet from being unshod, and our selves from thirst, he meaneth, that we should keep out of the waies of hereticks, for for this were to be unshod with such shoes, as without which we cannot eat our Passeeover Christ, or be sanctified by the Gospel against our spiritual enemies corrupting and endangering our souls against whom these arms, and for want of true comfort by Christ the fountain of living water, to be in danger of perishing by thirst for ever. Hitherto Jerom. Junius, Refrain from spiritual fornication, the committing of which is set forth by making bare feet and thighs, Ezek. 16.25. and in Idolaters there is a thirst after it. But it may best of all be understood as relating to vers. 24. where Israel is compared to an Asse running wilde, whom man handleth not nor shoeth; so Israel ran wilde, eagerly carried after Idols, as an Asse to her pleasure through hunger and thirst, and by bidding, Refrain from being unshod, he meaneth, Leave thy wilde running on in Idolatry, and give over this wicked thirst. For the next words, Thou saidst, There is no hope; Not, They are words of neglect on wicked Israels part; as if he had said, Speak thou and other Prophets what ye will to keep me from the waies that I am going in, ye shall not prevail, for I am desperately set upon them, come what will come of it, I will go after my lovers, and do ye think to stop me from so doing? No, ye shall not. And thus doth the wicked mans obstinately going on in sin speak in effect at this day. And therefore (O ye wicked) if ye be ashamed in word to speak so desperately, do it not by your deeds, for thereby ye speak also, as by a lively voice; and when ye speak so, it makes no matter what ye say with your tongues, for ye do but confesse God with your mouths, but in your deeds ye deny him, being abominable and disobedient, and to every good work reprobate. Calvin comparing these words, There is no hope Desperatum est, with the like Isa. 57.10. where they are found fault withall for not saying so, but here for saying so, saith rightly, here is no repugnancy to that, for there they are reprov'd for not speaking so when they should, in respect of the evil waies that they were in, and yet had hope of escaping Gods judgements: here for saying so in way of shaking off all reproof by the Prophets, as being desperately bent to go on in their own evil waies, notwithstanding their earnest and diligent seeking to reclaim them.

As a thief is ashamed when he is taken, or found out, so is Israel ashamed. Here saith Lyra, the Preter-tense is put for the Future, Shall be ashamed, because it should be thus with them at the coming of the Caldees, they seeing then no help in the Idols, which they have served and trusted in; for that it is meant so appears by the next words, vers. 27. wherein they are accused for worshipping stocks and stones, but judgements coming, they will cry to the Lord. For then comes the time of their being ashamed of this vanity, when they shall see no help to be in their false Gods, so that with blushing faces they come to seek help of God, upon whom before he saith, They turned their backs and not their faces. Calvin yet goes upon the Present-tense, and rejects the other, because even then they were as thieves found out, their Idolatry was so palpable, although they denied it. But how their case was yet like a blushing thieves case found out, whenas they were so impudent either to deny their nefas, or to profess a resolution to go on in it still, let the Reader judge, and take the sense, as upon this consideration he seeth cause.

According to the number of thy Cities, so are thy gods. As if he had said, Dost thou in the time of thy distresse call upon me, thou hast many patrons of thine own chusing, every one a god, and thoughtest not me alone sufficient to save thee? Seek not to me then, but to them in whom thou hast trusted, for they are a great many, and therefore if they unite their forces to help thee, thou maist well have confidence in them: ironically spoken, as Elijah once spake to the Prophers of Baal, 1 Kin. 19.

Why do ye strive with me, doing evil against me? Do ye think that I will hear and save you in the time of danger, although ye call upon me, whilst ye continue to be at variance with me? as indeed all doers of evil are, especially that justify themselves when they are reprov'd, but are still unreformed.

I have chastised thy sons in vain. The Lord did not only exhort by his Prophets to leave sin, but also used another means of chastisements, for Israel had now suffered grievous things, 2 King. 17. but they were no whit amended, but rather grew worse, for they killed Gods Prophets in Manasseh his time. But because it is said [your Prophets] Jerom saith, False prophets are here meant, but most improbably, for they were so farre from killing them, that they were encouraged in their sins by them; they are then called their Prophets, because raised up from amongst themselves; men of their own Nation.

Vers. 31.
Hieronym.

O generation, see ye the word of the Lord, Have I been a Wildernesse? &c. Jerom joining the first word here, Generation to v. 30. thus, As a lion is your generation wasted, giveth this for the sense. Your sword hath killed your Prophets as a lion, not mine, for your sins brought it, and therefore I call it your sword, & I call them your Prophets, because they that have been already slain, were Prophets of Baal, and others that have hitherto perished were like qualified unto you, for which I say your generation is wasted, that is, a sinful and idolatrous generation. Here is nothing to be objected against this interpretation, but that הַדּוֹר Generation is in the Hebrew made the beginning of vers. 31. and is distinguished from this word [wasted] especially if it be read thus, Your sword hath devoured your Prophets as a Lion, this generation is a waster, as some read it, and the Hebrew will bear וַיִּשְׁחֶה הַדּוֹר and then the next word וְהוּא may be rendred, Ye, see the word of the Lord, being the beginning of vers. 31. Theodor. follows Jerom. Lyra, Calvin, &c. are for the former reading and interpretation, joining wasting to the word Lion; as if it had been said, Your sword in Manasseh his time was like a Lion to the Prophets; for as Iosephus saith, he slew one every day, Antiq. 10. 4. And this I rather assent unto, because I reverence the Hebrew Text so much, that I cannot yield to the amendment of any thing therein, so much is in the division of verses. And this first word being distinguished from vers. 30. will carry a good sense being thus rendred, Ye that generation, that is, not humane, much lesse Israelitish, but Leonnine, for your devouring of the Prophets sent unto you, See the word of the Lord, I say not to you Hear, no more then I would to a savage beast, for ye have no ears to hear reason, but see with your eies, for so even beasts can do. Have I been a Wildernesse unto you? That is, Have I kept you, as it were, in a wildernesse barren and destitute of food fit for men, that ye are thus degenerated into Lions, the inhabitants of wildernesess. For they could not but see and acknowledge the great fruitfulness of the Land wherein the Lord had placed them, as being called therefore a Land flowing with milk and honey. Have I been a Land of darknesse? Have I not set up the light of my word amongst them, as well as placed them in a fruitfull Land, whereby they might see the vileness of their own doings to be humbled therefore, and to lay away all pride and stoutnesse against God and his Prophets, Wherefore say my people, We are Lords, we will come no more to thee? Hebr. וְהוּא יִרְדּוּ cometh of יָרַד Dominari, and נִי nos for וְהוּא יִרְדּוּ or וְהוּא יִרְדּוּ is to have dominion. They are then here challenged for abusing the fruitfulness of their Land, and the increase of their riches thereby to make them proud. And it hath reference to that which went before, Am I a Wildernesse to Israel, See this word of the Lord? See that I am not, but contrariwise most beneficial, for whence else cometh it to passe that ye are so proud and stout, but by reason of your wealth, to harden your hearts against me, saying, We will come no more to thee? that is, we will not obey thee, say and do what thou wilt, We are Lords, neither do we acknowledge any Lord over us? much like to that Psal. 12. Who is Lord over us? Thus the sense is plain, yet some trouble it by seeking another derivation of the word from יָרַד to descend, reading it, We are gone down, that is, we are in misery, and can finde no help, therefore we despair of help from thee, and will not seek thee any more. And some, We are gone so from thee after our own wils, as that it is vain for thee to speak to us, for although thou dost, we will not come or be obedient to thee. I rest in the first.

Will

Will a young woman forget her ornaments? &c. yet my people have forgotten me. Here their sin in forsaking the Lord, who was as an husband unto them, and therefore above all to be loved, is further to be aggravated by a comparison taken from a bride, she will neglect nothing in the day of her marriage, which may adorn her and make her the more amiable to the bridegroom: but Israel whom God had taken to wife, wanting all beauty to move him thereunto, although all her happiness stood in being acceptable to the Lord, forgot to deck and adorn her self for him daies without number, by keeping her self pure and holy, being contrariwise polluted by base lusts carrying her after false gods.

Why trimmest thou thy wayes to seek love? Calvin, Cur bonificas, and so the Hebrew word signifieth, Why makest thou good, or fair, or pleasant thy wayes? meaning, after the manner of an harlot tirest thy self for adulterous love to Idols. Therefore thou hast also taught evil women (for it is a feminine) thy wayes; Thus he still aggravates their wickedness, making the Church of the Jews, as a pateron of whorish immodesty in using all manner of allurements to entice young men unto her, so that other Nations, Egyptians and Assyrians might learn of her to be yet more wicked, for which he nameth them,

Verf. 36. In thy skirts is found the blood of poor innocents, Heb. in thy wings. But skirts are meant, viz. of their garments that were sprinkled therewith when they slew them, so that there needed no secret search, as in the next words, to finde it out לֹא בְּחִפְיָהּ non in suffossione, as Calvin renders it, and the word signifies digging thorow, and he thinks it an alluding to Exod. 22. 2. If a thief be taken digging thorow a wall, that is, secretly in the dark, and the meaning to be, Thou didst shed innocent blood not in secret, as such a thief met with in the instant hath his blood shed in the dark, but the blood shed by thee was upon all these, that is, upon all the Prophets boldly and openly reproving thy sins, so that all men might and did see thy savage blood-thirstiness. For he seemeth here to speak again by way of aggravation of their murdering of the Prophets sent to turn them from their sins briefly touched upon ver. 30. R. Solomon, Not in digging thorow like a thief, Exod. 22. Hast thou found the Prophets whose innocent blood thou hast shed, but in all the things before remembered, reproving and seeking to reclaim thee by aggravating thy wickednesses against thee? and this he meaneth by saying, In all these. And this is most genuine, to expresse which the Vulgar Latine hath it, In all these, which I have before remembered.

Thou shalt be ashamed of Egypt, as thou hast been of Assyria. He had taxed them before for going to Egypt and Assyria, ver. 18. and not keeping at home, reposing their whole trust in the Lord. Now he repeats the same again in other words. Why runnest thou up and down to change thy wayes? Sometime being in danger by Israel and Syria seeking to Ashur, as Abaz did, and sometime being in danger by Assyria, to seek to Egypt, as it is generally conceived that Jehoiakim and Zedekiah did, which made them rebel against the King of Babylon. But they reaped nothing but confusion hereby: for Manasseh was carried captive into Babylon, and when Nebuchadnezzar came against them, the Egyptians stood them in no stead to save them, although they sometime came out with an Army to help them, and the Caldees departed.

Thou shalt go forth from him, and thy hands upon thy head. Heb. וְיָדְךָ עַל רִאשְׁךָ by Calvin rendred, for this, that is, because of this thy wicked deserting of me, and seeking help from Idolaters, thou shalt go into Captivity full of sorrow, a sign whereof is going with hands laid upon the head, as Thamar being defloured by Ammon is said to have done.

CHAP. III.

Vers. 1.

They say, If a man putteth away his wife, and she becomes another mans, &c. Having threatned them with Gods judgements for their Idolatry, now he seeketh to move them to repentance, by shewing that notwithstanding that their foul sinne, he would be ready to do by the Church of the Jews, his wife, as no man (themselves being Judges) would do by his. For he would receive her to grace and favour again: For (they say) Hebrew is דִּינָה dicendo, which sheweth it to cohere with Chap. 2.37. therefore it is rather to be referred to the Lord threatning them, and now saying or telling how they might under his protection be safe from their enemies, Egyptians and Assyrians: So Vatablus and Hebrai, Hieron. Vulgò dicitur; some supplying the word dicitur, dicendo dicitur, and this is most followed, and therefore I have expounded it accordingly.

Vers. 2.

In the Wayes thou satteest for them, as the Arabian in the Wildernesse. That is, Thou waitedst for an opportunity to idolize, as a thief, for such were the Arabians lurking in the wilderness, lurking for a prey, which shewed them that were not only by seducement carried away, but made Idolatry their trade, as if having gotten more gods to protect them, they had gained a great booty, and should now be more safe and secure.

Vers. 3.

Lyra.
Calu.

Therefore the showers have been withholden, and there hath been no latter rain, and thou hast had an Whores forehead. That is, Thou hast been judged according to the threatning Deut. 28. That the heavens should be as iron, &c. wherein Lyra saith, he hath reference to the great drought of idolatrous Abahs time, Calvin to some great judgement of drought not mentioned, both yet agreeing in this, that it is spoken in way of aggravating the Idolatry of Judah more, who (notwithstanding this, of which they could not but be sensible that it came for Idolatry, and persecuting the servants of God, who opposed this foul sin) went on still impudently like a brazen faced harlot, who is daunted or made to blush for shame by nothing that can be done unto her. And he speaks of the later rain in particular, because it was for them most necessary, being a rain that commonly came a little before harvest to make the corn in better case against the time of reaping, which otherwise in that hot countrey would have been more dry and husky and unprofitable.

Vers. 24.

Wilt thou not from this time cry unto me, thou art my father, &c. Vulg. Ergo amodo voca me (pater mi) therefore from hence forth call me father, Hebr. Calleft thou me not from this time my father? That is, wilt thou not be moved by so great judgements to return again unto me, as thy only God and father? And the leader of thy youth, that is, thy husband in time of youth, when love betwixt man and wife, and desire of either to other is greatest. It is the voice of a most kinde husband to his most unkinde wife, that would fain have her reconcile her self to him again.

Vers. 5.

Will he reserve his anger for ever? These are the words of the Prophet to move her the more to say, as she is bidden vers. 4. thou hast not to do with an un placable God, if there were in thee but a relenting heart, his anger against thee would soon be gone: Thou hast spoken and done evil things as thou couldest, that is, although thou hast done all the evil that thou couldest, yet God is placable, if now thou wilt return, Hebr. and Vulg. And thou couldest, that is, saith Lyra, by Gods permission, or rather, and thou couldest finde in thy heart to do so against me thy most loving husband, all this notwithstanding I am ready to receive thee. And this is enough to make the heart of any sinner to melt, that God is so loving and ready to be reconciled, and neither harden himself against him, as no woman will do that hath been notorious against her husband being so kinde, nor despair of grace, as Cain did.

Note.

Vers. 6.

From vers. 6. to 12. he compareth Israel and Judah, that is, the two Kingdoms together, one of which, that is, Israel was already divorced for her Idolatry,

Idolatry, when she was delivered into the hands of the King of Assyria in Hezekiah his time; then the other, that is, Judah, feigned a turning to the Lord from Idols when Hezekiah brake them all down, but the people turned not truly, for which it is said, That Israel was more justified then Judah. To make a shew of zeal and piety, but not to be zealous against evil indeed, is worse then to be openly wicked.

Note.

Proclaim these words towards the north. Having hitherto shewed the greatness of the sinne of the Kingdom of Judah, condemning her more then Israel, because she would not take warning by the judgements already come upon Israel, now he is bidden to cry aloud towards that Countrey, into which Israel was carried captive, viz. Assyria, which lay north, although they were carried more eastward into Persia, yet the north must be lookt at, as the Countrey that carried them. Now towards them must he cry, not that they could hear him, but that the men of Judah might hear and be further moved to repentance, and in time this Prophecie might be brought to their hearing, and they might also be stirred up hereby. Return, and I will not cause mine anger to fall upon you, Jerom, Non firmabo iram meam in vos, I will not settle mine anger upon you, which is indeed the very meaning. For his anger had already come upon them to the uttermost, but if they would yet turn, it should not continue, he would not go on to presse them herewith for ever, as the next words plainly shew.

Vers.12.

Hieronym.

Only acknowledge thine iniquity, &c. and that thou hast scattered thy wayes to strangers, &c. Hebr. Only know, that is, consider the foulness of it, and justify not thy self, but confesse it and turn therefrom, as v.14. By her scattering of her wayes to strangers, he meaneth after the manner of harlots, that go sometime to one place and sometime to another to allure to their whorish love, not a few, but so many as they can, so that Judah had sought to increase her superstitions and idolatries, taking for gods those that she could find in any Countrey. And hereby she must know that her sin was yet more aggravated, that she had not obeyed the voice of the Lord, having his word to instruct and urge her to worship and serve him only, she wandred thus notwithstanding.

Turn, ye rebellious children, for the Lord is your husband. To turn he exhorted them vers.12. now he repeats the same again, that his kindenesse might yet more appear more then of any other husband in the world, after a divorce, and his wife being married to another man. But he inforceth his exhortation here by a new argument: some render the word, Hath ruled over thee; some, Thou hast been irksome to the Lord, as Calvin sheweth, but it is best rendred, Thy husband] hath ruled over thee, as a loving husband. And I will take you one of a City, and two of a family, and bring you to Zion. That is, if ye turn, although but one or two amongst a great many, all the rest hardening their hearts by unbelief. And in saying so he prophesieth of that which came to passe under the Gospel, there were but a very few in comparison of that whole Nation that were converted. Yet here is encouragement to a few turning, if but one or two in a City or Town, they shall be accepted of neverthelesse, according to that, Fear not little flock, it is your Fathers will to give you the Kingdom, Joh.10.28. And it is still so at this day, they are very few amongst a multitude that be true converts in any Town or City, although all professe the Christian Religion, the most serving still either the Idol of profit by covetousness, or of pleasure by sensual living, or trusting to lamps without oil, or by itching ears turned away from hearing lawful Preachers, to ignorant and impudent phantasticks. And I will bring you to Zion, that is, to the Congregation of the faithfull, which is called Zion, Heb. 12. 22. And I will give you Pastors] These were the Apostles and apostolick men sent out to preach the Gospel.

the Ark, which was of old made for divine Worship, neither shall any other be made in stead thereof, which is intimated in these words, And it shall not be done any more, that is, according to that which was done under the Law by adoring God towards any place, as most holy, by offering Incense or Sacrifice, or by Priests clad in garments made of purpose, but the worshipping of God now shall be only in spirit and in truth, resort being made to places dedicated to Gods worship, not for any holiness in them more then in others, to make our service the more acceptable to God, but only in respect of their separation for orders sake, and to avoid confusion, from prophane or common use, to an holy, of the faithfuls coming together there about the duties of piety. So that neither can the practice of the Formalists of late in adoring towards the Lords-Table; or of injoining peculiar garments in the publick Ministration be justified: or of the Separatists that will have meetings rather in private houses to publick worship, then in such as have been anciently set apart for this end and purpose. And by this we see a just cause not only of our separating from the Church of Rome, by a Reformation in Doctrine, but even in outward Rites and Ceremonies; and also, why a further Reformation hath been of late made by abolishing the Rites prescribed in the Book of Common-Praier, although I will not say so touching the Praiers themselves, leaving every Minister to the immediate guidance of the Spirit in his publick praiers, and not tying the most unable to some forms that may be without all exceptions. And Calvin himself in stead of justifying this, condemneth it, and yields divers solid reasons against it.

At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord, and all nations shall be gathered unto it, &c. That is, the Church set forth under the name of Jerusalem, shall be called The Kingdom of heaven, or of God, as it is oftentimes by our Lord, and people of all Countries shall be converted to the faith, and so made one though farre distant in place with the Church, which was first gathered at Jerusalem, bearing therefore the name of that City, and being as it were the mother of the rest.

At that day the house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel, and they shall come together from the north into the Land, &c. Hitherto all things are plain, and evidently shewed to pertain to the time of the Gospel, but how doth this agree? Nay is it not rather necessarily to be understood of the time of their return from the Babylonish Captivity? Calvin indeed understands both this and vers. 16, 17. so, as if he had said, when upon their humiliation and conversion from Idolatry the house of Judah and Israel should be brought home again, they of Judah should not boast of the Ark being amongst them any more, as challenging to themselves a preeminence for it over them of Israel, as formerly they had done, being alwaies full of enmity and quarrels one against another, till the time of their carrying away into Captivity, but all jointly should call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord, joining their forces together to build and make that City glorious again, as the seat of the great King of the whole world. And the Nations, that is, the ten Tribes should be gathered to it, there to serve the Lord again, as before their division into two Kingdoms, the ten Tribes being called here all Nations, because so many in comparison of the Nation of the Jews. Then they shall come out of the north, whither soever they have been by their northern enemies carried away, lovingly together to their own countrey as one people, and never be unkindely divided any more, as they had been. Thus also saith Lyra; some Hebrews expound it, saying, That it was accordingly fulfilled at their return so famous under Cyrus King of Persia, when they had no Ark of the Covenant any more. But R. Solomon of that which shall be done at the coming of the Messiah, whom they still so obstinately expect. But he confuteth that exposition of those Hebrews, 1. Because Jerusalem could never have so glorious a name as the throne of the Lord given unto her after their return, forsomuch as she was sometime under the Persian, sometime the Grecian, sometime the Egyptian and Syrian, and sometime the Roman, and never grew up to a free Kingdom any more, or if it did in Prince Alexanders daies, who intituled himself King, when he was Prince and High-Priest, it was but for a short time, and so troublesome and declining from the first time that he began to do so (as I have shewed in my Continuation of the sacred History) that it is not worthy for this of so high a name. 2. Because it is said, All Nations shall come unto her, which was not then fulfilled, and that expounding of all Nations, of the ten Tribes, is no way justifiable, forsomuch as not they, but Heathen Nations, which never knew God before, are every where meant thereby. Neither doth it help, which Calvin bringeth for further confirmation, That by all Nations the ten Tribes are meant, because it is said, And they shall no more walk after the imagination of their evil hearts; which cannot well be understood of the Gentiles, for they alwaies did so, but of Israel who was at the first better taught, but for a time had so degenerated, but now should do so no more. For it is spoken both of Jews, Israelites and Gentiles altogether, it being meant that after the receiving of the Christian faith, they should degenerate no more into heathenish Idolatry, but that amongst them the true faith should be upheld, though not alwayes apparently, to the worlds end; for all Nations shall never be broken off after their insertion into the true Olive, as the natural branches, the Jews, for their infidelity were. And from this clause it is evinced, that the ten Tribes are not meant by all Nations, except some elect ones of them imbracing the faith of Christ, because they that returned from Captivity after that, walked more abominably in respect of all other wickedness, except Idolatry, then before, especially of their malice against Christ and his Ministers, for which they were by the Romans most terribly wasted, afflicted and destroyed so as they never were before, from the time of their Land lying desolate, being never permitted to inhabit it, or to build their City Jerusalem any more; but if any lived there since, they lived but as vassals and slaves to the Turk. And to understand by all Nations the ten Tribes, is nothing agreeable to that which was said before of them, Two of a tribe and one of a city, for how could he in speaking of so few call them all Nations, by a name implying innumerable multitudes? Neither indeed did the ten Tribes then come to Jerusalem, but they of Judah and Benjamin only besides Levites, unlesse some haply of other Tribes living mixt amongst them, since the dayes of Hezekiah and Josiah for pieties sake, were at the time of Judahs Captivity carried away together, and so at the time of liberty returned together. But this being enough, if not to the expence of overmany words too much confuted, let us see if the expounding of it as fulfilled under the Gospel, may be justified, how did Judah then walk with Israel to Jerusalem? or the Land given to their fathers? Lyra answereth well, This was done when some of the Kingdom of Judah, as Paul of the Tribe of Benjamin, and other Apostles of the Tribe of Judah, going forth to preach the Gospel amongst the Heathen, met with some of Israel, though but rarely, who hearkned to their teaching, who were by their conversion taken as companions with them into the promised Land of everlasting blessedness, being called the Land promised to their fathers, because that of Canaan was a type thereof. And to this in the substance of it agree they that are for the return out of Captivity, as literally meant; but they consent, that all this is spiritually to be applied to the time of the Gospel, both Theodoret, Hugo, Thomas and Calvin.

Egypti-

*But I said, How shall I put thee among the children, and give thee a goodly heritage of the hosts of the Nations? Church both militant and triumphant is set forth by the name Jerusalem, because from thence they went out that preached the Gospel, and there a Church was first gathered. Now he demands by way of admiration, how this should be, that a people so rebellious, and for their rebellion cast off, should thus be dealt withall as children, to have so goodly an inheritance: and he calls it, The pleasant heritage of the nations hosts, because the Nation of the Jews rejecting the Lords gracious offer at the first to bring them into this inheritance, when the Gentiles joyfully accepted of the offer. And well may the Gentiles be set forth by this name, The hosts of the Nations, for their great multitudes, and to denote the condition of Christians, they are a Militia fighting against sinne, the world, flesh and devil, Ephes. 6. 12. and the Kingdom of Christ their inheritance, because the Nation of the Jews generally refusing it, the Gentiles thankfully took it. Others bring other Expositions, By hosts of the Nations understanding the Angels Guardians of the Nations, but most improbably. Some, Of the mighty God of the Gentiles, who is the Lord of hosts. Some, Of the fortitude of the most strong one of the Gentiles; but herein they go from the signification of the words; wherefore rejecting all other Expositions, I rest in this, and herein I differ not from Jerom, expounding this heritage of the Church, as I have done, calling it the Land of the Church made glorious by the great multitudes of believers. And I said, Thou shalt call me, my Father; That is, I have devised a way, how that which I have spoken of, seeming in mans reason impossible to be done, shall be effected, thou also shalt be converted and acknowledge me, that is, Christ, thy Father, as it is said of me, Isa. 9. 6. The mighty God, the everlasting Father, whereby he giveth us to understand, That the Nation of the Jews shall be converted, and not ever continue in their infidelity, as the Apostle expounds Prophecies of them, Rom. 11.

As a wife that treacherously departeth from her husband. Here the Lord reneweth his aggravation of their sins, according to vers. 1. that his mercy might be the more magnified, when he should receive so treacherous a wife again.

A voice was heard upon the high places, weeping, supplications of the children of Israel. Here the Lord leaveth complaining any further of the Jews, and looking upon them as coming to him by faith and repentance, breaks out into these words, A voice heard in the high places. So that these words are a Prophecie of the sorrow, wherewith they shall be taken, when once their eyes shall be opened to see that Jesus whom they despised and persecuted, and continued so long in malice against, is the Christ, as is also further set forth Zech. 12. 9. something like to which was done by those Jews that were first converted by Peter: Thus also Junius, understanding by this voice of weeping supplication, their uttering of the words following vers. 21, 22, &c. And this plainly appears to be the sense, from their saying, We come to thee, for thou art the Lord our God. And their lifting up of their voice upon the high places is spoken of in reference to their Land, wherein were many high places, hills and mountains, which were abused to Idolatry; now to shew that they should repent of these abominations, it is thus spoken, as if he had said, the voice of them that in times past worshipped in these places contrary to Gods expresse commandment, lamenting their former sins. Thus also Jerom rendring it, A voice of weeping supplication, because they have perverted their ways, taking this for the cause of their weeping, as it is in all that be godly-sorrowfull, and the Hebrew will bear it, for ו signifies most properly, because, and to Jerom consenteth Theodoret, Rabanus, Hugo. And these words, A voice is heard, shew Gods readines to hear penitent sinners so soon as they begin to turn to him, even before they speak, as the father of the Prodigal met him returning home unto him, and imbraced him before he spake. Calvin expounds it of that which was then done, the Israelites weeping and crying when they were by the Assyrians taken and carried away captive, as if this were propounded to the the Jews to move them to repentance. Lyra understands it of the Jews in so extreame misery by the Romans when they were destroyed together with their City in that stupendious manner. Some of the Jews carried into Babylon, but all farre wide from the meaning, because the argument now in hand from ver. 17, 18, &c. is manifestly of things to be done under the Gospel, as may appear to any intelligent Reader by the premisses. The Septuagint for these words, A voice was heard in the high places, bath these, A voice heard in labiis, lips, as if it were meant, sounding aloud by the opening of their lips, and this the Hebrew וּמִן הַשָּׁמַיִם will bear, if the prick above ו be put in the left horn, but above the right, as we now have it, High places are signified by the same word.

Return ye backsliding children, and I will heal, &c. Here the Lord sheweth by what means they should be converted under the Gospel. Christ should come promising to heal the sores and sicknesses of their souls, that is, their sins, as he did Luk. 4. 18. Matth. 11. 28. and where he sets forth himself as a Physician, saying, The whole needs not the Physician but the sick. For hereupon great multitudes followed, and he healed their sicknesses bodily, and many of them withall had their souls healed by being converted; and many more when his Apostles after his departure preached with such success, that at one Sermon three thousand were converted, then the voice was heard here prophesied of, We come unto thee, for thou art the Lord our God, &c. To the end of the Chapter. For then the converted amongst the Jews spake to this effect, and confessed their sins, as here followeth, beginning at John Baptists preaching, Matth. 3. where it is said, They came to Johns Baptism confessing their sins; and Act. 17. many more did the like, and when the time before-spoken of, their re-insertion into the true Olive shall come, such confessions shall be more generally and notably made by the whole Nation. And hereunto agreeth Jerom, although others be for times long before at their return from the Captivity of Babylon.

CHAP. IV.

IF thou returnest (O Israel) saith the Lord, Return to me. Because they were brought in Chap. 3. 23. professing their penitency, and turning to the Lord; now he encourageth them in their doing thus, and calls upon them to do it in sincerity, because amongst them that turn to the Christian profession there be many hypocrites, who think to be accepted of for their outward shew, although they go on still in their sins. Against this he exhorteth them to shew their turning to be unfeigned, by their putting away of all their abominations, which who so doth not, his turning is nothing else but hypocrisie. But who so thus turneth shall never be moved, he rests upon the Lord and his grace in Christ, which shall be as a Rock unto him, so that let the winds blow, the rain fall and the waves bear, yet he falls not.

Verf. 1.

And thou shalt swear, The Lord liveth in truth, &c. Here swearing is put for the whole worship of God, of which it is a part, because in swearing his name is called upon, and faith in God is shewed, that he both heareth and hath power to take revenge upon him that presumes to swear falsely by him, yea and that he cannot for his honour but do it, seeing otherwise he should expose himself to the calumny of evil tongues, which would be ready to say, either he is so high in heaven above, that he heareth not, or he cares not for truth or falsehood. Therefore swearing, The Lord liveth, if it be in truth, argueth one that is truly faithfull, believing all the things before-spoken of, and whatsoever else God hath set forth in his holy Word, and therefore living and doing accordingly. If any man sweareth thus, but doth not believe thus to do as God requireth, he sweareth not in truth, but in abominable hypocrisie, forso much as he makes a shew of a true believer, but in his heart is not.

Matth. 7. 24.

not. And because that in judgement men shew themselves whether they swear thus or no, by each ones dealing justly and righteously with his neighbour, or contrariwise, it is added, in judgement and righteousness. And to denote the time to which this is most properly to be referred, he saith further, The Gentiles shall blesse themselves in him; a like passage to which is Isa. 65. 16. in speaking of the times of the Gospel. Yet I do not hold that this, or that which went before Chap. 3. 22, 23, &c. doth so properly belong to the time of the Gospel, but that it was useful for Israel then to teach them how to demean themselves towards the Lord, whom they had so greatly provoked, both by confessing and professing a serious return, that Gods judgements already sent might be removed, and his judgements threatned further to come, prevented. And for Israel, it was necessary that serious and hearty turning in truth should be pressed unto them, because they had many times turned only feignedly, for turning to the doing of good duties outwardly, and sometimes putting away Baalim, thinking to be highly accepted of, and to enjoy peace. And this is also our case in England, for which we have need to hearken to, and put this precept in practice, before that Gods judgements come as a flood upon us, and there will be no stopping of the course of them till we be quite destroyed.

Note.

Verf. 3.

Break up your fallow ground, and sow not amongst thorns. Circumcise your selves. Having prophesied of the conversion of the Jews and calling of the Gentiles, from vers. 12. Chap. 3. hitherto, now he returns again to his former Prophecy of judgements to come from the North, exhorting them by true repentance to prevent them. One of the evil grounds upon which the sower soweth good seed, Matth. 13. is said to be thorny, setting forth men worldly-minded and covetous, to the end therefore that they might not be hindred by worldly cares from profiting by his heavenly instructions, he bids them not to have such hearts, but to break them by contrition for their sin-past, for thus the heart is made capable of good instruction to profit thereby, even as the fallow hard ground before overgrown with thorns, when they are stubbed up, and it is broken with the plough to bring forth good seed sown thereupon with plentiful increase. And he meaneth not only the evil quality of covetousness, but also all vices accompanying it, in justice, fraud, lying, oppression, and the neglect of divine duties for mammon.

Verf. 4

And circumcise, Take away the foreskin of your hearts. Here he sheweth more plainly what he meant by breaking up their fallow ground, viz. the ground of their hearts, hardened in sinne through a custom of sinning like ground lying long unplowed. For as the ground is cut with the plough, so was the foreskin with a sharp knife, for a sign of the Covenant betwixt God and Abraham. But when this was commanded to be done without fail from time to time, it was not the Lords meaning that they should rest herein, as if Circumcision of the flesh had been prescribed for any complacency that God had therein, but that by it as by a figure they might be stirred up to circumcise their hearts, and cast away the foreskins of them, that is, not only the vices before-mentioned, but also all other evils first conceived within, and then coming out by actual adultery, murder, theft, &c. Matth. 15. 19. of which see before Dent. 10. and after Rom. 2. 29. And for the heart circumcision he calleth, and that unto the Lord, intimating, that in their circumcision before men, they gloried, as being for this more excellent then other Nations; but if they would become such indeed, as was intended by God, when he commanded circumcision to them, that is, circumcised in heart by putting away their evil doings, as is further explained by the last words of this verse, then they should be excellent in Gods esteem, and recover his favour, so that the fire of his wrath should not break forth against them, as otherwise it should do.

Verf. 5.

Blow the trumpet, Set up a standard towards Zion, Gather your selves into fenced Cities. Here he doth ironically bid them stand upon their guard against the the evil that was coming, as if they were able to defend themselves against it, as one who knew that his former exhortation to circumcise themselves would not take effect with them. But do what they could by their warlike preparations to save themselves, he threatneth, That evil should come out of the North, the King of Babylon like a roaring and devouring Lion, whom they should not be able to resist, no more then other beasts the Lion, vers. 6, 7, &c. But it may be said, Why are they bidden to circumcise themselves in heart? who can do this but God only? Ans. He meaneth, That they should seek it of God by praying for his grace that they might be enabled to this work, and not resist the motions of his Spirit stirring them up in the preaching of his word hereunto.

Vers. 6, 7.

Ab Lord God, thou hast greatly deceived this people, saying, Ye shall have peace. Having prophesied how cruelly they should be destroyed, now he speaks to the Lord, by whose just judgement it should thus happen unto them, as they would doubtless say, when they should be under this dreadful judgement by the Caldees. For there were false prophets amongst them, that cried Peace, peace, whom they took rather to be the Prophets of the Lord then Jeremiah, because he spake harshly to them, and they flatteringly to curry favour with them. The meaning then is, It grieveth me (O Lord) to think that when the evils threatned come upon this people, they should lay the fault upon thee, as if thou hadst dealt otherwise with them then thou promisedst them by the Prophets, forso much as some coming in thy name, and by thee permitted so to do, made them such fair promises. But they were worthy indeed for their obstinate going on in sinne against the true Prophets admonitions to be so deceived. And this he speaks to the Lord, because they would not hear nor believe him giving them warning against such flattering false prophets. To this effect also Calvin, but Jerom understands it as spoken by Jeremiah, looking back to the promises of Chap. 3. 12, 13, &c. which he not understanding to be of times to come so long after, and now being bidden to prophesie of present destruction to Judah; and therefore not seeing how those promises could be true, he crieth out, Ab Lord thou hast deceived, &c. that is, hast made me, by propounding such gracious promises of peace and prosperity, to deceive them. To Jerom subscribeth Rabanus and Thomas Aquinas. For that of Calvin stands Lyra, Theodoret, Hugo, Caldee Paraphrast, I cannot think with Jerom, that Jeremy knew not that his former Prophecie of so great good pertained to times to come long after, this of destruction to the times at hand: for the Spirit, whereby he prophesied doubtless enlightened him so, that he knew to what time each prophecie did pertain, or else he should have been like heathen Prophets cast as it were into an extasie by the devil, as then prophesying they themselves knew not what, not they, but the devil speaking in them; whereas God spake not in his Prophets, using their tongues only as his organs, but by them, first telling them what they should say, and to what end, and then speaking by their Ministry. Wherefore I conclude, as I began, it is said, The Lord greatly deceived them, because they thought that which was spoken by false prophets in his name, to come from the Lord, unless it shall seem best to follow Jerom in another way, which he toucheth upon also, viz. that they were deceived, as it were, by the Lord, because he promising good unto them, Cha. 3. was by them understood, as absolutely promising it, whereas he did it only conditionally upon their consenting together to turn to him.

Vers. 10.

Calvin.
Hieronym.

A dry Winde upon the high places of the deserts, not to purge, nor to fanne, a fuller Winde then those shall come to me. Hereby is meant, that the judgements of God by the Caldees coming by the sword, spoken of vers. 10. shall also be as a mighty strong winde, for which it is said to come by the high places of the wilderness, being advantaged by the height of the place, and the openness of it, there being no trees to break the force of it, The daughter of my people, that is, Judah, not to purge, &c. as some winds are made use of in winnowing of of corn, the chaff being thereby blown from it, A fuller winde then those, that is, more impetuous, bearing down all things, Shall come to me] They be the words of the Lord, and he meaneth, that this winde shall come at his call; for Nebuchadnezzar, although most proud, imputing all his Conquests to himself, was but the Lords servant to execute his judgements, as he is elsewhere called, and is here intimated by the words added, And I will speak judgements to them, that is, I will speak no more by my Prophets, but by my judgements carrying them away, as by a whirlwinde, into Babylon. By the winde purging the floor he meaneth lighter chastisements, whereby he had sought to amend them before, but this winde of the North blowing more full should carry chaff and corn, bad and good all away.

Vers. 13.

He shall come up as clouds, his chariots shall be as a whirlwinde. Now he speaks more plainly, whom he meant by the winde before-spoken of, viz. the King of Babylon, compared for his swiftness in coming, to the light clouds without rain, fleeing in the air; and for his violent bearing down of all things, to a whirlwinde; and hereupon he crieth, Woe to us we are undone, that hereby they might be moved to repentance, as he exhorteth vers. 14. Wash thy self (O Jerusalem), as Isa. 1. 16. Wash you, make you clean.

Vers. 15.

A voice is heard from Dan, and publisheth affliction from Ephraim. Vulgar Latine, The Idol from Ephraim, which Jerome expoundeth of Bel the Babylonians god, brought with them when they came against the Jews: Some, of Nebuchadnezzar their King, who would be worshipped as a god. But the word NY here used, signifieth nothing but iniquity, or the punishment thereof; and according to this sense it is meant, that their punishment for sinne should first begin at Dan, which was furthest North, and then come on to Ephraim which was nearer to Jerusalem. And from these places should some flee to Jerusalem, to bring these evil tidings with crying and lamentation.

Vers. 16.

Remember to the Gentiles, behold publish against Jerusalem that watchers come. Hebr. Besiegers shall make to hear or to be heard against Jerusalem coming from a farre countrey, they shall utter their voice against the cities of Judah. And thus the meaning will be plain, it being, as if it had been said, Speak no more of the judgements to come upon Judah to the Jews, for they have been enough spoken to already, but recount and speak of the same things to the Gentiles, for they are the men that shall make them hear the terrible sound of their coming from Babylon, which was far off, to do execution upon Jerusalem, when they had for a time besieged it, then breaking in and destroying both it and the Temple, as it is shewed that they did afterwards in this book, and 2 Kin. 25. 2 Chron. 36. Other Expositions are brought by some, of which Calvin makes mention, but rejecteth them, and concludeth with this, and so do I, not thinking it worth the while to name them to the further needless troubling of the Reader. Yet in the word בְּשִׁיטִים Besiegers, I think it worth the noting, that the Prophet may be thought to allude to the name Nebuchadnezzar, the last two syllables of whose name are צָר; as if he had said, Nebuchadnezzarens, or the men of Nebuchadnezzar. And the same are called, Keepers, as of a field, ver. 17. that is, keeping all the wayes in the fields about Jerusalem so, as that none of the Jews should be able to finde any way of escaping the destruction that hanged over their heads. And this he sheweth in the next words comes only through their own default, because they provoked the Lord, and had given him, as it were, a bitter pill that went to his heart.

Vers. 17.

Vers. 19.

My bowels, I am pained, my bowels. A like speech to this hath been before expounded, Isa. 16. 11. & 22. 4. wherefore see there in what sense it is spoken, Because thou hast heard (O my soul!) the sound of a trumpet, Vulg. My soul hath heard, but the word is of the first person, I have heard my soul, that is, I mean, My soul hath heard, that is, by or from the Spirit speaking to me within, although this sounding came not till divers years after to the bodily dily ears, yet now he heard it in his spirit, and was affected with it, as if already come.

Vers. 20, 21. are nothing else but an exaggeration of the same with more variety of expressions; So likewise is vers. 23, 24, 25, 26. it is an hyperbolical description of a most sad time, and yet as if he could never say enough to deterre them from their sins, he plainly threatens them over again with utter ruine and desolation, v. 27, 28, 29.

Though thou cloathest thee with crimson, &c. As he began Chap. 3. 6. to impeach Judah for whoredom: so he concludeth, speaking to her finally, as to an harlot decking her self in the richest and best manner that she can, to allure lovers to her, but the time being come that her beauty fadeth by grievous sufferings, none will now be allured unto her any more. Even so he sheweth that it should be with that harlot-like state. But he is not to be understood, as meant of that which Judah should do at the time of her destruction, for then they were so farre from trusting in Idols and decking them any more, that they began to see into their vanity, and how that no help was in them: but the words have reference to that was now done in hope of having help in time of need from these dumb and dead Idols, or at the least to be favoured the more by the Caldees by setting up such a worship as was used at Babylon. But he sheweth, that the Caldees being nothing inclined hereby to favour, should despise her, and seek her life, and be her murderers, of whom she should therefore lamentably complain, as a woman in travel of her pangs, vers. 31. And the like measure may any Christian state look for, that to procure favour of Papists, either to themselves, if need should require, or to those of our Religion amongst them, pleaseth them by conforming to their superstition, or tollerating it, as a Spanish Duke shewed anno 1588. when making just account with their Armado then prepared to over-run England, he asked his sword, whether it could distinguish betwixt Roman Catholicks in England and hereticks, that it might spare the one and kill the other, and said, it answered, No.

CHAP. V.

RUn to and fro in the streets of Jerusalem; That it might appear to all the world that God was not more severe to the Jews in judging them, as hath been before said, then they deserved; he here laieth open the universal overspreading of sinne in the holy City Jerusalem, where it was chiefly to be expected, that there should be some executing judgement, that is, walking exactly according to the rules of righteousness, and seeking the truth, that is, of an upright heart void of deceit and falshood in their speeches, but there was not a man, no not one such. And to shew that there was not one, he useth so many words, Go to and fro, search and enquire. If it be said, How can this be true, when as besides Jeremiah himself there was Baruch and Obed-melech that are spoken of; and it is not to be doubted but there were some others, though very few? Calvin answers, That the few righteous which were there, are to be considered apart from the body of the City against which the judgements of God were before denounced, and that which is here spoken, as against that body only, consisting of the King, his Counsellours, Priests, common People and false Prophets, who were many thousands, but not one righteous amongst them all. And he saith further, as speaking of a ground of this distinction, that Isa. 8. 16. Seal the Law, binde the Testimony for my Disciples, doth plainly make this distinction; To the righteous who are Gods Disciples, this is not spoken, but they being set apart; and then the multitude considered, who were before threatned, that which is here said is to be understood of them. But against this it may well be said, If the righteous be considered apart that were in Jerusalem, that which is here said by way of challenge is spoken in vain, beeing that if every righteous person be put by in any place, it will be manifestly lost-labour to search amongst others, though never so many, for one righteous man. Leaving this therefore, let us see what answers are brought by us. Isidor saith, It is hyperbolical. Lyra, that by one, a few are meant. But Jerom best, by one man understands one man of eminency for his standing for Judgement and Truth, and by his authority endeavouring to suppress the contrary. For so the word Unus here used is commonly put, as Exod. 15.3. Judg. 7.14. Psal. 4.3. Psal. 48.3. Isa. 46.11, &c. of which see Chrysostom more fully, Hom. 23. in Gen. Ezek. 22.30. I have sought a man that might stand in the gap, whereupon he saith, Such a man is to be understood as retaineth the image of God safe, and is most virtuously disposed; and Jerom, A man like Moses, Aaron or Samuel; Likewise upon Isa. 50.2. I came and there was not a man, yet a man here spoken of, is not so to be understood, as if none but a man of authority were meant: for the contrary appeareth vers. 4. I said, these are poor and understand not the judgement of the Lord: Therefore this search is first made amongst the common sort, there was not a man amongst them to be found, as he also sheweth that there was not amongst the nobler, v. 5. There were a very few haply besides Jeremiah and Baruch, that for their piety should themselves be saved, but not a man of zeal and courage as Phineas, that by opposing sin in others might stop the course of Gods judgments according to his power. Jeremiah indeed and Baruch sought to do it, but they stood now as representing God, who challenged all the rest, as hath been said. And this challenge was necessary to vindicate the Lord from severity, and more harshness towards his own people, then towards the Sodomites, whom he would have spared, if in that City there had been ten righteous, for that being the least number that he then condescended to, now he goeth lower to the Jerusalemians, If there be but one man, I will spare it, that executeth judgement, seeking by all means that he can to stop the course of sin, and seeking the truth, by encouraging hereunto, and against falsehood and deceit.

Verf. 2.

Although they say, The Lord liveth, surely they swear falsely. Heb. לֹא Therefore, or for this they swear falsely; Whereby he doth not only tax their hypocrisy in speaking after the manner of the most godly, The Lord liveth, as was prescribed Chap. 4.1. but also their horrible prophaning of the Lords name, in swearing falsely thereby to deceive others, that upon their sayings thus believe them, but after finding them false are moved to blaspheme this holy name, if vengeance be not taken on them with speed. Thus Calvin. But we may more briefly take the sense thus, Although they say, The Lord liveth, whereby they may be conceived by men not to be so bad, yet they are most wicked; and this their saying addeth to their wickedness, for by reason of this outward shew of piety, they imbolden themselves to commit this foul sin of perjury, thinking to passe for a godly people notwithstanding, seeing they swear not by Idols, but by the living God, as Gods people are commanded to do.

Calvin.

Verf. 3.

O Lord, are not thine eyes upon the truth? thou hast stricken them, &c. Having discovered their hypocrisy and false-confidence in a shew of piety, now he turns from them, as unworthy to be spoken to any more, to the Lord, that they might be the more moved to be ashamed, and being brought hereby to know their vanity in doing as was before said, be stirred up to repent. For although they might deceive men, they could not deceive God, whose eyes pierce into the secrets of mens hearts, looking therefore that his servants should speak nothing with their tongues but what is in their hearts, when they swear by him, 1 Sam. 16.16.

Verf. 6.

Wherefore a Lion out of the forest shall slay them, and a Wolf of the evenings. Having searched and found none righteous either amongst the common people or the nobles, vers. 4,5. now he returns to threaten them again, as Chap. 4.13. where a Lion is spoken of, but here both a Lion, Wolf and Leopard, whereby whereby one and the same destroyer is most commonly understood, viz. Nebuchadnezzar, with whose coming, as by a terrible judgement out of the North he threatned them, Chap. 1. and so continueth to do throughout his Prophecie. Others understand him by the Lion, the Persian Monarchy by the Wolf, and the great Emperour of Grecia Alexander by the Leopard, as he is set forth Dan. 7. But the first is the best, one Nebuchadnezzar was all these unto them, destroying and tearing them in pieces, as if all the beasts of the forest had broken in amongst them, or found them out of the City. But to set forth the divers Nations which came with him, he mentioneth not only a Lion, but a Wolf and Leopard also, for the Assyrians and Edomites, infest enemies of the Jews, assisted him in making this cruel destruction. A Wolf is called the Wolf of the evenings, because that having gotten no prey all day, he is very hungry in the evening, and sets upon whatsoever he can finde most eagerly.

How should I pardon thee for this, thy children have forsaken me, and sworn by them that are no gods. Here he makes them Judges, whether or no they were adjudged to such punishments, as are before-threatned; For here are two such grosse sins, Idolatry and adultery laid to their charge, that no man can say, but that what punishments soever they should suffer, they were justly dealt withall, because the Lord is the great Judge of all the world, and if he should suffer such to go unpunished, or lightly punished after long waiting with patience for their repentance in vain, he should not be just, which were to his great dishonour. By swearing by other gods is meant, ascribing to them omniscience, power to revenge for perjury, and justice doing to every one according to his deserts, and whoso doth thus by any creature makes a god of him. For their adultery, he saith, when he had fed them full, they assembled together in harlots houses, hereby is denoted the greatest impudency in going about this sin that might be, because adulterers commonly go secretly about this foul wickedness, but they in companies, as not being any whit ashamed of it, with the like to which they are charged, Isa. 3. 9. hereby is also set forth the commonness of that sin amongst them. And in setting this forth there is in Heb. an elegant Paronomasie, in the word swearing and filled, the one being Jeshbagna, the other Eshbagn.

Go ye up upon the wals and destroy, but make not a full end. See the like speech Chap. 4. 27. and here again vers. 18. it is understood by some, as if it were meant that all the people should not be destroyed, but a remnant saved, but by others better, That when they had suffered the things before-spoken of, more miseries were yet by the Jews to be expected from their enemies, as indeed it came to passe when their City being destroyed they were carried into Babylon, where their sufferings were greater and long-lasting, and although they that would returned home again at the end of seventy years, yet their sufferings were not at an end, but they were alwaies after under heathen Kings, many of whom did most cruelly persecute them, and tyrannize over them. The word והרסו here used, signifieth a consumption, but it is often put for an end also. Take away her battlements, for they are not the Lords, Vulg. Her offsprings, as if children were hereby meant, and that they should not be spared, Septuagint Props, or Basis, or Bulwarks. The word signifieth properly offsprings, but metaphorically it is put for pins of wals, and it agreeth best to some defensible buildings more prominent then the wals affixed to them to keep off enemies, because he spake before of their going up upon the wals. And in bidding go up, and take away, he doth most aptly meet with their vain confidence in these things, for by reason of them they thought their City safe enough from any enemy. They are not the Lords, that is, for sin God hath cast off the care of them, and will no more defend them.

They have belied the Lord, and said, It is not he. Here he chargeth them with the height of all wickedness, that is, with Atheism, for it is as much, as if he had objected against them that they said, The Lord is not God, for in the Hebrew it is, He is not, and of this sinne do all make themselves guilty that are not moved by the threatning of his judgements to repentance; for hereupon Jeremiah gathereth against the Jews, that they falsly denied God, and not without good reason, because such say, either he is not omniscient, or not omnipotent, or not just to do as he hath said, and to deny him to be any of these, is to deny him to be God, and to belie him.

The Prophets are winde, the word is not in them, so shall it be done to them. Calvin, The last words here are the words of the hard-hearted and unbelieving Jews; as if they had said, The Prophets threaten us with the sword and famine, but we think them vain in so doing, we will therefore requite them with the like, as they say to us, so we to them, These evils that they threaten shall come upon them, as soon as upon us. Lyra better, Because they so sleight the Prophets comminations, it shall be so to them, as here followeth, and as went before also, they shall certainly be destroyed by these judgements. Vatabl. expounds it of false prophets, as the threatning of Jeremiah against them for keeping the people by their false prophesying from repentance, but he saith, their prophesying is vanity, and so it shall be done therefore to them. But because he is inveighing against the wicked in this respect, that they put the lie upon him when he threatened them v. 12. it is most probable, that he goeth on here to shew how they sleighted his Prophets, for which they are threatned again, as hath been already said.

Vers. 14.

I will put my words in thy mouth as fire, and they shall be as stubble. That is, According to thy Word they shall be destroyed, as the stubble is by the fire; and when this shall come to passe, it shall appear, that thy words were not winde, and to be despised, but that theirs were such, being no more able to stand against thine, then the Inchanters rods in Egypt against the rod of Moses, but were devoured thereby.

Vers. 15.

A Nation most ancient. For such were the Caldees having continued ever since Nimrod, and accustomed to subdue such as they warred upon, and therefore they could not but expect to be subdued also by them. And he addeth, Of a language not understood, to shew that they should in vain crave to be spared by them, for they should not one understand another.

Vers. 18.

Yet I will not make an end. A like speech to this see before c. 4. 27. expounded. Vers. 19, 20, 21, 22, 23. He presseth the same further upon them, and by reasoning from this almighty power shewed in ruling the raging sea, seeks to strike the fear of the Lord into them.

Vers. 25.

Your iniquities have turned away these things. He spake vers. 24. of rain and seasonable times given by God to move them to fear and serve him, now he sheweth, that when it is otherwise, no rain falleth, or it cometh down immoderately, sin is the cause of it, the force thereof reacheth up to heaven, and thus troubleth the course of nature. And in particular the sin of craft and cruelty in circumventing men, and craftily getting their estates from them, as if a trap were set to take them. And by this means they growing rich thought themselves most happy, v. 26.

Vers. 31

The Prophets prophesie falsly, and the Priests bear rule by their means, &c. To prepare to this, he saith vers. 30. An horrible thing is committed. For what could be more horrible in the City Jerusalem, where the Temple and chief Priests were continually to direct the people aright, then that there should be false Prophets, and those countenanced by the said Priests. But he toucheth upon the cause, in saying, The Priests fill their hands by their means, as the words properly signifie, that is, of their false prophesying made advantage to increase their worldly wealth, which is when false prophets by their prophesying magnifie the Priests, as the men by being liberal to whom, and submitting themselves to be ruled by them, they shall provide for their everlasting good, and be temporally blessed also. For if the people be once perswaded of this, they will think nothing too much to give unto them, and so they shall be greatly enriched, and if they be not ruled by them, they think that much misery fery attendeth them. Such false prophets for the Priests were the Pharisees, Matth. 15. saying, Corban; and the Friars for the Pope, for which they were wont to say, that their four Orders were the four-wheeled chariot, wherein the Pope was drawn about in such pomp. And not unlike to these are those flattering prophets of our times, that magnifie Subjects in Authority, as if all power were in their hands, whereby so great gain cometh in unto them, and they lord it over their brethren and fellows, as Kings, imprisoning and divers waies punishing them that dare to gainsay this their unlimited power. For that which was then done to the Priests is now done to men in high Authority in the Commonwealth; but to the poor Priests contrariwise, they are pulled down every where from that which of right belongs unto them, and despised and trodden under foot. But ye may thank your selves, that in your prosperity were so proud, covetous and domineering over the Lords heritage, and take this as a judgement of God coming upon you to correct these abominable vices. And will ye do in the end thereof? That is, when the City shall be destroyed, and all your wealth taken away, and ye made miserable captives to your savage and mercilesse enemies. A good warning to all in the condition before-spoken of, in time to repent, that they may be saved from so horrible a destruction hanging over their heads for such horrible things doing, as vers. 30.

CHAP. VI.

Gather ye together ye children of Benjamin from the midst of Jerusalem. Having diversly already prophesied of the Caldees coming against them, now he prosecuteth the same argument further, speaking to the men of his own Tribe of Benjamin, in which half Jerusalem stood, as if the enemy were even now upon the march against them, Gather ye together, go forth of the City to encounter your enemies, if ye think to do any good upon it, to keep them from destroying your City. And to Benjamin he speaks, as being nearest unto him, and amongst whom he dwelt in Anathoth, and as being of great note for their valour, as appeareth, Judg. 20. Blow the trumpet in Tekoah, a Town of Judah near Jerusalem, and it seemeth a place so called, because the alarm by sounding of a Trumpet used to be given there, as we may gather from the words, which are תקיעה בקויעה Betecnah Tecu; and set up a sign in Bethcherem, that is, The house of vines, a Town in Benjamin, so called from the store of vines growing there, and a wine-press in a Tower built there on high; and therefore standing also upon high-ground most fit to set up a sign in to be seen afar off. For that vines were commonly planted upon hills, and in a vineyard a Tower was built, see Isa. 5. 1, 2. He planted it on an hill, &c.

Neh. 3. 14.

I have made the daughter of Zion like a delicate and tender woman. Here he sheweth how tenderly God had used the Kingdom of Judah in giving her rest, as his most beloved Spouse, when Israel was carried away captive by the Assyrians.

Vers. 2.

But the shepherds shall pitch their tents about her. That is, Princes and Captains of Armies, who are often called shepherds, and she shall become a prey to them and their Armies, intimated by saying, They shall feed every one round about: for when all wilde beasts are destroyed, shepherds separate and feed their flocks severally, but when there is danger in respect of the said wilde beasts, they gather their flocks closer together, that they may help to defend one another. Therefore in saying thus, he meaneth, that the Jews should be so rooted out of the Land and subdued, that the enemies should at their pleasure walk about and take the spoil of their countrey, there being none that they needed to fear left in the Land.

Vers. 3.

Sanctifie a warre against her, Arise, let us go up at noon-day. Calvin, Upon just cause go to warre against her, for that ye shall do, seeing the Lord upon the considerations before-going hath called you unto it. And it is thus spoke, to intimate that no warre is to be made without just cause, and even into the hearts of most barbarous Nations God hath put it, not to make warre commonly, but some cause first declared. The next words are the words of the forces coming, Let us go up at noon. This is spoken to shew their forwardness, because in those hot countries, enemies, being come before a Citie, did not use to begin their assaults at noon, which was the hottest time of the day, but staid commonly till the morning. In saying thus therefore their expedite mounting up the wals, and taking the Citie is set forth, they being grieved that they could not do it at the first on-set, for which they say, Woe to us, the day declineth, &c. and therefore they resolve to go on in their assault in the night, till they have done the work, vers. 5. By all which it is shewed, That the subduing of Jerusalem should be no long whiles work, but (as it were) from noon till night, and then all should be brought under. With Calvin consent Theodoret, Lyra, Hugo, but Jerom, Rabanus, Aquinas, understand it as spoken of the Jews lamenting their case, having suffered so much in the day, looking for more grievous sufferings in the night, but the Text is manifestly against this Exposition, and for the other, in which I therefore rest.

Verf. 9.

They shall thoroughly glean the remnant of Israel as a vine. Hebr. In pruning they shall prune, or in gathering grapes they shall gather. By the remnant of Israel he meaneth Judah, which remained still a Kingdom after that the ten Tribes were carried away, and he compareth this unto grapes gathering of a vine, when few or none left: for so the sacred Historie sheweth, that they were dealt with by the Caldees, a small remnant only being left of the poorest sort to till the Land. Bring thy hand back, as a vine-gatherer to the baskets: This carrying away of Judah shall not be at once; but as after the vintage the poor come and gather into baskets all the grapes remaining which they can finde, and this is called their gleaning: so the Caldees came with Nebuzaradan the second time, and carried away to Babylon all that were not hid in all parts. So that he doth by this further amplifie the desolation of their Land.

Verf. 16.

Ask for the old paths. After reproving them for their stiff going on in sinne, now the Prophet exhorts them again to that which might be most effectual to bring them out of the danger of warre and destruction into the way of peace, rest and prosperity. By the old way, he meaneth the way of truth and righteousness, of temperance, love and piety towards God, wherein their fore fathers Abraham, Isaac and Jacob walked, and before them Noah, Enoch, &c. and what grace and favour they found with God, whereas they that walked not in this way, but in sinne and rebellion, Idolatry, cruelty, excess of riot or prophanesse, were contrariwise made examples of Gods wrath, as Cain, the old world, Sodom, the Canaanites, Esau, &c. See the like exhortation, Deut. 32. 7. 1 Machab. 2. 51. and often in the Psalms. And for us under the Gospel it tends to move us to look both to the same examples, and above all to Christ, who saith of himself, I am the way, the truth and the life. And Come unto me, and ye shall finde rest unto your souls. And for a certain ground of our faith we are here enjoined to beware of new waies that cannot be proved to be old, as 1 Joh. 2. 7. his teaching is said to be the new Commandment, and yet the old. It is therefore a received truth, Quod primum, verum, that which was first is true and that divorces; were never lawfull Christ proveth, because it was not so from the beginning: The New Testament is for this cause proved by the Old, neither did the Apostles teach any but old Doctrine, those things that the Prophets of old spake of. So that they in these daies that broach novelties, pretending new light or revelations, if they teach or hold under this pretence any way, that cannot be proved to be the old way, they are no better then false Prophets and deceitfull Apostates, as the devil their master, transforming themselves into Angels of light. Yet here here is no ground for Papists to bear themselves upon, as if they were right, and the Protestants a company of Novelists, because they keep in the old waies of Popery, accounting the Pope the head of the Church, setting up Images in Churches and adoring them, calling upon Saints departed, believing a purgatory, prayers for the dead to be available, justification by works, and not by faith only, &c. For although these may seem to be old, yet it is certain that the people of God were not taught thus from the beginning, and therefore although a way wherein men walked hundreds of years, it comes farre short of being the old way, wherein the holy Patriarchs, Prophets and Apostles walked at the first; and whoso will have rest must come out of it, as it is said, Come out of Babylon.

Joh. 10.

The next verse expresth further, What this old way is, wherein they are bidden to walk, viz. as they are called by the sound of the Trumpet, that is, by the true Prophets preaching, who labour continually to work in them the fear and love of God and faith in him. For so Isa. 58. 1. he is bidden to lift up his voice as a trumpet; and to shew that such Preachers of righteousness and truth are meant, he saith, I have set watchmen to sound with a trumpet; and Ezek. 3. he is stiled a watchman, and therefore they are wise that by this Trumpet understand the sounding to battel before-spoken of vers. 1. And hereby we are given to understand in times when there are many that sound false alarms, how we may know to whose sounding to hearken, taking heed of others that we be not by their false teaching in corners drawn into a wrong way. True teachers are Watchmen that are set up publickly to give warning against all sinne and new doctrine, and not such as either creep into private houses, or comply with such in their waies or teaching, although they stand up in publick.

Therefore hear (O Nations) know, O Congregation. The Prophet having brought in the Jews saying, We will not hear, vers. 17. turns therefore now to the Gentiles and their Assemblies, as whom he thought rather to move to hearken to him, then the Jews, to their greater shame, and v. 19. he speaks to the earth also.

I will lay stumbling blocks before this people. That is, Ye may think to escape my judgements still, as ye have done, but ye shall now surely stumble and fall; See the like Isa.

The bellows are burnt, the lead is consumed by the fire. Calvin, The blower hath been dried up from the fire, the head is whole. Hebr. The bellows are burnt in their fire, the lead to vanity, in margin. וְהָיָה כְּעָשָׂן which may also be rendred, They in the fire, or rather in the fire, that is, of them the fire made, and blown by the Prophet being called, because to purge them. The meaning most generally being taken to be, that the Prophets tongue like a bellows through much straining of himself to cry out, and that often, against their sinnes, was even worn out like a Smiths bellows, but the lead onely commonly put by refiners into the furnace amongst silver to purge it, was wasted away, but the Jews remained as drossie silver still, as in the next words, they are not purged, vers. 30. They call them reprobate silver. In saying therefore The lead is consumed, as all generally expound it, he meaneth, that he wasted himself by taking pains to convert and purge them from their sins, but his labour was quite lost, as lead melted together with silver for the purging, as Jerom and others commonly affirm, and Cornelius a Lapide saith, That the refiners at Rome consent, being made by the heat of the fire to vanish, corrupt silver that cannot be purged, remaineth such still. But Calvin and some others by this fire understand Gods judgements by the Caldees to come, but whoso shall observe that they are said not to be purged hereby, but still to be reprobate silver; and vers. 28. Brasse and iron, and compare herewith, Isa. 1. 25. I will purely purge out all thy dross or lead, must needs confesse, that this cannot be meant of the judgement of carrying them into Babylon, for now they were nothing purged, but then thorowly, therefore the Prophets endeavours are meant, they were but lost labour, how much soever he spent his breath and voice even to hoarseness in calling upon them to amend, the speech is wholly metaphorical from a refiners bellows to the Prophet, and from lead and corrupt silver remaining, so still to his pains taken in vain, as is also complained, Isa. 49. 4. whereby is intimated, how great the pains of faithful Preachers are, even as of a Smith blowing with his bellows, and suffering, as it were, by the heat of a most ardent fire, against those that commonly extenuate our pains, as if our maintenance came in with ease, whereupon they part not with it without much repining and grudging, but God loveth a chearfull giver, and ministring to you spiritual things, is it a great matter if we reap your carnal? 2 Cor. 8. 1 Cor. 9.

CHAP. VII.

Vers. 12.

Here the Prophet after a most earnest exhortation to turn from their sins, and to amend their lives, to move them the more to repentance, propounds the example of Shiloh where the Ark stood of old, 1 Sam. 4. but being carried out and taken by the Philistines, it never came thither again, but that place lay ever after desolate. So he sheweth, that they also should be dealt withall, their Temple being destroyed the City Jerusalem should be left desolate, and although after the first destruction by Nebuchadnezzar it was re-built at their return out of Captivité, yet it was again destroyed by the Romans, after which it could never be built any more.

Vers. 16.
Ezek. 13. 5.

Therefore pray thou not for this people. This may seem strange, when as at other times an intercessour to avert judgement is required, as Isa. 59. 16. Chap. 64. 7. Chap. 43. 3. Ezek. 32. 30. But this is so spoken, to shew that prayer shall not prevail, unless it be fervent and with perseverance, when God seemeth by denying the requests of his servants, or not granting them a long time, to forbid them to trouble him any more with such Petitions, as Matth. 18. Jam. 5. 16. He therefore that persists fervently to ask, when he prevaileth nothing, shall finally prevail. 2. That the prayers of the best are of no force, if they for whom, go on still obstinately in their sins, Ezek. 14. Calvin scanning this prohibition saith, that it was not for any of that people, for there was a remnant for whom he was to pray, but that the state of the Kingdom should continue, to pray he was forbidden, it being unalterably determined, that for their sins it should be pulled in pieces, and their Temple destroyed. I prefer the former, both because he saith, Chap. 5. He could not finde a man, and in many places before-cited the Lord intimateth his desire in this matter to finde some one or more opposing him by their prayers, as Moses Exod. 32. as a thing wherein he delighted; and the word, opposing me, is here used after praying and crying spoken of and forbidden. Whereby the power of a righteous mans prayer appeareth, the Almighty is by it opposed, and his hands, as it were, tied from smiting.

Vers. 18.
septuagint.

To make cakes to the Queen of heaven. Some for the Queen of heaven, have it, The host of heaven, because מלכ is the word here used, and אֱלֹהִים signifieth a messenger or minister, therefore they will have the Ministry of the heavenly host meant. But this word signifying nothing but to reign, is best translated Queen, whereby Jerom saith, the Moon is meant, by the Heathens thought to be wife to the Sun; and therefore the cakes made of flower and oil for an offering to her, had the figure of the Moon made upon them. And what diligence and care the superstitious Jews did use in making them in the most exact manner, he sheweth, saying, The children gathered sticks, the fathers made the fire, the mothers kneaded them. O that we were so intent to the worship of the true God of heaven, both fathers, mothers and children, with united forces doing the best service to him, that possibly we can in our meetings, otherwise these shall rise up in judgement against us and condemn us.

Hieron.

Note.

My anger shall be poured out upon man and beast, upon fowls and trees. This is not so threatned, as if God raged against beasts and senseless Trees, but that in smiting them men might be the more terrified, as they were made for man, so for his sins being destroyed, that he looking hereupon might be dismayed.

Vers. 20.

Put your burnt Offerings to your Sacrifices, and eat flesh. Having threatned them with destroying judgements, vers. 20. now that they might not deceive themselves by holding up as a Buckler of defence their outward performances, by offering to the Lord many Sacrifices, he beateth down this confidence by telling them, that they might do so, and yet be no whit the more accepted, no more account of their Sacrifices being made on Gods part, then if they did but kill and prepare and eat flesh together in feasting one another in a carnal manner: for it was not to him that they did this, because not done according to his will, whilst they sacrificed, they neglected to yield him due obedience, which was the main thing required by him at his bringing them out of Egypt. Vers. 22, 23. I spake not to your fathers concerning Sacrifices, &c. This may seem not to be true, because the errand that Moses came upon to Pharaoh at the first, was, That the people might be permitted to sacrifice three daies in the wilderness. But the meaning never was, That Sacrifices should be offered, and obeying Gods Commandments neglected, which was now done by the Jews, and therefore he speaks thus ironically unto them, and to intimate that obedience was the chief thing required, he first gave the Law of the ten Commandments, then afterwards of sacrificing.

Vers. 21.

Vers. 22, 23.

Cut off thine hair (O Jerusalem.) The word Hair, Hebr. is קלף signifying also a Crown, from whence the Nazarites Numb. 6. had their name, and these for their holiness, the sign whereof was their long hair, which they did not cut, were the glory and crown, as it were, of the Jewish Nation. In bidding Jerusalem then cut her hair, he meaneth, that her Nazarites now might as well cut their hair as nourish it, for they should not for this be any whit the more accepted, no more then for their many Sacrifices: Thus also Calvin, adding that cutting off her hair, is also spoken of, as a token of sorrow, for which she is in the next words bidden to make Lamentation in the high places, Because God hath forsaken the generation of his wrath, whereby he intimateth, That Gods wrath should in that Generation come upon them, as indeed it did. The Prophet therefore doth not here exhort them to repentance again, as he had divers times before done, but as against desperate impenitent persons denounceth judgement that should make them most certainly to howl and cry, when upon high-places, they should see the irresistible forces of their enemies coming against them or camping about them on every side, neither should any pretended outward holiness or worship help them. By cutting off hair, that sorrow is set forth which is extream, see Job 1. 10. Isa. 15. 2. Ezek. 27. 31. the same hath been used to be done to servants, and therefore both the lowest ebb of misery and servitude to their enemies, into which they should come, is hereby set forth, Isa. 3. 17. the Daughters of Jerusalem that were so proud, are threatned with baldness, Chap. 7. 20. Micha 1. 16. Habak. 3. 13. And amongst the Heathen it was common in extream sorrow to pull off the hair, and to shave servants and slaves; whereupon it is in Aristophanes said, Tu dum servus es comam nutris. And that it was a base thing for a woman especially to be shorn, appeareth 1 Cor. 11. and for men too, according to Ovid, Et sine fronde frutex, & sine crine caput.*

Therefore Demosthenes willing to keep at home against the importunity of his friends shaved his head, because that in this case they knew he could not go into any company for shame. 3. There is another cause of cutting the hair, viz. when a man comes out of prison and misery, as Joseph being sent for to stand before Pharaoh, and Evilmerodach lifting up the head of Jehoiakim, they both cut their hair, and changed their garments, but this is nothing pertinent to our purpose here. Many think these words [Cut thy hair] to be directed to Jeremiah, as if he should do it in a figure, but when he is bidden to do any thing in this sense, he is plainly spoken to. Here although Jerusalem be not named in the Hebrew, yet she is manifestly meant, for the words run as to a She, in the Feminine gender, and so Jerusalem is commonly spoken of, The Daughter Jerusalem.

Verf.30.

They have set their abominations in the house called by my Name. This, as is generally agreed, is spoken of that which was done, 2 King. 21.4. in the daies of Manasseh, and likewise that which followeth of Tophet, verf.31. and therefore of this see there, that I may not repeat the same again. But it may seem strange, that in the time of Josiah (who defiled Tophet and purged the Temple, yea Manasseh himself, after his return from Captivity, did pull down the abominations that before he had set up) these things should be charged upon the Jews in his time. For the better understanding hereof therefore, we must look into 2 King. 22.3. and Chap. 23. and we shall finde that Josiah did not that worthy work of removing the abomination out of the Lords house, and of defiling Tophet till Anno Regni 18. but these words were spoken Anno 13, as appears Chap. 1. And if Manasseh had done it upon his repentance, he had a wicked son Amon who could set them up again, and the people still most probably, though living under godly Josiah, were bold, whilst he was yet very young, to go on in their old wickedness, and for this they are here taxed.

Verf.32.

They shall bury in Tophet, till there be no place. This is spoken, to shew how vain their endeavours were about sanctifying this place for divine worship, for in saying that it should be a burying place, he meaneth that it should be all polluted, because dead bodies pollute the places where they lie, for which cause such superstitious persons would not endure that any dead should be buried near unto places which they consecrated to the worship even of Idols. But of this worship the Lord had said before verf. 31. that he commanded it not, neither came it into his minde, hereby giving us an hint of a singular good Note, That the rules of Divine Worship prescribed by God in his holy Word are allsufficient, and whosoever presumes to go further, this is enough to condemn him, God never commanded this, therefore it is an abomination; apply this to the many inventions of the Church of Rome, and they are all hereby condemned, and it is well done of the Church of England, that she hath of late cast them all out. Only it were to be wished that we might have so much discretion as to distinguish between Novas species pietatis, & eiusdem magis vel minus exercitatus, and then whosoever holdeth, That in sacris non est satietas cannot condemn the keeping of Christs birth-day to his honour, as many now adaies do, because it is not expressly commanded, or said to have been kept in the Apostles daies. And to conclude this Verse, the defiling of Tophet here prophesied of, was in the eighteenth year of Josiah in part, 2 King. 23.10. and in part afterwards, Jerusalem being destroyed, as followeth verf. 33, 34. and brought into desolation, when dead bodies shall lie round about in all places, as meat for the beasts of the field, and fowls of the air. And this shall be the end of all Idolaters, when Gods judgements come they shall perish unhappily, and not enjoying so much as a buriall, nor as dung upon the earth, and the places which they have doted upon, as thinking they could never honour them enough, shall be rendered most infamous, as was sometime the house of Baal, that was turned into a Jakes in the daies of zealous Iehon.

CHAP. VIII.

AT that time they shall bring forth the bones of the Kings of Judah. This is added to Chap. 7. in way of amplifying that which was there threatned, Some think that this was done in searching for treasure, which was put into the Sepulchres of Kings together with their dead bodies in those daies, for great men were not then buried without some treasure, as Histories commonly shew, touching the Sepulchre of David. But be it that Kings Sepulchres were opened and their bones taken out for this, he saith, the bones of Priests and of the people, what treasure could be in their Sepulchres? It is therefore better that Theodoret hath, Their bones were cast out of their graves in contempt. For it was an honour to be buried, and for a mans bones to rest, but a disgrace to have his bones dig'd up, and to lie without burial, as we may gather 2 King. 23. where Iosiah caused the bones of Baals Priests to be digged out, and burnt upon Ieroboams Altar. And the like was done amongst Heathens, when any King of Egypt died that had done good to his Countrey, one was set to speak to his praise, but if evil, he was cast into some Desert unburied; and thus were all malefactours also sentenced by the Judge, dealt withall. And accordingly it is threatned Isa. 14. 19. that Nebuchadnezzar should be cast out of his Sepulchre. For the fulfilling of this see Baruch 2. 24. And they shall be laid before the Sunne, &c. As they had sinned by worshipping the host of Heaven, so these heavenly bodies should be made Spectators of their shame, and not afford them any help, as they trusted they would have done, but rather increase their ignominy, for their foul disloyalty to their Creatour, and making them to share with him in divine honour, from which they in their kinde utterly abhorred, as Angels appearing to John and Daniel offering to worship them, did.

And death shall be chosen rather then life of all the residue. Some fled at the destruction of Judah to Egypt, some to Moab, Ammon, &c. but wheresoever they were, so great were their miseries that they counted the dead, although misused and disgraced after death, in a better case then themselves, thinking therefore long to be with them, that they might be rid of these miseries.

Verf. 4. Will not they that fall rise again? if a man hath turned out of the way, will he not return? Some expound this as if the words were spoken of the Jews, having fallen so foully, as was aforesaid, and the next of the Lord; as if he had said, It is common amongst men by the instinct of nature, having taken a fall to rise up again, but the wicked Jews have not hitherto done so, they have fallen most foully into Idolatry and other grosse sins, but will ye (O ye wicked Jews) being fallen, lie still, and not rise again by repentance? be not so unnatural, and through your obstinacy differing from all other men. If ye shall say, The Lord is turned away from us, he will not turn again to us, although we should arise, this cannot possibly be; for it is not so with man that hath any goodness in him, if he be offended, upon repentance of the offender he is placable, much more will God be pacified towards you if ye thus arise from sin to newness of life? Calvin expounds both passages of the Jews, as if he had by two comparisons laboured to reclaim them, 1. Of a man falling, who will not lie, but rise up again. 2. Of one going out of the way through error, that when this his error is shewed him, will not still go on in the wrong way, but return at the direction of his guide. And herein I must needs subscribe to Calvin, because that in the words following their obstinate continuing in sin is pressed against them, but of the Lords readiness to return, nothing added, They have cleaved to deceit and would not return. Here he sheweth the cause of their obstinacy, the deceitfulness of their own hearts, for by fraud here this is meant, where they deceived not others so much, but themselves much more, as appeareth verf. 11. where they say to themselves Peace, Peace, that is, we will not believe but that we shall have peace peace whatsoever thou threatenest, wherein the event proved how greatly they were deceived. And he saith, Why is this people of Jerusalem rebellious, amongst whom was the light of the Law, and who were inured to obedience from their childhood from generation to generation? If they had been Heathens, it were not so hainous, some excuse of ignorance might have been made, but in this case none. And the Lord doth not thus set the Prophet again to move them, in expectation that they would hereby be moved, for he had before given them over as desperate, Chap. 7. 16. and here he speaks likewise again, but yet he ceaseth not to reprove and exhort them, that when judgements should come they might be without excuse, and to teach all his Ministers to do the like, and in so doing to persevere to the last, even when they see no likelihood of prevailing.

Note.

Vers. 7.

The Stork knoweth her appointed time, and the Turtle and Crane. Here he prosecuteth his Argument of returning, upbraiding them that would not, by these fowls of the air, which although they want reason, yet know to return out of extream cold countries in their times into warmer, but obstinate sinners have not so much wit for fear of Gods judgements to turn from their sins, that they might come as it were out of the region of pinching and piercing evils, which are more obnoxious then the most nipping frosts, of which yet it is said, Who can abide his frosts? Some for a Stork have a Puttock, but the word is most generally taken for a Stork, called דוכ mercifull, because the very embleme of mercy, feeding her young with her own bloud; for which the young in time of age make her a compensation by bearing her between them, in fleeing and bringing her food for her sustenance. Some of these fowls are well known to us, not to appear till the Spring, as the Swallow, either hiding themselves from the cold in Winter, or fleeing away into hotter climates.

Vers. 8.

The Writer hath sharpened his pen in vain. That is, to write the Law of God for the Jews to read, who had it commonly amongst them, and they had Scribes, learned men in the Law, in vain; so that it was a very vain brag that they said They were wise, forso much as they wanted this wisdom of turning and hastening from the storm that otherwise would beat them in pieces, and so their having of the Law, although they had also the knowledge of it, but did it not, was a vain thing.

Vers. 13.

There shall be no grapes on the Vine, &c. He had before Chap. 7. 20. threatened the very trees, now he sheweth how this wicked people should be punished in particular in the vine and fig-tree, which were a great part of their sustenance and substance, but now such a famine should come that they should bear no fruit.

Vers. 15.

Let us assemble our selves and enter into the defenced Cities. Chap. 6. 1. he bids them go out to withstand the enemy here, as being without hope of stopping him in his coming, he bids them try another way to be saved, by shutting themselves up in their strongest places; but this also he sheweth should be in vain, they should but thus drink the waters of bitterness, that is, suffer by famine in the time of siege, and then finally be destroyed. Of that which is said, ver. 15, 16. see before Chap. 4. 15.

Vers. 17.

I will send Serpents, Cockatrices amongst you, &c. Septuagint, The worst sort of Serpents. Jerom, Killing Serpents. Aquila, Basilisks. Hebr. נחש by the consent of all a little Serpent not above half a foot long is meant, which goeth not as other Serpents, but erect from the middle part, and doth so infect the air, that by the pestilent breath coming therefrom fruits are killed, and men being but look upon by it, and birds fleeing over it, stones are broken, and by the hissing thereof all other Serpents are put to flight; And hereby the Caldees are set forth that should destroy, as it were, by seeing, an hyperbolical expression, to shew the Jews destruction to come, by them, not to be avoided any more then if a company of Cockatrices should come amongst them. And prosecuting the Allegory, he saith, they should not be charmed, to shew that that as Serpents that cannot be charmed, corrupt and kill, and this, which is the common remedy against them, being of no force to drive them away, the plague by them rageth till the whole countrey where they come be made desolate, so it should be at the coming of the Caldees.

Is not her King in her? Here the Jews are brought in complaining, as if they were unjustly dealt withall, when the Caldees so mightily prevailed against them, this being looked upon as a judgement now present, although it were to come, as it is commonly spoken of by the Prophet for the certainty thereof. The voice of crying is heard from a farre countrey. This, saith Calvin, is commonly understood, as spoken of the Jews, seeing themselves distressed by the Caldees, but he brings another Exposition, as if it were the voice of them carried away into a farre countrey, that is, Babylon, but holds not to it, but rather to the first. I think it ought rather to be understood this second way, because it is said, A voice of crying from a farre countrey; and when could this be but when they were carried away thither? the voice of crying in their distresse by the Caldees, is said before to have been A voice of crying in the high places, that is, in their own Countrey, this from the Countrey in which they suffered after their being carried away Captive, yet I deny not, but (from a farre Countrey) may be expounded, as caused by them that came from a farre; and these words, Is not the Lord in Zion? imply their being yet there. Is not the Lord in Zion? Is not her King? In these words is set forth what they cried, they expostulated with the Lord, as if he were not true of his Promise, when he suffered their enemies thus to prevail against them, having promised Psal. 122. 14. Here will I dwell for ever, and I have set my King upon my holy hill of Zion, &c. for grounding upon these and the like promises, they thought themselves safe against all forrain enemies for ever: but to this he answereth in the name of the Lord, Why have they provoked me by their graven images? As if he had said, Thus it should indeed have been through my singular favour towards them, but they by their Idolatries have brought contrary things upon themselves, as they were well worthy.

The Harvest is past, and the Summer ended, yet we are not saved. This is by Calvin taken as spoken of the help which they expected out of Egypt, which came not, although now there was nothing to hinder them, whereas before Harvest this might have been alledged as a reason, They could not spare the time from getting in their Harvest, but now what expectation can there be of them in the dead of Winter? surely none: Thus also Jerom and Lyra; but Thomas Aquinas, although the Harvest-time be past, when men have provision enough, we are not hereby holpen against our famine. It may be understood simply of the tediousnesse of their siege, from which they hoped that God would deliver them at the least the Summer being ended, by cold frosts, if not otherwise driving the enemy away, as he had done Sennacheribs host by a mighty and sudden slaughter. For the expostulation of the people made with God for not saving them vers. 19. is here continued.

For the hurt of the daughter of my people I am hurt. This is by some taken to be spoken in the person of Jeremiah, by some of the Lord, which is most probable, because he saith, My people; and if the words shall not seem to agree to the Lord, he doth at other times also put on the person of a most compassionate Father in speaking of their miseries.

Is there no balm in Gilead? The Vulgar for balm hath resina, some Treacle, but it is most generally agreed, that a certain thick liquour congealing into Gumme, that distilled drop by drop out of the Balsome tree when the bark was cut, is here meant, and such Trees grew in Arabia and Gilead, on this side Jordan, and this Gumme was most excellent for healing sores or wounds: but it is metaphorically here to be understood either of Doctrine or Repentance, whereby the souls of sinners are healed, when they are hereby converted, according to some, or of wisdom, and counsel, and valour, of which

which the Jews bragged so much, whereby to be delivered from their enemies, or to recover their wounded and dying state, according to others. And this last way it is taken by Calvin, saying, that it is meant their wound was incurable, and therefore it would be vain to think of any remedy against that blow by the Caldees, they must be smitten, and utterly perish from being a Kingdom any more; See the like speech to Egypt, Chap. 46. And Gilead above other places is mentioned, because such trees abounded most there, and there was the best balsom, although they grew also in divers others of Judea, and as medicinal simple abounded most there, so Physicians, for which he addeth, Is there no Physician there?

CHAP. IX.

Vers. 1, 2, 3.

HAVING spoken of the estate of the Jews, as most lamentable in the words before-going, now he stirs up himself to lament, and sheweth the cause, their adulteries and deceitfulness, for which he upbraids them for such as know not God, because to know and not to do, is not to be wise, but foolish, as Chap. 4. 22. and vers. 4, 5, 6. are nothing else but a further amplifying of the same. For which he saith vers. 7. I will melt them, or try or examine, as a Goldsmith trieth gold and silver in the fire, and then it will appear what it is; so the fire of Gods wrath burning against them, he meaneth, that their deceitfulness should be discovered, which now lay hid from men, and they should bear the shame of it, a Metaphor often used by the Prophets. For how should I deal with the daughter of my people? I will make any man judge, whether I can deal otherwise then thus with her.

Vers. 10.

Upon the mountains I will take up a lamentation, and upon the fields. Having sought to stirre up in them what sorrow he could for the evils to come upon them; now seeing that their stupidity was such that they would not be moved, he falls again to lamenting their mountains and fields, as intimating that they should be safe in no place from the fury of their enemies, whethersoever they should flee either into plain places or hilly.

Vers. 15.

I will feed them with wormwood, and give them water of gall. Calvin, With bitterness, because wormwood is an wholesome herb, although bitter, and wheresoever the like is spoken, it is in an evil sense, something being meant that tends to the destruction rather then the preservation of the body, for which gall is joined to it, which is poison; so that he meaneth, whereas his fatherly indulgence hath been such towards them that he hath fed them with wheat, milk and honey now his affection should be so farre alienated from them, that he would make them eat and drink that which should be their destruction in the cruellest manner. See the like phrase Deuter. 19. 18. Chap. 32. 32. Hab. 2. 13.

Vers. 17.

Call for mourning women. The Prophet seeing the Jews most hard to be moved to lament their own destruction to come, bids them call to them mourning women, that by their mournfull representing of the case of the dead, and the losse of the living hereby; and the sad condition of all men, who cannot live long, but must die also, and be pluckt from wives, children, and all that they have within a short time, and be carried into the Land of darkness, to become worms meat, being dispoiled of understanding, wit, reason and utterance, strength and beauty being in a short time turned to horrid anatomies, they might be moved to do that unto which he could by no means move them by his most pathological representing of Gods destroying judgements unto them. And he speaketh thus to make them ashamed; as if he had said, If after thus much speaking, no sorrow can be stirred up in your hard and unbelieving hearts, go to such theatrical women, and see, if by them ye can be brought to sorrowing. For by shewing extream grief and acting cunningly the part of mourners, such women wrang tears commonly, yea wrang tears abundance from the eyes eyes of all beholders. But he had in truth acted the part of an whole State perishing together in the most pathetical manner that he could, representing also the same in the most horrid manner, as present before their eyes, yet they lamented not, although the case were not anothers, but their own. His bidding them therefore to call for such women, is not serious but ironical, mocking at their vanity, in that they were moved commonly so much at a matter of nothing in comparison, and were not grieved at all, but rather laughed at all his incitements to sorrow, as if no such thing should ever happen unto them, as he would make them believe. Calvin will not have this a ground for the lawfulness of calling together mourners at funerals, but rather speaketh against this custom. I cannot but think it indifferent, although not to be grounded upon this, and that some may by such means be more affected with sorrow in seeing so sad a spectacle to think the more seriously upon their own mortality, and the rather to make themselves ready for the coming of their Lord, for which Solomon saith, It is better to go into the house of mourning than of feasting; and when Jacob was buried there was a great mourning made for him; and mourning for the dead is not forbidden to us, but immoderately, as those that are without hope.

Hear the word of the Lord, ye Women with your ears hear. Having bidden them before call for mourning women that might frame themselves to pretend great grief for hire, and act this part so cunningly, that the spectators might be moved to shed tears; now he enlargeth himself further, calling upon all women to mourn, and not the few Conduittie before-spoken of only, the cause being common to women all over the Land. And he speaks to women rather than men here, because that by nature they were more apt to weep at calamities, and he had before begun to speak of them, and men had not been left untoucht in the premisses. And he biddeth them hear and hear with their ears by a Pleonasm to stir them up the more to hearken, as to a matter of great moment, in regard of which they should rather neglect to attend to any thing else then to this.

And what is it, but that Death is come up into our windows? The Jews think if their wals be strong, and their gates and doors fast shut and barr'd, that no enemy can come to hurt them, but they shall be utterly deceived, death shall be sent in by the highest windows, God that brings destruction can bring it any way, and they are but fools that think otherwise. Therefore mourn all tender-hearted women, as for that which shall certainly come, and teach your daughters to mourn, for the judgement shall extend to you all young and old, one another, yea and strong Palaces of the great ones shall defend them no more, then the cottages of the poor.

Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, &c. These words are to be taken as cohering with those before vers. 21, 22. where death and becoming as dung after death is threatned to the wicked Jews. Now least any amongst them should bearing himself either upon his wisdom, riches or strength say, I care not what thou threatnest, I have wit enough, or wealth, or strength enough to save one, he admonisheth them here not to do so, for all these are but a deceitfull foundation, but to turn to the Lord and in him only so doing to be confident and comfortable, because to such the Lord will be ready to shew loving kindness and mercy, let men rage against them what they can, as Psal. 3.

I will punish all the uncircumcised with the circumcised, Hebr. The circumcised in uncircumcision. Here the Prophet concludes with terrour to the Jews, if they had any hope yet notwithstanding all that was before-said, because they were the peculiar people of God, a circumcised Nation, having the sign of his covenant upon their flesh. It was, he saith, but circumcision in uncircumcision, and therefore should not profit them, the flesh, which was of least moment, circumcised, but the heart, the circumcision whereof is principally required, not. And therefore they must look to escape no better, who were of Judah then of Egypt, Ammon, Edom or Moab sometime confederates with Judah for which they are mentioned together. If it be said, Egypt and Edom were also circumcised in the flesh, why then is this distinction made, They are all uncircumcised, and Judah uncircumcised in heart? Ans. Although they were circumcised, yet the Jews challenged this for their peculiar privilege, accounting themselves for it the only people in Gods favour in all the world, wherefore it is spoken by way of concession, Let your distinction passe for current, they are uncircumcised notwithstanding their circumcision, so are ye in Gods account, and ye and they without difference shall, when Gods judgements come pell mell, suffer together. See the like Rom. 2. 28, 29. and as it is with the uncircumcised in heart, so shall it be with the unbaptized in spirit, the outward washing with water saves not if that be away.

CHAP. X.

Learn not the wayes of the Heathen, neither be dismayed at the signs of heaven, for the Heathen are dismayed at them. Some make a question, whether this was spoken to the ten Tribes already in Captivity, to warn them against Astrologers in Caldea, and the Idolatries there practised, or to the Jews which should shortly be carried thither, that they might not then be corrupted thus. But I see no cause of this question, for the Prophet might profitably thus warn the Jews being yet in Judea, in going on in the Argument in hand about fearing or not fearing the judgements by him threatned. And he seemeth to me, after that he had used one argument to make them to be affected hereat, taken from mourning women, Chap. 9. 17. now to enter upon another taken from Astrologers, whose predictions by the stars, the signs of heaven, they greatly feared, but the judgements fore-told by the Lord to come upon them they feared not. For it is his chief scope in this Chapter by comparing the Lord and Idols together, to shew his excellency and their vanity, and consequently how much the predictions of his servants are to be regarded, to stirre us up to repentance for the preventing of them, and how little the predictions of Idols servants, such as Astrologers are, who fear men by the signs of heaven, teaching a fatal necessity, that whatsoever is thereby portended according to their judgement made upon the constellations and severall aspects of the Planets, or upon the appearing of the fixed stars, shall certainly come to passe, not only in respect of the alteration of weather, but of good or evil to befall particular persons according to the time of their birth, or undertaking business at this or that time, or to whole Nations in respect of peace or warre, health or infection, plenty, or famine, or alterations to better or worse. Now to dissuade them from taking heed to these Prophets, he saith, that it is the way of Heathens to fear for their predictions by the stars, and therefore he bids them leave this vanity to them alone, which is his menacing, when he saith, For the Heathen are dismayed at them, as our Lord in another case having spoken against distracting cares of this life, saith, For after all these things do the Heathen seek. Whether the signs of heaven be not at all to be feared, or how farre forth heed may be taken to them, or what is to be thought of the Astrologian art, whether it be lawfull or not by the stars to judge of events, I shall not speak here, because I have said something to this already upon Isa. 47. 13. Onely I say, that in this place the unlawfulness or lawfulness of judiciary Astrology comes not in question, but that fear of the signs of heaven, in which they are looked at as gods, viz. the Sunne, Moon and Starres, and worshipped, that they might not hurt, but be propitious and favourable, which as a most grosse sinne is spoken of, Deut. 4. 19. and the Hebrews are straitly charged against it. Thus fear not the signs of heaven, but acknowledge them to be but servants, whether their aspects be favourable or adverse, and that the great Creator of them and us all can at his pleasure crosse them in their operations, according as he is by us in faith and repentance, sought or not sought unto from time to time. And that the Prophet speaks in this sense appears, because after forbidding to fear these signs, he immediately inveigheth against Idols, vers. 3, 4, &c. which would have no coherence with this, but only in the sense before-going, but in that sense the coherence is good. Fear them not, that is, account them not Deities to worship them, as if they had power; and that ye may have them alwayes before you for this end, make not Images of them, for this were the greatest vanity or folly that could be, as is shewed at large here, and Isa. 46.

Gather thy Wares (O thou that dwellest in the munition) Here the Prophet returns again to the threatening of the judgment by the Caldees wherewith he began, speaking to them as a people even now ready to be spoiled of all their goods. For as when the enemy cometh they gather all things of worth together into strong holds to save them out of their hands, leaving other places bare before them, so he calls upon them in this verse to do. Yet so he threatneth vers. 18. that they should save nothing, for even out of these strong holds, he saith, that he would sling them at this time, as a stone is slung, and distresse them so, that they should certainly finde it thus, the enemy after streightning by siege breaking in to their strongest holds, and dispossesting them thereof, and making them with speed to go as farre off into Captivity, as a stone is cast farre by a sling. Thus also Calvin, who saith, that Hebrew Expositors apply vers. 17. to the Caldees, as if their gathering of the spoils taken from them by the Jews were meant: but this is altogether from the purpose.

Woe is me for my hurt, my wound is grievous. Here Jeremiah to aggravate the judgement spoken of, vers. 18. the more, turns himself, as it were, into the person of all Judah, thus teaching them what they should do, viz. be already affected with this destruction shortly to come, as if it were already come, confessing it to be just, and therefore patiently resolving to bear it. And that the Prophet speaks this in the person of Judah, and to teach that whole state, is made plain by the next words.

My tabernacle is dissolved, and all my cords broken, &c. A metaphorical expression setting forth the utter destruction of Jerusalem, even as when a Camp is quite broken up, not any Tent, or part of a Tent being left standing.

O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himself, it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps. Having threatned destruction and desolation to Judea, now because the Jews contrariwise promised themselves safety, partly by their own power and preparations, that they could make to defend themselves, and partly by the help of the Egyptians their confederates, he leaveth them and turneth his speech to the Lord, as being out of hope to perswade them to fear the evil to come, and in fearing to turn from their sins, that so it might be prevented. And what saith he, but in effect that they were vain in their imaginations, because men may prepare to the battel, and promise to themselves good success, but when they are armed and strengthened by humane help according to their hearts desire, they have gone as farre as they can, they are able to effect nothing, but any forces coming against them that are stirred up by God to punish them for their sins, although fewer, shall easily destroy and break their whole strength, but much more the Caldees a Nation so populous and mighty; Thus Calvin. But Jerom, Theod. Rabanus expound it of Nebuchadnezzar, it is not in that man that walketh to direct his wayes, that is, he cannot come and prevail without thee, because having said Woe he addeth Woe signifying only one more mighty. And as this is first and properly spoken to the case in hand, so it is generally true being understood of going in the way by God appointed us, that we may be blessed and happy for ever. Our endeavouring sufficeth not, but God works the will and the deed of his own good pleasure. The Pelagians hence gather, because it is said, It is not in man that walketh to direct his goings, that he can by his own strength walk in this way, but he must be holpen by Gods grace, that he may be perfect. But this is to gather more then is intended, his walking being spoken of only by way of concession, as if it were supposed if he can walk, he must have strength of grace from God so to do, otherwise he is altogether unable; it is as Christ elsewhere saith, Without me ye can do nothing; And as in the Canticles, Draw me, and I will runne after thee. But of this, that we can doe nothing without, but by the grace of God preventing and assisting us, see my Notes upon Phil. 2.12. Hugo, Lyra and Dionysius are for this last sense onely, taking it as a ground of the prayer vers. 22. sith man cannot go right but erre and sinne of himself, Be not so severe unto me, because I have sinned, but use lenity in correcting me, August. lib. 2. de cor. Scio ad correptionem meam pertinere quod minus à te adjuvor, ut perfectè dirigantur gressus mei, veruntamen ob hoc noli mecum agere tanquam in furore, quo iniquos nos damnare statuisti, sed tanquam in iudicio, quo doces tuos non superbire.

Verf. 24.

O Lord, correct me, but in judgement, not in anger. Seeing it is not in man to direct his wayes: unlesse by thy grace he be kept from evil, he shall be ready still to go on in sinne against all admonitions. Correct me for sinne, I pray thee in the person of this people, not in anger to destruction, as aiming at nothing else, but let thy correction come on me, as a judgement here for my bettering, that I may more constantly abide in thy favour hereafter. So that he doth not pray against all judgements, For it is good for me, saith David, that prayed likewise, Psal. 6.1. that I have been afflicted; but that judgements might be so order'd that a greater good to the soul might hence redound unto the people, then hurt unto their bodies and outward state. And thus these two verses cohere excellently together, the former being understood according to Lyra and Augustine. And likewise being understood according to Calvin, the want of power in man to refrain from going in an evil way of hardening his heart against Gods threatnings, is by the Prophet made a ground of pleading for mitigation, when judgements should come.

Verf. 25.

Pour out thy Wrath upon the Heathen that know thee not, &c. It may seem strange that Jeremiah should pray thus against all other Nations, seeing it is unknown to man, what he will finally do with them, although for the present they be in a reprobate condition. But it is to be understood, that he prayeth not thus against them all for ever, but against the reprobates amongst them, such as the Caldees and other Nations, joining with them, did maliciously in most barbarous cruelty destroy the Jews and their Cities, as the following words do declare, They have devoured Jacob, &c. These words therefore are nothing else but a pronouncing them accursed for ever, and incapable of any mercy, that be reprobates, and such as shall not be judged in mercy, as Gods peculiar people, but in fury, and they are described that be such, they know not God. 2. They call not upon his name, for how shall he that knows not God call upon him. 3. They devour and consume Jacob, they are infest enemies to the faithfull, working from time to time what they can against them, as Cain against Abel, Esau against Jacob, Saul against David, and the Scribes and Pharisees against Christ. The Lords proceeding against his people sinning and them, shall be divers in the end, these shall be onely corrected and amended by sufferings and saved, these confounded and perish for ever.

CHAP. XI.

4, 5.

HERE Jeremiah is commanded again to speak unto the Jews, and to repeat from the beginning Gods gracious dealing with them in taking them into his Covenant, which was, that they should obey his Commandments, and so be his people, and he their God. And his accursing of all that do not, according to Deut. 27.26. out of each ones own mouth, whereunto Jeremiah in the name name of them all saith Amen, for so they were all required to say. Here all things are easie to be understood, only vers. 2. because he saith, Hear ye, and tell ye in the plural number, and yet vers. 3. Say thou, who are meant by this plurality? Either Jeremiah, together with Baruch, or with other Prophets of that time. See a like speech Hos. 2. 1. Adiah or Obadiah 1. 1.

A conspiracy is found in the men of Judah, &c. To aggravate their sin of Idolatry the more, he calls it a conspiracy of the Jews and Israelites also, vers. 10. that is, the ten Tribes, with whom the kingdom of Judah was alwayes at deadly feud, and never ceased warring, yet to break the Covenant of God they readily consented together, as Herod and Pontius Pilate, Pharisees and Herodians and Sadducees, Jews and Gentiles to persecute Christ. Such conspiracies are daily amongst the wicked, although otherwise at enmity one with another, to tear the holy Name of God with oaths, to serve the drunken god Bacchus by drunkenness, and Mammon by covetous wresting and wringing, defrauding and circumventing, and the flesh by sensual living.

They shall cry unto me, and I will not hear them. This may seem strange, seeing it is said, Call upon me in the time of trouble, and I will hear and deliver thee. But when they cry and a re not heard, that live in sinne still, and have no hearts to turn therefrom, it is no marvel. For it is by the same Prophet said, If I regard iniquity in my heart, God will not hear my prayer, Psalm 66. 18. Now the Jews are charged, as they cried to God, so to have sought to false gods, vers. 12. even as the Papists not contenting themselves to call upon God only, think the rather to prevail by seeking to both he and the Saints also. But here is a plain denial of audience to any that do so, because they rob God of his peculiar honour, which he saith expressly, he will not give to another, not only God, but creature, how excellent soever, whether Sun, Moon, or Stars, or Angels in the highest heaven, and therefore not to Saints.

According to the number of thy Cities are thy gods. Thus he begins the verse, but ends it, saying, That they offered incense to Baal, setting up Altars for this purpose, In all the streets of Jerusalem. And if to Baal, which is but one, How can they be charged with having so many gods? Ans. By Baal a singular being put for a plural, all their under-gods, which were of a kinde, were meant. For the Heathen had one principal god, and all the rest, which they held to be as Mediators to him, were called Baalim; so Calvin, and of them the Jews learned to do the like.

What hath my beloved to do in my house? she hath wrought lewdnesse with many, when she doth evil she glorieth. Having professed before not to hear his people praying, because they adjoynd to him many corrivals, now he challengeth them saying, What hast thou to do in my house? For by beloved here the Jew is doubtlesse meant, though many think otherwise that Jeremiah is meant, saith Calvin. What dost thou praying in my house any more, sith that I have rejected all their prayers? And he saith, that we shall not need to be moved at this word [beloved] now given to the Jew, for they were elected in their fathers, and for their sakes called beloved, even in their state of infidelity, Rom. 11. 28. And whereas the Masculine gender is in the next word varied into the Feminine; for the word beloved in the Hebrew is a Masculine, he saith, That this is ordinary under the title of a daughter to set forth Jerusalem, her lewdnes wrought with many was with many false gods complained of before. The holy flesh is passed from thee, that is, Thou hast no pure Sacrifice to come withall unto me, and therefore canst not come acceptably; for thy lewdnes makes thy Sacrifices of flesh and fat, although of the best, to be vain, as is plainly said, Isa. 1. 11, 12. And hereby art thou rendred the more abominable, because whilst thou dost thus ill thou wilt not be brought to be ashamed, but gloriest and boastest of thy priviledge, as if still thou wert a more excellent people then any other, and dearer to God, so that what judgements soever be threatned, thou shalt escape them well enough. to make this the more plain according to the sense before-going, renders it, Quid est, quod dilectus meus in domo mea fecit scelera multa? and Jerom explains it of the abominations set up in the Temple in the dayes of Manasseh: So likewise Theod. Lyrannus, Th. Aquinas, as if he had said, Why should I not cast him out therefore, as I have threatned? Hugo and Isidor. What doth my beloved servant Jeremiah praying in my house still for this City, which hath committed so great wickednesses? And this reading is more agreeable to the Hebrew, wherein it is word for word, What to my beloved in my house? she hath done wickednesse, yea many wickednesses, or with many, that is, false gods, as was before complained. This is censured by Calvin as an utter mistaking, but most favoured by the Hebrew Text, which changeth the gender, having spoken first in the Masculine, and then speaking in the Feminine. So that if it be thus taken, the sense will be without all exception, Jeremiah being bidden, ver. 14. to pray no more for them, hath the same here further inculcated, and a reason yielded, She hath done filthinesse many wayes, thus also it is a reason rendring why her prayers should not be heard, as was together threatned ver. 14. Kimchi and Vatablus will have it to be the speech of Jeremiah to God, or Christ, whom he calleth his beloved; but the words, My house, will not bear this. The next words in vulgar are, Will thy holy flesh take away thy wickednesse? So likewise the Septuagint, and Jerom and Theodoret explain it accordingly, Hebr. They shall make to passe away, or take away holy flesh from thee, that is, thy Idolatries shall cause that thy Sacrifices shall not be accepted as holy, but detested as abominable, and for them the Temple being burnt, and thou carried away into Captivity, they shall cease and be no more offered at all. Note hence, that sin annihilateth holinesse in any of our performances, as in the Sacrifices of the wicked there is flesh, but no holy flesh, that is taken away, and so there is nothing accepted, but detested of God. Some by the holy flesh threatned to be taken away, understand holy Priests, that should be carried into Captivity, that is, sanctified or set apart to this holy office, but this were very improper to call men serving at the Altar, flesh.

The Lord called thy name a green Olive Tree, fair, and of goodly fruits. To make their misery to appear the more, he recounts what the Jew was, a green and flourishing Olive tree, so Rom. 11. they are set forth as branches of the best Olive, and Zac. 4. 14. Rev. 11. 4. we read of two witnesses of God called Olive Trees, which sheweth, that this is a name of those that be most famous and excellent, as Enoch and Elias, whom Tertullian calleth aternitatis candidatos, glorious for their eternity, even in their bodies. Of the Olive tree there be many rare properties, for which the Church is set forth hereby. First, the wood thereof is not subject to corrupt in any continuance of time, either by wet or wormeating, for which it is the emblem of eternity. Secondly, It is most fruitfull, for which the just are compared to trees that in age bring forth more fruit Psal. 92. Thirdly, it is most fat in the oyle; For which Esa. 5. 1. for a fat soile, the soile where the vine was planted, is said to be filius olea, the child of an Olive. Fourthly, The leaves of the Olive tree never wither, but are always green Hosea 14. 6. Israel shall be as the dew, as the lily, the root of Libanus, and his glory as an Olive tree. Fifthly, an Olive branch is an emblem of peace, for which the Dove sent out by Noah returned with an Olive branch in her mouth, and it is fabled by the Poets, that Neptune and Minerva being at strife, whether of them should be chief, he alledged, that he ruled over the water, without which nothing can grow; she, that she planted the Olive, the emblem of peace, without which no state can prosper, and then which nothing is more sweet or more desirable, and it was given on her side. Sixthly, The Olive Tree is a signe of mercy, for which cause Solomon made two Cherubims of Olive wood, and placed them so as to cover the mercy seat. 1 Kings 6. 31. Seventhly, The Olive tree though very fruitfull, hath very little and pale leaves, or green inclining to pale, so the fruitfull being very fruitfull in good, make no outward shew, are full of mercy and peace, and green through joy in tribulation, and and have oyl in their lamps unto the end, are not to be corrupted by adversity or prosperity, threatnings or promises, profits, or pleasures, but continue alwayes found in the faith to their dying day. To conclude this of the Olive Tree, Phadrus in the praise of it telleth this story, Upon a time the gods should choose each one a tree, of which he would be the patron, Jupiter the Oak, Venus the Mirtle, Phabus the Bay, Cybela the Pine, Heracles the Poplar; Minerva wondring asked, why they chose all barren trees, none of them fruitful? Jupiter answered, least they should seem to value profit above honour. But in truth, said Minerva, choose ye as ye please, I think the Olive most worthy to be preferred for the fruitfulness. Then Jupiter, (O daughter) I see that thou art wisest of them all, for unlesse it be profitable that we doe, foolish is our glory. With the noise of a great tumult he hath kindled fire upon it, Hebr. At the voice, or in the voice of a great circumcising or cutting down, for so the word לרעל signifieth, it is spoken thus, in alluding to that which was said in the beginning of the verse, The Lord called thy name an Olive, fair and fruitful: but in stead of this voice another of cutting off the branches of this Olive shall be heard when the Caldees shall burn the City and Temple with fire, and all the Palaces and stately buildings, as branches of the City, shall by them be broken down. Jerom deriveth it from לרעל to speak, and renders it, At the voice of a great speech, as of a thunder, but expounds it as before. It may be understood either of the voice of God calling the Caldees to do this execution, because they had not regarded his mild voice of honouring them with so glorious a name of a green Olive Tree, or of the tumultuous voice of the Caldees, when they destroyed them. Whereas some understand it of the voice of vainglorious speaking in their part, as if this were here pointed at, as the cause of their destruction; it is further fetcht, and doth not so well agree with the words, which shew not the cause, but the manner of their destruction, in the noise of cutting and hewing with the sword, after which burning with fire followeth. And this is further confirmed. Verse 17. For the Lord that planted thee, hath spoken evill against thee; therefore in this terrible speech or voice, or according to it he will kindle a fire, &c. for his planting, it is a metaphorical speech, as also Esa. 5. and in many other places, it being meant in that pleasant and fruitful Country casting the Canaanites out.

And the Lord hath given me knowledge of it, and thou shewedst me their doings, Here the Prophet sheweth, that for his prophesying of the judgments before spoken of, which to do yet he was set on work by God: (for he had not known these things, but that God shewed him them) his life was sought by those of his City Anathoth, but without cause, he being, if they should slay him, but as a Lamb or an Ox, ready in silence and patiently to suffer. Some expound this of Christ, because he is often compared to a Lamb, or Sheep, as Esa. 53. Ioh. 1. &c. but it is certain that Jeremy speaketh of himself, yet that herein he was a type of Christ, as other Prophets also were, I deny not.

Let me see thy vengeance on them, Ver. 19. he hath said, that he was as a Lamb, but how doth he now acquit himself like a Lamb? is this to do to call for vengeance? An. He did not this out of impatience, saith Calvin, but pure zeal of the spirit, as God directed him, as he was a man he submitted himself patiently to bear even death it self, although never so unjustly inflicted upon him being innocent, but as rapt by a propheticall spirit, he speaketh thus bitterly against that crue of reprobates, his example being herein singular, to shew malicious wicked men, that persecute their innocent teachers, what vengeance hangeth over their heads, and not to be commonly imitated by us: and that he was herein guided by the spirit appeareth, because that immediately the Lord bad him prophesie vengeance to the men of Anathoth. Vers. 21. 22. Thy young men shall die by the sword (that is) such as are able to bear arms, And thy sons and daughters by famine, that is, the rest of the weak multitude of children and women, in the time of siege, causing scarcity and unseasonable weather, hindring the in-increase of the fruits of the earth, as was before threatned, Chap. 8. 13.

And I will leave no remnant of the men of Anathoth, Chap. 4. 27. It is said, I will not make an end; and Isa. 1. and Chap. 10. A remnant shall be left, therefore the Town or City which seeks the ruine of the Prophet amongst them daily to instruct and admonish them in particular, provoke God most amongst them of all others, and therefore shall be judged above other wicked people, not one of them being spared, as it was with Sodom, where they all banded together against just Lot. The Ierufolymitans were also cruelly bent against Jeremy, but Anathoth was his habitation, he went but sometimes to Ierusalem to prophesie, but here he was continually, and they had more experience of his unblamable life, zeal and sanctity, and partake more of his labours. Therefore their sin was greatest by farre; and hereby the more aggravated, that when he came home, thinking in his own Town to have some refreshing by kinde entertainment there after his hard encounters with the men of Ierusalem, they contrariwise conspired against him, and increased his trouble more. Yea it is most probable that they made the Ierufolymitans more insense against him, by traducing him to them, as the Jews afterwards in one City where Paul had preached, followed him to another, to stirre up persecution against him there also. And as the manner of these our times is, they of a Pastors own flock are his cruellest enemies, both at home and abroad, not being moved by his piety, learning or gravity, but against all persecuting, and outing him, if he be not in all their new devices according to the mindes of a few humorous persons amongst them. And the like befell our Lord, That Prophet was not without honour, saving in his own Countrey, for which he so terribly thunders against Chorazin, Bethsaida, and Capernaum, preferring even Sodom before them at the day of Judgement.

CHAP. XII.

Verf. 1.

Psal. 36. 6.

Psal. 42. 6.

THou art just, O Lord, when I plead with thee yet let me talke with thee of thy Judgments. Having complained of the men of Anathoth, Cha. 11. 20. Now because that for the present they were in a prosperous condition, notwithstanding their most treacherous dealing with him, and the sins wherein they lived, which he saith that the Lord had shewed him, and the terrible threatning of destroying judgments, therefore he first professing that he beleeveth God to be just in his dealings towards all men, craveth leave to ask of the Lord the reason of this and such other like judgments, Why contrary to his threatnings and the deserts of their wickednesse, he dealt thus in the interim by them? For by his Judgments he meaneth his dealing in any kinde, either by prosperity or adversity, because all things are judiciously moderated by his providence, but why the wicked should prosper for a time and treacherous persons, thus seeming to have the better of Gods righteous servants, is a thing so deep and hidden, that man cannot see into it. For this Gods judgements are said to be a great deep, and Deepe calleth to deepe. Wherefore Jeremiah in all humility asketh leave to demand the reason of God, from whom he must learn it, that would be herein satisfied, and whilst he cannot yet hold firmly to this principle, that God is just in all his wayes, and righteous in all his works. Thus also Iob 21. Ps. 73. Hab. 1. Iob, David and Habbakkuk make the same humble demand. For it had need to be resolved, because that for this seeming partiall dealing, some think that there is no God, some that he cares not for humane affairs, or if he doth, not for particulars, or not more for the faithful that daily serve him, then for the wicked that care not for the knowledge of his wayes, or walking therein, as Epicurus saith. Yet the very Heathen that were wiser then the rest, have alwayes acknowledged a divine providence moderating even in the prosperity of the wicked, as of Ruffinus, who by the favour of Theodosius Emperor being highly advanced, abused his favour to pride and ambition, in so much that he moved moved to have a match betwixt his daughter and Arcadius the Emperours Son, and prevailed so farre, that a day was set for it, and to proclaim him and Arcadius consortes imperii: but the same day he was cut in pieces by the soldiers. Before this was done, the Heathen complained grievously against the justice and providence of the gods: but being done, they saw, that so wicked a man was but lifted up to be cast down by the greater fall, and so all their murmuring ceased. Whereupon Claudian thus,

*Abstulit hunc tandem Ruffini pœna tumultum,
Abstulit deos; jam non ad culmina rerum
Injustos crevisse queror; tollantur in altum, Ut lapsu gravior ruant.*

Claudian.

So here, Thou hast planted them, thou art near in their mouth, but far from their reins, that is, in word acknowledged by them, according to some: but by others better, by giving successe to what they speak, and do. For Ver. 4. They say he shall not see our last end, that is, he will never punish us with destruction, notwithstanding his terrible threatnings. But Pull them out, saith he, as sheep to the slaughter, intimating, that so it should soon be, and then the earth and dumb creatures should suffer no longer by their means, as before their destruction is shewed, vers. 4. that they should do, and this is yielded as a reason, because that being so vile and wicked, and therefore threatned, they were nothing moved hereby, but as contemning it, said, That God should never take revenge upon them, so as that they should be cut off, none being left, as is threatned Chap. 11. 23. For these words Ver. 3. Prepare them for the day of slaughter, the Hebrew is, Sanctifie them, being so spoken, because the wicked being destroyed are offered as it were in Sacrifice to Gods justice, and therefore the same word is used; that in setting beasts apart for Sacrifice. And with all by this similitude of sheep fatted to the slaughter, is intimated, the reason of Gods so favourable dealing with the wicked in present; he doth by them but as a Grasier by his sheep and oxen, feeds them fully and daintily, to fat them up against the day of slaughter: for to make them fit for Sacrifice, they must first be thus kept and made fat, sith lean Sacrifices were not accepted.

Vers. 2.

Vers. 3.

Vers. 4.

If thou hast runne with the footmen, and they have wearied thee, How canst thou contend with the horses? Here the Lord answereth Jeremiah, complaining of the wickednesse and treachery of the men of his own Town Anathoth, and demanding of him why they were suffered yet in such a prosperous estate. And it is as if he had said (Oh Jeremiah) rouse up thy languishing spirits, art thou carried by the harsh dealing of the Anathothites with thee? how shalt thou bear the persecutions of the Jerusalemians? for those are but as footmen in comparifon, these through their multitudes, riches and greatnesse, as horsemen; those as a Land of peace in comparifon of these, who may be likened to the swellings of Jordan, that overfloweth and drowneth all things farre off in the time of its overflowing the banks. For Ierusalem was notorious for persecuting and killing the Prophets, Anathoth and other small Cities, nor, because we read not of such outrages ever done there, so that Anathoth might well be counted a Land of peace in comparifon of Ierusalem. Thus Lyra, Cald. Vatablus.

And the next words do further confirm this, For even thy brethren have dealt treacherously with thee, and cried after thee. That is, the men of Anathoth threatning thee with death for prophesying against them, and by this their opposition and cruelty thou art wearied, as hath been said. And to their crying after him is added signifying full, according to our phrase amain, or with full mouth, as if the men of any place being offended with one amongst them, should cry one to another. Kill, kill him, as the Jews did afterwards against Christ, Crucifie, crucifie him. And if they speak good words, believe them not, for their hearts are maliciously bent against thee, and if to make thee stay amongst them still, they should speak thee fair, it were but in dissimulation, that that they might the better effect their purpose against thee. For other Expositions brought by Jerom, Theodoret, Rabanus, Hugo, Thomas Aquinas, Calvin, taking these words, as spoken to the Jews in general by the Lord, and by their brethren, compared to footmen, the Moabites, Ammonites and Edomites, who by warring against them had wearied them, and by horses the Caldees and swelling Jordan, because they should come in farre greater multitudes like a flood, as they are compared Chap. 4. 6, 7. Isa. 8. 7. 59. 19. Or by Isidor, taking it as spoken to Jeremiah by way of reproof thus, Thou canst not see into the treachery of thy own Citizens, and wouldst thou know a reason of my doings? For these or any other, they may follow them that please; but I rest in the first.

My heritage is to me as a speckled Bird. From Verf. 7. the Lord declares to Jeremiah, that although Judea were his inheritance, and he hath hitherto greatly tendered it, although full of all manner of sinne, causing the Prophet to ask complainingly, why the wicked, such as they generally were, prospered so: yet it should no more be dear unto him, but as a Lion in a wood, crying out against him, vers. 8. and here as a speckled Bird, whereby Jerom, Hugo and Thomas Aquinas, understand a Peacock, or Parriot, that a man keeps for his delight, some a night-Owl, which is white and hath spots; some the Jack-daw in Aesops Fables, because against both these the other birds come to beat them and peck them, as being envied by them for their different colour, some birds spotted with blood. But forsomuch as the same inheritance is compared before to a Lion, and it is most probable, that another similitude to the same purpose added, taken from Fowls, must be of such a Fowl as is likest to a Lion; Calvin rather holds that a strange bird is meant, that is, a bird of prey that cannot be cicurated, but flieth wildly about making a prey of the tame, as Kites and Hawks which are speckled, and flie one alone. For such was Judea, that is, the Princes and mighty men thereof to the poorer sort, as is often complained. But I see no cause of going from the first expounding it of a Peacock; For both the words signifie a divers coloured Fowl, and such is the Peacock more then any other, and for the glorious tail proudest; and the Jews were notorious not only for cruelty, for which they are often compared to a Lion, but also for pride, for which they are here compared to a Peacock for their pride: see more Chap. 23. 9. 15. 18. And it is to be noted that he saith, My heritage is to me as a Lion, as a speckled Bird to me, denoting, that the cruelty, pride and contempt of the wicked against the Prophets of God, is against him, by reason of their near union unto him. So Moses said, Your murmuring is not against me but against God, and the Lord to Samuel, They have not rejected thee, but me: and Christ to his Apostles, He that despiseth you despiseth me; and to Saul, Why persecutest thou me? And what shall be done to Gods heritage thus degenerating? The birds are against her round about, and come all ye beasts of the field to devour; wherein he continueth the Allegory, She is as a proud and contemptuous bird, and as a savage Lion, therefore this shall be her doom, the people of all Nations, as birds and beasts of prey shall come about her, as Lions, and Tygers, and Eagles against her alone, and so shall easily overcome and destroy her, and this was done when the Caldees came.

Many Pastours have destroyed my vineyard. Some by Pastors here understand the Priests and wicked Prophets amongst the Jews, bringing destruction upon them by their sins. But others better, the Princes coming with Nebuchadnezzar, before also thus called Chap. 6. 3. For this agreeth best with the words before-going, wherein they are called beasts.

Being desolate it mourneth to me, Vulgar, Mourned upon me, and this is according to the Hebrew, being expounded of their lamentable complaining against God, as dealing most cruelly by them, when they suffered such grievous things, by Lyra, Hugo, Vatablus, Caldee, &c. Calvin takes it to be meant of the contrary disposition to that which they were now in, as following ing the former reading, now they joyced in evil doing, and could not be moved by any denouncing of judgement to repent, but then they mourned, and came humbly craving help of the Lord.

They have sown wheat, but shall reap thorns, they have put themselves to pain, but reaped no profit, and they shall be ashamed of your revenues. Hebr. They have received for inheritance, but profited not. For the word is נָטַע and the Vulgar renders it so. Vatablus, They have been sick through travel and labour amongst you by instructing and admonishing, thus sowing wheat, as it were, but ye brought forth of this good seed nothing but thorns, that is, the cursed fruits of sinne and rebellion, so that their great pains profited you not, but they were even ashamed hereof. Thus Ie, understanding the Prophets sent amongst them from time to time. And the word נָטַע he deriveth from נָטַע to be sick, to make his Exposition the more probable, and who else can be said to sow wheat, but holy Prophets? And were not the Jews hereupon as thorns unto them, pricking and vexing them with contempt, derision, and evil entreating them? And might they not be ashamed to see no better fruit of all their care and pains, on the peoples part brought forth? And to shew that they are not the same that sow, and that bring forth fruit, he saith, They are ashamed of your increase or revenue. Yet Calvin and other Expositors reject this, and expound it of the wicked Jews, who are said to sow wheat, but to reap thorns, because according to their own opinion they sow good seed, whereof safety and preservation should come in time of danger, by their enemies, in making a league with the Egyptians, providing arms and men, and strong places for defence: but it fell out clean contrary, the Caldees coming the product of all this was nothing but thorns; they had no more benefit thereof, then a laborious Husbandman of his sowing good seed in his field, that yeeldeth thorns and thistles through Gods curse upon his labour, as it was threatned to Cain, that when he should sow the earth, it should bring forth thorns unto him. And whereas he addeth, They shall inherit but not profit, for thus the word may best be translated, it notably agreeth, the Jews had received Canaan for an inheritance by Gods singular gift, seating them there hitherto against the attempts of all enemies that sought to dispossesse them, but now this peculiar favour should benefit them no longer, but they should be left to the will of their enemies to be carried away captive. And whereas the change of the person is against this Exposition, They shall be ashamed of your revenue, the Vulgar and Junius also render it, Ye shall be ashamed; and Calvin because it is, They shall be ashamed, Hebr. saith, it is thus said per Enallagen, which is ordinary in Scripture, it being meant, Ye shall be ashamed; I cannot see how that of Vatablus can so well stand, although agreed to by Isidor, because both before and after the wicked Jews, not the holy Prophets are threatned, and whether they prevail or no by their labours, it cannot be said, that they profit not, for their labours and reward are with the Lord, Isa. 49. 4. and they are not ashamed, when they prevail not to convert, but have the glory of true Prophets by the event answering to the judgements by them threatned. Wherefore I conclude, that when he saith, They shall be ashamed of your bringings forth, he changeth the person for nothing else, but to shew that they were the men of whom he spake, and whom he threatned all this while, that by thus coming home unto them, he might the more affect them.

Thus saith the Lord against all mine evil neighbours. Here the Lord after such terrible threatnings, as go before against the Jews, to pull them out as sheep to the slaughter, that the elect amongst them might not be utterly discouraged, threatens revenge upon their evil neighbour-Nations, Ammonites, Moabites, &c. that had divers times oppressed them, and now joyced at Israels misery by the Assyrians, and would do the like out of their imbred hatred against the Jews at their sufferings by the Caldees. He threatens that for their malice and oppressions, whereby they had oppressed Israel, in favour of them, his peculiar people, they should be plucked out of their Lands, and to Pluck the house of Judah from amongst them, and to restore them in much compassion to their own Land. For many of them most probably at sundry times being taken in warre, when the Jews were grown weak, were made slaves by them; but now the Lord promiseth to take a time to pluck them even by force out of their hands, intimating, that otherwise they would never let them go free. But withall, to magnifie his mercy the more towards all Nations, he also promiseth after the plucking out of them, that he will restore each people to their own inheritance again, provided that they turn to the Lord; to expresse which, he saith, If they shall swear, The Lord liveth] learning this of the Jews, as the Jews had before learned of them to swear by Baal, whereby he fore-telleth their conversion under the Gospel, and not of neighbour-Nations only, but of all others throughout the world, these being specified, but the rest understood, because they were to the Jews unknown.

Verf. 17.

But on the contrary side he addeth, If they will not obey, I will utterly pluck up and destroy that Nation. Fore-shewing hereby, that some of those amongst whom the Gospel should be preached, should a long time oppose it, as they did indeed, persecuting those that believed and sought the propagation of the faith, but it should turn to their own utter ruine, and so it shall of all particular persons that obey it not to repent and believe. For Jesus Christ is both a rock to build upon, and a rock to stumble at and break in pieces unbelievers. Thus all Expositours generally, but Theodores who applieth both this and ver. 15, 16. to the Jews. But these are plainly distinguished from them by this, that it is said, If they should learn of his people to swear, &c. where swearing is put for all religious duties, as Chap. 4.1.

Calvin.

Here for twelve verses together is nothing else but a relation, how the Lord commanded Jeremiah to take a linen Girdle, and having worn it a while to go and hide it by the river Euphrates at Babylon, and after a certain time to go and take it up out of the ground again, which he doing found it corrupted so, that it was good for nothing. Whereupon the Lord saith, That Israel was to him as a Girdle, which he had put near about his loins, the seat of his affections, to shew his great love unto that people, but whereas he expected to have had praise and glory from them, they contrariwise by their wickedness were so corrupted that he had now rejected them. All the question that can be moved here is, at what time this was done? Why the Lord would teach this by a Girdle, and whether Jeremiah did indeed, as it is here said, or spiritually and in vision only? Ierom thinks that it was done in the dayes of Zedekiah when Nebuchadnezzar came against the Jews, and that therefore it could not be done indeed, but in vision, for want of time; and he thinketh it somewhat absurd, that he should indeed go so long a journey in a loose-garment girt to him amongst a people at so great enmity with the Jews to do this thing, as not being likely to be permitted by them. And this is also followed by Calvin, saying, that it is absurd to hold that it was done so indeed, because to go to Euphrates, and come again, and after many dayes to go and come again, would require a long time, the journey being six hundred and eighty miles from Jerusalem to Babylon, where this river was, and Anathoth was within three miles of Jerusalem, so that it would require many moneths to do this, besides the time coming between one going, and another which is said to be At the end of many dayes, and this phrase, At the end of dayes, is commonly put for a year, as Gen. 4. therefore by these words, From the end of many dayes must be meant a year at the least, if not more, unlesse we shall hold that the dayes wherein this Girdle lay in the cleft of a rock there, were numbered as answering to the years that the Jews should continue in captivity, ptivity, viz. seventy in all, which time they should lie in obscurity, putrifying and corrupting through manifold miseries. For so he seems to understand the hiding of this Girdle there, till it was corrupted, as significative of the Jews being carried thither, and detained there in misery. It is therefore faith he, spoken per hypotyposin after the manner of Rhetoricians, who are wont to set forth things, as so or so done, the more lively to expresse that which they would, the more to affect the hearers. And of this kinde of teaching the Jews had need, by reason of their great stupidity and dulnesse of understanding. And if this had been really done so, it must be granted, that Jeremiah intermitted his Ministry all this time, which is improbable. Thus also Lyra and Vatablus. But the most learned of the Hebrew Expositors take it to have been really done, because the Lord set his Prophets not only to teach by word, but also by their actions for more evidence, so Isa. 20. he went naked, and Ezek. 4. 12. he ate the dung of beasts; the one to shew the naked carrying away of the Jews into Captivity; the other, the famine that should be amongst them, forcing them to eat most base food. Thus also Theodores, Hugo, Thomas Aquinas, Isidor. And if it were the Lords will that Jeremiah should go and do thus, and spend much time so, and till that he had done all this, did forbear any other prophesying, I see not any absurdity in it. For the time when this was done, from Chap. 3. 6. hitherto the time is not set down of his prophesying, but only there, In the dayes of Josiah. Only Chap. 21. mention is made of the time of Zedekiah, and Chap. 32. of Jehoiakin or Choniah, who reigned immediatly before him a very short time. But after Josiah before Jehoiakin was Jehoiakim an eleven years, and before Jehoiakim, Jehobaz three moneths; and Chap. 1. without distinction of the times of the Kings reigns, it is generally said, in Josiah his time, anno 13. of his reign. and of Jehoiakim to the eleven years of Zedekiah. So that this must needs be either in Josiah his time or Jehoiakims, not in Zedekiahs, as Jerom conjectureth, for of that there is no probability. For the thing taken, a linen Girdle, and that unwashed with water, hereby is meant one black and not whited nor smooth, but rough, and so without all beauty, and undecent and unpleasing to be worn: for a linen Girdle or any thing made of linen is first put in water, and then laid a whiting, and finally washed with lie and sope. But the Lord would not have this Girdle washed, but taken as it is first made, to shew, that the Jewish Nation when the Lord first chose it, was black by sinne, and nothing amiable, but by him taken and girt, as it were, to him, by that dear affection which he bare unto it, being by this election sanctified and made white and glorious before all the Nations round about, in expectation that it should be a glory and praise vers. 11. unto him, which the Church is, when the liveth in obedience to his Laws, but otherwise a dishonour and occasion of blaspheming his holy name, as it is said Rom. 2. Calvin saith, That the word may either be rendred linen Girdle or Breeches, such as the Priests sometime did wear; but it is generally taken for a Girdle, and so it best agreeth. For a linen Girdle signifieth chastity, as Pierius sheweth in his Hieroglyphicks both amongst the Hebrews, Greeks and Latins, and therefore the Virgins of the Trezenians being to marry, dedicated their Girdles to Pallas. And the Priests of the Jews must wear a linen Girdle in their ministrations, to put them in minde of continency. Here a Girdle is an embleme of the chaste love, where-with God loved Israel, espousing that state only to himself, and requiring that it should likewise be knit in chaste love unto him. But Israel contrariwise committed adultery by worshipping strange gods, for which he biddeth Jeremiah to go and carry this Girdle to Euphrates, and hide it in a cliff of a Rock there for many dayes, to shew the Captivity in the Countrey where Euphrates was, that is, into Babylon, shortly to come, where they should lie rotting, as it were, in basenesse and servility, and sinne together many years, so that if God should have dealt with them after their deservings, even those seventy years being expired, he might have left them still in misery, as a man leaves his rotten Girdle to become dung, but that for his mercies sake, and to magnifie his power he was pleased to bring them home again. Moreover a Girdle is an ensign of honour, being curiously wrought with gold and precious stones, for which Jonathan is said to have given his Girdle to David, and Isa. 22. that Eliakim should be girt with Shebna's Girdle, and that all the glory of the house of David should be hanged upon him, and Revel. 1. Christ appears gloriously girt about with a golden Girdle. And in this sense it is added here, That thou mightest be unto me a glory and praise. 3. A Girdle is a military implement, for which it is said, Ephes. 6. Your loins girt about with the girdle of verity, which is when we are firm and stedfast in the truth; and Resist the devil stedfast in faith, 1 Pet. 5. 9. as the loins being girt with a Girdle are strengthened to travel. As Israel, so every faithfull person without any desert on his part is dear to God, and is near to him, not as a leather or woollen Girdle above all our apparel, but a linen worn next the skin, as one faith Travellers were wont to sew some money into a linen Girdle, and put it next their skin, that there it might be hidden from thieves. But as God bears so dear an affection to the believer, so he expects reciprocal love again, and if we love him, that we should keep his Commandments, which will be to his glory, and if the believer doth thus, he shall be as his Girdle; but if not, to Euphrates he shall be carried to putrifie in his sins, after which the Lord will reject him, as being unusefull for him any more.

Note.

Vers. 12.

Every bottle shall be filled with wine. Having by the similitude of a Girdle set forth the baseness that the Jews should be brought unto, now he sheweth their destruction by another of bottles, wherein men put wine to carry to any place, viz. earthen bottles, which if when they be filled they be broken one against another, are good for nothing; yea much good wine is spilt by the means, and so they are worse then nought. In like manner he sheweth, that it should be to the chief of the Jews, Kings, Priests and Prophets, they should be filled with drunkenesse, and then be broken one against another, whereby he meaneth not the drunkenesse of wine, but by the spirit of errour, as is expressed Isa. 29. 9. whereby one should draw another on to ruine, by making one another secure against Gods judgements coming by the Caldees, whilst they would not believe Gods Prophets threatening them, but that they being Gods peculiar people, and having his Temple amongst them, and Sacrifices there continually to him offered, should be safe enough, notwithstanding all these menaces. For in the time whilst they were thus drunken, the Caldees coming destroyed them all, and their strength upon which they did bear themselves, proved no better then that of earthen bottles, being presently broken with a knock of one against another, although none other force be used. And thus he saith, They shall be broken and not spared, inculcating this for their stupidity three times over. And he doth not plainly bring a similitude from pots, but to stirre them up to more attention, he speaks at the first, as to give them occasion to ask, as wondering why he should tell them such a thing as this from the Lord, that all bottles shall be filled with wine. For hereupon they reply, who knoweth not this, what meanest thou to come to us with such a message. Then they being prepared he makes his application the more effectually, v. 13, 14.

Vers. 16.

Give glory to God before he makes it dark, and your feet stumble at the Mountains of darkness. That is, seeing the Lord threatens you with so great a judgement, and this shall certainly come, believe it, and fear before him, acknowledge his Power and Justice, as if execution were already done. Thus Josh. 7. Achan is bidden to give glory to God, and to tell the truth, by acknowledging it to be so as he had by lot discovered, it being before hidden from all mortal eyes: but now by confessing what he had done so wickedly to provoke God, he meaneth, that he should give glory to his wisdom in finding out, and to his justice that would not suffer so foul a sinne to go unpunished. And in saying thus both there and here, it is intimated, that he doth not give glory to God,

Note.

God, but robs him of his due, that is not moved to fear at his threatening of judgements against his sins, as he is not that goeth on still therein, hardening himself against his terrible threatnings. He shall therefore undoubtedly perish that doth so, as wronging God in his chief Attribute, but he that by his threatnings is moved to believe and repent, giveth him glory and shall have mercy and pardon, and according to his promise, Him that honours me I will honour, he shall have glory and happinesse in heaven for ever. By the darknesse, which otherwise he threatneth, is meant misery, making a man fall, as one going in the dark stumbleth at the mountains, because in the dark he cannot see them, though never so great. And he nameth dark mountains, because where the ground lieth in their shadow it is dark sooner then in other places that be plain; so that in saying thus, he meaneth the coming of their miseries upon them very speedily. And whilst ye look for light he turn into the shadow of death; that is, when ye expect peace and prosperity, the sad calamities of warre come upon you.

The Cities of the South shall be shut up. That is, the Cities of Judah, which lay South in regard of Caldea, shall be besieged and destroyed.

Where is the flock that was given thee? That is, O Indah, or King of Indah, to whom he spake vers. 18. where is the multitude of thy Subjects which were a glory unto thee? As it is said, The glory of a King is in the multitude of his Subjects, but where be they now, when this destruction is come out of the North Countrey Caldea amongst them? Verily it shall be disperfed and brought to nothing.

What wilt thou say, when he shall punish thee, for thou hast taught them to be Captains? That is, when God shall punish thee by bringing the Caldeans against Indah, for it shall be justly done when this shall come to passe, because thou hast taught them the way to come and exercise dominion over thee, that is, thou (O Indah) first when Abaz sent for the King of Assyria to come and help him against the King of Israel and Syria, Isa. 7. and secondly when Hezekiah shewed the Embassadors of Merodach Baladan, King of Babylon all his treasures in way of vain glory, hereby to tempt that people to come against Indah to get so great a booty. For so the British Princes Vortiger and Vortimer first taught the Saxons to be Captains, and to get dominion here in England by falling out between themselves, whereupon the one to get the Crown from the other, sent for the Saxons to help him, and having learned to conquer, being also taken with the fertility of the Land, they gat it in possession, the Britains the old inhabitants being driven into Wales and places adjacent.

For the greatnesse of thine iniquity are thy skirts discovered, and thy heels made bare. The use of garments being to cover mans shamefull parts, as we may see Gen. 3. it came into a Proverb, Thy skirts shall be discovered, when it is meant, Thou shalt be put to ignominy and shame; so the servants of David had their garments cut off by the buttocks by Hannu King of Ammonites, and when the enemy prevailed, he stript his Captives naked, and carried them away, as it is often threatned, that the Jews should be used by the Caldees. And this calamity is here set forth by their skirts being discovered, and heels made bare.

Can the Ethiopian change his skin. The skin of the Ethiopian is black; and by no washing can be made white, so cannot one accustomed to live in sinne turn righteous. But by thus saying the Prophet meaneth not either that God cannot do it, where he meeteth not with reluctancy in mans will, for in this case he denieth that he can do it, Isa. 45. Marib. 23. 23. that is, according to that way, which he hath propounded to himself in dealing with sinners about their conversion, which is to move their wils inwardly by his Spirit, as outwardly by his Word; as that there is no free-will in man, as Calvin acknowledged, but only that these Jews were more desperately enthralled to sinne by their long using of themselves therunto; so as that there was now no hope of their conversion, or of their escaping the destruction threatned. Which should be a warning to us all to take heed of continuing in sinne, and therefore the same day that we have sinned, to repent and break off from it again, as it is, To day harden not your hearts, for, Consuetudo peccandi tollit sensum peccati.

CHAP. XIV.

2 Chron. 36.

THe word of the Lord that came to Jeremiah concerning the dearth or restraint; That is, of rain causing dearth. It is uncertain in what Kings reign this was, and what dearth it was. Jerom and most Expositors conjecture, that the famine in Zedekiah his time is meant, when Nebuchadnezzar besieged the City Jerusalem in his eleventh year, and in the fourth moneth, it is said, There was a famine in the City. But the word [restraints] plainly sheweth, that it was a dearth through the restraint of rain coming sometime before that siege, and causing their scarcity then the sooner; and because it is said vers. 3. some were sent out for water and found none, which could not be done, when the enemy besieged them so straightly that none could go in or out. And the same is further confirmed vers. 4, 5, 6. where the Ploughmen which could not plow then, are said to have been ashamed, and the Hinds to have forsaken their calves for want of grasse, and the wilde Asses for the same want to have snuffed up the winde. Yet when such a famine by drought came in those Kings reigns, wherein Jeremiah prophesied, it is no where said in holy Scripture, but onely it is here prophesied of, as that drought in Ahabs time by Elijah, that when it should come, secondary causes might not be so much looked at, as the wrath of God against sin causing it.

1 King. 17.

Vers. 7.

O Lord, do it for thy Names sake. That is, although our sins cry for judgments against us, do this great thing for us to save us from this famine and sword threatned, although our sins call for them, and therefore we can plead nothing for any worthinesse in us, but for thy names sake, that it may have glory of saving us, whom thou hast taken to be thy peculiar people. And in thus praying he teacheth the people what they should say, if by any means they would be stirred up hereunto.

Vers. 13.

The Prophets tell them, Ye shall not see the sword. This Jeremiah relateth not without great grief, that even Prophets coming in the name of the Lord wrought against him and his threatnings, to make the people despise them, and continue secure to their destruction. And he declareth both what he prayed and said further to the Lord, that the people might be the more affected with it, as acknowledging him to be most loving to them, and carefull of their good: but these false prophets that soothed them up in their sins, bold and presumptuous braggadochians, that they might not be seduced by them. And vers. 15, and 16. to move them the more he threatneth or rather telleth how the Lord threatned them and the people also that hearkned to them, that they should die by the sword and famine, and lie without a burial, both they, their wives and their children, as they had all consented together to commit Idolatry, for so they are shewed to have done, Chap. 7. And if it shall seem too great severity, that the people who were seduced by the deceitfulness of the false prophets should suffer such grievous things, it is to be conceived, that they were as willing to be made drunken by them with the error of impunity, notwithstanding their sins, as they to make them drunken, so that the Lord doth but permit the wicked to their own choice, as they delight more in unrighteousness then in the truth, so leaving them to be drawn after it, and then as they are well-worthy, making them to partake in judgement with their seducers. The like to which is threatned, 2 Thes. 2. 11. and is daily done. A number of unsound and hypocritical hearted people meet with false prophets in many places, and being unstable in their faith, are soon carried away by every new blast of Doctrine, as by a new light; in comparison of which that they had before is nothing in their esteem. But let all such consider to what both they and their Prophets are tending, viz. to horrible destruction by Gods judgements that they may in time beware and repent.

Both the Priest and the Prophet go about into the Land that they know not. Heb. Go about to a Land, and they shall not know ] by Kimchi expounded thus, into Babylon, to which, because it was a very long way, they went not directly, but by many turnings and wayes about, and they are said not to know it, because they would not for any threatnings of this judgement believe it, till that it came upon them. By Varabius thus, They go about to other Countreys, to which they fled to save themselves, not knowing that in the end they should be taken there, and carried to Babylon: or because the word לדור here used, signifieth also to make Merchandize, Gen. 34: 10. they were intent to their own profit, and went about prophesying of peace to please the people, to win their love the more, and consequently to procure from them the more liberality, till that upon the sudden they were taken by the enemy and carried, so many of them as escaped the sword and famine, into a Land which they knew not, nor never saw before. By Calvin, They go about the Land, seeking vainly means of safety and preservation from the danger at hand; and they know not, that is, will not know by all their warnings the destruction hanging over their heads, till they suffer it, and there is no escaping, it being just with God to dement them, and to take all right understanding from them, as they had infatuated and inebriated the people by their false prophesying of peace and safety. And herein I rest, because thus the words agree best to the former part of the verse, speaking of the destruction by famine in the City, and the sword in the field, whereinto these Priests and Prophets fleeing out of an opinion to escape the danger, they fell there contrary to their expectation, for which it is said, They knew not; and so by the Land here spoken of cannot be meant the Land of Caldes, but their own Land, the fields into which they fled to hide them, and then the particle לדור may be taken as redundant, they went about, or go about the Land seeking for hiding places, as was before-said, but their destruction by the sword comes upon them, and they shall not know it till it comes, for it shall be sudden.

Are there amongst the vanities of the Gentiles that can cause rain? From vers. 19. hitherto, the Prophet prayeth for the people, and in their name, although he were forbidden ver. 11. as he had done before after the like prohibition, Chap. 7. 16. and 11. 24. whereby it appears, That the Lord never inhibits his Prophets from praying for his people, but to stimulate them the more unto it, for he loves to see a Moses standing up in the gap to oppose him in his judgements, or a Jacob that will earnestly wrestle with him, and not let him go. although he commands him to do it. And he prayeth according to their present necessity, as we may see by comparing her with vers. 1. in these words, In the drought ] He pleadeth with the Lord from his unparallel'd power, no Idols, or heavens themselves can give rain, but God only; for he is said to give the early and the latter rain, the heavens being only his creatures by their influence, as secondary causes doing it, when he will, but not otherwise, when he in judgement will not that they shall produce any, as at this time, and in the dayes of Ahab. For which he concludes, Thou hast made all these ] That is, as Expositors generally say, all the celestial bodies, by whose influence rain commonly cometh, as God hath appointed, although Calvin turneth it another way, by all these understanding all the judgements sent upon them. But I see no reason of his going from the common exposition herein, seeing it followeth so aptly upon the premisses, The heavens cannot do it without thee, and why can they not? because although from them rain commonly cometh, yet God made them and governs them at his own will, not suffering them to do it, but when he pleaseth, or by all these understand both the constellations and rain, or drought caused hereby, all which were last spoken of. Finally to move the Lord the more, he saith, thou art our Lord, and expectation is to thee, for this is a great motive, when our hope is not in any thing else, but in God alone, Psalm 20.8. A thing to be thought upon by those that expect the changes of the Moon for the weather, expecting then undoubtedly rain or fair weather, because it is so most commonly, and so observe the Lords providence the lesse to love and fear him, which we ought to do even when weather comes thus, according to the common account; for the heavens cause not rain by any virtue in themselves, but as God willeth or nilleth, even when signs of rain concur.

CHAP. XV.

Cast them out of my sight. That is, Denounce from me this judgement, whereas thou persistest to pray unto me for them. For although Moses and Samuel should stand before me in their behalf, and pray also, I would not be moved. And he nameth Moses, as most famous for standing in the gap once, Exod. 32. and Samuel for obtaining a cessation of a terrible thunder, and rain in harvest time, 1 Sam. 12. and in bidding Cast them out, he alludeth to Chap. 1. 10. to pluck up, root out, &c.

Vers. 3.

I will set over them four families, the sword, the dogs, fowls and beasts. Vulg. I will visit over them four families; So indeed the word Visit also signifieth, but because this is senselesse, the other signification, I will set over, is to be preferred. He had spoken vers. 2. of four wayes of destruction, death, whereby the pestilence is meant, the sword of the enemy, famine and captivity. Here he holds to the same number; but for the pestilence dogs are named, for famine and captivity, fowls and beasts; it being meant that such as died in the City by famine or pestilence, the dogs should eat, such as by the sword abroad, the beasts of the field, and fowls of the air, according to the distinction before made. Chap. 14. 17, 18. and a little before he saith, There should be none to bury them, therefore they must needs lie for a prey to these creatures. Hereby is meant the extremity of misery that they should suffer. And it is to be noted, that the Lord being unreasonably provoked proves at length inexorable; There is a time when he may be found by those that seek unto him, but there is a time again when the most faithfull shall have no hope of successe in praying for the wicked, as Jeremiah had not, nor should Moses or Samuel have had, if they had then lived; see the like Ezek. 14.

Vers. 4.

For Manasseh the sonne of Hezekiah. It may seem strange, that the sinne of this King should now be spoken of so long after his death, and his repentance and mercy thereupon shewed him before that, and spoken of as the cause of the captivity now at hand. For this was in the time of Jehoiakim, if not of Zedekiah about four years after, and moreover it repented him, and he did the works of repentance long before he died, as appeareth 2 Chron. 33. But it is to be known that he is spoken of, because in his time God was most provoked, and then he began first to threaten the people with captivity; and although he repented, yet they continued still in their wickednesse, waxing rather worse and worse, as his former invectives against them shew, especially Chap. 13. 23. For although God will not punish the children for the fathers sins, yet when they live in the same, the score of their fathers sins shall be added to theirs to make their judgements the more terrible, according to the second Commandment. And although Manasseh alone be spoken of, yet both he and the people together with him, that then holp to shed so much innocent blood, were all meant. And he is called the sonne of Hezekiah, to aggravate his wickedness the more, and theirs also, for that he having so godly and zealous a father, did so greatly degenerate, and they were most hard to be moved moved to piety by Hezekiah, and that which they were brought unto, soon vanished again as the morning-dew; but to impiety and idolatry they were most ready to runne with Manasseh, and being once in that evil way, neither could his charging them upon his repentance to serve the Lord, nor the labours of Gods Prophets amongst them since, prevail with them to bring them out of it again. Whence note, That God is offended with wicked children of godly parents most of all others, so farre is he from favouring them for their sake; and this aggravates the wickedness of a people, to be hard to be brought to the pure worshipping and serving God under good Rulers, but easie to be corrupted under evil Rulers and superstitions.

Note.

I will fan them in the gates of the Cities. A Metaphor taken from such as winnow corn in a windy door from whence the chaff is blown away: to shew that they should be as chaff, as the wicked are compared, Psal. 1. Luk. 3. Some by gates understand Cities, as if he had said, I will turn your Cities into fields, the wals and buildings being broken down, because there were threshing-floors and places to winnow corn, or because the gates were places of judgement, he meaneth, that he would sentence against them that they should be used like chaff, that is, scattered into all parts, as is expressed, vers. 4. Some the uttermost parts of the Land, because gates are at the ends of Cities. Some, I will make you poor, so as that ye shall beg at the gates of Cities at rich mens gates there, but the first is best.

Vers. 7.

I brought upon them, upon the mother of the young men a Waster at noon-day. But it may better be read, Upon the mother a chosen waster; for it is בחר signifying chosen, without any particle prefixed, denoting the genitive case. It signifieth indeed a young man also, but not without this Epithete, A chosen young man, but the singular is put for the plural, Wasters or Spoilers chosen for their extraordinary valour to make this destruction. And by the Mother may be understood either mothers likewise, the singular being put for the plural; As if he had said, not onely innumerable widows shall be made, their husbands being destroyed, according to the first hyperbolical words of the verse, but all mothers together as one shall then be made childlesse, the Caldean youth being brought upon them, who shall waste and destroy your children; or the mother City, as the Greeks give the name Metropolis to a chief City, which signifieth a Mother-City. At noon-day, that is, not secretly or treacherously coming upon them, but openly by force irresistible, make the best defence that they can. I have caused him to fall upon it suddenly, and terrours upon the City. Hebr. והעיר ובה the word Ir rendred City, signifying also enemy, and the next word tumults or terrors that will make him to fall upon it suddenly, the enemy and terrours. It is absurd, as Calvin also noteth, to render the word City here, I will make to fall upon her the city and tumults, for what sense can be in this, unlesse he had meant, that the City should be beaten down about their ears, whereas they came not thus to destruction, but by the famine and the sword of the enemy taking them fleeing and slaying them? and the New Translat. altereth and misplaceth the words, which needs not, the sense being very good, I will make him to fall upon it, or her suddenly, that is, the mother before-spoken of, The enemy and terrours. These last words serving to shew whom he meant by him; as if he had said, I will cause him to fall upon it, that is, the enemy and terrours concomitating his coming, filling them all with horrible fear. And for this maketh Tigurina Translation, and the Septuagint and Caldee, which two last for the City falling upon it have Exercitum Caldaorum, for the multitude of souldiers stiled a City, and for their Tents set up City-fashion.

Vers. 8.

Calvin.

She that hath born seven languisbeth. That is, The mother of many children seeing them all destroyed pineth away with sorrow; and this is spoken according to vers. 3. Upon the mother the waster.

Vers. 9.

Woe is me my mother that thou hast born me a man of strife. It may seem strange that Jeremiah should thus break out through impatience for the enmity that

he

he met withall amongst the Jews against his mother that bare him, as though she were in any fault. But this his crying out is not to be taken, as an effect of impatience, but of his zeal and earnest desire to convince the Jews of their malice, from whence it proceeded that they were so fell against him, seeing that if there were fault in him, for which there was in his mother for bearing and bringing him forth into the world, and if they would be ashamed to say, that for this there was any fault in her, they might be ashamed to say there was any in him. For since he grew up to be a man, he declined all occasion of contention, forso much as he neither lent nor borrowed upon usury, whereby he meaneth, that he had no traffick with them according to the manner of other men, whereupon strife commonly ariseth, one way of trafficking being put for all, and yet they all were mad with him, and cursed, and spake bitterly against him. For from hence it was plain, that they hated him, and were at variance with him for nothing else, but out of their own malignancy, which was commonly against Gods Prophets for their reprehensions of their grosse sins, and threatening Gods judgements against them, as he commandeth. Thus Calvin who inferreth hereupon, That it is good for Ministers of the Word of God to have no negotiating with men about worldly things, because who so hath, cannot live free from envy and hatred by reason of their worldly-mindedness stirring them up against the Minister, when they see part of their gains to be by him exacted for his maintenance. Wherein we cannot but all consent unto him, but it is Scandalum acceptum non datum, and therefore the blame of it will light upon them only, and consequently the punishment, and we see by Jeremiah his example, if there were no such occasion, yet the very reproving and threatening their sins, would be occasion enough to malicious and wicked minded men. Yet I deny not but it were good in a Christian Kingdom that this should be taken away as much as might be, by causing Tithes in every place to be converted into moneys, so that it might be without fraud and diminution to the wronging of Gods Ministers. But be it that Ministers took no Tithes, yet they cannot live without all trafficking, neither did Jeremiah himself, for Chap. 32. he buieth a field, and therefore he meaneth not all trafficking, but that which is scandalous only. For usury in particular here mentioned, it is not agreed amongst Divines what it is, neither is this a place properly giving occasion to speak of it, and therefore I referre the Reader for that to Exod. 22. 22. where I have purposely spoken of it. And he mentioneth not only taking of usury, but also giving, because both wayes contentions arise, when one would take more, and the other give lesse. Jerom applieth it to Christ, who was most truly a man of contention with the Scribes, Pharisees, Sadducees, Priests and Herodians, and none would take to usury of him, because they returned no increase or fruit of his doctrine, and so he took none neither.

Verf. 11.

Calv.

The Lord said, Verily it shall be well with thy remnant, Hebr. If not thy remnant to good. Which words have the force of an Oath, If I bring them not to good, by delivering them from captivity, I am not God, or say, that I am not just, for he had before said, Destroy them, but make not a full end, and in many places he speaketh comfort to a remnant, and because vers. 9. he had threatened so universal a destruction, now he qualifieth the terrour of it by promising good to a few faithfull that should remain of the Jews, adding further, I will cause the enemy to intreat thee well in the time of evil and of affliction, Heb. If I shall not cause the enemy to meet thee for good, or by doing thee good in the day of evil, &c. These last words serving for nothing else, but to explain further the former; Thus some; but Calvin understands it as spoken to Jeremiah in person, answering to his complaint, vers. 10. by promising him good in the remaining part of his life, and that even when he should be come into his enemies hands the Caldees, as the event afterwards shewed. If not thy remnant to good then is, if the remnant or following part of thy life. Although his own kindred and countrey men were cruelly bent against him, yet he made him him know before, that he should finde favour amongst those Heathens, and to publish it, that when it should come to passe at the least they might believe it, although they would not before, that he was a true Prophet, and this I think to be the true meaning.

Shall iron break the Northern iron, and the steel? Here he fails to threatening them again by vilifying their strength, in comparison of that of the Caldees. For they in the pride of their hearts thought themselves strong enough, yea iron against their Northern enemies, whom he to deter them by them compares to iron and steel, and therefore sheweth to be far stronger.

Revenge me of my persecutors. Here Jeremiah to shew how greatly he was moved at the obstinacy and malice of the people turns from them again to the Lord, crying for revenge against them; See the like before Chap. 11. 20. For the words following, Take me not away in thy long-suffering. Hebr. In lengthning thine anger. The meaning being, whilst thou art long in bringing deserved destruction upon them, least they, as they plot, work mischief against me to the taking away of my life, or according to some, Be not so long in destroying them in thy wrath by so many kindes of judgements that I shall not be preserved, but swept away together with them also. Take it which way ye please, but the N.T. turning it, In thy long-suffering, is both erroneous and troubles the sense.

Thy words were found, and I did eat them. That is, I took not this propheticall Office upon me, for which I am so hated through mine own ambitious seeking, but when I thought not upon it, thy words came unto me, and whether I would or no I was forced unto it, That thy words were found by me, as appears Chap. 1. and yet I ate them, that is, received them into my heart, and not into my mouth only, as many do, applying my self with a true heart to obey them, and to do as thou commandest, believing them to be thy words, for whoso doth thus, to him Gods Word becometh food that is eaten, and nourisheth to eternal life, and so is his substantial Word Christ. And it was sweet unto me, wherein he was like to Ezek. 2. 8. they both had unspeakable inward joy by this spiritual eating, and so shall all others have that eat likewise, although they meet with much bitterness in this wicked world, of which they are forced to complain sometimes as Jeremiah doth; See the like in David, Psal. 19. 7. and Job 23. 12. And Gods words are so sweet to the believing heart, because most sweet and comfortable things are therein contained, and they come close to the heart, and enter into it as meat into the belly. And he addeth, I am called by thy Name, O Lord, not as every one that was within the Covenant under the Old Testament, or is under the New, for all the Jews had Gods name called upon them, when they were called the people of the Lord, and all now baptized when they are called Christians: But more singularly, because he was a true Prophet of the Lord, called in the power of his Spirit, as his instrument, to pull down Kingdoms and Nations.

I sate not in the assembly of mockers, but alone, for thy hand, for thou hast filled me with indignation. Hebr. I sate not in the secret of the mockers, and I rejoiced before thy hand; I sate alone, because thou hast filled me, &c. Vulg. I gloried from the face of thy hand, &c. Because thou filledst me with commination; but the word commination signifieth wrath or indignation. The meaning is, I was delighted in thy words, as was before-said, whereas others in mocking at them, But I abhorred from the wicked consultations which they had in secret to this effect, and against me and other thy faithfull servants speaking thy word unto them. My joy and glory in the mean season being in thy good hand towards me, setting me up to be thy Prophet and inwardly comforting me. Yet I sate alone, because I was filled with such words by thee to be spoken to them, as brake all friendship and permitted no society betwixt me and them, for they were words of indignation and denunciations of judgements most terrible. In these last words Caldee, Vatabl, Calvin say the same that I do: but upon the the former, they joyn these words And rejoyced, with these, I sat not in the assembly of mockers, rendring them, nor rejoyced, as if herein were nothing else, but a denyall of taking any pleasure to do as they did, and contrariwise an implying of sorrow therefore; and Caldee, Pagnin, Dionysius, following the vulg. expound, and by nor, as if he meant, that he joyed not in his propheticall office by reason of the judgements, which he was hereby inforced to threaten. But to me the first, though followed by none hitherto, seemeth most plain and perspicuous.

Why is my pain perpetuall? Here the Prophet leaving again the discourse in which he was, of the joy that he had in the Lord, returneth to complaints, as vers. 10. as if he had said, Sith it is thus, that thou (O Lord) hast set me up in this office, and ministred words unto me of comfort, and better usage one day by the enemy, as vers. 11. why do my own kinsfolk and countrey men go on still to gall, and renew my wounds by their cursed and malicious speaking against me without all measure or end? for by reason of their spite against me, there is dayly but a step betwixt me and death, and so I am in danger of being cut off before I see the good promised. Why wilt thou be as a Lye, waters that are not faithfull, or true? or that hold not but fail when a man hath most need of them, that is, in the time of heat; for so should the Lord be to Jeremy, if he preserved him not from the fury of his enemies, as he had promised, especially all this enmity being stirred against him for his sake, and his faithfull dealing with them, as he commanded. And in saying, Wilt thou be as a Lye, he is not to be understood, as uttering any thing blasphemous, for that was impossible for one so full of the spirit to do, but the uttering of these words is, as if he had said, Wilt thou (O God) who art true, though all men be lyers, be as lying and deceitfull waters in this particular of perserving me, having promised it? certainly thou wilt not, the springs of water shall fail in a dry time, or cisterns having holes, but thou the Fountain of living water canst never fail, but be a comfort to him that trusteth in thee, when his need doth most require, for so the Lord is stiled the Fountain of living water. And for this exposition maketh the interrogation, and that nothing is spoken by way of affirmation. He speakes thus, as if a man should in his streights speak to his assured friend, who had promised him help in his greatest extremity, but finding no help yet to come from him, Wilt thou be a lyer to me? to stir him up then more to reach out his helping hand and not to delay so to do. Calvin, to avoid an evil imputation, that might be laid upon the Prophet, if these words be taken as spoken in his own person, saith, that he speaketh thus in the person of the people murmuring at their evil case, whenas God had chosen them and made them his peculiar people above all others, and to this interpretation he thinks further light to be given vers. 19. If thou turn unto me, thou shalt return again: that is, thou art too much affected with the judgements to come upon the Jews to expostulate so with the Lord in their behalf. For if the words of vers. 18. be thus understood, these answer well unto them; cease from thus complaining, which he meaneth in bidding him turn, and then he saith, he shall stand before him, and be as his mouth, speaking only that which he commandeth, as his faithfull Prophet and messenger. To explain which further he saith, if thou shalt separate the precious from the vile, that is, if thou shalt not for fear, or flattery, speak or yield to any thing divers from the truth, which I command thee to speak, for that is the precious, and flattery is the vile, and consequently he separates the precious from the vile that speaks freely and boldly the truth not being moved to speak otherwise by affection, fear or favour. And this doth further appear in the next words; Let them turn to thee, turn not thou to them, that is, cease not reproving and threatening them till they be converted, and be not by an inordinate love of them because they are neer unto thee in the flesh moved to bear with, or to speak pleasing things unto them, or for any fear of what they can do unto thee: some refer the expostulation before going to the Jews, by whom the Prophet suffered, as if in saying, why art thou as a lyer, he meant that his pain, to which they put him, should be as lying waters that fail? but this, though followed by grave Authours, is against all good sense, because it was never known, that any man would complain of his pain failing, or compare it to a cistern or spring of water, of which not pain, but joy cometh to the thirsty. Neither doth that of Calvin so well agree, although he makes it seem well agreeing by vers. 19. For by these words, if thou shalt turn, he meaneth not from being by naturall affection, &c. from speaking thus in the behalf of thy brethren the Jews, for so the next words would not agree, if thou shalt separate the precious from the vile; for that this is not spoken of things or words, but of persons, the last words declare, they shall turn to thee, thou shalt not turn to them, which shew the meaning to be; if thou shalt apply thy self with all thy power to convert them, and of evil to make them good, (for wicked men are vile, and converts precious) thou shalt be as my mouth, then which do greater excellency can be attained by any mortall man. According to Chrysostom speaking of them that are fallen into sin; If thou shalt pour the oyl of heavenly Doctrine into them, if thou shalt bind the wounded with humanity, and temperance, he shall make thee richer then any treasure, for he saith, if thou separate the precious from the vile, thou shalt be my mouth. What can be equalled to this? neither fastings, nor watchings, nor lying upon the ground, for none of all these are comparable to procuring the Salvation of our brethren. And the Caldee Paraphrast, If thou shalt reclaim the wicked that he becomes just, thou shalt do the same that the word of my mouth doth, and so be my mouth, for so Psal. 19. it is said that the word of God converteth the Soul, thus also Gregory; Moral. lib. 18. c. 23. Hugo, Lyra, &c. For the first words of this verse. If thou wilt turn I will make thee to return and stand before me, Jerome; Raban; and some others understand it, as if it had been said; if thou shalt turn this people, I will put an end to thy tribulation of which thou complaineest, Caldee, Lyra, Hugo. If thou turn and be no more so impatient and querulous, but quietly depending upon me, then will I provide for thy deliverance from the sufferings, of which thou complaineest, and thou shalt stand, that is, continue unmoveable in this high prophetical office, yea thou shalt be as my mouth, if thou goest zealously on to convert the wicked. I subscribe rather to Jerome, and the word וְשׁוּבָה signifying, shalt make to turn, will bear it. And then it aptly answers to the words of vers. 18. according to the exposition given thereupon, For to the Prophets asking whether his plague should be perpetuall, or God would deceive him of his hope, that he might be further confirmed, the Lord answers here; Go on in thy office doing thy best to turn them, and then take no care of thy preservation, I will look to that, but rather take care to make them come precious out of vile, for so the words may be rendred, and the last words agree to this, Let them turn or come to thee, the vile to the precious by being formed anew to righteousness, and holiness according to thy teaching, not the precious to the vile by being corrupted and overcome through their malice, and made impatient or fearfull to go on in the ministry committed unto him. And he promiseth not only, that in thus doing he shall be his mouth, but he sheweth further vers. 20. 21. how he will make him to stand firm against all their assaults, as a brazen wall impregnable; see, Chap. 1. 18.

CHAP. XVI.

Hence the Prophet is bidden by another sign, to declare that which he had prophesied of the evil death whereby they should die that were of the Land of Judea, viz. by not taking a wife there, nor begetting children, because the people of that Land should die miserably, and their dead bodies should be as dung upon the earth. It is impertinent here, either to question whether

whether Jeremy were not married already, or it be hereby intimated, that a single life is commended to Prophets. It is most probable, that he was not, for if he had, this prohibition should not have been needfull, seeing he would not have taken another wife doubtles, when he had one living. For although Polygamy was practised by other men in those dayes, even by Abraham, and Jacob occasionally and for a mysticall signification, yet it was not by any other Prophet, but rather condemned, Mal. 2. 15. And what a weak argument were this, God forbid Jeremy to take a wife, and beget Children in a Land being now ready to be destroyed, therefore it is his will, that Prophets should take none, but lead a single life? It doth rather shew, that such as well as other men were commonly left to their own liberty for this matter; and now to restrain from the liberty given by God, is a thing that cometh from a contrary spirit, that is, the Devil, as is plainly taught, 1 Tim. 4.1.

Verf.7.
Calvin.

Hieron.

Enter not into the house of mourning, for mourning Hebr. is סדר signifying, either mourning, or a mourning Feast made for the dead, to which Friends being called, the Friends of the dead did somewhat lighten their sorrow by their company, and to this agree the words of v.7. Neither shall men give them the cup of consolation to drink for their Father or Mother. And Calvin observes from some passages in Tully, that Feasting was used amongst the Romans at burials to put away sorrow, and to procure mirth, as who did think their dead friends to be now taken into the number of the gods. And Ierom saith, It was the manner in mourning at Funerals both amongst the Greeks and Latines, to make Feasts called by the Greeks συνεισηννα, by the Latines Parentalia, because they were made, when they buried fathers or mothers, and Prov. 31.6. It it said give wine to them that mourn. Of this also see Tob. 4. 18. Of this also Perseus, Pliny, Lucian, Pollux, and Herodotus write: the Vulg. Lat. therefore renders it, go not into the house of feasting. But this is improper, and if it be so rendred, the same thing is forbidden twice, for verf. 8. he saith, go not into the house of Feasting, as opposing that to this, and speaking so both here, and there, as that he plainly meaneth contrary things: wherefore this is better expounded by mourning, or Feasting made to lenify mourning in respect of the dead. And the reason was, because, as followeth in the next words, they that died should not be buried, but lye partly for a prey to Beasts, and fowls, and partly for dung upon the earth, as was said before, therefore to shew before, that such doings, as had been used at burials, and were still used, should cease, he must not come to any place upon such occasions. For hereby he made a more full Declaration of that which he spake by word of mouth, that the deeper impression might be made by that which they saw in him, of their miserable case, when every ones own sorrow, that lived still, should be so great for his own sufferings and dangers, as that none should intend Funerall rites any more, as they had used to do, not doing any more like men, but as brut Beasts suffering dead corpses to lie here and there, to rot upon the ground without any burying or lamenting them, as men of all Countreys, and Nations used to do; whereas he addeth, that they should not pluck off their hair or cut themselves, he doth not hereby approve such doings out of passion and extremity of sorrow, for it is forbidden, as heathenish; but because they probably did so, as well as idolize after the manner of the heathen.

Levit. 21.1.

Neither shall tear themselves in mourning to comfort them for the dead; Vulg: neither shall break bread to him that mourneth, to comfort him over the dead. Hebr. They shall not break to them upon the mourning, or the mourner, to which it is to be thought, that bread is to be supplied, because the next words are, neither shall they drink to him the cup of consolation, neither doth the word פירס signifie tearing, but breaking cutting or dividing, and of cutting and tearing their hair enough was said before verf. 6. And forsomuch as at Funerals Feasts were made to mitigate sorrow, as hath been said, and this was used amongst the Jews, how can we expound the word breaking, more aptly, then by breaking bread, and giving, and moving the sorrowfull friends of the dead to eat, that through through grief had already fasted too long, according to Lucian, speaking of Funerall rights, and saying, After all these, a Funerall Supper remaineth; and now friends are present to comfort the Parents of the dead, and they persuade them to take meat, although they be unwillingly in a manner forced unto it, albeit through a three dayes fast, almost killed with famine. And this exposition is confirmed further by the next words of drinking to them, whereas if it be expounded, tearing themselves, here would be no congruity. And of Feasting at Funerals both Clemens makes mention amongst Christians, and Chrysostom also.

Neither go into the house of Feasting, that is, hereby to shew, that their Feastings, and merry meetings shall soon have an end, when all things should by their enemies be brought to ruine, as is declared vers. 9. Whereby we may gather, that when sin abounds in a Land, and Judgements therefore approach or even begin to seize upon it, God would not have Feastings at such times, and if there be, the faithfull ought like Jeremiah to refrain from going to them, least men be hereby blinded from seeing the evils hanging over their heads, and so remain secure, and hardened in their sins, all care and sorrow being drowned in cups and good chear, see Isa. 22. 12. Here is shewed, that when the Prophet should so severely threaten the wicked Jews, they should with a brazen face ask what their great sins were, for which they should be thus punished, as who should say, Thou dost us wrong, we are not so notoriously faulty as thou wouldst make the world beleeve. For this is the manner of hypocrites, what fowl sins soever they live in, to justify themselves and have indignation at the Preacher, who reproveth them; but in such the way to repentance is dammed up, their case is desperate.

Note.

Because your Fathers have forsaken me, and ye have done worse. Here is a double reason of Gods judgements now coming. 1. The Lord was long ago provoked by their fathers, which were enough to make him full of wrath against them: for he threatens to visit the sins of the Fathers, upon the Children to the third and fourth generation. 2. They did worse, both because not only their own sins, but their Fathers were together looked upon in them, forasmuch as they tread in their steps, and so made them their own, and also because they had more Prophets to instruct, admonish and presse them to do well, as is intimated in the last words of vers. 12. That they might not hearken to me. Therefore he threatens to carry them into a land, that they knew not, and that there they should serve other gods, that was, into Caldea, the inhabitants whereof were idolaters, and the Jews being made their servants were by them made to serve their idols by doing all servile offices about them, as the Gibeonites were sometime made to serve the servants of the true God by being briers of wood, and drawers of water, to all the congregation: and in this work the Caldees should work them day and night without all mercy, to the wasting of their bodies, and wearing out of their strength, and haply sometimes by sacrificing their children, which would be a great grief unto them. For to serve other gods would not otherwise have been counted so grievous a punishment, since they did this voluntarily at home, acted, preferred it before serving of the true God, but then, when they should be compelled to do it in baseness and toyl, in derision and hunger, thirst and nakedness, being under the whip also, as the Turks gally-slaves, they should find it to be an intollerable servitude, and so grow to a loathing of their service, repenting that they were so besotted, for such cruell gods, as they proved to them, and helpless to save them from this captivity, to forsake the gracious & true God of their fathers, who had alwayes been so beneficent unto them; a like threatening to which was used to Rehoboam, when he cryed to the Lord against the King of Egypt, that he should be brought into subjection by him, that he might know the difference betwixt serving him, and other gods. Or it may be conceived, that however the Jews now served other gods, yet being smitten and brought to so great misery, and finding no help from the gods which they served, they then changed their minds, and resolved not to serve them any more, but were by their imperious enemies compelled to vex their Souls the more. And so sin was punished in the kind, that abomination which they had chosen they being now prostituted unto, even to the wearing of them, and the encrease of their misery.

Vers. 14.

Therefore the dayes come, saith the Lord, that it shall no more be said, The Lord liveth, &c. That is, because the miseries of the Jews shall be far greater, in their Babylonish captivity, then the misery of their fathers in Egypt, so much as this shall not only be corporeall, but spirituall; for they shall be left to sink, as it were, into the gulph of all abominations, in serving other gods, as vers. 13. when they shall herefrom be delivered, the benefit shall be counted so great, that hereby the memory of that out of Egypt shall be drowned, and lie under oblivion, never to be spoken of any more; but this shall be remembered and God shall be praised for it throughout all generations. And under this deliverance that by Jesus Christ is also pointed at, whereby a perfect deliverance is made not only from idolatry, and that base servitude, but from all sin, which whosoever liveth in, is the servant of sin. And this appeareth further, Chap. 23. 6, 7, 8. where the same words are used again, and this deliverance is expressly saith to be by the righteous branch and King raised up to David, vers. 5. wherefore Jerom is for this, and after him Rabannus and Hugo. And Isidor without taking in the deliverance from the Babylonish captivity, reasoneth strongly to prove it to be a prophetic, not of that deliverance, but only of the deliverance by Christ. 1. Because it is said to be so great, that it should obscure the deliverance out of Egypt; but such was not that out of Babylon, if we compare them together: for in Egypt they were longer, viz. above 200. years, in Babylon but seventie, out of Egypt they were delivered in a more wonderfull manner by prodigies and miracles, in spite of the King; from Babylon not: and being brought out of Egypt they were made a free people, but when out of Babylon they continued under the Persian Kings; Again, when they were brought out of Babylon they kept the Paschever still, even till the time of the destruction of the Temple, in remembrance of their deliverance out of Egypt, whereas is said here that this should be no more be spoken of. Lastly because a clause is here added, into a Land which he gave for inheritance to your Fathers, and from all countreys, whereas Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, their Fathers, never had it given them, but only promised and therefore bringing again into Judea cannot be meant, neither were they carried into all Countreys, but into Babylon; yet some take it as a prophetic only of deliverance from the Babylonish captivity, as Cald. Theod. Tho. Aquin. &c. Against whom most of the reasons foregoing are very strong. Neither do the words so well agree to that of Isidor, seeing that when the Jews came to be delivered by Christ, they shall be no more delivered from the north, then from other parts of the World, where they are scattered. But to the first exposition all things do excellently agree, both deliverances being here understood together, that out of Babylon from the north, and that by Christ from all parts towards the end of the World, according to Rom. 11. where it is shewed, that the Jews shall not alwayes continue in infidelity, but be again grafted in and saved. Calvin alone here stands against all others, denying these words to be Propheticall, only he saith, that their deliverance is obligely touched upon, but who so shall look into vers. 15. shall find it plainly prophesied of, for it is said: I will bring them again into the Land, that I gave unto their Fathers, which words are peculiar to their return from Babylon, and not pertinent to their deliverance by Christ, which when it shall be wrought, it is not necessary hence to hold, that they shall be brought out of all Countreys to inhabit the Land of Canaan again, seeing the Apostle Paul, that speaks most of it, saith nothing of this, but only of their conversion. I will send for many fishers, and they shall fish them. This hath been against all sense and reason drawn by many ancient expositours to the Apostles, because the Lord saith,

Vers. 16.

I will

I will make you fishers of men, as by Ierom. August. tract. 10. de util. jeiunij. Origen hom. 12. in Ieron. Tertul. lib. 4. advers. Marcion. cap. 9. Ambr. in Psa. 118. For this is not spoken in way of comfort, but of terror. Having interlaced something consolatory, vers. 14. 15. for the faithfuls sake, now he prosecutes the matter before in hand, shewing how he would carry them into a strange Land, viz. by sending fishers, and hunters, that is, the Caldees, to whom they should be but as fishes to the fisher, taken in nets without resistance, and as conies running into holes, or Foxes, whom the hunters pursuing thither, ferit them or dig them out. So that hereby is meant, that not only such, as appeared, but even they that hid themselves under covert, as fishes under water, or beasts in burrowes, or in woods, should be found out and carryd away to suffer, as was before threatned. Thus Theod. Hugo, Lyra, Vatabl. Ezek. 12. 13. It is said, I will stretch over him my net, see also 2 King. 25. 4. Habac. 1. 14. and to this Calvin also agreeth. And this is confirmed further, vers. 17. Because mine eyes are upon all their wayes, they are not hid from my face.

Theod.

And first, I will recompense their sin double. These words have reference to the promise made vers. 14. as if he had said, I will bring them again into their own Land, but first I will by bringing fishers and hunters against them, recompense their sin double, where by double he meaneth both by fishing and hunting them, not double to their deserts: see the like threatning before Isa. 40. 1. 61. 1. Ierom will have by double meant, double to the punishments of other people, because they had more means, or according to their double sinning in word and in deed, or against God and their neighbour. Isidor, because their sin was double to their Fathers, sith their Fathers and theirs were now looked upon together. Some as Levit. 26. he threatneth punishment sevenfold, that is, abundance of punishment: they have defiled my Land with the carcases of abominable things, that is, sacrifices offered to idols, for as sacrifices offered to God, such Calvin, yields a sweet smell unto him, so those that are offered to idolds stink, and the bodies of beasts killed for that purpose are stinking and abominable.

Calvin.

My Lord and refuge in the day of affliction, the Gentiles shall come unto thee. Having prophesied, vers. 14. of the conversion of the Jews, after their abundant punishment, now for greater comfort he prophesieth also of the Gentiles conversion, whereby a far greater increase shall be made of spirituall Jews and so of Abrahams seed. And in preparing to speak of this he calleth God his fortress and refuge in affliction, speaking in the name of the faithfull Jewes, as if he had said, Thou wilt certainly be a refuge for us to come unto in all one sufferings before threatned, for even the Gentiles from one end of the world to another shall come unto thee, and be saved, therefore we thy first born and eldest sons much more. The beleivers of the Jews and Gentiles making one Church, over which God would be the Protectour, is here intimated. And when this should be, he sheweth, that they should see into their vanity in serving other gods and abhor from it, from thenceforth acknowledging and worshipping one only true God.

Vers. 20. 21.

CHAP. XVII.

The sin of Iudah is written with a pen of iron, and with the point of a Diamond, and graven upon the Table of your heart. It is a fond conjecture of Euseb. Cesar, that this was spoken of Judas the Traitor, and touching the sin of the Jews in crucifying Christ; for it is plainly spoken of the sin of Idolatry, in turning of them therefrom, and therefore no blotting of it out by forgiveness, but it must needs remain for ever conspicuous to the eyes of the omniscient God, that seeth the heart provoking him to take revenge: The meaning is according to Calvin, that they were most obstinately set upon this sin, neither could the love and corrupt affection, that was, and had long been in them to false gods be any more expunged, then the graving that is made upon hard stone with iron pens or Diamonds points. And the table of stone, whereupon this sin was thus written, was their heart, in which it had made a most deep impression, and was not as a writing with ink, which may easily be done out again; whereby he intimateth, that when in Iosiah his time they were outwardly reclaimed from idolatry, it stuck still in their hearts, and upon the change of their King to an Idolater soon appeared again in their practice; wherefore as before he had set forth their incorrigibility by likening them to the Ethiopian, Chap. 13. 23. so now by a similitude taken from engraving deeply in stone he further setteth forth the same. And lest they should say, How knowest thou what is ingraven in our heart? he addeth, and upon the horns of their Altars, as if he had said, that it is so is apparent by the Altars by you set up to Baal and your sacrifices openly made upon them, and the blood put upon the horns of these Altars, the stain of which any man might easily see. For when sacrifices were offered upon the Altar of the Lord, some of the blood was taken and put upon the horns thereof, Exod. 29. 12. Levit. 8. 15. 16. 18. and I doubt not, but in making their Idolatrous sacrifices upon Altars set up to idols they did likewise. Some think that their sin is said here to be written, because the names of their idols or their own names were graven thereupon, but this is only conjecturall, the other certain. Vulgar Latine, for the point of a Diamond hath ungue adamantino, but the word קצץ rendered unguis, is a instrument, wherewith it is ingraven in stone by scraping therewith as birds by their nailes or talons. From hence we may note, that the sin, wherein any man liveth, and is resolutely bent to go on therein, is ingraven in his heart and conscience, and so remains till the day of judgement, at what time it shall as plainly appear to his condemnation, as letters ingraven in stone with the point of a Diamond, that all men may take heed of setting their hearts upon sin.

Note.

Whilst their Children remember their Altars, that is, they go on generation after generation to sacrifice upon these Altars and in groves, their sin remains written, as hath been said, for a testimony against them, and they shall be accordingly judged. For it is the manner of such as are blindly lead on in a false Religion, carefully to bring up their children in doing as they have done, charging them most streightly herewith, and not to yield therefrom to their dying day.

Vers. 2.

O my mountain in the field, I will give, &c. the vulgar Latine, sacrificing in the fields, but contrary to the Hebrew in which is no word signifying to sacrifice, but my mountain. Calvin (O montanous place,) I will give in the field, thy substance, &c. and this reading the words will best bear, the meaning being, although thou gloriest and bearest thy self upon mount Zion, where my Temple standeth, and in other hills, where thou hast set up Altars to idols, yet thou shalt fall by the sword of the enemy; and thy treasure hid in caves in the fields shall come into thy enemies hands, as spoils.

Vers. 3.

For ye have kindled a fire in mine anger, which shall burn for ever. Because this is spoken of Judea lying desolate seventie years, whereas they would not let it rest every seventh year according to the Law, it may be doubted, how Gods wrath could be said this way to burn for ever. Ierom to cut off this doubt referreth it to the time of *Jerusalem*s destruction by the Romans, & I see not but that this threatening may be extended to that also, the Babylonish captivity being first meant, which should be for a determinate number of years, and then that farre longer lasting desolation, yea even for ever. For although the Jews shall be so in time converted, yet they shall not dwell again in that Land, neither shall it come to its former fertility for ever; but as now by the report of travellers it is as a barren wilderness for many miles about Jerusalem, so it shall continue a spectacle of Gods judgement somewhat like Sodom and Gomorrah to the worlds end; or for ever till a double recompence paid her for all her sinnes, as Chap. 16. 18. the like threatening was made before in Isaiah.

Vers. 4.

Hieron.
Raban.

Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm. This is spoken in in reſpect of the confidence that they had in the Egyptians help, often complained of, for they are expreſly ſaid to be fleſh and not Spirit, Iſa. 31. that is, very weakneſſe. But it is univerſally true, To truſt in any man, or our ſelves, or any ſtrength that we can make by horſes, munitions or arms, is to be accuſed: becauſe ſuch depart in their hearts from the Lord, as in the next words. They may ſay, that they love and honour the Lord ſtill indeed, but he that knoweth the heart giveth ſentence to the contrary. And this is here added by the Prophet to the threatening before going, becauſe whatſoever judgements were denounced, they were not moved by them ſo long as they had other ſtrength to truſt unto.

Bleſſed is the man that truſteth in the Lord, and whoſe hope is the Lord. For this ſheweth who it is that truſteth in him, not every one that thinketh he doth ſo, but when triall cometh doth indeed by hope depend upon him, which is the caſe of a very few. And to deterre from truſting in man and to encourage to truſt in God, the firſt is compared to an heath, a Land of drougth and ſaltneſſe, moſt barren; but the ſecond to a tree planted by the waters, &c. Pſal. 1.

The heart is deceitfull above all things, deſperatly wicked, who can know it? Having pronounced the man accuſed that truſteth in man, &c. now becauſe he knew, that the wicked Jews would elude this by imagining, that they were not guilty of the ſinne ſo ſeverely censure, for they truſted in God and their hearts were not gone from him, as Jeremy objected, although they expected help from the Egyptians: In oppoſing this he ſaith, that mans heart is deceitfull, neither can man know it, yea it may lie hid from a mans ſelf, being alſo miſtaken in it, but God knoweth the heart and reins, and will give to every one according to his works, neither ſhall his fair ſhewes benefit him, or hide his naughty heart from Gods ſight. A thing to be thought upon by all hypocrites, to make them, if poſſible, to turn ſincere.

As the Partridge ſitteth on eggs and hatcheth them not, ſo he that gathereth riches not juſtly. It is written of the Partridge, that ſhe gathereth to her at ſitting time other Partridges eggs, which being brought forth, when they hear the voice of their own damme, and by an inſtinct of nature know it, leaving her that ſat upon them, they flee away to their own dams and leave her: ſo Ambroſ. Hieronym. Albertus, and according to this expoſition the Caldec. Paraphraſt hath it, the Partridge gathereth eggs which ſhe layed not; ſo likewiſe Hebr. Calvin excepteth againſt this, as an invention of the Rabbins, and not written of either by Ariſtotle or Pliny, but that theſe birds are ſo ſalacious both the he and ſhe, that he being impatient of her abſence during the time of ſitting upon her eggs, breaketh them whereſoever he finds them with his bill or claw, and ſhe although ſhe hides as many of them as ſhe can, yet during the time of her laying, keepes ſo little out of his company, that ſome of them come from her in his preſence, which he breaketh, and ſo never hatcheth them. But ſo much as the words in Hebrews are, ſhe gathereth eggs ſhe brought not forth, the firſt expoſition is to be preferred: neither doth the hiſtory want atteſtations, and this doth not ſo well agree, becauſe he ſaith not, the partridge ſitteth on eggs, but gathereth them, which moſt aply agreeth to that for which this ſimilitude is brought of a man gathering riches by unjuſt means, that they leave him: whereas if it be taken the other way for ſitting and not hatching, it neither agreeth to the Hiſtory brought from Ariſtotle, ſeeing ſhe ſitteth not upon the eggs that are broken by the he, nor to the preſent caſe of one unjuſtly gathering riches that depart from him in the miſt of his dayes, theſe eggs are preſently broken and come to nothing. Some others make another relation, that the Partridge ſeeing the Fowler nigh her neſt, cometh neer unto him, and goeth upon the ground and ſeeth not, feigning her ſelf unable, whereby ſhe provokes him to follow her, but having drawn him far off from her neſt, ſhe fleeth away and ſo he is deceived. But this agreeth nothing to the preſent purpoſe. Theodoret, and Iſidor upon another property of a Partridge, which one bringeth up tame, that by the cry thereof other Partridges may be called together, and then he takes them in his net, understand Nebuchadnezzar to be hereby set forth, who gat abundance of goods unjustly, and then lost all again, being driven from amongst men, and becoming foolish as a brut beast. But this agreeth worst of all, because not the calling together of other Partridges, but gathering egges is here spoken of. I rest therefore in the first, it is a description of the case of the rich Jews, who in their fruitfull Land gathered abundance of wealth by hook and crook, and herein thought themselves happy and surely seated in their own habitation against all enemies, but the event proved contrary, in the midst of their dayes, whilst they were thus secure and blessing themselves, the Caldees came and all their riches went away and they perished like a foolish people. And it may particularly be understood of King Jechoniah who then reigned, as may further appear Chap. 22. where his Father is said to have executed justice and prospered, but he contrariwise being intent to gather riches, is threatned that he should die like an asse. And it is a judgement generally to be feared by all, that gather riches unjustly, for they have wings, wherewith to flee away; and such a rich man is as he, Luke 12. that when he was delighting himself in his abundant fruits, heard a voice saying, Thou fool this night will they fetch away thy Soul from thee, &c.

As if he had said, God hath a glorious Throne in heaven, whereupon he sitteth and ruleth over all things, a representation whereof is our sanctuary, before which we worship, therefore let us put our whole trust in him. All that do not, but forsake him, shall be ashamed, vers. 12. but let us, as they that trust in him alone, pray, Heal me (O Lord) and I shall be healed, &c. vers. 13. Thus also Jerom, Theodor. Raban. Isidor. Others refer it to the words immediately going before, as spoken to terrifie such as gather riches by injustice and wrong, as Vatabl. Cald. Some expound it as a sentence by it self comforting the faithfull by propounding unto them the heavenly glory to come figured out by the Sanctuary, as Lyra, Th. Aqu. Dionys. Some lastly take these words, as spoken to shew how worthily the Jews should be destroyed, because that having so glorious a God dwelling amongst them, they so basely forsook him to serve idols, as Calvin: and to this I subscribe, as best agreeing both to the words before going and following: to the words before, there is and alwayes hath been a just Judge, by whose just doom it must needs be, that unjust gatherers of riches shal lose them again and perish: to the words following, this Throne being represented in Judea, and so gracing it above other Lands, giving therefore occasion to Israel of confidence in him that sitteth thereupon, will therefore be revenged upon the Jews because that bearing themselves upon this priviledge they are secure in their sinning so fowly against God by forsaking him, the Fountain of living water, as was also complained before, Chap. 2. 13. The Rabbins, as Calvin further noteth, because it is said, a Throne from the beginning and our Sanctuary, say that Heaven, where Gods Throne is, was before the Creation, and the Sanctuary likewise: but it is not said before the beginning, but the place of our Sanctuary is the Throne of glory on High from the beginning, that is, from the beginning in Gods eternall Counsell determined to be a most glorious and High Throne, although set up in time.

Vers 16.

Calvin.

I have not hastened from being a Pastor after thee, vers. 15. having shewed how scornfully the Jews said to all his threatnings in the name of the Lord, Where is his word? Let it come, as if Jeremy had spoken so of his own head, and therefore they feared not what he said, now he appealeth against this to God, saying, I have not hastened, the word אין here used, as Calvin noteth, signifieth either to hasten, or to delay, or to abominate, and therefore is by expositours taken diversly, but he preferreth hastening, as if it were meant, that he did not rashly rashly take upon him the Pastoral office, wherein he was set, for which exposition also the next word, (nor desired) maketh. But because it is not said, to, but, from a Pastour, the last exposition seemeth ~~to~~ be best, I abhor not from it, although I foresaw many sufferings to come, when I should be a Pastor or Prophet to go with all thy words unto them; thus also Jerom, Rabanus, Lyra, Tho. Aquin. And being thus taken the next words may well agree, neither have I desired the wofull day, that is, as I abhorred not, nor shrunk from this office being called out after thee, so I took no pleasure to foretell of the miserable time to come, for which I am so much spited: wherefore he prayeth that the Lord would not be a terrour to him in letting him perish by his enemies hands, but that he would be a terrour to them and reward them double, of which phrase before, also of his praying for revenge.

Here, and beginning vers. 20. is another prophetic against the Jews for breaking the Sabbath day by carrying burthens and working. About which if it be demanded, why the Lord should be so strict about this, being but an externall ceremony, and sometime slighted by him, as Isa. 1. 13. and since under the Gospel condemned Gal. 4. 10. Col. 2. 16? It is answered by Calvin, first, because it was an easie precept to cease from labour one day in seven, and therefore they that would not herein obey were worthy of all severity, as Adam for eating the forbidden fruit, Secondly, Because the Sabbath was a sign of Gods people by him peculiarly chosen, and therefore not to rest now was a grosse neglect of upholding the memoriall of the greatest priviledge that ever was bestowed upon mortall men. 3. Because the Lord would by their keeping of a rest now from servile works, draw them to a rest from the servile works of sin, as he rested from the works of Creation; unto which a fourth may be added, that it might alwayes be remembred, that the whole World was created by God, That we might acknowledge his infinite Power and Wisdom herein appearing, till a greater work wrought by the Son of God, that is, the work of our Redemption, betwixt whose resting from which, and the Fathers from Creating, some comparision is made, Heb. 4. 9. 10. Lastly by keeping the Sabbath, as wherein all Religious duties were done, all the exercise of Religion is meant, which if it had been purely upheld, both Princes, Nobles, Priests and Commons should have flourished for ever, as verse 2.

CHAP. XVIII.

Here the Lord directeth Jeremiah again to teach by an outward and familiar sign, he must go to a potters house, and there when he had seen how he made a vessell of clay, that pleased him nor, which he therefore brake and made another of the same matter as he thought good, the Lord bad him say to the house of Israel, that he had the like power over them, to make them, and to break them, by an Argument a minore ad majus, because the potter is not so absolutely over his pots and clay, as the Lord is over men; both in this regard that the clay is none of his creature, neither hath he absolute Power without God giving him strength to break and make, but God hath. And therefore whensoever he threatens a Nation to pluck it up, or destroy it, if it repenteth, he will not do it, and when he promiseth to plant and build any, if that Nation doth evil he will repent him, that is, turn from doing what he promised, leaving such a Nation to destruction. And the Lord would have Jeremiah thus to teach the Jews, because they were so stupid, that verball teaching without signs would not work upon them, and when being both wayes taught they would not be moved to repentance, he might bring his judgements before threatned the more justly upon them. For by this teaching he sheweth first that the Israelites came not to be so glorious and flourishing a Nation, but of Gods meer good will and pleasure, and the same is true touching any other Nation in the World. 2. That they were not so settledly built, but that by their sins they should be pulled down again, the Covenant and promise made to Abraham and his seed notwithstanding, because in Covenants betwixt God and man, conditions are alwayes set, to which man must stand for his part, or else the Covenant is broken, to shew which God said to Abraham, Gen. 17. 1. I am God al sufficient, walk before me, and be upright, whereby both he, and his posterity stood bound throughout all generations, and if it were so with the Israelitish Nation, much more with any other. 3. That the welfare or destruction of a Nation comes according to their repenting or evil doing, as Nineveh repenting, although threatned with destruction, was spared, but Jerusalem doing evil, although built by gracious promises, was destroyed. 4. That destruction or deliverance to a Nation, when God willethe either upon their evil doings, or repentance, cometh suddenly, as upon Sodom, and the old World, Jericho, and the other Canaanites, destruction; and to the Hebrews in Egypt, to Samaria, and to Hezekiah and Jerusalem, deliverance. The similitude taken from the potter is used before Esa. 45. 9. and after Rom. 9. but there in respect of election and reprobation, here of temporall deliverance or destruction, yet as in this, so in that it is to be held, that however God hath absolute Power, yet he electeth none, but such as persef constantly in well doing; neither condemneth any, but the impenitent only, although his decree of election and reprobation precedeth Jacobs and Esaus doing good or evill actually.

Vers. 14.

Will a man leave the snow of Lebanon, that comes from the rock of the field? Vulgar, will the snow of Lebanon leave, or fall from the rock of the field, thus also the Hebrews, that is, Doth the snow of Lebanon cease to be at any time upon the top of the rocks? certainly it doth not, for the nature of the rocks there is to hold snow both Summer and Winter, from whence that place had the name Lebanon from whitenesse, as Laban signifieth, no heat of the Sun being able to melt it. Now the Lord was to the Jews, as the snow of Lebanon, a cooling and refreshing to them, what hot persecution soever was raised up against them, but by their sins they now made him to leave them, so that the snow of Lebanon contrary to the accustomed manner was now gone. This sense is followed by Jerom, Raban and others, but somewhat diversly, the snow faileth not by melting all off the rocks of Lebanon, yet Israel is fallen away from the Lord to go after Baal, which I confesse, is also more agreeable to vers. 15. but then Israel must be the cool snow, wherein refreshing against extream heat lyeth, whereas God was this comfort to them, not they to him, yet they departing from him to false Gods, he would hereby shew, that he would forsake them. Isidor, Lyra, Vatabl. following the first reading, give this for the sense, Will any man be so mad in a hot time, to leave the snow of Lebanon commonly covered by all men to be drunk for cooling, and go to other places to seek waters, that be corrupt and without this refrigerating vertue? and this either may well stand. For the next words, Shall the cold flowing waters that come from another place be forsaken? Vulgar, or can cool waters coming from any other place be pluckt out, that they should not flow? Hebr. shall cold flowing strange waters be pluckt away, by strange waters others being meant besides those of Lebanon before spoken of, about which there is the same difference amongst expositours that was about the snow of Lebanon, some taking it, as if it had been said, Shall any thing hinder the course of flowing waters that they should be put from it, from what place soever they come; and some as if it had been said, Will any man leaving cold waters in time of heat flowing into the City by pipes from any place, seek out for others uncertain or worse? and to this effect also Calvin, saying, that they are charged here with the same foul fault that they were charged with Chap. 2 13. viz. Forsaking the Fountain of living waters; which was God, here likened to the snow of Lebanon and cold waters flowing in unto them for their refreshing from other places; and this they did, when they left the pure worship of God to serve Baal.

paths, a way not cast up. Hebr. in their wayes, the ancient wayes, or wayes of Eternity. Vulgar, the wayes of the World, a long time gone in: and according to this the sense is thus given by Jeram, their false Prophets made them fall in their evil wayes, which were wayes of Idolatry that the Nations of the world had long walked in, and so they went in wayes not beaten by their godly forefathers, or not cast up or made by God for them to go in, and therefore were a way tending to destruction. So likewise Lyra, Tho. Aquin. Hugo, calling these evil wayes of wicked men, such as are spoken of Job 22. That say to God, depart from us, we care not for the knowledge of thy wayes. But Calvin, Varabl. and Cald. following the first reading, they make one another to fall in the wayes by God appointed them to walk in, which are wayes so long ago gone in, that it is a wonder, that they should now stumble and fall in them by taking a distast at them, and preferring the abominable wayes of Idolatry which are so dangerous, as being like unto wayes that were never made, as common wayes are by causing and evening them, that men may go safely upon them without stumbling or falling. And this is the case of all the wicked, they take no liking to the good way wherein is safety, but turn into wayes most dangerous for pits and quagmires, into which they sink, and can get out no more till they perish everlastingly. Wherefore John Baptist is said to have prepared the way of the Lord by filling valleys, &c. when he brought them by repentance unto Christ, for then they went in a plain way, but before in wayes wherein they might fall so, as never to rise up again, even the valley and shadow of death, such as all sinfull wayes are.

For the Law shall not perish from the Priest, nor Counsell from the wise, nor the Word from the Prophet. Say what Jeremiah could in exhorting or threatening them, they were so far from being reformed thereby, that they were the more stirred up against him, sometime to kill, and sometime to vex him with scoffs and mocks, as here, where they stirre up one another, to smite him with the tongue: In saying the law shall not perish from the Priest, &c. they meant, that they had priests and Elders, and Prophets among them, that were sufficient to direct them, for the Priests lips shall preserve knowledge, &c. Mal. 2. 7. see also, Dent. 17. and therefore they might safely contemn whatsoever Jeremiah said, therefore come and let us threaten him, as he threatens us, and devise to say something to him, so that he may be ashamed and have little heart to go on in prophesying against us any more, as, That he is a fool or a mad man, a Priest that affecteth singularity, and to bear rule over all others, and a common enemy to all. And by such a common Argument Calvin noteth that the Papists elude whatsoever is brought against their abominations in divine worship. Do ye tell us of error and superstition, we have an holy High Priest, the Pope, that cannot erre, and a representative Church of Cardinals, Bishops and learned Priests that cannot erre, for the Spirit is promised to the Apostles, and them their successors, to lead them into all truth: ye are therefore but giddy-headed and phantical hereticks and novellists, that reprove and speak against our doings, and if we can devise any means to be revenged upon you for so doing, certainly we will by opprobrious speakings, curfings, killing up and massacring, or plotting against you some terrible blow, which shall one day be your ruine. But as the Jews, so they do but herein fight against God and his truth, for which they indeed are accursed as in the words following, vers. 19. 20. and 21, 22, 23. where his praying against them is in way of prophesying, as being such as the Lord would not forgive, but do according to all that is here threatened, because that in combining against Jeremiah they plainly impugned God, in whose name and words only he spake unto them from the beginning.

CHAP. XIX.

After teaching by one sign of a potter making and breaking his pots at his pleasure, Chap. 18. now the Lord diverteth Jeremiah to teach by another of a pot taken to the valley of the son of Hinnom, and by him broken there in the sight of some Priests and Elders called thither by him. By the former having shewed, that they were in his hands, as the pots in the hands of the potter, so that he could whensoever he disliked, break them by his Judgements, and being broken, when he was reconciled by their repentance make them again a more prosperous and flourishing Nation then they were before: now he sheweth by this, that he could not only break them so, as that they should not be repaired again, but that he would certainly do it for their obstinate going on in their sins, that is, the wicked Jews then living, the remnant alwayes excepted, whom he promised to replant and build again. And this other sign, as Calvin conjectureth, is added, least any should think, that although the Lord could do by them as the potter by his pots being new made, yet he could not do so by them, that had been so long formed into a glorious state, so that they were safe enough and needed not to fear his Judgements to come to their utter ruining as Jeremiah threatned. But by this resemblance he made the contrary most plain, that they should not only be broken in pieces, but also broken so as never to be made again into so excellent a body, as they had formerly been, as indeed they were not, no not after their return from Babylon, because they were under other Kings, the Persian, the Grecian, &c. and had never more any such Kingdom again as in Dauids and Solomons time. And the Prophet is bidden to shew this in the valley of the son of Hinnom, otherwise called Tophet, of which see before, Chap. 7. 32. where the same threatning with this is made, that where such abominable sinnes were committed such dreadfull judgements should be executed, as they had sinned therein unnaturally burning their sons and daughters in sacrificing to Molock; so in Jerusalem which was neer unto it they should eat the flesh of their sons and daughtres for extreame hunger in the time of their siege, wherewith their enemies should besiege them: of which see, 2 King. 25. Levit. 26. 29. And he is bidden to take of the Priests and Elders with him to this place: vulgar Latin, take an earthen vessell of the potter from the Elders: but Hebr. it is, get or buy an earthen pot, of the potter, and from the Elders, that is, some chosen from amongst them both of the people and Priests, to hear and see what thou dost, but none of the common sort, because they were lead and guided by the Elders, and they had not so much understanding. The Elders of the Priests were the chief and most ancient of their severall families, as they are spoken of, Chron. 24. the Elders of the people governours amongst those of other tribes: and go to the valley of the son of Hinnom, which is at the entrance of the East gate, Vulg. of the potters gate, but the word signifyeth the Suns gate, which was eastward where the sun arose. But because the word שֶׁרָר signifying a potters vessell, and הָרָר the Sun, which is here used, are so neer the one to the other, yea the same in pronunciation, because שֶׁ hath the point in the left horn, the Vulgar Latine hath it, the potters gate, and to justifie that reading it is ailedged that the gate next to the valley of the son of Hinnom stood not East, but Southward, as may be seen, Josh. 15. 8. 18. 16. and the same was also called the dung gate, affirmed also by Brocardus to stand Southward. Against this nothing makes, but the word הָרָר here used and not שֶׁרָר; of which because so good a reason hath been rendred before, I cannot for my part, but be satisfied in it, and therefore determine with the vulgar Latin that the best reading is the potters gate, so called for the potters dwelling neer unto it and thereby carrying forth their pot-sheards, for which being as dung, R. Solomon saith it was called the dung-gate, Cald. Par. for the dung carried out by it. And in bidding him go by the potters gate, there is an allusion to the pot, which he was bidden to carry that way.

Vers. 1, 2.

And have burnt incense to strange gods, which neither their fathers nor they have known, that is, saith Jeram, their fathers, that were godly, for they that lived not long before since Idolatry took place amongst them, are not here looked at, as unworthy to be counted fathers, but only the most ancient, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, Moses, Sammel and David, whose knowing and acknowledging was regulated by the Law of God. And therefore the like may be objected against the Papists now, Ye offer and pray to Saints departed and images, which neither your fathers, nor ye have known, that is, Peter, and Paul, and other Apostles, and first Preachers of the Gospel, nor ye from their example, and whereas ye pretend, that our forefathers did so, it is true, that they did indeed, but not any except those of later & more corrupt times, who are not therefore worthy of his name, for they worshipped, as Christ to the Samaritane Woman, they knew not what, because they knew them not to be such as should be worshipped by the rule of Gods Holy Word, and without this to know, as Calvin well noteth, is not to know. Some yet by these words, which neither your fathers, nor ye have known, understand, to have any power to save, or help you in the time of danger, which neither is to be disliked.

Pashur the Priest, who was also the Governour of the house of the Lord, Ch. 19. 14. Jeremias is said to come from Tophet, and to have stood in the Court of the Lords house, and to have prophesied destruction to the Jews there in the hearing of all the people. This Pashur no sooner heard, but he smote him, &c. Some think that he was high Priest: But others deny him to be the high Priest, because 1 Chron. 6. 12. Helchias was high Priest in the time of Josiah, and after him Azurias his son, 2 Kings 22. 8. and then his son Seraius, who in the eleventh year of Ezekiah, Jerusalem being taken was slain at the command of Nebuchadnezzar, Ier. 52. 27. Some therefore take him to have been chief under the high-Priest to rule in the house of the Lord, and finding Jeremias, whom he took to be a man that of his own head took upon him to prophesie against the state, as sometime some arpepitious Prophets did, he used him so harshly as is said v. 2. For the high Priest had some under him, whom he made Officers to rule in the Temple, as it is said of Jehozadab, 2 Chron. 23. 18. see also 2 Kings 23. 5. 2 Chron. 26. 24. 2 Mach. 3. 4. There was a Ruler that contended with Onias the high-Priest, others over the treasure, and others over those that stood to praise God.

He smote Jeremias, and put him in the stocks, Vulg. misi eum in carcerem, Calvin in Cyppum, aut carcerem, the prison. But Josephus, and Kimbi say, it was an instrument made of two pieces of wood, which met together, and had in them three holes, into one of which the head was put, into the other two the two armes. And that a prison is not meant, appeareth, because that afterwards when he was put in prison, c. 29. 26. it is called בית, but this בית in the upper gate of Benjamin in the house of the Lord, N. Tr. In the high gate of Benjamin which was by the house of the Lord, Heb. in the house of the Lord, that is, within the bounds of the Temple, as Lyra and Variable note. For the gates of Benjamin, Ierem. saith, that there were two so called, standing towards Benjamin, which possesse the North part of the Temple, as Judah the South: one more to the East called the high gate, and the other towards the West, and in the high gate were they judged that came under the censure of the high Priest most properly as Prophets, and such as lived about the Temple, according to that Ierem. 29. 26. Zephaniah is said to be made high-Priest, that he might put in prison and in the stocks, every one that is mad and feigneth himselfe a Prophet, by Semaiah. Some there are that agree not to this touching the gate here spoken of, but I will spend no more time about circumstances, but come to the matter. The madnets of some in authority even in the Church is such, that they are enraged against the true servants of God reproving sin, and going according to the Word of God in all things, so as that in taking revenge upon them, they passe the bounds of moderation that should be in Judges: as Pashur, who first smote Jeremias, and then committed him to be brought forth the next day to be judged; whereas it is the duty of those that be in Authority, first to apprehend Offenders, and then to bring them to a trial; and after Sentence given to punish, and not before. Therefore we may see, that all things were now out of order in Jerusalem to the provoking of God, the more to hasten his judgements.

The Lord hath not called thy name Pashur, but Magor-Missabib. Of the last word a reason is rendred, v. 4. fear round about; for he saith, I will make thee a terror to thy self, and to all thy friends, that is, which are about thee, and have been deceived, by thy false prophesying, as is intimated, v. 6. But for the word Pashur, Pasbur, it is not agreed amongst Expositors, some say, it comes of Pa, signifying a mouth, and Shear black, some of Pashab to encrease, and Sar, a Prince, as Calvin saith; but he enforceth another denomination of his own, from Shap-pah, to cut, or to open, one opening the light. That of Pagninus seemeth to me to be so right, that all others are nothing to it, he derives it from פוש Push growing, and לבן, whiteness, a name setting forth one in eminent place, and shining in glory, as the bright light; for such was he in his ruling Office: but he saith, that he should be brought down to misery, when looking round about him, he should see nothing but matter of terrour and fear, when he should fall into his enemies hands, together with his friends in Jerusalem, and be carryed captive to Babylon, and dye there. And in telling Pasbur thus after his smiting and putting him in the stocks, Jeremy shewed the magnanimity of a Prophetical spirit, which abates not by suffering disgrace and pain, but rather encreaseth, and spareth not to speak to men of power any more than to such as be of the common sort.

Thou shalt be carryed to Babylon and dye, and be buried there. Here first is Babylon plainly mentioned, as the place from whence judgment was threatned, in saying that it should come out of the North; and not only Pasbur is threatned thus, but all his house, and friends to whom he had prophesied lies, that is, made faire promises of peace, as from the Lord, whose priest he was, to make them slight Jeremiah his threatnings: whereby we may see what it is to have such a Priest as to procure the friendship of men will daub with untempered Morter, and speak peace to them, to whom there is no peace, he shall bring both himself and them to ruine, whereas his dying, and being buried in Babylon, is spoken of as a judgement, because it was out of the holy Land, and before being suffered to lye unburied, it is to be understood, that it is so to the wicked, but not to the righteous, who are blessed and happy wherefoever they die, or howsoever they be used after death, whether buried or unburied.

O Lord! I was deceived, and thou hast deceived me. This is not saith Calvin spoken seriously, but ironically, as if he had said, O yee Priests, that are so mad against me for speaking as I have done; it is true indeed, I have abused you by speaking so bitterly against my own Nation in the name of the Lord; and the Lord that set me a work is deceitfull, if I should herein yield unto you to say thus, would yee not be ashamed? but yee do in effect say so, when yee say that I am a false Prophet, and come with feigned messages from the Lord unto you. Thus also Lyra and Isidore: But Hierom, Raban, &c. Thou hast deceived me, in telling me that I should prophesie unto Kingdoms and Nations, whereby I thought that heathen Nations only had been meant, and not Judah. And some, Thou hast deceived me; because thou didst promise, that I should be a brazon wall, Chap. 1. 18. Chap. 15. 20, 21. against which none shall prevail; but now I finde it otherwise, for Pasbur hath violently smitten me, and disgraced me, as is aforesaid; and to this doe I subscribe, because it is not probable, that Jeremiah being so vexed, as he had been, would now utter any thing ironically, but out of grief speak all things seriously; and the goodness of his conscience might make him thus bold to challenge the Lord, as he had done in part before, Chap. 15. 18. seeing he was so unwillingly, and upon so great promises drawn to this prophesying: and he spake thus also to move the Lord the more to stand for him, and confirm him against the assaults of his enemies, and not to suffer him to be put down by the wicked in his just cause, such that to stand to him, and to hasten to take the power to hurt him out of their hands, would make so much for the glory of his truth and power, in approving him to be his faithfull servant, which together with his credit now lay at the stake, and being inseparable the one from the other, for so much as his cause was Gods, and Gods cause his.

Since I spake unto them, I cryed out Violence and Spoile. That is, I reaped none other fruit of my labours, but harsh and violent usage and derision at their hands, to whom I spake: so also Jerom, Raban, Tho. Aquin. But since I cryed out against them of destruction and spoile to come for their sins, but to none other effect, but to make my self a scorn and derision, through Gods delaying to bring the judgements threatned, for that was the thing troubled Jeremiah, as we may see by his often calling to the Lord, to take revenge upon them: as Jonah was provoked to impatience by his sparing Nineveh, when he had set him to threaten it. Calvin, I cryed out against their gross sins, whereupon I saw them to be so set, that milde speaking to turn them therefrom would do no good. Any of these waies the sense will be good; but I prefer the second, because the Prophet met not with violence so long agoe, but more lately; neither were their oppressions the sins, against which he cryed out so much, as their Idolatries and gross Superstition.

The Prophet seeing their contempt after so long and much labour, through the infirmity of the flesh, grew so weary, that he thought to prophecie unto them no more: but the spirit, as a fire in him, would not suffer him to sit still. This sheweth the strife between the flesh and the spirit that is in Gods servants, but in time the Spirit prevaleth in all such.

Note.

Vers. 10.

For I heard the reproaches of many, and terror round about: Magor-Missabib. The same words there were used before in threatning Pashur verse 3. whereunto he alludeth the reproaches and blasphemies increasing upon his silence, being a terror to him to hear, coming from the wicked Jews; which his zeal not suffering him to bear, he brake out from his silence resolved upon, and went on in prophecying against them. Whereupon Gregory: The same force that moved him for zeal to the glory of God to hold his peace, left by the encrease of reproach, caused through his speaking, it should suffer more; now caused him contrariwise to speake again, when he saw that by holding his peace, reproaches were more encreased. It oftentimes happeneth, that wise men seeing that they are not heard, silence themselves: but then perceiving through their silence sins to encrease more, they are by a kinde of fear of the Spirit, compelled again to break out into open reproof. So Jeremiah, when he outwardly held his peace, through the tediousness of speaking, he suffered a fire within, out of the zeal of Charity. Thus also Jerom, but Theod. Lyra, and Tho. Aquinas take not these words for a reason of his breaking out again into speaking; but as having reference to verse 8. and as a proceeding further to declare his sufferings, as if he had said; I cry out of violence, and see that none other effect comes of it, than the turning the Word of God into derision; so that I was for a time in suspense whether it were not best to forbear speaking any more: but when I thought thus, the Spirit within me would not suffer it, the reproach was so great, and so many combined herein together; whereat I was terrified which way soever I looked; because it is a trouble to a godly heart to hear blasphemies against God, and the more, the greater; this agreeth so well, that we may rest in it: See the like of the fire burning within David, Psalme 39. 3. Report, and we will report it: That is, my enemies said thus one to another, Tell the King and his Councell what he saith against the State, and we will joyn with you in accusing him: All my familiars watched for my halting; peradventure he will be enticed: That is, they with whom I lived in peace, as the words signifie, in former times, now give themselves to intrap me in my speeches; and for this end come about me, and provoke me to speak, that they may have some advantage against me to accuse me to the higher powers, and so be revenged of me: The like complaint was made by the Prophet David in the Psalmes, and afterwards the like is said of Christ, Matth. 22. 15.

Vers. 13.

Sing unto the Lord, praise him, for he hath delivered the soule of the poor, &c. The Prophet in the midst of his sufferings and dangers having looked up to God by the eye of faith, as being on his side to save him, and to bring his wicked enemies to confusion, verse 11, 12. Now being fully perswaded of his help at hand, and that his prayer was heard for revenge to be taken upon them, he breaketh out into singing and praising of God, as if it had been already, as David also oftentimes did in the Psalmes.

Cursed

Curſed be the day wherein I was born. It is ſtrange, that Jeremiah having praiſed God, verſe 13. out of the confidence that he had in his help, ſhould now ſo ſuddenly break out into theſe ſpeeches of impatience: Therefore Calvin underſtands them not as belonging to this place, but to verſe 8, 9, 10. they being only ſet down here by way of commemoration of what he had ſaid in the bitterness of his ſoul, before the comfort expreſſed upon his prayer, verſe 12, 13. But I ſee no cauſe thus to determine; for the like may be ſeen before, Chap. 15. verſe 18. after joy expreſſed in the Word, verſe 16. he cryeth out, as ſmitten with a diſeaſe incurable, and expoſtulates with the Lord for lying unto him, as in this Chap. 9. 8. for deceiving him. It is therefore rather to be conceived, that Jeremiah was ſo troubled by the hard meaſure which he met withall, ſpeaking nothing but the words of the Lord: hearing therefore, and ſuffering ſuch intolerable reproach, that in zeal for God he counted himſelf a moſt unhappy man; for that diſcharging his Office ſo faithfully, he could move none to repentance, but by his prophecy was a means to aggravate their ſins to Gods greater diſhonour, and their own utter overthrow: He was, I ſay, ſo troubled at this, that he thus cryeth out, wiſhing, that he had rather never been born, than to live to encreaſe the ſins of his people, that it ſhould go worſe with them by his means, and conſequently to be a cauſe of Gods greater diſhonour, Iob 3. 5. The like is ſaid by that holy man for his bodily ſufferings, and yet he is juſtified in his ſayings, Chap. 42. 7. Therefore Jeremiah much more, who had greater cauſe thus to utter himſelf, viz. a cauſe joyned with Gods cauſe, whereby he was brought into theſe troubles; ſo that whatſoever he ſaid came not ſo much out of any impatience, but zeal, which is ſo highly accepted of before God, and makes a man in ſuch caſes ſometimes to complain, ſometimes to rejoyce, and ſuddenly again to cry out as the moſt miſerable of all other men, as David did, and Paul, Rom. 7. 22. Whereas this curſing the day of his birth, and the man that brought tidings of it is aggravated againſt him by ſome, as being no leſſe than blaſphemy: It is better noted by others, that he uttered not a word againſt God, by whoſe Providence he knew that he ſuffered thus, and what he uttered is not to be looked at as the words ſound, but according to the meaning, which was only, that there had never been any ſuch day, a meſſenger, and therefore that he had never been born, rather than to live to heare, and ſee, and know the horrible things before ſpoken of. And he ſpoke ſo, the rather to move the Jews, if they had any moving in them, to deſiſt from this their malice and cauſeleſs hatred againſt him, ſeeing this office of prophelying things ſo unpleaſing, was not a thing by him affected, but neceſſarily impoſed upon him, as Chap. 1. 17. and it was ſo grievous unto him, that he was even weary of his life, through Gods preſſing him on to it on the one ſide, and their maligning of him therefore on the other. Other Expoſitors ſeek to excuſe him otherwiſe, as Origen, ſaying that the day of his birth was paſt, and therefore nothing now; ſo that curſing it, he curſed nothing. Theod. as Jerom, that it is not credible that Jeremiah ſinned herein, who was ſanctified from the womb. Iſidor. That this curſing is but conditionall; if any, let that day be curſed. Chryſ. He curſed not any day made by God, as it was his day, but as his owne; the day of the birth of one ſinfull and miſerable, or he was as a man cut by a Chirurgion extremely pained, and hereby moved to ſtrike at and to bite thoſe about him that hold him. Gregory, Let the day of mutibility periſh, that the light of eternity may break forth. But Cajetan is for the firſt, that it is only to be taken, as if he had wiſhed, that he had never been born; not that ſuch a day had not been, nor ſuch a man, but that he had had no cauſe by his birth to bring ſuch tidings. And all this is ſpoken alſo out of ſome anger againſt God, as his friend, that he ſuffered it to be thus; as one friend may ſpeak to another, to provoke him the more to ſtand for him, whom he ſeemed too much to neglect, upon ſuch quarrels amongſt men that are friends, it being common to renew their mutuall love.

Verf. 1.

Jeremiah having upon his hard usage by Pashur Chap. 20. made his complaint to God, and by all means sought to stir him up with speed to be revenged upon such a generation of mock-Gods, and fighters against him; now seeth the judgement beginning by Nebuchadnezzar, which he had so long threatned, in the ninth year of Zedekiah his reign, as we may see 2 Kings 25. 1, 2. For it is not to be doubted, but that was the time of Zedekiah his sending to Jeremiah here spoken of: and therefore this comes in by hysteron-proteron in this place; for Ierusalem was not besieged till Chap. 32. and Iehojachim reigned, Chap. 25. who was before Zedekiah, and after him Iehojachim. Pashur said here to be sent, was not the same Priest before spoken of, but another of that name, whom the King thought to be more gracious with the Prophet, and so the more likely to obtain some comfortable answer from him. But Jeremiah nothing moved by this honour done by him, by the King himself, in sending Embassadors thus, as it were, unto him, returns a terrible answer, even what the Lord said unto him; as it becometh every faithfull Minister of God to do, without respect of persons, declaring his Word truly and fully, without detracting or altering it in any thing: This Pashur yet seeing Jeremiah his inflexibility, counsels the King to put him to death, Ier. 38.

Execute judgement in the morning. Here the Prophet is sent to the Court, after that the King had sent to him, and he is bidden to say, Hear the Word of the Lord (O house of David;) not to honour the King the more, by mentioning so worthy a King as David, from whom he was descended; but meet with him in his vain confidence, because he was of his line, that he should continue in his Royall Dignity, by vertue of the promise made to David, and to his seed, 2 Sam. 7. For if he executed judgement, he sheweth that he should better provide for the establishment of his Throne, from which he should otherwise be suddenly removed. And he saith, Execute judgement in the morning. That is, diligently, without any further delay, doing justice to every one that was oppressed; not deferring to hear the cause of the widow and fatherless, because they were poor and could not bribe him, as the rich could; a great sin taxed Esa. 1. 23, 24. Vatablus, In the morning, before that by drinking and excess he had made himself unfit to judge aright. Note hence, that no privilege of alliance to the most excellent, nor humbling a mans self outwardly before God and his Servants, will prevail for mercy in time of danger, so much as breaking off from sin; and especially the sin of a mans Calling, as oppression and injustice in Judges. For Zedekiah was of *David*s line, and being in danger, humbled himself to send to Jeremiah; yet he was not for this accepted of, no more than Abah; but turning from sin makes acceptable, Isa. 1. 16, 17, 18.

I am against thee, O inhabitant of the valley, and rock of the plain. That is, O Ierusalem, called also a valley, Isa. 22. 1. because compassed about with Mountains, although it stood high, and it was firm as a Rock, and a strong defence to the fielding round about. And for the strength of the place they were confident against all enemies: but the Lord threatneth to come against them, and then what are the strongest holds to defend men? Mytically it is called valley, because base and brought low by sin, having nothing now eminent or excellent in it.

Verf. 14.

And I will kindle a fire in the Forrest thereof. He continueth to threaten Ierusalem, calling the streets of houses, that stood so thick as trees in the Forrest of Lebanon, a Forrest: the fire which he threatens to kindle therein, being the fire wherewith the Caldees should burn them all down: and to a Forrest, they are likened, because without any good fruit; according to which he saith, that he would recompense them, in the former part of the verse. For what are trees good for that bear no good fruit, but to be hewen down, and cast into the fire? And this is opposed to that which they had said before, verse 13. Who shall come to our houses? of the house of the King, as the head of the Forrest of Lebanon: See also Chap. 22. 6. Some will have Jerusalem set forth by the name of a Forrest, not so much for the houses therein, as for the Towns about; but he speaks plainly of the City it self, which might for the magnificent buildings therein of Cedars out of the Forrest of Lebanon, wherein they gloried, be called the Forrest, and set forth but as fuell for the fire, that the thing wherein they had gloried, might be turned into matter of misery and afrightment, when they should see it all of a light fire.

CHAP. XXII.

GO down to the house of the King of Judah. By this King Ierom understands Zedekiah, of whom Chap. 21. 1. and 12. 13. where he was before bidden to speak to him; and he will have the same to be Shallum, spoken of verse 11. But I have shewed before, that Chap. 21. is misplaced; and by that which followeth in this Chapter, and Chap. 25, &c. to 32. the things said in other Kings reigns are spoken of, and not in the reign of Zedekiah; although Ierom brings a reason from the signification of the word Shalum, Consummation, to prove Zedekiah to be the King here meant, because that in him the Kingdome of Judah was consummated; for to the Hebrews at the end of a Booke use to write this word שָׁלוֹם Shalum, it is ended; and therefore for the ending of the Kingdome in him he is thus called. Some will have him to be Iehojakim, and some Iehojakin; but I have already determined this question in 2 Kings 23. 30. shewing, that Iehoabaz was otherwise set forth by this name, who was made King next after his Father Iosiah, although younger than Iehojakim: Only 1 Chron. 3. 15. seems to make against it, where Shallum is said to be the fourth son of Iosiah; Iohanan the first, Iehojakim the second, Zedekiah the third. But three of them only reigned, and Iehoabaz that reigned first was not Iohanan, for he was but 23 years old when he was made King; and he having continued but three moneths that reigned first, Iehojakin his successor is said to be 25 years old when he began; therefore he must needs be elder than Iehoabaz, and Iehoabaz the youngest, otherwise called Shallum, and Iohanan dyed young, before his Father: as for the signification of the name, for this the Hebrews called all the sons of Iosiah, that reigned, Shalum, because then began the consummation of the Kingdome when they began to reign; for they were all put down, and the Kingdome in them from the first, who was seen carried into Egypt and dyed there, who was Iehoabaz, or Shallum; then Iehojakim after him was but a tributary and no free King, and so was Zedekiah, before called Mattaniah, as Iehojakim was Eliakim.

Thou art Gilead unto me, and the head of Lebanon.—Gilead was on the other side of Jordan, in former times a fruitfull Countrey, especially of Balam, but now being in the lot of the ten Tribes, that were long agoe carried away Captive, a spectacle of desolation, as Shiloh spoken of before, that had flourished by reason of the Arke being there, when the Ark was gone, grew a desert place. So the Kings Palace, the head house of Jerusalem, called Lebanon for the frequency of houses therein, as was said before, Chap. 21. 13. shall be made desolate. And Gilead is called the head of Lebanon, because that Forrest beginneth there, and extendeth far south. And it is to be noted, that Gilead had the name first from an heap, because Jacob and Laban made a Covenant there; and for a witnes thereof made a great heap of stones, because Gilead, Hebr. signifieth an heap. It was a kind of a mountain, and therefore not unaptly spoken of, to set forth Mount Zion, where the King dwelt: and in Zion a Covenant was made with God by Sacrifice, as in Gilead betwixt Jacob and Laban; and the Covenant made here was notoriously broken, therefore it was more worthy to be made a Desert, than Gilead.

thinks to be spoken generally of the Jews that should dye in Jerusalem, and of them that should be carried away Captive into Babylon, and verse 11. applied in particular to Shallum, whom he takes to be Jehojakim, who was carryed into Babylon, and dyed there. But forso much as the Prophecie is expressly directed to the King, the meaning seemeth rather to be, Weep not for Josiah slain in battell by Pharaoh Necho, but for Jeboabaz his son, otherwise called Shallum, as was before shewed, because he was carryed into Egypt a prisoner, and after much misery suffered at the hands of his cruell enemies, dying there, and never seeing his own Countrey more, or being dead, brought thither to be buried: For this was counted more grievous than to be slain out-right, and to be buried in that Land where Abraham lay, and Jacob and Joseph desired to be brought, and to have their bones laid there. And these words, verse 11. Which reigned in stead of Josiah his Father, further confirm, that Shallum was Jeboabaz, having two names, as well as his other two brethren, Jehojakim called also Eliakim, and Zedekiah called Mattaniah; for it is said, 2 Kings 23. that the people of the Land took Jeboabaz, and made him King in stead of Josiah his Father.

2 Kings 24.

Wee to him that builds his house by unrighteousness. Having spoken against Shallum, that reigned next after Josiah, now he cometh to Jehojakim, that wicked King, that by Necho was set up next after him; he was subdued by Nebuchadnezzar, and became his servant, swearing fealty to him; but after this, he was taken again, and bound to be carryed into Babylon, but was not; but upon agreement restored again; but being false the second time, he was at length slain by the Caldees, and ignominiously cast out of Jerusalem, as an Assie, or any unclean beast, as is threatned verse 19. But an Assie is named as one of the basest. It is probable, that to gather the Tribute laid upon the Land by the King of Egypt, mentioned 2 Kings 23. he used great exactions, and being in a way of exaction he took more, being drawn by the love of gain to enrich himself also, that he might live the more royally, and flant it out in magnificent buildings; not regarding in the mean season, as the office of a King required, to execute justice and judgement, to the saving of his poor Subjects from wrong, of which it is complained, verse 13, 14, 15, 16, 17. the example of the good King Josiah his Father being propounded unto him: And for this is so base an end threatned unto him, and for his oppressions and palpable wrongs that he did, no man should lament him, as they commonly did good Kings, and specially the fore-named godly Josiah. A notable example to be lookt at by all Kings and Potentates, to make them flee Exactions, whereby the people are pillaged and polled, and embittered against them, waiting but for an opportunity of revolting from their obedience, as they did by Rehoboam: And Richard the second of England, by his Exactions to maintain a great Court and Favourites, brought his Subjects upon him to his own ruine. And what was the beginning of King Charles his miseries, but Exacting likewise Ship-moneys, Knight-moneys, Forrest-moneys and Monopolies? But God give him to see into it and to repent, that his end may yet be better to the comfort of us all.

2 Kings 24. 7.

Ascend to Lebanon and cry, utter thy voice in Bashan. Here the Prophet desires Jerusalem, not Jehojakim, as some think, of whom he spake last; for the verb is Feminine; and when the King is wicked and suffereth, the people must not think to go scotfree, but to suffer also; as they alwayes are either drawn by him to the like sins, or some of them by their evill counsell draw him. Now for the places spoken of in this ironickall passage, they were both beyond Jordan towards Egypt, and were very high, therefore in bidding them go up to these Mountains, it is as if he had said, Go cry for help to the Egyptians against the Caldees, sith that by the King of Egypt their King was set up, when as they knew, that Egypt could not help them, for Nebuchadnezzar smote the Egyptians also, and took away a great part of their Territories. Cry from the passages, Hebr. מִן הַמַּסָּעִים, from Abarim, which is the name of a Mountain in Moab, whereupon Moses dyed, Deut. 32. 49. the vulg. Lat. Cry to the Passengers; but it is most probable, that another high place Mount Abarim is meant, as two had had been before named: For all thy lowers are destroyed.] That is, all the Nations about, to whom they were wont to seek for help in distress, the Syrians especially; and sometime the Assyrians, for seeking to whom, and not relying upon the Lords help, they were often reproved. But now the Assyrian Empire was brought under by the Babylonians, and the Kingdome of Syria was long before that subdued by the Assyrian, in the time of King Ahaz.

I spake unto thee in thy prosperity, &c. This hath been thy manner from thy youth. Judah did not now only first begin to shew this treachery towards God, who was as a husband and protector unto her; but this was her manner always, when the kingdoms were first divided under Rehoboam, Abijah, Iehoram, Ioash, Ahaz, &c. In all whose times the Lord ceased not by his Prophets to speak unto them, and to warn them against this perfidiousness, even at the beginning of each ones Reigne, whilst they were in prosperity; as Rehoboam was for five years together, and Abijah, &c. Ierom and other Expositors go higher, and say that the time of their being brought out of Egypt is meant: but rather if we take it as spoken to all Israel, their prosperity under Ioshuah in Canaan must be meant chiefly.

Vers. 21.

The winde shall eat up thy Pastors. That is, thy Kings, Rulers, and Priests, and Prophets (for Pastors is a common name to them all) shall be driven away, and vanish as the dust or chaff before a strong wind: Or because wind sometime letteth forth the frustration of mens counsells, and bringing them to nothing; as where it is said, They conceive mischief, and bring forth the wind: The perishing of their Princes and Counsellors, (whom they thought to be wise) by their own evil counsells against the Lord is meant. And specially their being fed with vain hopes of help out of Egypt, is called their being eaten up of the wind, as is most commonly held: Then thou shalt be ashamed of all thy wickedness. That is, of this thy treachery against the Lord, being turned to thy confusion, and of all other thy sins, in which thou wentest on, contemning and mocking at all admonitions to the contrary.

Vers. 22.

O Inhabitant of Lebanon, that makest thy nest in the Cedars. As he began ironically, verse 20 in shewing the vain confidence of the Jew in other help whereto they trusted, bidding them, Go up to Lebanon, and cry; so he concludeth in the like allusion, meaning, that their high and magnificent buildings with Cedars out of Lebanon, wherein they dwelt, nestling themselves as it were therein, should avail them nothing in the day of their calamity by the enemy, nor be any grace or glory to them, as now they thought them; but as groaning Chambers to women in travell in Child-birth; this being all that they should be able to do to help themselves; therefore in saying, How gracious shalt thou be? He meaneth, How ridiculous; to Ierom, Theod. Raban, &c. But Calvin, Thou that imaginest thy self to be as safe as the birds nests, that are build upon the top of Cedars in Lebanon: but the first is most favoured by the Context before ver. 13, 14. ver. 6. & Chap. 21. 14.

Though Coniah were the Signet of my right hand, yet I would pluck him thence. Now the Prophet having done with Iehojakim, and Iehoahaz, called also Shallum, two Kings of Judah after Iosiah, he comes to speak against the third, as they were all worthy for their wickedness. His name was Iechoniah, the son of Iehojakim, or Iehojakir, as 2 Kings 24. but the syllable Ie being part of the name of Iehovah is cut off, and he is called Coniah; as when God would honour Abraham and Sarai, he added  $\pi$  a letter of his own name to his, calling him Abraham, and to hers, calling her Sarah; so contrariwise from the name of Iechoniah he takes away Ie, and speaks of him by the name Coniah, signifying Prepared; hereby intimating, that he was prepared for misery, and yet he was now but eighteen years old, 2 Kings 24. 8. a warning to them that are young, and not yet come to full age; to receive into their hearts impressions of Piety betimes, as Iosiah did at sixteen, and not to do even then what their nature, or evil breeding inclineth them unto, as thinking, that because they are young, they shall have Indulgence at the hands of our heavenly Father. sinning shall be spared no more than age; this young King smarted for his evil doing most sharply, being in three months, after his beginning to reign, de-vested from his Royall Dignity, and made a Captive and Prisoner in a strange land: For it is commanded Ecl. 12. Remember thy Creator in the dayes of thy youth: And, Go to young man, follow the lusts of thy heart, and delights of thine eyes, but know that for this thou shalt be brought to judgment. Memorable is the example of Henry 5th for this, sometime King of England, who at eighteen years of age coming to the Crown, although dissolute before, yet then upon the suddain he changed, put away all his old companions, and was most stayed and grave, as became his Royall place: And Edward 6th was also another rare example of marvailous virtue, being of more young and tender age. For the comparison of a Signes here used, it is taken from the manner of men; the husband giveth to the wife, whom he dearly loveth, a Ring, putting it upon the fourth finger of her 1. ft hand, hereby declaring his hearty love unto her. For as the Anatomists have observed, from the heart there cometh a Nerve extending, thither and there it endeth; thus Cald. and Vatabl. or because the word properly signifieth a Seal, and it is said to be on the right hand, upon a finger whereof a Ring with a Seal is put so fast, that it can hardly be plucked off, that it may at all times be ready to seal any instrument for further confirmation. Ieron., Raban., Lyra., &c. understand it of this; although he had fixed it to his right hand, as the off-spring of David, to whom he had bound himself by promise, as by Hand and Seal; yet he failing on his part of keeping this Covenant, the Lord threatens to pluck him off, and reject him. It is the prayer of the Spouse, Cant. 8. 6. Set me as a Seal upon thy heart, upon thine arme: That is, through love joyn me so firmly unto thee as never to be parted: an Isa. 49. 16. I have graven thee on my right hand, so that the sense seemeth best, which is for most affectionate and unmoveably settled love. Another use there is of a Ring for ostentation, to shew ones wealth: and sometime when in love to any person a Ring hath been worn, his picture hath been stamped upon it, according to that of Cicero, Our familiar friends have our Image, not only in Tables or Pictures drawn at large, but also in Cups and Rings. This is by Nazianzen applied to Preachers, whom God used as seals to seal up such as they convert to eternall life; yet if in their lives they be wicked, God will cast them away as most vile, as it followeth ver. 28. touching Coniah, who is called a despised broken Idoll: Vulg. an earthen Vessel broken. Symmach Nunquid quisquilia viles & projecta? but the first agreeth best with the Hebrew, as an Idoll, when the vanity thereof is seen into, is broken in pieces and cast away as an abominable thing; so he sheweth, that Coniah should be for his abominations. The word נבז rendred Idoll, signifieth sorrow; because whosoever makes him an Idoll, shall reap nothing but sorrow by it in the end; and hereby Coniah is set forth, to shew the world of sorrows that he should goe into and live many years in, as we read that he did 2 Kings 25. 27. even 37 years being kept a Prisoner in Babylon, and as it is threatned verse 26. that he should be carried away, and his mother also; so it shewed, that they were 2 Kings 24. 12. when they had yeelded themselves.

O earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the Lord, Write ye this man childless: Heb. יטל childless or solitary: It is a Prophecie of the line of Kings coming of David, failing in this man, till the coming of Christ Jesus; and therefore as Calvin noteth, to be expounded by that Ezek. 21. 26, 27. where having mentioned the Diadem and Crown, he saith, overturn, overturn, overturn it, till he cometh to whom it belongeth: That is, Christ Jesus, the branch out of the stump of Isaie, Isa. 11. 1. And here it is to be noted, that he meant not, that he should have no son; but no son a King, sitting upon the Throne of David, who was but a meier man; for he had a Son called Salathiel, 1 Chron. 3. 17 and he Zerubbabel: See also Matth. 1. 12. and how this line reached to Jesus, in whom the Kingdom of David was renewed, to continue according to promise for ever. But because none coming of Jechoniah, sat upon his Throne ruling as a worldly King after him, it is thus said, and written here for memoriall to all generations. There was after the the Captivity again a Principality in his line beginning in Zerobabel, and continuing till the Assyrians, and in them being of his line by the mother side, till Herod; but they were no absolute Kings, some little lightest; and when Jesus came, his Kingdom was not of this world, as he said John 18. Thus also Ierem, who besides this hath another way of satisfying this doubt, viz. by saying that Zerobabel, and other Princes successively coming of his line, had not the chief power of the Jews; but the high-Priests; the Prince that was, being only as a Generall to defend them, and to fight their battels; and lastly, that Salathiel, of whom those Princes came, Jesus descended, not Jechoniah, who came of Solomon, but of another line, drawn from Nathan, another Son of David; of which see more in my Exposition on Mat. 1. 12. And touching the Princes that came of Jechoniah, some say, that this Prophecie was verified in that he lived not to see any of them come to such honour, and the Kingdome was not given to any son of his after his deprivation; but to his Uncle Mattanias, called afterward Zedekiah, in whom it perished. And this may fully satisfy the question about a King sitting upon the Throne of David, in saying, that no man descended from him should, nothing else was meant, but that none should, whilst the Kingdome stood as then it did, for the little time of the continuance thereof none did, and at the end of that little time David's worldly Kingdome was annulled, and never set up more, but only his mysticall Kingdome, which was the only Kingdome meant, when ever it was spoken of as everlasting. For his speaking to the earth trebling the word, herein he did as Isa. 1. Hear O Heavens, and hearken. O earth; to intimate the stupidity of the Jews, and slowness to believe the thing here spoken, or to regard it, as being fore-stalled in their judgments, with an opinion, that the worldly Kingdome of David should never fail; and therefore not Iehojakims posterity from being Kings after him. Wherefore he speaks to the earth, as more obedient, and readier to hear her Maker speaking than they. For the great Creator of all, can make even Creatures without life to hear his voice, when wicked men will not, and to speak also in accusing and testifying against them, as Gen. 4. Hab. 2. 11. His trebling of the word is, as Ezek. 21. 27. for the more assurance that it should thus come to pass, His bidding [write yee,] is to men believing; as if he had said, Put it upon publick Record by writing, as things concerning the weal publick are, that it may never be forgotten, but men to all posterities may learn by this example to take heed how they provoke the Lord by obstinately going on in sin, the son after the father, especially Kings, and such as are in highest authority, who according to their disposition either to pride, cruelty or covetousness, are ready to forget their duty, as being Gods Vice-gerents, and gods upon earth, many times turning devils. See (O yee Potentates) if yee grow to this, how short your time of prosperity is like to be, and how ill yee provide for your dear children, who are through your default in danger to be cut off, and brought down, and never to rise again to your glory and regall power.

CHAP. XXIII.

VWoe to the Pastors that destroy and scatter the sheep of my Pasture. After Prophecies against three wicked Kings, Chap. 22. now he prophesieth for the comfort of the faithfull, of more joyfull and blessed times to come, when the sheep, which had been under such evill Pastors to their ruine, should have better Pastors set over them, being first gathered from all places, where through the fault of these evill Pastors, they had been scattered and suffered much misery. And it was necessary, that this consolation should follow immediately after the former threatening, lest the faith of the Elect should be shaken, when they heard Coniah their King of the line of David so threatened, not only in respect of himself, but also of his posterity. For none of his line should ever sit upon the Throne of David again, where was the promise made, and and so fully set forth Psalm 89. that David's line should never fail, but that his Kingdom should in his posterity be everlasting? To satisfie this doubt here, v. 5. he saith, The Lord shall raise up to David a righteous branch, that shall reign in righteousness. But before he comes to this, he cries, Woe to the wicked Pastors, or Kings before threatned Chap. 22. and Zedekiah spoken of Chap. 21. although out of his due place: Thus also Theodoret and Dionysius; but Ierom saith, that because the Kings were desperately evill, and the Prophet had accordingly spoken to them before, he now bends his speech to the Governours of the Church, the Priests and Prophets that fed them with teaching and Counsel; and after him, Rabanus, Hugo, Thomas Aquinas, Calvin. But they understan d not Ecclesiasticks alone, but both Kings and Rulers, and Priests also, which is best, seeing both sorts were before spoken against, as we may see Chap. 5.31. Chap. 20.1. and 21.1. two of them come as Counsellors of the King. And it is ordinary to call Kings Pastors, aswell as Ecclesiasticks; as David is said to be a Shepherd over his people of Israel; and in Ahab's time, when Micaiah foresaw the fall of Ahab at Ramoth Gilead, he sets it forth by the similitude of a people scattered and without a Shepherd: See also Chap. 22.22. Woe to the Shepherds then that scatter my sheep; is as much as if he had said to the Kings, Rulers, Priests, and Prophets, who by their evill teaching, counsell, and example cause them to sin so greatly, that I am enforced to bring this terrible judgment of the Caldees upon them, by whom they shall be carried and driven away and disperfed into all Countreys, living lives most miserable. And he calls the people, although most wicked, and so severely judged by him, the sheep of his Pasture, because of the Covenant made with their Fathers; for which his compassion was moved towards them even when he brought his severest judgements upon them; for which he calleth them his strange work. Isa. 28.21.

Verf. 2.

Against the Pastors that feed my people. It is strange that he should say, that feed my people, and yet chargeth them with scattering them, and not visiting them; but he speaketh of their place and office, which was to feed them with wholsome food of good teaching and Laws; but they contrariwise fed them with their own imaginations, whereby they were destroyed. They visited them not for good then, that they might have comfort hereof, but terror, which was all one with not visiting them.

Verf. 3.

And I will gather the remnants of my flock out of all Countreys, whither I have driven them. This is by some Hebrews expounded of their being brought again out of Babylon, when they had faithfull Pastors, Zerubbabel, Jeshua, Ezra, Nehemiah, Haggai and Zachariah, of which Isaiah speaking, Chap. 1.25. saith, I will restore Judges and Counsellors as at the beginning. But this cannot stand, because they were not then gathered out of all lands; and if their return then were meant, who was the righteous branch spoken of verse 5. that should reign? for Zerubbabel could not be he, because he never reigned as David, neither was Judah and Israel both safe then, as verse 6. for Judah onely returned, and they dwelt not safely or securely then, as is also promised, but they were put in fear by their enemies, and hindred in building the Temple and Walls of the City, as appeareth in Ezra and Nehemiah: neither doth the title of the branch, being further called Iehovah Tsidkenu, the Lord our righteousness, agree to any meer man; for which other Rabins of ancient expound it of the Messiah, and to do all ours generally. Neither doth that which followeth verse 7. of the famousness of this deliverance in comparison of that out of Egypt agree to that, as I have shewed before upon the like passage, Chap. 16.14,15. where Jeremiah first prophesied of this deliverance more obscurely, here more plainly. And it is to be noted, that he saith, I will gather the remnant of my flock, whereby he meaneth not all the Jews, but a few Elect ones of them; as Isa. 1.9. and Chap. 10.22. it was said before, that a remnant of them only should be saved, Rom. 11.5. For whilst Christ lived here in the flesh, a few only beleaved, the rest were hardened. Although there be some that by this remnant understand the Gentiles of all lands; but they are plainly in an error, as appears both by the Text,

Text, wherein nothing is spoken of the Gentiles, but Jews only; and from the other parallel places alledged. And it is said expressly Acts 2. that there were at the Feast of Pentecost some of all Nations under heaven, Jews and Profelytes, that heard the Apostles speaking in strange tongues, and were astonyed at it, and converted; and James 1. 1. it is said to the twelve Tribes that are scattered abroad; but the next words of their encreasing and being fruitful, are spoken of the encrease of the Church of the faithfull by the accession of the Gentiles, who are often spoken of by the Prophet Isaiah, as the children brought forth to the Jewish Church. Isa. 49. 18. and 60. 4. and will bring them to their folds; that is, unite them in the true faith of Christ, who were before scattered not only into divers Countries, but carried away, and divided amongst themselves by divers errors.

And I will set up Shepherds over them. That is, the Apostles and other Preachers at the first going out of the Gospel, who aimed at nothing else, but the converting and saving of souls; And they shall fear no more, nor be dismayed or lacking. That is, these Pastors shall be of invincible courage against all adverse powers, although they be persecuted, standing to the faith of Christ unto the death; and although some of them be cut off by persecution, yet there shall be no want, but others shall immediately be raised up; and so it shall be with Christian people, the spirit of courage and resolution, which shall be in their Pastors, shall enter into them also, and when some are cut off, others more shall stand up; according to which it was observed, that The blood of the Martyrs was the seed of the Church. Of Preachers then called Pastors, see Eph. 4. 12. 1 Peter 5. 1. and Peter accordingly is bidden, Feed my sheep, feed my lambs, Joh. 21. Of their courage in standing to the truth; see Acts 7. & Ch. 4. 12. & 21. and more abundantly in Ecclesiastical History.

I will raise up to David a righteous branch. Of Christ thus called; see before Isa. 11. 1. c. 4. 2. And after, Ier. 33. 15. Zech. 3. 8. c. 6. 12 Hebr. it is גִּדְיָה, of the reason of which name see the places before quoted, and also of his reigning and executing Justice and judgement everlastingly.

This is his name; the Lord our righteousness; for he is made of God unto us Wisdom, Righteousness, Sanctification, and Redemption, 1 Cor. 1. 30. And he was made sin for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God through him, 2 Cor. 5. 20. And then is he our righteousness, when we by faith rest upon his righteousness only, and in no part upon our own, according to the example of the Apostle, Phil. 3. 7, 8. And yet cast not away the care of righteous living, but endeavour to find in our selves the power of his Resurrection in rising up to newness of life, and after a conformity to his death, in patient suffering for righteousness sake, as he did, as it followeth v. 10. Rom 8. 16.

My heart within me is broken, because of the Prophets. That is, because the false Prophets by their flatteries and promising peace, made the people to harden themselves in their sins; so that he foresaw that the terrible words which he had spoken against them should be made good, and they should by no means escape most horrible destruction, as the next words do shew, Because of the Lord, and the words of his holiness. And if Gods threatnings against sinners make so holy a man as Jeremy so terribly afraid, how shall sinful and wicked men be able to bear it, when such & greater judgments without end come to be executed upon them?

For Adulteries the land mourneth, and for Oathes. Here he mentioneth the foul sins in particular, that reigned amongst them, two being named, and the rest understood. The word rendred Oathes is שְׁבָעָה signifying to swear; but because swearing is never without cursing expressed or understood, some render it cursing, or forswearing; take it every of these wayes, and so we shall best attain the true and full meaning, With such horrible sins did that land abound, for which it is said the land mourned by a prosopopeia, to make the Jews ashamed, and specially the false Prophets, to whom he chiefly speaketh, verse 9. and chargeth them again by name with Adultery, verse 14. both Prophets and Priests. For, shall the dumb and dead creature be affected with sorrow, and men, yea Teachers

Verf. 10.	Even in my house I have found their wickedness, saith the Lord. Here he chargeth the Prophets and Priests not only with prophaneness in the course of their lives, when they were out of Gods house, doing not as persons sanctified, but common notorious evil worldlings; but also with sin in Gods own house in unfaithfully executing their office there, either as Hophni and Phineas the wicked sons of Ely, who robbed Gods Sacrifices, and committed Adultery with women that came thither, or corrupting the Doctrine of the Law by teaching so, opposing the teaching of true Prophets so, as that they hardened the people in their wickedness to their utter undoing. And this is by Calvin not amiss applyed against the Pope and his Bishops, who they say cannot erre as they are Ecclesiasticall persons, although in their lives they be wicked as other men are; no Doctrine yet that comes from them in the house of God can be corrupt, because the Spirit is there always with them, according to promise to lead them into all truth. For if the high Priest, and Priests under the Law, who were by God himself set up, had not this infallibility; who but fools will believe, that the Pope now, hath, that was never made high-Priest of God, but by his own ambition and arrogancy?

Verf. 14.	I have seen also in the Prophets of Ierusalem an horrible thing. Here to aggravate the sins of their Prophets, he saith verse 13. I have seen folly in the Prophets of Samaria: but coming to speak of the Prophets of Jerutalem: [I have seen an horrible thing.] Samaria was the Chief City of the ten Tribes, where they constantly in one Kings time after another, worshipped Baal, or at the least the golden Calves that Ieroboam had set up, and after many judgements brought upon them for this and their other sins, they were delivered into the hands of Salmanasar King of Assyria, 2 Kings 17. Jerusalem was the chief City of the Kingdome of Judah, where the Temple stood, and the true God had Sacrifices offered unto him, where also the high-Priest, and other Priests lived continually to guide them aright. Yet even here the Prophets and Priests did more abominably, neither took warning by the sufferings of Israel; for which they might justly fear greater judgements to come upon them, as they were threatened. Then in shewing wherein they did more abominably, he saith, They committed Adultery, and went about with Lies, and strengthen the hands of evil doers, that they turn not; being for this in Gods account as Sodom and Gomorah. Vulg. Lat. for an horrible thing ] hath the similitude of those that commit Adultery. Whereupon Ierom, and others after him understand hereby Idolatry, which is like Adultery, and therefore commonly set forth by this name, as if nothing else were meant, but that they did, as the Idolatrous Prophets of Samaria. But the Hebrew signifieth an horrible thing, as all confesse; and if it be thus expounded, we shall come short of the full sence of the Prophet, whose drift is not to shew, that the Prophets of Jerusalem were onely like to those of Samaria, but much worse, for which he doth use a word setting forth an hairy horrid form wherein Devils sometimes appeared; hereby intimating them to be as Devils in the shape of men, transformed into Angels of light, because that coming in the name of the Lord, and as sent and instructed by him by dreams and visions, as is expressed verse 17. 25. 31. they vented their own lying imaginations. And whosoever presseth to the people corrupt and false Doctrine, under the name of the truth of God, doth likewise act the part of that horrid Fiend, and shall be proceeded against as a Devill, as Indus was afterwards for his Treachery called: For the next word it is not, They commit Adultery; but Hebr. [Adultery.] I have seen an horrible thing, Adultery, and walking with a Lie; where Adultery is properly to be understood, and not mystically only, that which is Idolatry, according to v. 10. and Chap. 29. 23. where two false Prophets were executed by roasting with with fire for Adultery with other mens Wives. For their lying, it was by saying, Thus saith the Lord, when the Lord never said so, but the contrary; for under this pretence, they speaking peace to the wicked, made them confident of safety, although they went on in their sins, and so their hearts were hardened against turning therefrom. Of the Jews, being likned to Sodom and Gomorrah, see before I/a. 10. 3. 9. For their gross sins, here they are thus set forth, both for their sins, and the terrible destruction that should come upon them therefore, saith Calvin; but that their like destruction is not meant, appeareth I/a. 1. 9. because none of Sodom were saved, but of the Jews a remnant.

Calvin.

From the Prophets of Jerusalem prophaneness is gone out into all the land. Heb. pollution or hypocrisis: whilst by their evill example, and speaking peace to the wicked, they encourage them to go on in their sins. Of their being fed with wormwood or bitterness it hath been spoken before; bitter and killing sufferings being here meant.

Vers. 15.

Who hath stood in the Counsell of the Lord? Because these false Prophets said, Thus saith the Lord: he here asketh, Which of them had stood in his counsell; as if he had said, not one; for that which they said came not from the Lord, but from themselves in deep dissimulation.

Vers. 18.

In the latter dayes ye shall consider it perfectly. Having threatned his judgments coming in an impetuous manner, like a whirl-winde, which none can resist, verse 19. Now he addeth, that although now they would not know or believe it, they should hereafter to their smart, when these judgments should be executed, and there should be no more place for repentance to escape them, as now there was, according to the common Proverb, Serò sapiunt Phryges, Fools are wise too late, Heb. They shall be made often to understand knowledge in it. That is, in this threatening, which now they so much slighted, and had no knowledge in, nor would, but in their sufferings they should often think what sore they had been, that before would take no warning; and this is the case of all the wicked, now they are fools, and neither understand, nor will understand in what danger of Gods wrath they are; but they shall understand, when they come to feel the smart thereof, and shall never be delivered out of their miseries.

Note.

But if thy had stood in my Counsell, and caused my people to hear my words, they should have turned them, &c. Here the Lord works further upon that which was said verse 18. proving that none of these Prophets stood in his Counsell, because if they had, they would have applyed themselves to speak so, as to turn the people from their sins, that they might have escaped his judgments. For whosoever is a true Prophet of God, bends himself altogether in teaching his Word, to expound and to speak so upon it, as that his Hearers may hereby be converted; therefore if any contrariwise teach liberty to sin, or vanisheth away in his teaching in vain speculations, or soareth aloft in high strains of eloquence, or broaching error, he is not one that stands in Gods Counsell, but rather like the false Prophets here taxed and threatned.

Vers. 22.

Note.

Am I a God near at hand, and not afar off? Here he meeteth with an opinion that might be in these wicked Prophets, that although they pretended revelations from God, which they never had, yet he should not know it, because he was afar off in heaven above, and could not see or know it: against this he saith thus, meaning, that he could as well see from the highest heavens into the very thoughts of their hearts, as if he were nearest unto them, or within them: whereof he rendreth a reason, verse 24. saying, I fill heaven and earth; as is further set forth Psalm 139. That is, I am alwayes so in one place, as well as in another, and do so see things cunningly hidden by men, as manifestly and openly acted, as that no plot or device of the most subtle can be hid from me. For the Translation of Sept. I am a God near, and not afar off; although expounded by Jerom in respect of time; as if the meaning were, I know things now, and that shall shortly be done; and not things done long agoe only; it is neither to the purpose here, nor a true, but a Translation contrary to the Hebr. verity.

Vers. 24.

Verf. 28.

What is the Chaff to the Wheat. Having taxed the false Prophets, verse 25, 26, 27. for coming with their dreams to make the people to forget the Lord; in this Verse he chargeth them, when they publish their own dreams, to publish them as dreams, and not as the Word of the Lord; but whosoever he be that comes pretending the Word of the Lord, let him do it truly, that is, speak no other words than those that come from his mouth. And hereof he yields a reason in these words; What is the Chaff to the Wheat? meaning, that whatsoever else is brought by any man, although it be pretended to be a Revelation in a dream from God, it is but as Chaff, light and without substance or worth, being by any blast of winde coming from God, made to appear to be such: as when contrary to such dreams of peace and prosperity, misery and destruction cometh; or when Christ cometh with his Fan in his hand, by his divine Doctrine blowing away all such vanities, and finally burning all that teach and embrace them with unquenchable fire. And hereby we may know what is a dream of a false Teacher, and not the Word of God, although it be pretended: If it be without true ground in the Word, or if it tendeth to draw men to any thing contrary to it, or to make them secure in their sins, see Deut. 13. Isa. 8. 20. Gal. 1. 8. Wherefore the Invocation of Saints departed, adoration of Images, the Doctrine of Purgatory, and prayers for the dead, and of the necessity of Priests leading a single life, taught amongst the Papists, but founded upon Revelations and feigned miracles, are undoubtedly Chaff, Hey, and Stubble that shall be burnt, when the day of triall cometh: See 1 Cor. 3. 11.

Calvin.

Is not my Word like a Fire, or an Hammer that breaketh the Rocks in pieces? Having compared the Word of God to Wheat, verse 28. now he compares it to a Fire, and an Hammer. It is as Wheat to them that hear, believe and obey it, to feed and strengthen them to eternall life; whilst the seduced by lying imaginations to hold errors, or to please themselves in their sinfull doings, are fed with Chaff or Husks with the Prodigall Luke 15. and so are hunger-starved. And the very Word, which is so precious to the godly, is as a Fire or Hammer breaking Rocks to the wicked; because, as is herein threatened, the Fire of Gods anger, smoking, as it were, against them in his Word, shall one day break out into an hot burning Flame; and although the threatnings thereof seem now unto them to be but as an empty sound beating the aire, yet they shall prove an huge and most strong Hammer breaking them in pieces who have hardened their hearts like a Rock; as a bar of Iron breaks a Potters Vessel all to pieces, so as that it cannot be made up again. The Word of God indeed, as Calvin noteth, is also a Fire to them that obey it, as Ch. 20. 4. and an Hammer, to purge out corruption, when the Spirit accompanying it inflames their hearts with the love of God, and the hatred of sin, and to break their hearts with godly sorrow for their sins. But it is not a Fire to them, as to the wicked, neither shall ever be. Therefore serve the Lord with fear, &c. Kiss the son lest he be angry, and so ye perish, &c. Pfal. 2. 11, 12.

Verf. 30.

Verf. 31.

That steal my Word every one from his neighbour, or fellow. Here the Lord further describeth a false Prophet; he is such an one as in secret compacteth with others what he will tell, as a Revelation from God, and so by mutuall consent he beginneth to utter it, then another, and another likewise comes with the same, saying, Thus saith the Lord; as the first man did, when as indeed he stole his Prophecie from him his fellow Pseudo-Propheta. Verse 31. he describeth the same further by this, That use their tongues, saying, He saith. Some render it, That smooth their tongues, expounding it of Flattery; some by tollunt, they lift them up: Expounding it by speaking magnifically of themselves, as the undoubted true Prophets of the Lord. And hence some note three sorts of false Prophets. 1. Such as steal somewhat out of other mens writings. 2. That apply themselves to speak in high straines of Eloquence, or so as that they may be accounted learned. 3. That speak flatteringly: as Lyra, Dionys. Vatabl. Isidor. But the word used is רָפְּזָה, which is, to take; and then the sense is, taking their tongues as the instruments of their lying speeches, to say He saith; ] when as in their hearts they know, that the Lord never said so, but the contrary. This part of the false Prophets then is now notoriously acted over again, or hath been by Fryers and Priests of the Church of Rome, who likewise by compacting together, have one seconded another, to make the people believe all their inventions introduced in matter of Religion to have come from God, whereby they have bred in them such a blinde faith, and venerable opinion of their lying Legends, that they think it a deadly sin once to question any of them. Their stealing from their fellows (spoken of verse 30. is by some understood, from the true Prophets of God, of whom they took somewhat to credit their false Prophecying the more; but it is not likely that he would ever have called them their fellows, if he had meant them; wherefore the first is best, that they stole from one another, as they compacted together: Thus also Calvin.

When they shall say unto thee, What is the burthen of the Lord? From hence to the end of this Chapter is shewed, how both People, Priests and Prophets, derided the true Prophets of the Lord for saying, The burthen of the Lord; for this was common with Isaiah, Chap. 13. 15. 22, 23. and some other Prophets when they threatened judgments. And their sin in saying so lay in this, that they asked, What is the burthen of the Lord? in contempt and hatred against those Prophets, that came with this saying, as if they had said, Speak these words as much as ye will, but know that when ye speak them, ye are but unwelcome Messengers to us, ye shall reap nothing but enmity at our hands for so speaking, or to that effect. For we love to hear such as come unto us speaking comfortable things; neither do we indeed regard what ye say in this kinde, because it hath been the manner of such as thou art thus to terrifie us many years agoe, as Isaiah did; but we thank God, we feel not yet any such burthen as ye threaten, and we hope never shall. But against them that thus despised and mocked at the Prophets, he threatneth this burthen to come upon them, that he would forsake them; and lest this should be slighted, he addeth, I will punish that man and his house, that is, every one that saith so. And lest this also should be slighted, he addeth, Every ones word shall be his burthen; that is, that dares to speak thus, it shall be counted an intollerable sin in him, the burthen whereof he shall never be able bear, but sink and be crushed to death under it. And finally, that they might not think, that the Lord would haply make some few examples of his judgments for speaking thus contemptuously contrary to his command, and that the Nation should still escape, and continue in prosperity, he concludeth, saying,

I will utterly forget and forsake you, and your Nation, and cast you out of my presence.

And I will bring an everlasting reproach upon you. Whereby he sheweth their utter destruction to come upon them and their City, they being left to the will of their enemies to be slain, and captived, and their City burnt. Where we may see, that it is not a small judgement for the Lord to forsake any people for the contempt of his Prophets, leaving them destitute of light and means of grace, but the greatest punishment that can befall mortall men; for if he thus forsakes a Nation, woe unto it, for together all blessing and good forsakes it, and all evil and misery to utter ruine cometh instead thereof. Whereof he saith, I will bring everlasting reproach. Whereas this judgement continued but seventy years, it hath been revolved before Chap. 18. 10. and Chap. 25. 9. 11. will resolve it more clearly.

Whereas they are directed to ask, What is the Word of the Lord? not the burthen. The meaning is, that they should thus enquire with an heart desirous to learn, believe and obey. For when a people is thus affected, the Lord will dwell amongst them with his Word and Blessing, otherwise he forsakes them.

CHAP. XXIV.

Verf. 1.

IN this Chapter the Lord would have Jeremiah teach again by Signes. He shewed him two Baskets of Figs set before the Temple, after that Nebuchadnezzar had carried away Jechoniah Captive into Babylon, and the Princes, Carpenters, and Smiths. By these he teacheth what should be done to them, and to the people still remaining in the Land. These might haply think, and did think themselves more happy that remained, than those that were carried away; but God hereby shewed the contrary, the Captives should finde more favour and suffer less, and such as remained should finde none, but suffer all manner of misery, because most probably they, upon their escape at that time, took more courage to themselves to go on in their sins, despising all admonitions, as thinking the brunt of danger to be now over, and that they should never come into it again: whereas Jechoniah, although a most wicked King, as he is set forth, Chapter 22. yet by the Prophets admonitions and threatening and advice to yield to Nebuchadnezzar when he came against him, he and his Princes submitting themselves, and going out unto him, and not obstinately standing out contrary to Gods will, as Zedekiah afterwards did, came into more grace, and was with his company carried away with him, comforted. Whereby we may see what good cometh of obeying God at the last, although a man hath before sinned most notoriously, and what ill of obstinate and continued disobedience against all admonitions, threatnings, and counsels of Gods servants, his Prophets. For this manner of teaching, it hath been spoken upon before, Chap. 18. and 19. where he teacheth by a Potters making and breaking his Pots; and Ch. 13. by a girdle, he would have him teach not only by word of mouth, but by a sensible outward signe, as being more moving. The two Baskets of Figs standing before the Temple, are thought by some to have been set there right over against the Temple, where some came to sell fruits, and that this opportunity was taken by the Lord; but it is rather to be thought according to others, that they were shewed him in vision. The Hebrews conjecture, that the Basket of Figs which was worst shewed best, and the other worst; but being tasted, the contrary appeared; If this were so, the similitude did the more aptly set forth the thing for which it was brought, they that continued in Jerusalem seeming to be in the best case, but were in the worst; and those that were carried away seeming to be in the worst, in the best. And these Baskets stood before the Temple, the more aptly to set forth the Jews of both sorts, they belonged both to one and the same God, that dwelt in the Temple, but from hence, as from his Judgement Seat, he passeth a divers Sentence upon them.

Note.

Verf. 6.

I will bring them again to this Land. Many gracious promises are here made of good to be done to Jebojakin and the Captives that were carried away with him upon their submit yielding, related 2 Kings 24. For which probably they that stayed behind, derided them, as some conjecture, which was fulfilled in the King, 2 Kin. 25. and in his son Zorobabel returning at the time set, Jer. 29 10. and many more, yea all of them that were then living. The King indeed came no more to Jerusalem in his own person, but in Babylon his head was lifted up, and he found great favour, and his posterity returned, he being then dead, and Daniel and the other three Children came to great preferment in Babylon, as Daniel sheweth: And it is not to be doubted, but that other Jews also by their means found great favour, even beyond expectation in that Countrey.

And I will give them an heart to know me. Here is a far greater blessing spoken of, the blessing of knowing God, and turning to him with the whole heart; not going herewith in part after him, and in part after Baal, as some formerly did, or in part after the profits or pleasures of the world. He that attaineth not this blessing is unhappy still, notwithstanding all his temporall blessings, but attaining this, he is perfectly blessed, as Chap. 9. 23. Let not the wise glory in his wisdom, wisdom, &c. but that he knoweth me, saith the Lord. But note, that no man attaineth to this of himself, but it must be given unto him, against Pelagians and Papists.

And them that dwell in Egypt. Some think, that such Jews are meant, as before the destruction of Jerusalem, or at the coming of the Caldees fled into Egypt to be out of their danger, as amongst their confederates; but others better, those that would needs remove thither, contrary to the Lords command, Chap. 43. for against them is the like threatened to that which is threatened here. And this Chapter as well as Chap. 21. is placed out of order, as appeared by the next, viz. Chap. 25.

Vers. 8.

CHAP. XXV.

THIS Prophecie of this Chapter is noted by the time, the fourth of Jebojakin, the first of Nebuchadnezzar, but Dan. 1. 2. the third of Jebojakin; for the reconciling of which difference, see my Comment upon 2 Kings 24. This was the year wherein Nebuchadnezzar came first against Jerusalem; the former Prophecies of Jeremiah beginning to work, so that it was a most fit time to speak as he doth in upbraiding to people for their hardning of their hearts against all his admonitions given them early and late for three and twenty years together, and of other Prophets before him, according to that which is said, verse 2, 3, 4, 5, &c.

Vers. 1.

I will send and bring all the kindreds of the earth, and Nebuchadnezzar my servant. Because he saith, I will send and bring. Some of the Ancients have thought, that it is meant of sending his Angels good or evil to stir up the Caldees forces, lying far and wide in the North parts; for all the Countries about were under them, and were at their command to go forth to war, as they were required, with them; for which they are called all the Families of the earth. But Calvin better, I will send; that is, by Nebuchadnezzar my servant, who shall serve my Providence herein, although not knowing me; and gather them an huge Army. And he calleth Nebuchadnezzar his servant, partly to confound the Jews the more, who were peculiarly chosen to serve him, but rebelled against him, and partly to terrifie them by his coming, not of himself so much, as by Gods appointment, who doubtless would therefore be with him, and make him by any power irresistible. He is not called his servant, as Moses and other godly men, but as one made by a secret power to serve and do the will of God unwittingly, by executing his judgements upon the Jews, and other Nations round about them for their sins. He was indeed carried by his own ambition and desire of revenge to these wars, but withall he did the work that God would have done, who knoweth how to punish sinners by sinners, and strengthens them to it, being yet without all tincture or stain of sin; yea, so far from it, as that he cannot be said to be the cause thereof, but the sinners that suffer are the only cause of it to themselves; and the sinners that serve in this work, shall have none other reward in the end; but as a Rod, wherewith God corrected other sinners, be cast into the fire, and therein burn for ever, for their malice, cruelty and pride, wherein they have done this work; and not in obedience to the Lord, as Gods faithful servants do; as Jashab in destroying the Canaanites, and other faithful persons. Of the King called Gods Rod, see Isa. 10. Whereas it is added further, And all the Nations round about. The cause was, that the Jews might not feed themselves with hope of help from them against Nebuchadnezzar, as the common enemy. For when any Potentate, as the Turk, armes to come against any Christian Kingdome, or against one petty Kingdome at once, a jealousie arise in the rest round about, so that they joyn their Forces together to repell him. But the Lord here sheweth, that it should not be so in respect of Nebuchadnezzar; but although they should combine, yet they should not be able to stand before him; but indeed they were so infatuated, that they did not, that we read of, but each Nation kept timorously at home, when this storm arose, and so he set upon them one after another, overcoming them with the more facility. Whereas he addeth, that they should be made anbissing, and perpetuall desolation, the 11th Verse makes it plain, that the word 𐤁𐤏𐤏𐤏 here used, doth not alwayes signifie for ever, that is, everlastingly, but sometimes for a long time, which yet shall have an end, as Jerusalems desolation, in seventy years; although sometime it is put for ever and ever, as verse 12. where it is said of Babylon, that it shall be an everlasting desolation.

Vers. 9.

Calvin.

And I will bring upon that land all my words which are written. Having threatened perpetuall desolations to Babylon, as he had done, verse 9. to all Nations round about Judea, now he exemplifieth the case of Babylon by the same Nations, shewing hereby, that the Babylonians should be brought into servitude, as they had been by the Babylonians. To expresse which, verse 14. it is said, Many Nations and great Kings shall serve themselves of them also. Calvin, Quia fecerunt in illis ad servitutem etiam ipsi, gentes multa, &c. Expounding it as the cause, why Babylon should be punished, as is aforesaid, verse 13. viz. because they had brought the Jews to servitude; or rather as the reason of that which was before said, verse 14. or the means whereby the Babylonians should be brought so low, the Jews should have them and other Nations under them, being many, and having mighty Kings over them, and so it should be rendred to them according to their doings. But I must needs confesse, that in this passage I understand not either the ground of his Exposition, or his meaning, and see not how it can be made good, because although the Babylonians were subjugated, yet it was not by the Jews, whom they had formerly subdued; but by the Persians and Medes; neither were other Nations brought under them, but they even after their return continued servants to the Persians. Or if by Jews the faithfull be understood under the Gospel, to whom many Nations were subdued by the power of the Gospel, how can the next words agree, where this subduing is spoken of as a judgement, whereas subduing to the faith was a favour? The Vulg. Latin, Because they served them, when they were many Nations, and great Kings. That is, being compelled by them, all the Nations before spoken of, and Judea also, were servants to them, that is, to the Caldees, yea and mighty Kings also, who were taken and Captived by them, and kept as servants under that great Monarch, as we may see 2 Kings 25. where King Jehojakin and more Kings are spoken of, as prisoners to Nebuchadnezzar, and his son Evilmersedach, but his head was then lifted up above them all. And this is rendred as a reason, why they should be done to accordingly, as in the latter part of the Verse, viz. because they made them serve in pride, glorying in having so many Nations and Kings subdued unto them, as if by their own strength they had brought them under, thus robbing God of his glory. But the word וְ may be also rendred Glory. For as in N. Tr. before going, and then rendring it word for word according to the Hebr. For many Nations shall serve in or with them, even them. Where to make sense, this word themselves must needs be understood, and then the meaning will easily appear to be this; As they have brought many Nations and Kings under, so it shall be done to them: Nations and Kings, that is, the Medes and Persians and their Kings shall subdue and make servants of them, and they shall never more get up to Imperiall Power again; and to this Exposition generally agree, and this is the same in effect with the Exposition given before upon the Vulgar Latin, though the reading be divers, and confirmed Chap. 27. 7.

Take this Wine-cup of my fury, and cause all Nations to drink of it, to whom I shall send thee. Having threatened the Jews, and all Nations round about, and lastly the Caldees in the Verses before going; now he hath in a vision the cup of Gods indignation given into his hand to make them all to drink hereof, as the efficient cause of the foresaid destruction and misery. And by the cup of Gods wrath, he meaneth his wrath against them for their sins, assimilating it to a Cup of Wine; because as that intoxicateth the brain, and makes some foolish, some infirm, and some mad, and to spue and fall; and if they be dead drunk, to fall so as never to rise again, but to dye in that drunken fit: so the wrath of God by horrible destructions coming upon these Nations, should make them at their wits end, not knowing what course to take for their preservation, and make their hearts so faint and timorous, that they should be without all strength to resist, and mad through vexation, and finally sick as it were to spoing and inability to stand any longer, so that they fall by the sword, or are brought under, not being able to rise up; and to shake off the yoke any more. Which Exposition we may gather upon these words, verse 16. and 27. And he saith not onely that he took and gave it them to drink, but made them drink it, verse 17. 28. Hereby shewing his power over them, as it was at the first given him by the Lord, Ch. 1. 10. And the like power hath every faithfull servant of God whom he employeth to threaten the sins of the people, his words shall not be winde, but powerfull to make them to suffer whom he threatneth, do they what they can to keep themselves from drinking, how many and potentsoever they be, although the judgement be for a time deferred.

Pharaoh King of Egypt, and his servants. Next to Jerusalem Pharaoh must drink, because the Jewes relied much upon him, that they might not therefore think by his help to be preserved from this judgement, he is next threatned, and the mingled people; that is, people of other Nations dwelling in Egypt, having fled thither for shelter, as many Jews did. For so the same word that is here used signifyeth, Exod. 12. 38. Nehemiah 13. 3. And thus Jerom expounds it, and Theod. Raban, Hugo, &c. Although Varabl. is for people of divers Nations gathered together, and dwelling in the Desarts near to Judea; but the first is most probable: For the Kings of Uz next named; for Uz the Septuagint and Vulgar have Ansilidis, it was a Countrey near to Idumea, which lay on the South, where Job dwelt; of whose cattell therefore it is said, that the Idumeans and Sabeans made a prey, it had the name most probably from Huz the first-born of Nabor; and it seems to have been a part of Idumea, Lam. 4. 21. where it is said, Daughter of Idumea, that dwellest in the land of Uz. Azotus was one of the five Lordships of the Philistines, whereof three more are also here mentioned, and for Gath the fifth most probably it is said, the remnants of Azotus; because Gath stood near unto it. Of Azotus see more Isa. 20. 1.

For the Countreys next named, Idumea and Ammon, he speaks of them more fully Cap. 49. adjoining Dedan, Teman and Buz, and of Moab Chap. 48. being all Countreys near about Judea, and of Tyrus and Zidon, Chap. 27. and 47. For the Ilands, these were Cyprus, Rhodes, Crete, taken by the Babylonians: so Jerom, Raban, &c. for the Kings of Arabia, that is, both Araba felix and deserta; the Kings whereof were rather Captains of Theeves than Kings.

The Kings of Zimri. Of Zimran son to Keturah, see Gen. 25. 2. And of him this Kingdome seems to have the name; and because he was with his brethren sent Eastward to inhabit, Gen. 25. 6. it stood eastward; and all the Kings of each Countrey are spoken of; not that every one had more Kings, but meaning the succession of them. For Elam, that was Media, of which afterwards, Chap. 49. 34. For the Kings of the North, they were such as lived near to Babylon, whom the King first subdued, and then used them to fight under his Banner against other Countreys. And the King of Shebak shall drink after them. This is by Lyra thought to be the King of Egypt, because one King of Egypt was so called, 1 Kings 11. 40. But that King was spoken of before, verse 19. as one of the first that should drink, whereas this drinks after all others. And therefore others expound it better of the King of Babylon, as Jerom, Theod. Raban, &c. There being manifest ground for this Exposition, Chap. 5. 41. where being also called, The King of Shebak, he is by and by called for further Explanation [the King of Babylon] and they conjecture, that he is called King of Shebak by inversion of the Letters of the Hebrew Alphabet, ש ב א having two letters next unto the first, and א a middle letter; but turn the name into letters of the end of the Alphabet, taking two, which are last but one, ש ב, and a middle

Calvin. a middle letter  $\Delta$ , we have the name  $\text{תש}$ , signifying, Thy silk, for Babel confusion; but the signification is not so much respected, as the inversion of the letters, the latter being now put for the former, to intimate, as Calvin noteth, that the time should not hastily come, wherein that King should drink, but all others having drunk before, as  $\Psi$  is after all the rest of the letters, but  $\Omega$ . Or we may look at the signification of the word, thy silk, because when other Kings were in misery, and were habited accordingly, the King of Babylon fate gloriously apparelled in silk, and gold, and silver: whereas it is commonly conceived, that the Prophet thus obscures his name, lest he should offend that King. Calvin sheweth well that this cannot be the reason, because Chapter 50. and 51. he spares him nor, but speaks terribly against Babylon, yea and more than against any other Kingdome: wherefore the reason before going may suffice, he changeth the name, that in the very name there might be a Prophetical Prediction.

Verf. 30. He shall roare from his habitation, he shall give a shout, as they that tread the Wine press. Having threatned all Nations with his judgments after Jerusalem, he yields a reason to perswade them, that it should certainly be so, verse 29. and to terrifie them the more, he ascribeth roaring to the Lord, and shouting, as in treading Grapes they make a great noise, and one by his voice stirs up another to work lustily in treading, and making the blood of the Grapes to run out; so he would stir up himself to the effusion of their blood in greatest abundance.

Verf. 34. Howl ye Shepherds. Here by the consent of all Expositors, Jeremiah returneth in conclusion of this terrible Prophecy against Jerusalem, and all other Nations before mentioned, to the King, Princes, Priests and Prophets of Judea, according to the word Pastors before used Chap. 23.1. seeing so great calamities to come, saying, Howl and cry. And he giveth four Reasons. 1. Because they should be broken, as a precious Vessell, or a pleasant Vessell: For such the Jews had been through Gods peculiar favour unto them more than other Nations, and men grieve more for the breaking of a China, than a plain earthen Pot. 2. Because they should have no place to flee to, they or the principall of the Flock, that is, the rich, who formerly had divers strong holds. 3. Because their Pasture should be spoyled, and their habitations cut down; wherein he continueth his Metaphor of Shepherds and Sheep, by their Pasture, meaning their fruitfull Countrey, full of Corn, and Wine, and Oyl, now made desolate and destitute as a Wilderness, and their houses cut down; because being burnt down, they were as trees in a Forrest in times past a shelter, cut down. 4. He hath forsaken his covert as a Lion. That is, the Lord hath left his Temple and City, as being formerly to him like a Lions Den, into which no Beasts durst enter, whilst he was there; but being gone, any dare come and enter, and take what they finde, and devour it without fear. As in the next words is shewed, that the King of Babylon did; For their Land is desolate; because of the fierceness of the oppressor; But here because the word Oppressor is  $\text{לדור}$  Expositors differ, some applying it to the Lord, being as the word signifieth, a Dove, for mildness and innocency, when by their wickedness he was forced to deal with them: Some to Nebuchadnezzar, deriving the word from  $\text{נב}$  so oppress; others also that apply it to him, follow the first interpretation of a Dove; because the Caldees had in their Standard the picture of a Dove, in regard of this, that Semiramis the Queen of the Assyrians, whose Monatchy was translated to the Babylonians, had been in her infancy exposed and nourished by Doves; for which they alwayes after, that ruled that Monarchy, carried in their Standard a Dove; by which name, Nebuchadnezzar the present Monarch was here set forth; as if one should by the Eagle set forth the Roman Emperor; for the Eagle, his Armes, and pictured in his Standard, and so speaking of him say The Eagle.

CHAP. XXVI.

Here the Prophet is bidden to threaten them, that the House of God should be like Shiloh, unless they turned to the Lord by true repentance; to which effect he had spoken before in the time of Josiah, Chap. 7. in 13. or 14. Verses together. But now threatening them with the same in the first year of Jebojakim, his son, he was hereupon conspired against by the Priests and People, that would have murdered him. Whereby we may see how wickedness aboundeth under a wicked King. In saying that it was the first year of his reign, he sheweth plainly, that the former Chapter is misplaced; because things done anno 4. of his reign are therein related. When Jeremiah had this tumult raised up against him by the Priests, Prophets, and people, the Princes hearing it, came and sat in the entry of the new gate of the Lords house: the Caldeans call this the East gate; Lyra and Vatabl. say it was that built by Josham, 2 Kings 15. 35. which might well be, because it was but lately built, viz. not much above one hundred years before; whereas the Temple was built in Solomons time, betwixt whom and Josham was Uzziah 52 years, 2 Kings 15. Amaziah 29. 2 Chron 25. 10. Asa 40. 2 Chron 24. Athaliah 6. 2 Chron 12. 12. Abazia 1. Jehoram 8. 2 Chron 21. 5. Jehoshaphat 35. 2 Chron 20. Aza 41. 2 Chron 16. Abijah 3. 2 Chron 13. Rehoboam 17. 2 Chron 12. Solomon 16. after the house finished; for he began anno 4. of his reign, and finished all in twenty years; Summa tot. 228 years. And this new gate was of great note, and called for divers reasons by divers names, as David Kimhi observeth, 1 Sur. 2 Kings 12. 6. because the unclean were there separated. 2 Jesod. a foundation, 2 Chron 23. 5. because there the foundation of Doctrine was laid, by teaching the rights of the Lords house. 3 Harfish, because it stood East-ward to the Sun-rising, Ier. 19. 21. 4. The gate Ishon; that is, of entrance. 5. Hatanath, the middle, because it was between two gates. 6. Asharabaltia, the upper, for the height thereof, and because it was over the Court, the place of Prayer. 7. The new gate, as here. To this the Princes come and sit, to hear the matter betwixt Jeremiah and the Priests, Prophets and People; so that it seemeth here was a place to sit, and hear, and determine causes concerning God, betwixt one man and another; and herein the Princes had a power. And it is to be noted, that when they heard the cause of Jeremiah, they judged truly without respect of persons, for him, a despised Prophet alone, against all the other; yea, the Priests, that were of great authority, who neither being moved with reverence of good, whose servants in a peculiar manner they were, nor by this consideration, that Jeremiah was one of themselves, were carried altogether with envy and wrath, rashly to destroy him; so impetuous a thing is wrath and malice for reproof, although never so just. For hereby Jeremiah first incensed Pashur, Chap. 20. and then all of them, Ch. 23. where he most bitterly inveighed against them, not sparing the Princes also. But they could easilier forget it, than the Priests, who indeed should have been examples of all vertue to them. But even the Princes soon after turned his cruel enemies also, Chap. 37. 15. for his free reproving of them for their sins, Chap. 34. and threatening their destruction.

Then rose up certain Elders of the Land. When the Princes had spoken, certain ancient men, here called Elders, that best knew what had been done long agoe, took courage to themselves to speak for Jeremiah also: for so Calvin understands Elders in this place, Elder-men; and reason makes it most probable, and that they were not of the Elders preferred by Moses, Numb. 11. of whom the Synedrion magnum consisted, for they were the Princes of the Land. And they alledge the example of Micah, threatening that Jerusalem should be ploughed, that is, so destroyed, as it should have none appearance of a City, but be as a field ploughed and sown with Corn; as the Poet said of Troy, Et seges est ubi Troia fuit; as now Jeremiah threatned ruine likewise; but Hezekiah, in whose dayes he lived, did nothing against him, but feared before the Lord, and besought besought him, and so the Lord repented of the evill, and did it not. This was done above eighty years agoe; for between Hezekiah and Jebojakim was Manassah 52, Amon 2, Josiah 32: yet there might be old men then living, that might remember it, especially being godly, as it seems these were; and therefore such as kept a Record of such famous passages betwixt Prophets and Kings.

There was also a man that prophesied against this Land; then Jebojakim, &c. Here Expositors differ, some thinking, that in these words the foresaid old men go on still in their speech, and some, that some other man, an enemy to Jeremiah, spake this in opposing what they had said, because they think it not probable, that the same men should bring a contrary example, to make the example before brought lesse moving; and because in conclusion it is added, verse 27. Nevertheless the hand of Ahikam was with Jeremiah, the adversative particle here implying something done in his behalf, notwithstanding the example before going, which tended to frustrate the speech of the old men, and to stir up the people against Jeremiah, by setting before their eyes what the way now was that they had Jebojakim for their King, wherein it stood them in hand to goe whatsoever they had done in Hezekiah his time; for we say, New Lords, new Lawes: yet because in some relations, if after some, other some speak, an hint hereof by saying; but others spake thus, or contrariwise there were that said thus; and here is no word intimating a divers speaker; the first Exposition seems most probable, that the foresaid Elders go on in producing this example also; whereas it may be objected, they durst not certainly after they had related, what was done in Hezekiah his time, and made application by speaking of a good event, bring another contrary example of a thing done by the King, under whom they now lived, but as it were, the other day, (for it was the beginning of Jebojakims reign, when these things were agitated, as appeareth verse 1.) For what construction could be made hereof, but that this King for this tyrannicall act against Urijah, together with his Princes, was already upon ruine? I answer, who so shall consider the whole relation, there being none application made as before, must needs hence rather gather, that the same men spake thus also, and not an adverse party; for then they would have been bold to have applyed it by saying, after they had produced the example; yet Jebojakim suffereth no evill for all this. But the old men speaking it, discretion required, that they should suspend an application against the King, leaving this relation barely made to each ones consideration, that they may be the more out of danger. And it was enough after the other, barely to relate it, none being so shallow, but that he must needs gather, that Jebojakim and his mighty men by killing that Prophet Urijah had done too much already, to pull down Gods wrath upon them, and therefore it stood them in hand to beware, how they added more innocent blood-shed by persecuting Jeremiah, as they did, to break off from this fury, and rather go to prayer. For the adversative Particle, verse 24. the meaning is, say these old men what they could, or the Princes what they could, the Priests and people yet were carried with such a spirit of madness, that they would have killed Jeremiah, but that Ahikam the son of Shaphan, some man of great power with his men about, came and took him with a strong hand away from them, and so he was safe for that time. Of Ahikam the son of Shaphan, and what place he was, we may gather from 2 Kings 22, 12. where he is said to be sent by Josiah together with Hilkiah, and some others, as being most honourable persons, to enquire of the Lord, when he saw himself in great danger. For Urijah, the Prophet, I finde not any other mention made of him elsewhere; but hereby it appeareth, that when Jerem 5. it was said, that he found not a man, he meant not precisely any one; for this Uriah was Contemporanean with him. And although he fled into Egypt, when his life was sought, yet it was not out of timorofles, but prudence to save himself, as long as he could, to do service to God in this world, as Christ himself did, and Elijah, and the Apostles were bidden, when they were persecuted in one City, to flee to another : for that he was not timorous, appeared, because that being brought back out of Egypt, he retracted not, but stood to that which he had said to the death. Whereas Jeremiah fled not, and yet was preserved ; Gods singular providence appeared herein, that the people might not even in the wickedest times be destitute of one to admonish and threaten them, that they might be brought to repentance : Touching Iehojakins sending and fetching him out of Egypt, it may easily be conceived, how he might do this, because Pharaoh Necho King of Egypt made him King, 2 Kings 23. 34 : Thus Jerom. For Uriah his being buried amongst the Vulgar sort, it is to be understood, that every man of note then had his severall burying place for him and those of his Family ; and because Prophets were most of all such, if they had no such places, the manner was at the publick charge to honour them so far, as to build them Sepulchers, and thereupon to subscribe their names ; as we may see 2 Kings 23. 17. and Mat. 23. 23. Uriah then was not onely persecuted whilst he lived, but his persecutors to encrease their sin the more, denyed unto him the honour of a Prophets buriall.

Hieron.

CHAP. XXVII.

THis Chapter beginneth as Chapter 26. In the beginning of the reign of Iehojakin. Although this Prophecy concerned the time of Zedekiah, which was not till divers years after. For the Lord bids the Prophet send yokes to the Kings about Judah, by their Embassadors that should come to Zedekiah. But the Lord revealed to his Prophet now, that they should all be subdued ; and before also Ch. 25. 19. where he nameth many more, that should drink, so that this Prophecy was to lye dormant for certain years, but made known now for Jeremiah his comfort, and better satisfaction touching his former threatnings ; the execution whereof he saw still to be delayed. But now the time is made known unto him, when they should be executed, even in Zedekiah his dayes. And the Lord goeth on to teach by outward signes, as he did before to affect them, to whom the Prophet was sent, the more. For coming of Embassadors from the Kings about to Zedekiah, it was without doubt to confederate against Nebuchadnezzar, whose power they saw to be very great, that although they were not able each nation alone to withstand him ; yet joyning all their forces together they might. But the Prophet sheweth, that this confederacy would be but vain, because all Kingdomes of the earth are the Lords, and to be given to whom he pleased ; and it was now his pleasure to give them all to Nebuchadnezzar and his posterity for a certain time, and then to give them again into the hands of others, as was also said before Chap. 25. 13, 14. Wherefore he perswaded them voluntarily to yield unto him, promising that if they did, they should still dwell in their own land ; but if they would not, threatening them with destruction by the sword, famine and pestilence. Whence note, that whatsoever God commandeth it is wisdom to obey him herein ; for in serving him we shall be in the way to have the earth serve us for habitation, and nutriment, but contrariwise ready to spue us out by destructions and consumptions of divers sorts. The time for all to serve Nebuchadnezzar is limited to him ; His son and sons son, that is, Evilmerodach and Belshazzar ; for he reigned 36 years after Iehojakin his captivity, as appears 2 Kings 25. Evilmerodach, as some say 23, Belshazzar 3 ; but Beros. hath between the two last, English Soroores, in whom seventy years may be made up : but of this see more 2 Kings 25. 8.

Hearken not to them that say, The Vessels of the Lords house shall be brought back again from Babylon. Of the carrying of these precious Vessels into Babylon, see 2 Kin. 24. 13. and that more were carried away afterwards in Zedekiah his time, 2 Kin. 25. 13. But none were brought back again, till the time of Cyrus, Ezra 1. according to this Prophecie, verse 19, 20, 21, 22. yet so impudent were the false Prophets of the Jewes, that they dared to promise the bringing of them shortly back again. So at all times there be Prophets, that

CHAP. XXVIII.

- Verf. 1. Here is a Prophecy in the fourth year of Zedekiah, which was the last King of Judah: for he did not onely evill as other Kings had done, but worse; for he swore to Nebuchadnezzar, that made him King, and brake his Oath by rebelling against him; yet a false Prophet Hananiah was so impudent, as that in opposing Jeremiah, that threatned him, he presumed to prophesy the breaking of the yoke of Nebuchadnezzar within two years, and the bringing back of the Vessels of the Lords house; and to purchase more credit to his Prophecy, he breaks the yoke from Jeremiah his neck, and saith, Thus will the Lord break the yoke of the King of Babylon; but for it Jeremiah makes an Iron yoke, hereby signifying a more strong subjection to him, and threatens the false Prophet with death the same year, which came to pass accordingly. Whereas verse 6. Jeremiah saith to Hananiah his prophecy (Amen) when he knew it to be false, and if not, he must needs be a false Prophet, It is to be understood, that his meaning is nothing else, but that he could wish it might be so for the love that he bare to his Countrey, although he knew by the spirit wherewith he was indued, that it should not be so. So Moses, as Calvin noteth, offered to have his name blotted out of the Book of life; and Paul could wish himself an Anathema for the Jews his kinsmen, so Ierom, Rabau, &c. But Vatabl thinks, that he spake thus, as uncertain, whether God would give the people repentance and change his former decree, and spare the people, notwithstanding the former threatnings; for which cause verse 7, 8. he speaks as one expecting the event to prove or disprove it; and as if Ieremy for the present knew not whether he said true or false, it is said verse 11. That he went away; and verse 12. That the Word of the Lord came unto him to the contrary, and this is most probable, and then the submiss and lowly minde, that was in Jeremiah more than in Ionah, shewed it self, in that he could be content to be disgraced, as a Prophecyer of things not coming to pass, so that God might be glorified in saving so many thousands of his Countrey men from ruine.

- The Prophet that prophesieth of peace, when his word is come to pass, it shall be known that the Lord sent him.* This is not alwayes a true rule, for Dent. 13. a case is put of a Prophet not sent of God, but of the Devill, to seduce to Idolatry, that yet might give a Signe, which afterwards cometh to pass: how then doth Jeremiah give this as a rule here? Answ. Moses giveth the same Dent. 18. also. Wherefore it is to be understood, that this is for the most part a certain rule to know a true Prophet, when the event answers his Prophecy; because that God onely that sendeth such, knoweth before what shall come to pass, and neither devil nor man, but only by conjecture, foretelling things therefore sometimes true, and sometimes false; For let them tell what shall come, and we will say they are Gods. This then is the common rule to know a true Prophet by, and if by this we cannot know him, then we must observe at what he aimeth, if at the turning of men away from God to Idols, then he is a false Prophet, although his signe be true; and this is permitted only to try the constancy of Gods people in cleaving to him. Now Jeremiah propoundeth the first and most common mean of triall; to the time of manifesting which it would not be long; for he pitcht upon two years; and this tryall was fittest in the present case, when two Prophets speaking contraries, contend whether of them is the true Prophet.
- Hananiah the Prophet took the yoke from Jeremiah his neck, and brake it, saying, &c.* He carryed himself most insolently and boldly; insomuch that the people being ready to hear any thing, whereby it might be detracted from Jeremiah his prophesying, were in danger to be seduced to think him a false, and Hananiah a true Prophet. For how else durst he have gone on from prophesying to so high high a degree of opposing Jeremiah in his signe, breaking it, and saying, In the Name of the Lord of Hosts, the God of Israel, that so the yoke of Nebuchadnezzar should be broken within two years? For if the yoke taken and worn by Jeremiah were a signe appointed of God, his breaking it was a plain fighting against God; and therefore they might think he durst not do so, except God had sent him. It was therefore a most desperate fact in him, and a most dangerous temptation to the people to subvert their Faith in Jeremiah his words. Yet for the present Jeremiah departed, as not thinking it best to contend, till he knew further of the minde of the Lord, and then he came again, and threatned him with death, as he was well worthy.

Thou hast broken the yokes of wood, thou hast made for them yokes of Iron. That is, tell Hananiah according to the first words, and do thou Jeremiah according to the last: make and wear Iron yokes in token of an harder subjection of all the Nations threatned to Nebuchadnezzar. For whereas wooden yokes were appointed before, that were weaker and lighter; to shew, that if they would have yielded at command, their servitude should have been the lighter; but now being hardened to stand out, it should be more grievous by being carried into other lands; whereas yielding, they should have been still permitted to dwell in their own land, onely paying to Nebuchadnezzar a Tribute. If it be said, But how had the people deserved to have their misery thus aggravated by the petulancy of one man Hananiah? I answer, he was a means to harden them more thereby, and this was also cordiall to them; therefore it was just with God too deal thus by them. And all that desire to hear pleasing things spoken unto them, and reject sound Doctrine, because it crosseth their humours, shall be likewise left to obduration and horrible destruction. And it is to be noted, that this fact of a false Prophet, took such impression in their corrupt hearts, that although Hananiah dyed the same year as Jeremiah threatned, yet there followed after that no relenting in them, but they persisted in their obstinacie to the end.

CHAP. XXIX.

Jeremiah writes Letters to the captivated Jews in Babylon, who were carried away with Iechoniah, 2 Kings 24. 12. and he sent them by Elsah, the son of Shaphan. For having prophesied Chap. 25. of a Captivity to continue seventy years; but being herein opposed by Hananiah, a false Prophet, Chap. 28. he thought it necessary (lest they of the Captivity hearing thereof, should be stirred up to tumultuate against the State wherein they lived, and to seek immediately a liberty of returning) to give them warning to be quiet, and patiently to bear their Exile, during their time set by the Lord, being comforted by the hope upon good ground to return then, and enjoy their own Countrey again. For the men by whom he wrote thus, they are said to be Embassadors sent by Zedekiah to King Nebuchadnezzar, who had made him King, when he carried away Ichojakim into Babylon. Therefore being made King at his will, and being for this cause a Tributary unto him, and not knowing how long it would be his pleasure to continue him in this royall dignity, because he had with him Ichojakim, touching whom Hananiah had prophesied, that he should return again within two years, he thought it necessary to send unto him, to shew his obsequiousness, that his favour might still be towards him, to keep him still in his place, and Ichojakim there in prison. And upon this consideration he might well condescend, that his Messengers should carry Jeremiah his Letters to them of the Captivity, that hereby they might be moved quietly with their King to abide there, and not think yet of returning to his disturbance, that he might live all his dayes in this honour in peace. To this effect almost Calvin, and Lyra, Hugo, Th. Aquinas add, that these men were sent to Babylon with Tribute in the first year of Zedekiah his reign, which is not improbable. Some move a needless question here, Whether

- 2 Chron. 36. the Captives carried away anno 4th of Jehojakim be not here meant, giving sentence, that they are, and not those that were carried with Jehojakim. But we read not in the said fourth year of Jehojakim of any that were carried away, but onely of Vessels of the house of the Lord, and of the King bound to be carried; but he was not at that time: Wherefore Ierom without question saith, That the Captives who are carried away with Jehojakim, are meant.
- Verf. 7. Pray to the Lord for us; for in the peace thereof ye shall have peace. According to this 1 Tim. 2. we are commanded to pray for Kings, that under them we may lead a godly life in all quietness and honesty, and yet the Kings were then Heathen, and enemies to Christians. Hereby we learn then, that the vices of Kings are not a Superfedeas to our obedience to them, but we must both be subject notwithstanding, and ex animo pray to God for them, as the Saints of God constantly did in the Primitive Church; and not rebell against them, or plot their destruction, as Papiſts have impiously done sundry times. For in their peace, that is in the Kingdome wherein we live is in a prosperous estate, we fare the better, although the King be a Tyrant, because all things in time of peace and fruitfulness do more abound. Yet this was not true to the Jewes without limitation, but for the terme of seventy years; for this terme being expired, Babylon came into misery, and the time of the Jewes felicity for their deliverance by Cyrus subduing that State, came, as was promised: when these 70 years began and ended, is not agreed amongst Expositors; but of this see my Comment upon 2 Kings 25.8.
- Verf. 8. Let not your Prophets or Diviners, that are in the midst of you, deceive you. Of Prophets amongst others carried away from Jerusalem, see verse 1. These it seemeth, took upon them amongst those of the Captivity to promise a speedy return, as Hananiah did at Jerusalem; and of three of them the Prophet speaks verse 21. 24. by name, viz. Abab, and Zedekiah, and Shemaiah, threatening them diversly.
- Verf. 21. Touching Abab and Zedekiah, they did not onely prophesy falsely in the name of the Lord, but were also filthy Adulterers; and therefore Jeremiah threateneth them, that they should be judged accordingly, by being roasted in the fire. Some will have these two to be the two Elders, that accused Susanna and were found out by Daniel to be false Conspirators, and therefore suffered death by starving: but both the manner of their death differing from the death of these two, and their Title Elders, but these Prophets were the contrary: and therefore Ierom rejects it as a Fable: For Nebuchadnezzar his putting of them to so cruell death, he might haply, as Calvin conjectureth, be incented against them for seeking to stir up trouble amongst his people, by their prophesying of a speedy return: but for so much as even Heathens lead onely by the light of nature, abominate the the foul sin of Adultry, it is to be held that the King was most exasperated hereby, as being the more abominable in them pretending greatest holiness, as being men that took upon them to be Prophets led by divine inspiration. And God doubtless had an over-ruling hand in it, to terrifie the more from such horrible wickednesses; and by the form of cursing taken up, hereupon to notifie the foul conditions of false Prophets and Idolaters to all the world; as indeed Idolatry and Adultry go commonly together, as they come both under the same name of Adultery; whereof see for example Iezabel, and Maacha the mother of Asa; and the Nuns, Friars and Priests amongst the Idolatrous Papiſts.
- Note.
- Verf. 24. Touching Shemaiah the Nebelamite, interpreted by Kimbi the Dreamer, as the word signifieth, it is said, that he had written against Jeremiah so Zephaniah, and the other Priests, flatteringly telling him, that he was by God set up in the room of Jehojadah; of whom 2 Kings 11. 18. that by by his means Matthan the Priest of Baal was slain, to stir him up to doe the like by Jeremiah, as a false Prophet; whereas indeed he was not high-Priest, as Jehojadah had been; but the second Priest, 2 Kings 25. 18. For Seraias was the high-Priest: and he incites Zephaniah against Jeremiah, saying; For every one that is mad, so put him in the stocks. Whereby we may gather, that wicked men counted the Prophets of God mad, because they were strangely moved by the Spirit of God after the manner of arrestis, that are rapt so, that they do madly, as Saul, when the Spirit came upon him, cast off his cloaths, 1 Sam. 19. 24. And according to this, 2 Kings 9. 11. one said to Iehu, touching a Prophet that came unto him to anoint him King, What said this mad fellow to thee? And herein sometimes false Prophets were like unto the true; and therefore the second to the high-Priest had authority given him to judge of such; and finding them false, to put them in stocks or prison, to be brought forth afterwards to be adjudged to death, if they were found false. And therefore Pashur, who was in this Office before, dealt thus by Jeremiah, Ch. 20. but most injuriously, and was therefore threatened, and it seems, because there was now another in that place, deposed. But Shemaiah would have had him to have done likewise; for which he also is threatened, verse 31. with the destruction both of himself and his posterity. And it is further said, that Shemaiah wrote also to the Priests, that they might herein be assistant to Zephaniah, to which they were prone enough of themselves; as we may see in many other places, especially Chap. 26. 8.

CHAP. XXX.

HERE because the Prophecie before going of deliverance at the end of seventy years might be in danger otherwise to be forgotten, and so the faithfull might want the comfort hereof for want of the knowledge of it, especially another generation thirty or forty years after, the Lord commandeth Jeremiah to write it in a Book. And, as appears by that which followeth, not only the words which he had received from him, which tended to comfort; but first of the words of terror, verse 4, 5. We have heard a voice of trembling and fear. Wherein the Lord puts upon him the person of the people, teaching them how they should have been affected at his threatening of judgements before going. To exprels the greatness of which fear he compares men under these calamities threatened to an woman in travell, holding her sides, and making a grievous moan. And then plainly sheweth, that it should be such, as there was never any like unto it; for it should be the time of Jacobs trouble, that is, of his posterity, and he calleth it, the time of his trouble; because whatsoever they had formerly suffered was nothing in comparison of this, when the City and Temple should be destroyed, the Kingdome of David abolished, and the holy Land made desolate, and left lying so for seventy years. But he shall be saved out of it. Verse 8. For I will break his yoke from thy neck. All that hath been said hitherto is to make way to speak of the comfort, that this deliverance might be the more magnified: for the greater the misery of a people is, the more doth Gods mercy shine in their deliverance, and setting in an happy estate, not only according to the time of their suffering, but for ever: to intimate which he saith, That strangers shall no more serve themselves of them.

But they shall serve the Lord, and David their King, whom I will raise up unto them. In which words he leapeth suddenly from the joyfull tidings of their deliverance out of Captivity under the Caldees, to another far more joyfull by Christ Jesus, whom he setteth forth by the name of David, because he was his seed, and is said to sit upon his Throne to rule, Isa. 9. 7. For that the Messiah is here prophecied of, all, both Jewes and Christians teach; yea Calvin himself, that impugnes the application of other things here before spoken of to the Messiah, yet consents, that this is a prophecie concerning his Kingdome; noting, that simply to be delivered from the servitude of strangers tyranny, is not a benefit; but when being delivered, a people is brought under a better government. Because the case of such as are under an Anarchy, so that every man may do what he listeth, is worse than to be under the cruellest Tyrant that ever lived, if he were a devill in the shape of a man; but to be delivered from strangers, and to be under God and his Son Jesus Christ, ruling by godly Vicegerents, is the height of worldly felicity. That this cannot be understood of the time of their return from Babylon appeareth, because then they served not King David, although they were under the Government of one of his Line, Zerubbabel; for he was but a Prince substituted by the Persian; neither had the Jews ever after an absolute King, till Christ came, whom they ungratefully rejected and crucified. For although Alexander in the time of the Assamoneans made himself King, yet his reigne was most uncomfortable, by reason of the Civil wars betwixt him and the Pharisees; as I have shewed in my continuation of the History from Nehemiah to the destruction of Jerusalem. Again, Strangers still served themselves of them, sometime the Kings of Syria, sometime the Kings of Egypt, under whom they were. And lastly, although Judab returned then, yet Israel did not, as is promised verse 3. that they should serve the Lord and his King Christ, whom he set up, as is said here, Whom I will raise up unto them.

Vers. 10.

And as v. 9. he passeth from one deliverance to another, from that from Babylon, to that by Christ; so verse 10. I will save thee from afar. That is, by bringing thee from Babylon, a Countrey so far off from Jerusalem; and thy seed shall return out of Captivity: which is spoken of their coming from Babylon, is also a Prophecy with another far greater annexed unto it; None shall make thee afraid. For they that returned from Babylon were many times much affrighted by their enemies, as is shewed in Nehemiah; but through Christ such undaunted courage came to the faithfull, that his Apostles feared no threatnings of Tyrants, but rejoyced when they were threatned and suffered. Some because the Israelites never came in yet to serve Christ, but some Jewes onely, and they but a few; whereas this seems to be spoken of the generality of the Nation, hold, that this is a Prophecy of a time yet to come; when as the Apostle saith, Rom. 11. All Israel shall be saved. That is, when the fulness of the Gentiles shall come in. But about this there are two gross errors, one of the Rabbins, teaching that the Messiah is not yet come, but then shall, and gather together all Israel from all parts of the world, and set up a most glorious Kingdome in Judea: another of some Ancients imbraced by the Papiists, that Antichrist coming, the Jewes shall be gathered to him, as to the Messiah; but Enoch and Elias shall be sent to preach, and do miracles, whereby they shall be converted to Christ, and fall from Antichrist, for which they shall suffer much at his hands, but be soon delivered; for the whole time of his reign shall be but three years and an half. For that this, as well as the other of the Rabins, is a grosse error, is manifest; seeing Antichrist is already come, and hath long reigned, even the Pope of Rome; to whom all things spoken of Antichrist doe so agree, as that some Papiists themselves confesse him to be the Antichrist, as the French, and so he hath long agoe been proclaimed in Paris. And Gregory the first, the most pious and learned of all the Roman Bishops, gave a sign of him before, whereby he might easily be known to be the man, viz. his taking upon him to be universal Bishop; as Gregory the seventh, one of his successors, by the help of Phocas a murderer, first did. But these errors being rejected, we may safely hold the conversion of the Jewish nation to the faith of Christ towards the end of the world to be here pointed at, whereof Isaiab also spake oft-times in his Prophecie. At what time the faithfull shall live without fear of their enemies, and the Israelites in particular, never to be brought under again by any humane power, as they were after Ioshuah, in the time of Judges, then of Kings, and finally of the Romans, being disperfed into all Countreys to this day: and that the mercy finally to be shewed is meant, see verse 24. In the latter dayes ye shall consider.

Vers. 11.

For though I make a full end of all Nations whither I have scattered thee, yet I will not make a full end of thee. The cause why the Lord will deal so favourably with Jacob, as hath been said, is here shewed, viz. his singular love and favour towards them; for which he would not deal by them, as by their enemies, the the Babylonians, who are utterly destroyed; as I have shewed in writing upon I/4. 13. 14. And this partial dealing with the Jewes, and saving a remnant of them, hath been often spoken of before; and where the destroying of them is sometime spoken of also, as an utter destruction for ever, it is spoken in respect of the wicked, of which sort the generality of the Nation was, a few only that feared God scarce to be found out, being excepted; as we may see Chap. 5. and 1 Kings 19.

For thy wound is incurable. Here, and so forth to verse 16. to magnifie Gods mercy the more, he setteth forth the desperate case of the Jewish Nation, by reason of their sins; that it appearing to be so, but deliverance and restitution to happiness for the destruction of their cruell enemies then coming, they might be the more stirred up to give him thanks and praise. For when we finde it said, Thy wound is incurable: and yet verse 11. In measure I have corrected thee. But verse 14. I have wounded thee with the wound of an enemy, a cruell one. Here may seem to be a contradiction, and it may be said, How can both these be true? But it is easily answered: Thy wound is incurable, both because thou canst not of thy self find out how to heal it; neither can the Nations, in whom thou hast formerly trusted as thy friends, yet the Lord can and will doe it. And the Prophet doth the rather set forth their case thus as desperate, to meet with the vain confidence that they had in their false Prophets, promising them deliverance within 2 year; to beat them from which, he thought he could not speak to much, as Calvin noteth, who also, for incurable, hath grievous; thy wound is grievous, holding that the word שׁוֹן here used signifieth gravitas, and cannot rightly be otherwise translated. But because a wound incurable is grievous above all others, it is no error to render it so, especially because verse 13. he addeth for further Explanation, None to binde it up, no medicines to heal it; or according to the Vulgar Latin, no utility of sanations, word for word according to the Hebrew.

I have wounded thee with the wound of an enemy, and with the chastisement of a cruell one. The miseries of the Jewes here spoken of were by the Caldeans; but because God would have them know and consider his hand in it, he takes it upon himself, the Caldees being but his instruments in all their cruelty exercising against them, and by them he was provoked to scourge them for their sins. But verse 16. he saith; Therefore all that devoure thee shall be devoured; that is, Notwithstanding the Caldees being brought upon thee by me to exercise such cruelty, they shall be devoured by others, that is, by Medes and Persians; because that although I did it in Justice, yet they in pride and cruelty, as was also shewed before.

I will bring again the Captivity of Jacobs Tents. Having promised salvation to Israel, verse 17. Now he sheweth how he should be saved, viz. by being brought out of Captivity: and he speaks of his Tents, because the habitations in Babylon, where most probably like unto Tents, being of the meanest sort: And the City shall be built upon her former heap; That is, where the City Jerusalem stood before, but now lay upon ruinous heap, in the self same place it shall be built: In which words he speaks of the state of things after their return from Babylon under Cyrus. At what time he saith, that they should praise God, and multiply again, and have Congregations.

And their Governour shall proceed from the midst of them, and he shall draw near unto me, and approach; for who is this that engaged his heart to approach unto me? Here most Expositors by their Ruler understand Christ, that should in his due time spring up from the Jewes themselves, as supreme; whereas they had alwayes since the time of their Captivity been under strangers; yet Ierom doth not understand it of Christ, but at first concerning Zerubbabel, in whom it was fulfilled in part, and afterwards perfectly in Christ. Some apply it altogether to him and to the Jewes in those dayes; as Theodore, and Thomas Aquinas. But that of Ierom seemeth to be best, and to the words of verse 18, 19, 20 are spoken also of both, the first being but a Figure of the other. And being understood of Zerubbabel, by these words; He shall draw near unto me, and I will cause him to approach. He commends that Prince for his forwardness in returning and leading the people to their old land, to build the holy City again, and the Temple: For then God caused him to come near unto him. And then in way of admiration, the more to commend his prompt and ready minde, he saith, Who is this that engaged his heart to approach unto me? As if he were for this singularly to be praised. And the Hebrew expression is to be noted, which is not one word alone, but two, to set him forth a rare man, וְהוּא הָיָה, This he; Because as Calvin noteth, many by continuing long in Babylon, were so taken with the love of that Countrey, that they had no heart to return to the Holy Land, and Temple; and many that returned had no heart to do this, being moved through piety, whereby he is moved that engageth his heart to approach to God: being understood of Christ, the meaning is, that he approached unto God so as never any man did, or can do, in the perfect fulfilling of his will, being without all stain or spot of sin or imperfection, as the best are not, neither hath any else ever been. For the first words of the Verse, Their Nobles, Hebrew it is His Captain, Vulgar Latin, Fortis, or, Dux ejus & dominator ex eo. Calvin follows that of Fortis; and therefore the N. Tr. rendring it Their Nobles, erreth.

He concludeth with comfort to the godly; Ye shall be my people; But with terror to the wicked, against whom his wrath shall go out as a Whirl-wind. And although little faith was now given to these things, yet he addeth further, and saith; In the latter dayes ye shall consider it. That is, when all things are come to pass, as I have spoken, and the wicked, although now in prosperity, shall lie in misery.

Vers. 24.

And this he saith, as to comfort the faithfull, who although they believed, yet met with many brunts of temptation, for which they had need of further confirmation, so to the terror of the wicked, that would not believe; for he sheweth hereby, that they should be made to believe it by wofull experience. By the latter dayes, he meaneth either towards the end of the world, when the wicked enemies of the truth, not onely Babylon properly so called, but also mysticall Babylon, Rev. 17. shall be destroyed, and the Turk also, the Jewes being converted that yet remain in unbelief; and all false worship shall every where be put down: or at the day of Judgement, when the wicked shall too late see into their extream folly, and sorrow therefore bootlesly; and the faithfull shall by experience finde the promises of God all verified in being brought to everlasting happiness to their unspeakable comfort; as is notably set forth in the Book of the Wisdom of Solomon, Chap. 2, 3, 4, 5.

CHAP. XXXI.

Vers. 1.

IN this Chapter the Prophet amplifieth further that which he had Prophesied of Chap. 30. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22. for having said in the name of the Lord, Ye shall be my people, and I will be your God: Now he saith more fully; I will be the God of all the Families of Israel, and they shall be my people. Which because it is the same with verse 22. before going, some annex unto Chapter 30. and begin this with verse 2. But we shall not need so to do; for by the consent of all Expositors that Prophecie and this are all one, as is also intimated in the first words, [ at the same time: ] That is, in the beginning of Zedekiah his reign, as Chap. 27. and 28. is expressly said. And he saith, All the families of Israel. That this Prophecy might not be thought to pertain only to the Kingdome of Judah, consisting but of two Tribes, whereof they all were, that came out of Babylon, and none of them of the ten. Yet some will have it a Prophecie onely of that deliverance, but they are confuted plainly by the very first words; and it appears manifestly to be of that far greater deliverance to come by Jesus Christ, through whom all Israel shall come in to be the people of God again finally and be saved, Rom. 11: 26. Yet as I said upon Chap. 30. the Prophecie is mixed, some-sometimes pointing at the deliverance out of the North; and sometimes this greatest deliverance by Christ, as many Expositors agree.

But before he proceedeth to the Prophecie of deliverance, he makes way unto it verse 2, 3. saying, The people that were left of the sword found grace in the wilderness, &c. something like unto which, see before Isaiab 51. 10. and 41. 1, 2, 3. As if he had said, Those of Israel that survived in the wilderness, wherein many were consumed for their Rebellions and Unbelief; were, taken and brought under Josuah into the Land of Canaan, the old Inhabitants being expelled, and rested and dwelt there, after that they had bin long kept in the wilderness, even forty years, to the admiration of all men, although the work seemed impossible, even to the Israelites themselves. Therefore that which is now prophesied of, shall also by Gods Almighty power be accomplished in his due time: For these words, Even Israel when I went to cause him to rest, Hebr. it is, Israel, going to cause him to rest. Where [I] must be understood, or the Lord, going before him in a fiery Pillar, and a Cloud, and by a divine power making way for him thorow Jordan, and into Jericho, by casting down the strong and high Walls thereof, and the rest of the land by fighting from heaven for them.

The Lord hath appeared of old unto me. Hebrew from afar: But it may be understood, as in respect of place, so in respect of time; therefore this Translation is good; and thus Calvin also renders it: and the Vulgar Latin hath it [Longè]. It is spoken as by Israel, in way of acknowledgement of the truth of that which was said verse 2. But yet as complaining touching the present, as if he had said; It is true indeed, thou hast of old appeared doing for me according to thine Almighty power; but what is that unto me now, I being in misery and having no help? so Cald. Vatabl. Calvin. To this the Lord answers in the next words, I have loved thee with a perpetual love; therefore I have drawn thee with mercy; or, I have prolonged unto thee mercy. That is, I was not so gracious unto thee once and no more, but from time to time, delivering thee by Judges when thou wert oppressed, and after setting up Kings to fight thy battels, and to subdue thine enemies, as David, Asa, Hezekiab, and Josaphat. Jerom, Raban, and Hugo expound it of Gods being far from their help, when they were destroyed by the Romans; Lyra, of the time, it will be long before the Lord appears for my deliverance, viz. at the end of the world, or of seventy years. But the true sense hath been already given, and these agree not to the words.

I will build thee again. Having said somewhat to establish their faith of things done of old, now he cometh to the Prophecie, which is the same with Ch. 30. 18. onely verse 5. and in the end of this verse he amplifieth it, saying, Thou shalt again be adorned with Tabrets, and go forth in Dances, and there, there shall be the voice of Thanksgiving, and of them that make merry, verse 19. Which is all one. And verse 5. Thou shalt plant Vines in the Mountains of Samaria: Than which nothing is more chearing the heart. For the next words, They that plant them shall eat them as common things, Hebr. it is וְלִלְלָם, They shall prophane them. For to prophane, and commonly to use a thing, is in the Hebrew phrase all one; and because eating is not proper in speaking of the fruit of the Vine, but drinking, I should rather render, The Planters shall commonly drink thereof, there shall be so great abundance. Calvin thinks, that the word prophaning is used either because that by the Law trees were to be counted, as uncircumcised, and so un sanctified to the fourth year; or because the Heathens possessing that land so long, prophaned it and the fruits thereof. But of fleeing to such reasons I see no reason, sith the sense before given may suffice.

I will bring them from the North Countrey, and gather them from the Coasts of the earth, the blinde, and the lame, the woman great with child, and in child-bed. By the North, is commonly meant Babylon; by the coasts of the earth, all other parts where Israel was scattered; therefore here not onely the deliverance of the Jewes out of Babylon, but of all Israel from all other parts is prophesied of which should be long after by Christ, for which he concludeth, verse 9. saying,

I am;

1 Tim. 4. 8.

I am a Father to Israel and Ephraim is my first-born : For by this name was the Kingdom of the ten Tribes commonly called. For the great company that should return, verse 8. This further implies the same, and is not unlike to verse 19. of Chapter 30. For the blinds and the lame coming, which cannot the one sort see, nor the other go; and great belied women, &c. This is added, to shew what manner of deliverance this should be, viz. spirituall; of which the bodily blinde and lame are as capable as the seeing and sound of limbs. But of this see enough before Chap. 3. 18. where Judah and Israel are spoken of as going together to the land given to their Fathers; so here; I am a Father to Israel, and Ephraim is my first-born; both the Kingdome of two Tribes, and that of ten may well be understood, Ephraim being called his first-born, in alluding to Jacobs blessing of Ephraim above Manasseb, though he were younger: thus making him as the first-born in preferring him before the other brother. Some resolve the doubt, how Ephraim, that is, the Kingdome of the ten Tribes had this performed to it, (sith none of Israel, but of Judah onely returned; and so they onely, some few of them received the Gospel afterwards) by saying, that some of Israel lived mixed among the Samaritans, and so altogether would be counted the children of Israel; and accordingly it is here spoken of them, it being a prophetic of their Conversion to the faith, of which we read John 4. and Acts 8. and of their glorying to be called of their Fathers, as common to them and the Jews, in the womans saying to Jesus, Our Fathers worshipped in this Mountain, because Jacob had done so. However when they were converted, they might worthily be thus spoken of for their coming into the faith at the first, which makes God the Father of any people, and them his first-born, as being his heires. According to this it hath been fulfilled already in part which is here prophesied, and shall be perfectly, when there shall be a more famous conversion of all that Nation; as hath been before said.

And they shall not sorrow any more at all. From verse 9. hitherto, he speaks of a most joyfull time to come to Israel, that he should be redeemed from the hands of a stronger then himself verse 11. and this must be published to the Nations verse 10. whereby is meant the deliverance from the devill by the death of Christ; for of him the Lord speaketh, as a strong man armed, and the publishing of it to the Nations is to none other end, but to shew, that the Gospel, whereby this is effected, should come to them also. And then all should come together to the height of Zion, and sing, that is, to the Church figured out by Zion, being filled with unspeakable joy, for the Corn, Wine and Oyle, &c. That is, for spirituall comfort; which that we might the better understand, are set forth, under the names of Corn, Wine and Oyle, because what these or any thing else here enumerated are to the body, the like is grace to the soul, yea the means of the Word and Sacrament, both which are set forth by Bread or Corn and Wine, and by Oyle the gift of the Holy Ghost, by the encrease of the Flock and the Herd, the encrease of the faithfull: or taking it as the words are; The young of the Flock; Fat Lambs, Kids, and Calves, which are delicious Meats; as the comforts of the Gospel are set forth by a Feast of Fat things, Prov. 9. Mat. 22. Luke 15. And when it is thus, the soul is as a watered Garden: That is, wherein waters never fail to make it fruitfull, but abound continually, and so there can be no sorrow any more, which is destitute of spirituall consolation, for this, that God will turn all things to good to his. For verse 9. he saith, That they shall come with weeping and supplication: weeping for their sins, and in thinking upon him whom they have pierced. And they shall go by the Rivers of Waters. Being the same with this of a watered garden; unlesse we understand Baptism also herein intimated: thorow which all the faithfull go to everlasting joy. And yet, as Calvin hath it, temporall blessings are also here promised; For godliness hath the promise both of this life, and of that which is to come: And the reason why the state of the Church is outwardly no more prosperous, is for sin abounding therein, and for particulars, that be truly godly, yet either they have their imperfections of covetousness, too much love of the world, pride, or fleshly lusts, that that have need by crosses to be corrected, or if they be perfect, as Job, God sometimes draweth forth some of them, as his Champions to fight with temptations of great and grievous sufferings, that his grace of faith and patience, and Christian magnanimity and courage for the truth may shine the more in them, to draw others into an admiration of their constancy to their conversion, and the working of a greater weight of glory in the world to come, to such sufferers. And of this sort were the Apostles and innumerable Martyrs in the primitive time, and all the godly that in any place still suffer by persecutors, yet not merely for conscience, but for a good conscience illuminated by the Word, and not by Enthousiasm, or a new pretended light, divers from the light of the Word, according to which If they speak not, it is because they have no light in them. And it is not to be thought, but that the faithful did in like manner look at spiritual comforts, when all blessings of this life were promised to such as keep Gods Commandments, and not at them only, as some think. For Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Moses and Joseph with many more, of whom a Catalogue is made Heb. 11. looked for a City not made with hands, for which they were most patient in their sufferings, and remained still elevated to heaven in their enjoyments of these worldly things when ever they most abounded with them, for which hear one David speaking for all, Psal. 4.7. Thou hast put more gladnesse into my heart, then in the time when corn and wine increased. And therefore being in exile, at what time he was debarred from the comforts of the Sanctuary, he complains of this only, and not of his being driven from his sumptuous Palace, treasures wherewith he abounded, and royal state.

I will satisfy the soul of the Priest with farnesse. In setting forth the affluence of all worldly blessings, he mentioneth the Priests in particular, as a principal part of the state, who amongst the people of God alwaies fared the better, the more Gods blessings abounded towards the people amongst whom they ministered and taught, by reason of tithes and offerings coming in in greater abundance, as in the daies of Hezekiah, that was so greatly blessed, and the whole Kingdom under him; and also in the time of Nehemiah, Chap. 13. 12. For without Priests what doth any Nation differ from the Heathen? and when maintenance fails them, what heart can they have to stand in Gods house to minister? For when their tithes were not paid them, it is noted as a thing that much troubled Nehemiah. Chap. 13. 11. that the Priests were fled every one to his own field. Which would be considered by them that would put down this ancient custom of paying tithes in our Kingdom, and introduce a benevolence, whereas if for any inconvenience espied herein such a thing should be done, it cannot be otherwise lawfull, but by converting them into money, and that not by deduction, but by addition, as of old it was by God himself ordered, that whosoever would turn his Tithes into money, must adde a fifth part thereunto, even as in case of a trespassse done to any man in respect of his goods, Levit. 6. 5. The Vulgar Latine, Inebriabo animam sacerdotum, expounded by Jerom of the Spirit, wherewith the Apostles were filled at the coming down of the holy Ghost upon them, Act. 2. So that they seemed to many to be drunken, because they spake so strangely; and the word used properly signifieth to inebriate. But although this be principally intended, as in speaking of corn, wine and oil, yet worldly blessings are not to be excluded, but to be taken in also, as pertaining to the faithfull, as hath been already shewed.

A voice was heard in Ramah, weeping and lamentation. Here the Prophet to magnifie the mercy of God the more in the deliverance of Israel, makes a commemoration of their lamentable condition, when the ten Tribes set forth by Ephraim, were carried away into Captivity, from thence proceeding to prophesie of their return. Touching Ramah, some take it for an appellative, and render it an High-place, but it is better taken by others for a City in Benjamin, according to Josh. 18. 25. of which read also Judg. 10. 19. and Jer. 40. 1.

Luk. 15.

Jeremiah being bound amongst other Captives, was brought to Ramah, and loosed there. It was, saith Hugo, twelve miles from Jerusalem, and the way to Caldea, and so it might be also to Assyria, seeing both are spoken of, as lying North. The meaning therefore is, That the case of the Kingdom of Israel was most lamentable, making, if it were possible, the dead to lament it. For Rachel was dead many years before, being the beloved wife of Jacob, by whom he had Joseph and Benjamin, two fathers of the Tribes of Israel, and that the principal, one of the sons of Joseph, Ephraim being the head of all the rest, yet their mother Rachel by a Prosopopeia is brought in weeping for their misery at that time. But as great as it was, and still continued, he saith, Refrain from weeping, for thy work shall be rewarded, and they shall come again from the land of the enemy, Mat. 2.18. This is applied to the children then slain in Bethlehem of Judah; for he saith, Then was fulfilled that which was said by Jeremiah, A voice was heard in Ramah, &c. But it is to be understood, that it was fulfilled the second time, and that more lamentably then the first, because now Infants were murdered that were innocents, then wicked rebels against God, who never ceased to provoke the Lord by their sins. For sometime a thing is said to be fulfilled, properly spoken of before, as that of the Virgins conceiving, Mat. 1.22. sometime figuratively, as Heb. 1.6. I will be unto him a Father, and he shall be to me a Sonne, being properly spoken of Solomon, 2 Sam. 7.14. sometime when the like is done again, as Isa. 29.13. applied to the Pharisees, as fulfilled in them, Mat. 15. and so is this, Mat. 2.18. Origen, Augustine and Hugo apply this Prophecie to that slaughter made of the Tribe of Benjamin, Judg. 20.19. and to that Mat. 2. Jerom tells of some Hebrews that understand it of the Jews destruction by the Romans, which were lead by the way of Ephrata, where Rachel lay buried. Jerom, Rabanus and Hugo consent in the first. But the Caldee Paraphrast, Vatablus, Isidor and Thomas Aquinas, understand it of the Kingdom of Judah consisting of Judah and Benjamin, carried by Ramah of Benjamin, the son of Rachel captive, as Chap. 40.1. is shewed, and so take it for a Prophecie of that which was to come. And if it be thus taken, the Preter-tense is put for the future, as is usual in Prophecies. And this seemeth to be best, although Ephraim were spoken of before vers. 9. and after vers. 18. because those two Tribes only returned, as is here prophesied vers. 16. and if it be thus taken, Prophecies touching deliverance out of Babylon, and touching deliverance by Christ are intermingled, 1. That by Christ being spoken of vers. 4, 5, &c. to vers. 15. then that out of Babylon, vers. 15, 16, 17. and after this again that by Christ, vers. 18. to vers. 23, &c. Touching these words vers. 16. Thy work shall be rewarded, The meaning is nothing else, but that according to the sorrow which thou hast had for thy children carried away, thou shalt have joy for their return again. There shall be hope in the end, Hebr. In thy posterity, or those shall come of thee afterwards בְּאֵרֶךְ יָמֶיךָ, and he saith, There shall be hope then, not to exclude those of the time intervening from hope, but because then the thing hoped for should be accomplished; so Calvin also.

I have heard Ephraim bemoaning himself. Here the Prophet returns again to the ten Tribes, of whose deliverance he had spoken before vers. 9, 10, &c. shewing the manner of it, by coming first to a sight and sense of their sins by their grievous sufferings, grace working in their hearts withall. For God chastiseth them whom he loveth, and hereby many times brings them to repentance that before went astray, as David, Psal. 119.71. and blessed are they whose worldly sorrow is thus turned into godly: of their weeping see before Vers. 9. Turn thou me, Here is the efficient cause of our turning by affliction denoted, God must work this grace by his Spirit in us, or else we shall never attain it, but yet there must be a co-operation in our will, Turn me (O Lord) I and every one that would be turned and saved must pray.

Set thee up way-marks. Ephraim being truly penitent, Gods compassion is towards him, as the Prodigals fathers to him, vers. 20. and hereupon he bid-

deth him set up way-marks; the meaning being nothing else, but that he should not do as a man that goeth in a way, in which he never thinketh to go again; passe thorow it without once taking notice of any remarkable thing therein, whereby he may help himself to remember it, and go right when ever he cometh into that way again, but like one that makes account to return by the same, marks every thing, whereby his remembrance may be holpen at his return. And this he saith to quicken their faith, because they were so hard of belief; as if a father should say to his son, mark well this way, for thou must one day go by it again; so the Lord in thus saying assureth his people of their deliverance, although not altogether according to the letter, yet to the same effect, only a spiritual deliverance being understood by and thorow Christ turned unto. Jerom and some others will have it the same with that Isa.

Hieron.

40. Prepare the way of the Lord, make his paths strait.

How long wilt thou go about, &c. The Lord hath created a new thing in the earth, A woman shall compass a man. The person to whom he speaks thus, is called backsliding Daughter, by the word שׁוֹבֶרֶת not much unlike to which is the word רִסְרִסָּה, Shall compass, there being some Paronomasie betwixt them. It is hereby implied, that it should be long before that Israel would come in and imbrace the faith, being for many years first carried after a Messiah to come against the plain evidence of Scripture, Miracles and Heaven it self, declaring Jesus to be the man. But at length the vail should be taken from before their eyes, that by the eye of Faith they might see this new wonderfull thing happening under the New Testament, of a womans compassing a man, that is, having him inclosed in her womb, she being a Virgin, and having never known man. And this is generally understood of the Virgin Mary, bearing her Son Jesus, for which the word גִּבּוֹר is used to signifie this man, that is, one strong and mighty, because he was so above all other men, as appeared by his mighty works. Calvin saith, That this is worthily derided by the Hebrews, and inventeth another, viz. the Jew, who was weak as a woman in comparison of the Babylonian, shall yet prevail against him: But forsomuch as this was no such new thing, as to be thus spoken of, for a greater wonder had been wrought, when Moses compassed and straightned Pharaoh so by his miracles, that he forced him to let Israel go, and the Jew indeed did nothing for his own deliverance out of Babylon, but Cyrus that mighty Champion; this of Calvin cannot stand. He also mentioneth another of the Hebrews, a woman the Synagogue or Church of the Jews, shall come about her man, or Husband God again by turning unto him. But before this is that of Oleaster to be preferred, the Synagogue of the Jews being oft compared to a woman shall come about her man, or Husband Christ Jesus at the last, by being converted unto him, whom she so long most unkindly forsook, being yet most lovingly invited unto him, according to Cant. 3. 2. I will rise and go about the streets of the City to seek him, whom my soul loveth; and Chap. 8. 1. Psal. 7. 8. The congregation shall compass thee. Isa. 11. 5. Righteousnesse shall be his Girdle, expounded by the Caldee, The righteous shall compass him about as a Girdle.

Here and vers. 24, 25. the Prophet returns again to speak of the comfortable condition of the Kingdom of Judah, after their deliverance from the Babylonish Captivity, it shall then be said thereof, The Lord blesse thee thou habitation of justice, and mountain of holinesse, intimating that there should be just Judges, instead of unrighteous Kings; of which see before Isa. 1. 26.

Vers. 23.

Then I awaked as out of a sleep, and I saw, and my sleep was sweet unto me. Some expound these words, as spoken in the person of the people; some by Jeremiah, and some by Christ. Of the people who were buried, as it were, in a dead sleep all the time of their Captivity, but then awaking they were comforted, as a man that hath had a sweet sleep. Of Jeremiah, to whom this unspeakable comfort of the deliverance from Babylon, and after from sin by Christ was revealed by dream, or of Christ, who is brought in thus speaking after his passion, being past, and he raised up again to life, it was but as a sleep unto him. Calvin will have Jeremiah his heaviness for miseries of his people fore-seen hear meant, but foreseeing also their deliverance, and the most joyful deliverance by Christ before-spoken of, all his former heaviness was but as a sweet sleep unto him, and this I prefer as best.

Vers. 27.

I will sow the house of Israel, and of Judah with the seed of man. That is, Men and beasts shall dwell in great multitudes upon their Land that is now desolate.

Vers. 29.

They shall not say any more, The fathers have eaten sour grapes. &c. That is, being taught by the Spirit, and by experience how gracious the Lord is to repentant sinners, they shall no more blaspheme, as they had done, as if they were undeservedly punished for other mens sins, but should acknowledge, as the truth is, every one that is punished to be justly punished for his own sins, and so lay no fault but on himself only.

Vers. 31.
Heb. 8.8.

I will make a new Covenant with the house of Israel, and of Judah. Here the Prophet returns again to speak of the blessing under the Gospel, and he calleth this Covenant or Testament new, because of the new form thereof, and the Spirit given withall to the faithful to regenerate them, and the clear opening of things pertaining to salvation that were before veiled under types and figures. For it is the same in substance with the old: But for the manner, that was made by the blood of beasts, this by the blood of Christ, and the signes of the Old were Circumcision and the Paschever; of the New, Baptism and the Lords Supper. 2. The Spirit was not then given in a visible manner, but now it was, both coming down upon Christ, and after upon his Apostles, and upon other faithful persons also, although invisibly, yet so as to be perceived by the new tongues wherewith they spake, and the power of working miracles, till the Church was planted in all known Countreys of the world, according to that promise Mark 16.17. 3. The mysteries of the Kingdom of heaven were not then so clearly, but a little seen into, because veiled under types of Temple, Altar, High-priest, the Sanctum Sanctorum, divers Washings and Sacrifices, but now are made evident. And as it is called the New Testament, not because divers in substance, for the faithful then through Gods mercy in Christ were saved as well as now, which is intimated in that Abraham was, and his son Isaac, and his son Jacob, for they shall come from the East and West, &c. and set down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the Kingdom of heaven; and to grace the faithful under the New Testament it is said, Abraham is father of the faithful both of the Circumcision and uncircumcision; and again, we are after Isaac children (not of the bond-woman but of the free) so the Old is not disgraced in adding further in way of preferring the new: By saying, Not according to the old Covenant. For it is added to uphold the honour of the old still inviolate, that their fathers made it void by their sins, as they did also, not keeping it on their parts, as they should have done, or else it could stand them in no stead. Now he saith that the same Covenant made anew in respect of the form, should be no more irritable, or such as could be made void, because it should not be with an whole generation coming of any one man according to the flesh, but only with the truly faithful of them, or of other Nations, who are children according to the Spirit, and in every one of their hearts the Law is written, and not in Tables of stone only, as Abrahams posterity according to the flesh generally had it, but without benefit for their transgressing it, whereas these in whose hearts it is written, do not promise fair only, or begin in obedience, and not perform or persevere, but keep it constantly without declining to the right hand or to the left all their daies. Because the Spirit that writes it in their hearts worketh so upon their spirits that they constantly keep and cleave unto it, and as Paul alwaies delight in it, neither can all the powers of hell prevail against them to make them do otherwise, sith the Spirit in them is as seed from which this good fruit springeth, and is not coming and going, but abiding, so that they cannot sin, and who can then aver, that one truly in the state of grace may fall away and perish?

Luk. 13.28.

Rom. 4.
Gal. 4.

Vers. 32.

1 Joh. 3.9.

And

And a man shall not teach his brother any more, saying, Know the Lord, &c. The meaning is not, that under the New Testament there shall be no use of teaching, but it is thus spoken, to shew that the clearness of the light now in comparison of what it was under the Old Testament is extraordinary, as was before prophesied, Isa. 54. and is shewed Matth. 4. 2 Cor. 3. 2 Pet. 1. 19. Rom. 13. 12. for the same felicity under the New Testament is published Isa. 2. 3. in a divers manner thus, one shall say to another, Come let us go to the house of the Lord, he shall teach us; whereas if here teaching were spoken against, there were a contrariety in the Prophets speaking of the same thing. Therefore the meaning is only, as hath been said before, Jeremiah prophesieth of the light of knowledge being more by farre, Isaiah of the means how under the New Testament they shall attain to this knowledge, viz. by teaching in Zion, that is, in the house of God, whereas it is added, From the least unto the greatest they shall know me; He doth not, saith Calvin, hereby mean, that they who are of least knowledge shall know enough, and need to learn no more, but touching the first rudiments of Religion, That there is but one only true God, and that salvation cometh only by Christ to believers, which was not so ordinarily known under the Old Testament, so that even touching Israel it is said, There is no knowledge of God in the Land, and they were then notorious for worshipping false gods, according to the manner of the Heathen: Thus also Jerom, who addeth, That the knowledge of God here spoken of, is the possession of all virtues, to know him is to love, fear and worship him according to his will, not by mens precepts, and in sincerity of heart, not in hypocrisie. Wherefore this is not spoken of all generally, that profess the Gospel outwardly, but only of such amongst them, as in whose hearts the Law is written. All such have both theoretical knowledge in such a measure as is necessary to salvation, being still desirous to hold what they have attained and to encrease it. And herein lieth their happiness, That the Lord forgiveth their iniquity, and remembreth their sinne no more; Thus blessednesse is described Psal. 32. 1. But here this promise is specially made according to the case in this Chapter spoken of, the people of Israel, although in Covenant with the Lord, had him not so propitious unto them, but that for their sins they were delivered into the hands of their enemies, and therefore suffered most grievous things many years together in Babylon, and afterwards, when Jerusalem was destroyed by the Romans, but now coming into this new Covenant by faith, they shall no more be thus left to the will of their enemies, but the cause of misery, their sinne, being taken away, such effects should for ever hereafter cease. For to shew that this is his meaning, he bindeth it by most vehement asseverations vers. 35, 36, 37. as if he had said, The whole course of nature shall sooner be overthrown then his resolution to stand for his people Israel, to uphold them for ever, yet not for the whole body, but for some of them, as is implied in those words, Vers. 37. I will not cast off the whole seed of Israel: That is, such as are Israel according to the Spirit, by faith and not in the flesh only, and who these be, was shewed in the words before-going, I will put my Laws into them, and write them in their hearts: Therefore untill the Israelites come in to the faith, this promise shall not be fulfilled unto them, but then cometh forgiveness when Jesus comes by faith into the heart, and takes possession there. Now this is not spoken, as if in the time of the Law the faithfull were not forgiven, and saved everlastingly, but because this great benefit is peculiar to the Gospel, and adventitious only under the Law. For take the Law alone, and keep it in the exactest manner that one can, there will be no salvation, but damnation notwithstanding, because no man can keep it perfectly; but who so then by the eye of faith looked at Christ, as Abraham did, was saved even under the Law. The Apostle Peter, Heb. 10. 16. applieth this of the New Covenant to forgive sins, to Christs sacrificing of himself once for us, to the expiation of our sins, whereas Sacrifices offered often for sinne, were not of force for this end and purpose, because if they had; they should not have needed to be so after offered. And therefore it must needs follow that where sinne is perfectly done away, the great judgement of giving a Nation into the hands of their enemies, God thus in wrath leaving them, as it were, is done away also. But especially in respect of spiritual enemies this is fulfilled, where remission of sins is, devils have no more power to take and carry away captive into hell, then a Jailor hath over a malefactor that is by the Judge pardoned and acquitted.

Vers. 35, 36, 37. Here are three comparisons made to set forth the perpetuity of Gods favour towards Israel, 1. From the Sunne and Moon, 2. From the Sea, 3. From the profundity of the Earth, and the circumference of the heaven. For as the Sunne and Moon move round about the world daily, neither can this their course be stayed, and the Sea, though swelling with huge waves that came up to the shore higher then it, can yet go no further to the drowning of the earth, but is kept divided from it, so the mercy of God towards his cannot be staid in the course thereof, but that they shall ever be saved from destroying judgements after the Covenant before spoken of once entred into, and as the heaven is by man unmeasurable, and the earth cannot be dived into to the depth thereof, so shall Gods mercy be without all limitation of time.

The Allegory.

Here it is promised, That the City Jerusalem shall be built again, according to the dimensions thereof, and extended further then yet it had ever been. From the Tower of Hananeel to the gate of the corner: Of which Tower see Neh. 3.1. it stood Southward, saith Junius, and the gate of the corner Eastward. Towards the hill Gareb, Jun. Collem scabiosi, it was the place of unclean persons, and where men condemned were executed, otherwise called Golgotha without the City, where Jesus suffered, it lay Northward towards the South, towards Gahab, which is a sharp hill lying Westward. And all the valley of carcases, and ashes to the brook Kedron. This was the valley of the sonne of Hinnom, where they sacrificed their children to Molok, from whence ashes arose in abundance, and it lay full of dead carcases buried there afterwards at the destruction of the Jews by the Caldees, as was threatened by Jeremiah, and this valley lay bending from the West towards the South. To the corner of the gate of the horses towards the East. Of which Nehem. 3.28. Now this description of building Jerusalem again, is thus made, not to shew that it should be of so great extent at their return out of Babylon, for then it was not so ample, and that which was, was demolished again by the Romans, whereas it is promised that this shall stand perpetually. Neither is the re-building of Jerusalem by Elisannus Adrianus the Emperor, calling it Eli meant, as Lyra would have it, for that stands not upon the old foundations, and so this description agreeth not unto it, and little comfort was the building of that City to Israel, sith not the Jews, but the Turks have that in their possession. And much lesse is a building to come meant under the yet expected Messiah, according to the Hebrews. But a spiritual building, which is the Church, compared unto a City, Mat. 5. built upon a rock and impregnable, Matth. 16.16. and this building is thus set forth to shew the amplitude of the Church under the New Testament to be far greater then that of old Jerusalem by the accession of the Gentiles, as is made plain, Isa. 54. Thus Jerom, who also makes an allegorical Exposition of the places, as setting forth the persons, of whom the Church consisteth. The tower of Hananeel, signifying the grace of God, the Apostles so full of the Spirit and grace, in whom this building began. The gate of the corner, two peoples joyned together in Christ, as the corner of a wall joyneth two walls. The Hill of Gareb, the place where lepers, and other unclean persons were, foul sinners. Gahab signifying mugitus, penitent sinners crying out by reason of their sins. The valley of dead carcases, the sinfully dead, but now quickened, being before in the valley and shadow of death, being ready even to be executed at the brook Kedron, a dark place, whereby the filth of the City was carried away, and so they to be cast into hell. The horse gate, near which horses ran a race, such as run the race of Christianity so as to obtain. Thus also Rabanus, neither doth Calvin dissent.

CHAP. XXXII.

THis Chapter is historical, 1. Shewing how King Zedekiah put Jeremiah in prison, when the City was besieged by Nebuchadnezzar, because he had prophesied that the King should come into his hands, and be carried into Babylon. For the time, The tenth of Zedekiah, the eighteenth of Nebuchadnezzar, see before Chap. 25. For the Kings coming into his hands, and his being carried into Babylon, he had not spoken of it that we read of, till Chap. 34. 2, 3. and therefore due order is not observed here no more then was Chap. 21. as I have noted there, yea Chap. 39. goeth in order before this, as may there be seen ver. 1. but not the residue of the Chapter, which declareth the accomplishment of that which is here threatned.

Verf. 1.
Verf. 3, 4.

Buy thee my field in Anathoth. Here the Lord by commanding Jeremiah to buy a field when the City and whole Kingdom was ready to come into the hands of the Caldees, and he was in prison ready to be brought to execution, when the King would, shewed, as by a sensible sign that the time should come when the Jews should possess the Land of Canaan again, each one returning to his possession. And according to the course of Law there, two writings were made, one open, the other to be hidden by Baruch, that which was open being then to be shewed for the comfort of the faithful; the other hidden, to be brought forth and shewed at the end of seventy years for their further confirmation, to stirre them up with more confidence to return. The only doubt here is, How Priests or Levites, such as Hananeel and Jeremiah were, could sell and buy Land, seeing the Tribe of Levi had none inheritance? Sol. They had little pastures about the Cities given them, according to their several Families out of the other Tribes, and he that ought one of these might sell it; but in the year of Jubilee it returned again, unlesse it were sold to a Kinsman nearest, and being made over to him it remained to him for ever.

Verf. 7.

Jeremiah having bought the Land, as the Lord commanded, here prayeth, and hath answer, both touching the giving of the City into the Caldeans hands for their sins, verf. 26. and touching the peoples restitution, verf. 37. to continue in a safe and prosperous estate for ever, adding that he would put his fear into them, and that they should be of one heart.

CHAP. XXXIII.

Here the word of the Lord is said to have come to Jeremiah the second time, whilst he was yet in prison, saying, Thus saith the Lord that made and formed it to establish it, Hebr. Making, forming it. The word it, being of the feminine gender, for which most Expositors understand Jerusalem hereby, and that either set up by God of old in that splendour by reason of the wals, towers, Temple and Palaces: For the Lord brought his people thither by a mighty hand, and by power given them from him the Jews and their Kings built it so magnificently: or to be re-built at their return out of Babylon out of the ruinous heaps into which it had been brought by the Caldees. And the word [Making, forming] will bear either. If it be taken the first way, as in the Preter-tense, this is the sense, The Lord gave his people the City Jerusalem once, taking it out of their hands that held it, when it seemed impossible, therefore they may well believe that he can restore it to them again, and because he hath promised so much, will do it without fail. If it be taken the second way, as spoken in the future, as Ierom renders it, the sense is, He that hath promised to rear up the City again, is the Lord, whose power none can withstand, and therefore it is not to be doubted; Thus Calvin; But Vatablus saith, Jerusalem, set forth here by the word [it] is the heavenly Jerusalem. Lyra going upon the Vulgar Latine which renders it, Qui facturus est, & formaturus illud, understands by it, the Kingdom of Christ, which was to be set up, which was the greatest work of all others, and wherein the greatest comfort of the faithfull lay, and divers places of Scripture are brought to shew, that the Feminine in Hebrew is often put for the Neuter, illam for istud. But this is in effect the same with that of Vatablus, forsomuch as the business of Christs Kingdom is the spiritual Jerusalem, and consequently the heavenly. And to prove this to be meant by it, let us look to the words following, ver. 3. Call unto me, and I will shew thee great and mighty things, which thou knowest not. For of their deliverance from Captivity, and the re-building of Jerusalem in the same place, he and all the faithfull that heard him prophesying of it, had been so fully informed that they could not but know it, but of the Kingdom of Christ, and the forming of the spiritual Jerusalem, the knowledge was not so easie, because a thing most mystical; and therefore although it also had been before prophesied of, yet it was not so known, but there was need of prayer to be further enlightned herein.

They come to fight with the Caldeans, but it is to fill them with dead bodies. To make way to speak of the great thing that should be done, wherein true comfort lay, he here fore-telleth, that their labour should be but lost in seeking by force to oppose the Caldees, for none other effect should follow hereupon, but that such as came to fight should be slain, and so their dead bodies should but serve to fill the places where.

I will bring it health and cure. After way made verf. 5. he now cometh to the prophecy of those great and mighty things spoken of, verf. 3. I will bring health and cure unto them; from whence to verf. 14. he plainly speaketh of the cure of the great wound made in that state at the destruction of Ierusalem, which should be at the end of seventy years, they being brought thither again out of Babylon. And of this so much hath been spoken already upon Chap. 25. Chap. 31. Chap. 32. that I shall need to say no more in this place.

He reneweth his Prophecy touching Christ, of which also made in the same words I have spoken Chap. 23. 5, 6. only whereas it is there said, This is the name, whereby he shall be called, The Lord our Righteousnesse; here, This is the name whereby she shall be called, The Lord our Righteousnesse, Hebr. And this which he shall call in her, The Lord our Righteousnesse; where the word This, hath manifestly reference to the word before-going Branch, and it is no more then if he had said, this man whom the Lord calleth, The Branch, in Ierusalem is otherwise called, The Lord our Righteousnesse; Vulg. This is the name which they shall call him. But not rightly, because it is not not and therefore even the Jesuite in this controls the Vulgar, saying, that it is corrupted, and that many Copies most ancient for him had her, and therefore this is most generally followed, and this reason yeelded, why the Church should be called, The Lord our Righteousnesse, as well as Christ, because she is one with him, and so whatsoever glorious Attribute or Title he hath, she hath also, for that he hath it not so much for himself, as for her, according to that, He is made of God unto us wisdom, righteousness, &c. and by some this, because the Church hath this alwayes in her mouth, The Lord our Righteousnesse, I desire to be found, not having mine own righteousness, but that of Christ by faith. These I grant are good reasons, if it must needs be so read, He shall, or they shall call her ] but forsomuch as it is not, compounded of to or in, and her, it may better be otherwise rendred, as hath been said, and then all doubt, why the Church should be so called, is at an end, and indeed when all is said that may be, it cannot but be acknowledged very improper and insensible too, to say that the Church or Ierusalem should be called, The Lord our Righteousnesse, nessé, Jehovah, as it is in the Hebr. a title incommunicable to the Church, though one with Christ, and peculiar to God alone. And therefore that Chapt. 23. 6. is commonly brought by ours to prove Jesus to be very God, which would not be so strong, if the same title were communicated to the Congregation of Believers also. Take we notice therefore of this other reading, as more agreeable to the words, and hold us to it; and so here is nothing said, but what Chapt. 23. 6. and from both places so well agreeing, we shall be double fortified to evince the divinity of Christ, and confound the Arrian.

David shall never want a man to sit upon the Throne, neither shall Levi want a man to offer burnt Offerings. Having shewed in what safety they should be at the raising up of the branch, the Lord our righteousness; now he further describes him to be a man, as well as Jehovah, and a King descended from David, to whom the Lord had long before promised, that his Throne should continue for ever; and not only a King, but a Priest to offer Sacrifice; but the Sacrifice offered by him was himself, Hebr. 7. 9. 10. Whereas he saith, that David should not want a man to sit upon his Throne; Hebr. A man should not be cut off from sitting, The meaning is not, that there should be a continuall succession of Kings for ever without interruption, but that although the succession were interrupted about five hundred years from Zedekiah to Christ, giving occasion to doubt, whether there should any King more of David's line ever sit upon his Throne, yet one should come and be King, and reign for ever and ever; and so David after this should never want a man, &c. And the same being a Priest for ever; after the Order of Melchisedech, Levi should never want a Priest to offer Sacrifice, or to burn Incense; because Christs sacrificing of himself once, is more than equivalent to the dayly perpetuall Sacrificing, which was used of old by the Priests upon the Brazen, and to the Incense likewise daily offered upon the Golden Altar. And in these two Orders of King and Priest stands the perfect happiness of Israel, for defence against enemies, and subduing them as King, and for propitiation with God in respect of sin, as Priest. It is therefore without ground in the Papists, that will have Priests still to offer Sacrifice propitiatory for the quick and the dead, and Incense, and one to be as King, of Kings over the Church, viz. The Pope of Rome, pretending to reign in Christs stead. For this is nothing else but intollerable pride and arrogancy, and in effect a giving Check-mate unto Christ, who alone without Vicars liveth ever to reign, and to make Propitiation for our sins, 1 John 2. 1. Of the interruption of David's Kingdome, see Exek. 31. 26. The residue of the Chapter from verse 20. to the end, is added onely to confirm further what is here promised of the perpetuity of Christs Kingdome, who was the Son of David.

CHAP. XXXIV.

IN this Chapter is the threatening of Zedekiah, that he should come into the hands of the King of Babylon, spoken of before Chapter 32. as the cause why he put Jeremiah in prison. But here it is further added, that he should not dye by the sword, but in peace, and be honourably buried in Babylon. Of the accomplishment of the Prophecie of his dying in Babylon; see Chapter 52. 11. But whereas it is said, that he should dye in peace, nothing else is meant, but that he should dye his naturall death; which D. Kimbi saith, was soon after Nebuchadnezzar; but Josephus, in his time, and that he was by him honourably buried, being kept in prison till the day of his death. Some following a tradition of the Hebrews say, that Nebuchadnezzar upon a Festivall day, caused him to be brought out of prison, and amongst his Princes caused a laxative drink to be to be given unto him, which he having drunk, purged so, that he was made a derision to them all; and therefore returning to prison again, such shame and grief surprized him, that he dyed soon after; and then Nebuchadnezzar being moved with compassion, to make him some recompence, caused him to be honourably buried, ried, by burning sweet Odours, as is here said : and Lyra expounds that of Habakkuk 2.14. Woe to him that giveth his neighbour drink. Of this although very partially, seeing it is meant of all that favour drunkenness so, as to give to one cup after cup in excess. Calvin moveth a question here, because it is propounded by way of some consolation, Thou shalt not dye by the sword. Whether a violent death be alwayes worse than a naturall ; for it should seem not, because it is oft-times with less pain, and less sinfull, and to some salutarious, as to Martyrs, and Malefactors, as an wholesome medicine, by repentance healing them of their sins : but contrariwise, some that dye a naturall death, rave and curse through impatience, and speak idly, and sometimes blasphemously, thus increasing their sins. This made Caesar the night before he was slain in the Senat, in private disputation to maintain, that it was best to dye a violent death suddenly : And he answers well, that generally to dye a naturall death is to be preferred, because it is less formidable, is a signe of the favour of God, and giveth time to set things in Order ; for which it is spoken of as the death of the righteous, Psalm 37. 37. and dying by the sword is often threatned, as a thing most dreadfull in this Prophecy. Yet it is to be accounted of, as the quality of the person dying is, If he be faithfull, he is not the less blessed by dying a violent death, and if he be wicked, he is not the more happy for dying thus in Peace. And the same is to be held touching burials ; to have an honourable buriall is of it self desirable, as being a thing, wherein a man is shewed to differ from a beast ; whereas in his dying there is no difference, because as a beast dyeth so dyeth a man ; but when the beast is cast forth as dung, and the man is buried ; this sheweth one that shall rise again to glory, the honour done to him at his buriall being a signe thereof. But if the faithfull lye unburied, this dishonour shall be turned into a greater honour ; and the honourable buriall of the wicked shall nothing benefit them ; as it did not Dives, of whom we read, that he was buried, but Lazarus not. Obje. What comfort then was it to Zedekiah being a wicked King to hear of a buriall, and dying his naturall death ? Sol. God might yet turn his heart before his death, and then it was a signe of Gods favour restored unto him ; and the very hearing of this might in time work upon him to make him repent, that he might enjoy it. For the burning of sweet Odours to him, according to the manner of his Ancestors, The Vulg. rendring it, They shall burn shew is neither right according to the Hebrew Text, which is אף-לו שבע ; nor according to the course of their dealing amongst the Jews with their dead Kings. For although the Romans and other Nations used to burn the bodies of the dead, and to put their ashes in an Urn, and so lay them up ; yet the Jewes did not, but onely burn sweet Odours about them, hereby to dry up the humours, that might cause stink, and then to lay them into their Sepulchers, as we may see 2 Chron. 16. 13. touching Aza : but Chap. 21. 19. the like is said not to have been done to Jeram a wicked King. Yet the men of Isabab Gilead burnt Saul and his sons being dead, and buried their bones : But of these things see before in my Commentary in their proper places.

1 Sam. 31. 12.

Verf. 8, 9.

From hence to the end of the Chapter, there is an intimation, how that when Nebuchadnezzar with his huge Host besieged Jerusalem, Zedekiah proclaimed liberty to servants, according to the Law Exod. 21. 3. and that the Princes hearing of it, and all others also, whom it concerned, gave their servants liberty to depart, coming into the Lords house, and solemnly binding themselves by covenant, as to do it now, so to continue doing from time to time hereafter. For it seemeth, that howsoever they were hardened in other sins, yet they had some sense of this as the cause why the Caldees came to bring them under, because they kept their brethren the Hebrews under, when they had served six years, contrary to Gods Law. And therefore they reformed this abuse ; and it seemeth, that it succeeded accordingly : the Caldees were hereupon caused to depart by the coming of Pharaoh King of Egypt against them : For of this it is written Chap. 37. 5. But they were no sooner out of that fear, but against the Law and their Covenant made before the Lord, they compelled their dismissed servants to return and serve them again, being herein most injurious unto them, and branded with the black brand of perjury towards the Lord. For this so foul a sin, Jeremiah here threatneth, That the Caldees shall come again and burn the City, and take the King and his Princes. And he aggravates their sin by this, that they brake their Covenant made in passing between the parts of the Calf divided, wherein it is alluded to that which was done Gen. 15. by Abraham taking at Gods command an Heifer of three years, a Goat and a Ram, and dividing them into parts, laying one against the other; after which done a sinoak, and then a bright Lamp passed between them. From hence it is likely that his posterity in making Covenants did the like, passing between the parts, and praying if they kept not the Covenant now made, that they might be thus cut in pieces, and miserably perish. All which notwithstanding they brake this Covenant, and therefore are threatned. The Romans used a like Ceremony in the time of their Heathenism, cutting a Sow in pieces, and imprecating themselves, if they proved perjured. Touching Servants, and whether we may now a dayes have any such, as are called slaves, after the old manner, and the manner of the Turks and other Nations, enough hath been spoken upon Exod. 21. and 1 Cor. 7. it is plain, that the Gospel enjoyneth not setting such at liberty, but rather commandeth each one to continue in that calling, wherein God hath called him, whether it be bond or free.

Vers. 18.

CHAP. XXXV.

IN this Chapter Jeremiah is bidden to bring the Rechabites into a Chamber of the House of the Lord, and to set Wine before them, and to bid them drink; but they refused, because Ionadab the Son of Rechab their Father had laid a charge upon them not to drink Wine, or to plant Vines, or to sow Fields, or to build Houses, but to dwell in Tents; and hereupon to upbraid the wicked Jews for their disobedience to God, and to shew, how justly they should be punished therefore. Of Ionadab, the Son of Rechab, we read before 2 Kings 10. in the History of Iehu, who lived three hundred years before this, which was anno 4th of Iehojakim, whereby the way we may note again, that things said and done in this Book are not placed in order; but things done and said in the reign of Zedekiah, who was after, are set before things in the time of Iehojakim, intimating, that the Sermons or Prophecies of Jeremiah were not by him written and placed in order; but being collected by others, set down, as he did, and spake them without respect unto due order, as nor being so materiall. But to return again to Ionadab the Son of Rechab. Who Rechab was, see 1 Chron. 2. 55. where speaking of Suchabites, that is, dwellers in Tents, he saith, These are the Kenites, that came of Hemoth, the father of the house of Rechab. And the Kenites are further set forth, Judges 1. 16. to be the children of Moses, his Father in law, the Kenite, who dwelt in the wilderness of Judab, in the south of Arad amongst the people. Now Moses his Father in law was Iethro, Exod. 18. And of Kenites we read again Jud. 4. where Jael the wife of Heber, the Kenite, is spoken of. And they had this name of Cynei; or Kenites from Cyn the Father of Raguel, or Iethro Moses his Father in law; thus for their Pedigree. For their quality, it seemeth, that they were Shepherds anciently, and dwelt in Tents, not being used to works of husbandry, as planting, plowing and sowing, and therefore they drank no wine, but that which came of their flocks, viz. Milk, and eat Butter and Cheese, buying their Corn whereof they made Bread. And by this means having leisure, they gave themselves much to the study of the Law, and were Scribes expert therein; for which they are called, The Families of the Scribes that dwelt at Iabez, 1 Chron. 2. 55. And of their dwelling in Tents, and drinking Milk, and eating Butter; see Judg. 4. where Sisera coming into Jael Tent, it is said, that she gave him Milk to drink, and Butter to eat. And as they were learned in the Lawes of God, so one of them, viz. Ionadab, is singularly noted to have been eminent for piety, when King Iehu would have him come up into his Chariot, and ride with him to see his zeal for the Lord; and of him they say here, Ionadab the Son of Rechab our Father. So that it seemeth, he was the first that enjoined them to live in this abstemious manner, as their Progenitors had accustomed to do in former times and ages without any injunction. And the rather because he saw the wickedness of the Israelites, amongst whom they lived, to be so great, that they could not long continue, and that Wine and delicious fare was a cause of corrupting them by drunkenness, and gluttony and buildings made so sumptuously by pride. He also saw that they were a divided State, and hereby made the more weak, and that the Syrians, Ammonites, Moabites, and Edomites were ready to take advantage hereupon against them. Now that his posterity might be the better prepared to endure a change, when it should come, by being inured to hardship, and to remove, when they could no longer be in one place, to another, after the manner of the old Nomades, he laid this injunction upon them, to go on constantly in such a course of life as wherein their Fore fathers had lived, promising that in so doing, they should live long in the land, wherein they were strangers. Wherefore he did not hereby condemn simply planting Vines, or drinking Wine, sowing or building houses; but onely prescribed a rule for them to walk by in respect of these outward things, that was most convenient for them; and it was well done of them herein to be obedient. Whereas the Papists, as Calvin saith, do hence infer, that the Children of the Church should likewise obey and keep all her Ordinances, besides the Word of God: The Answer is easie; these were onely civill Ordinances about things externall, the foundation whereof is laid in the Word, which commendeth temperance, humility, and to be sequestred from worldly busineses so much as to be free to divine Contemplations, and to endure hardship, as giving advantage to the spirit against the flesh, which by delicate and full fare will get the predominancy over the spirit. And therefore they cannot from hence reason to superstitious observances of days, and at sometimes refraining from flesh, the use of other things being permitted, as a matter of Conscience; much less to the worshipping of Images, the adoring of the Host, the invoking of Saints departed, praying for the dead, crossing against evil spirits, holy water, &c. Onely here is a ground of obedience in civill things to Rulers in a civill respect. And whereas this is made use of by the Jesuite, to prove a Monasticall life lawful, because the Rechabites obeyed their Father Ionadab, so they obeyed the Fathers of their Order: the Rechabites tilled not the ground, but lived in abstinence, and vacancy from labour bodily, that they might be free to divine Contemplations; so Friars, and Jesuites: When he cometh to the Rechabites having wives, but these having none, he hath nought further to say; yea, and by his leave there is a further vast difference between Rechabites and Friars, who will drink Wine liberally and dwell in sumptuous buildings, to say nothing of their other enormities.

Of these Rechabites, saith Philo, were the Essenes, a strict Sect amongst the Jewes, living in Desarts, and faring hardly, amongst whom John the Baptist was brought up, as I have shewed upon Matthew 3. and what their opinions were. For the Prophets calling together of the Rechabites to the Lords house in a Chamber there to offer them Wine, and that in the Chamber of one, who is said to be a man of God; this was done most probably, that it being done so publicly, might be the more divulged over the City to the moving of all to repentance that should heare it. That whereby the Prophet seeks hereupon to make them ashamed, is, that they obeyed their Father a mortall man, but the Jewes would not obey God. 2. They obeyed him in a thing harsh and displeasing to the body, the Jewes not God, requiring onely things that might easily be done, and in reason should rather be done for a worldly good, as well as for a spirituall. 3. They obeyed a man after his death so many years; when as if they had disobeyed, he could neither reprove, nor punish them for it, or know it; but the Jewes obeyed not God, ever living to reprove and punish them; and being alwayes near unto them, to see all their paths, and all their wayes. And all these should be motives to us to live alwayes in obedience to Gods Commandements, having a greater care so to do, than a Son to obey his naturall Father, or a Servant his Master; according to that, If I be a Father, where is my fear? if a Master, &c.

The Jewes that hardened themselves to do contrary, are threatened, and the Rechabites, who were so durifull to their Father in Licitis, are comforted, ver. 18, 19. And the like shall be done to all that obey their parents likewise, but not in any sinfull way.

CHAP. XXXVI.

HERE Jeremiah is bidden in the fourth year of Iehojakim to write his Prophecies against Israel and Judah and other Kingdoms in a Book. And he calleth Baruch his Scribe unto him, commanding him to write them, and then to go to the House of the Lord upon the Fast day, and to read them before all Judah; because he was shut up and could not go. Here divers doubts occur. 1. What is meant by Jeremiah his being shut up, because he was not put in prison by Iehojakim, but by Zedekiah who reigned after him, Chap. 32. 3. And the words of the Princes here following, verse 19. Go and hide thee, both thou and Jeremiah, evince, that Jeremiah was now at liberty to go to some secret place, and not in prison. It is there most commonly held, that his shutting up here spoken of, was nothing else but the Lord restraining him by the Spirit, so that he could not go. 2. What Fast day is meant, when he biddeth him read it upon the Fast day, when all Judah should be come together to Jerusalem; because that after this, verse 9, 10. a Fast is proclaimed in the fifth year of Iehojakim, in the ninth moneth, and Baruch readeth it then? It is apparent, that there is here a Metathesis, or transposition of things; that which was done first being placed last; for the Fast was first proclaimed in the time whilst Baruch was writing, or so soon as he had done, although he began in the fourth year of Iehojakim, and this Proclamation came out the fifth year; for it might be at the latter end of the fourth year that he began to write, and the Proclamation made at the beginning of the fifth, although not to take place till the ninth moneth thereof, that in all parts they might have time to prepare to come to Jerusalem. And before Iehojakims fifth year, he had been terrified by falling into the hands of Nebuchadnezzar, viz. the third of his reigne, Dan. 1. 1. Therefore having by some composition obtained his Kingdome again, it is most probable, that for fear of suffering again by the Caldees, he proclaimed this Fast, although a most wicked King, placing confidence in an outward observance without turning by repentance from his sins. Wherefore the Prophet takes the opportunity of the day, for the publishing of his Prophecies, as thinking, that the people would now if ever be wrought upon to turn; and now Baruch should be sure to have a great multitude resorting thither from all parts to read it to them, to the better effect. 3. Another doubt here is about the time of writing, in the fourth year of Iehojakim; in which year Nebuchadnezzar is said to have come against him, being the first year of his reigne; and yet Daniel 1. 1. it is said in the third year of Iehojakim that he was carried to Babylon: But of this see before Chap. 25. 1. Another doubt is, How the Prophecies of Jeremiah, from the ninth year of Iosiah his reigne could be still to write, whenas Chapter 30. 1. he was bidden to write them in a Book before? But although that goeth before, yet it appeareth Chap. 29. that it was after, because Iehojakim was first carried away Captive, who reigned after Iehojakim; and it was not a Prophecie of threatening, which he was then commanded to write, but of a most gracious promise of bringing them out of Captivity and unspeakable blessing in Christ to be bestowed upon them. 5. Because Baruch writeth, and then goeth and readeth in the publick place, that the people might be converted; whether one mans reading of another mans Sermon be not hereby justified, and whether bare reading of the Word of God be not available to Conversion? and lastly, whether not reading a mans own Sermon as well as uttering it memoriser? I answer, in want of a sufficient Preacher, it is better to hear one read, than to be without; or for one ignorant and unable to adventure himself to preach. 2. To read the Word by Gods blessing may be available to convert, but to read and preach upon it far more; and the like is to be held of reading a mans own Sermon; and therefore every Preacher is to be stirred up rather to preach memoriser, as Christ and the Apostles did, and not by Book, which in stead of reverence in hearing is apt to move contempt and slighting, as arguing a great defect in the Preacher, making him insufficient for his Office.

The part of the Temple, wherein Baruch read, was the Chamber of Gemariah the Scribe, in the upper Court, in the entrance of the new Gate. Of which new Gate see before Chapter 26. 10. Of Chambers in the Lords House, Chap. 35. 4. Here in the door, as the word signifieth, he stood and read to the people being in the Court, that they might heare when Baruch had read, the Princes being told of it, send for him, and cause him to read the same to them; and when they heard they feared, and said, they would tell the King. So wicked men fear sometimes in hearing of Gods judgements, but this their fear is not to repentance, but to plunge them more into sin, by seeking to stir up persecution against Gods faithfull servants. The fear of man works more with them than the fear of God; they thought if these things should come to the Kings eare, and they not first tell him thereof, they might come into the danger of his displeasure; therefore although they beleaved these threatnings to come from God, which made them to fear and tremble; yet the fear of the King did preponderate this fear, so that it took none effect in them to work repentance in their hearts. Wherefore he that would fear God, and his wrath, so as to escape it, must not fear man, as is expressed Matth. 10. 28. For these two fears cannot possibly stand together. For Felix also trembled in hearing Paul, but he was infelix in this, that he soon shaked off this fear again, and kept him still in prison to please the Jews. These Princes were yet moved so, that they were desirous, that both Baruch and Jeremiah might be kept out of the Kings danger, &c. Therefore they counsell him to go and hide himself, and to bid Jeremiah to do likewise: For they knew, that he was a Tyrant, and upon the hearing of these Prophecies would seek to slay them, because he had done the like before to Uriah, Chapter 26. 20. So other wicked men have sometimes some good affections; but they are too weak to work unto true repentance to salvation, and they shall perish notwithstanding.

As the Princes had threatned Baruch, so they did, they went and told the King, and he hearing some of the Rowle read, cut it with a Pen-knife, and cast it into the fire, some of them yet praying him not to do so: And he sent to take Jeremiah and Baruch, but the Lord hid them: That is, by his Providence they hid themselves so, that their Persecutors could not find them out, as sometime Elijah was hid from Abab. It is also hereby intimated, that the Lord directed them to this hiding, giving warrant hereby to others his faithful servants to flee likewise, and to lye hid in time of persecution, that being preserved, they may still live to glorifie God in the course of their Ministry. Some think, that the Lord held the eyes of the Persecutors so, or made them invisible that they could not see them, though they came into the house where they were.

Then the Lord commanded Jeremiah to say to the King, that although he had burnt that Rowle, yet he should not escape the judgements therein threatned, but dye an evill death, and be cast out, as was before threatned, Chap. 22. and then he cauled the same words to be written in another Rowle, and added more thereunto, some of which are here recorded, that his dead body should lye exposed to the frost and heat, and that none of his should sit upon the Throne; because that although his Son Jebojakin reigned in his stead, yet it was but three Moneths, which was as nothing, and none of his posterity ever reigned after; but Zedekiah his Uncle, and yet God failed not of his promise to David, that he should not want a man for ever to sit upon his Throne, as hath been shewed upon Chap. 33. 17. Note, that wicked men get nothing by relucting against the Word of God, and persecuting his Prophets that come with it unto them; but by thus doing, intangle themselves more and more, as one that goeth amongst Bryars: for Gods Word shall stand, and being impugned shall prove yet more terrible to the impugnors, of what rank or quality soever they be.

Note.

CHAP. XXXVII.

IN this Chapter is shewed again, what was done in the dayes of Zedekiah. Nebuchadnezzar, that had besieged Jerusalem, hearing of Pharaoh with his Army coming against him, brake up his siege, and went to encounter with him. Now the King before this, had in the time of his danger, proclaimed liberty to Servants, according to Chap. 34. 8, 9, 10. But the Caldees being gone, every one compelled his Servants to return, and serve again, as thinking themselves out of all danger of the Caldees return to the siege. Wherefore Jeremiah threatneth that the Caldees should return, yea, though they were all wounded men, and burn the City. And having said thus, he offered to go out of the City into the land of Benjamin, but was itayed by a Captain of the Ward, who took him, and brought him to the Princes, who put him in prison in the house of Jonasban the Scribe, where he lay many dayes in great misery. Then the King took him out privately, asking him touching the Word of the Lord; and he freely told him of nothing but destruction, unlesse he yielded to Nebuchadnezzar: Then Jeremiah requesting it, was not sent back to the former prison, but to the Court of the prison, an allowance of bread being dayly given unto him.

Vers. 10.

Vers. 12, 13.

Vers. 17.

Touching the going of Jeremiah into the Land of Benjamin; it is to be understood, that Anathoth, the City whereof he was an inhabitant, was there, and so in offering to goe thither, when he saw that he could do no good at Jerusalem, by threatning and exhorting them to repentance, but was dayly in danger of being imprisoned, and cut off, he did nothing but what he might well justifie, and therefore took the opportunity of the siege being broken up. But when the servants of God doe nothing but well, the devill hath his instruments ready to lay baineous things to their charge; from which although they purge themselves, yet they make them suffer, as Malefactors, most grievously.

Note.

Touching the Kings humanity to Jeremiah, although he would not obey his Teaching, it went not altogether unrewarded: for as we before promised, although he were carryed into Babylon, yet he dyed in peace, and had an honourable buriall.

Chap. 34.

Whereas it is said, that Jeremiah went from Jerusalem, to separate himself from thence in the midst of the people. Expositors differ much about it, going upon the word לִדְוֶה, to divide; some thinking, that it is meant of his going to Anathoth to divide his land there amongst his Kinsfolk. But there is no colour of reason for this; for the dividing here spoken of is nothing else, but as it is translated, his separating himself from the place, which he knew should be destroyed, going away for this end amongst the people, that he might not be seen and stayed, although he missed of his end.

Vers. 13.

For his being put into prison, the word signifieth as well a Sepulcher, as a prison, which is most dark and horrible to be in; for which it is rendred, and a Dungeon, and therein were severall Cells, called here Cabbins, into which whosoever was put, could not be put to more misery. Such they had at Athens, called Barathrum, and at Syracuse called Latomia, into which men were shut to be long in dying, at Rome Tullianum; there was also a Prison or Dungeon called Cizicemus, otherwise named profundum maris; of which Beda thinks that Paul speaketh, when in reckoning up his sufferings, he mentioneth this for one, In the depth of the Sea. But that is onely his conjecture, for it is not in the depth of the Sea,

Vers. 16.

but in perils by Sea. For the place into which Jeremiah was now put by the Kings favour, it was not to be shut up, as before, but to live in more liberty in the Court of the prison, where he might have the comfort of the aire, and was provided for whilst bread lasted in the City, and where in all probability there might be some resort unto him of people to hear, and to be stirred up by him.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

Vers. 1.

Jeremiah abiding in the Court of the prison, where the King caused him to be put, continued freely to prophesie of the destruction of Jerusalem, and of the people, if they would not yield to the King of Babylon, but of safety to them that yielded, as he had done long before, Chap. 21. 9. yet not so long, as Calvin by mistake would have it, who saith, that it was above twenty years before that the Prophet spake thus; for Ch. 21. 1. it is said to have been in Zedekiah his time, when Nebuchadnezzar made war against him, and therefore most probably in the ninth year of Zedekiah, Chap. 39. 2 Kings 25. when Nebuchadnezzar came first to besiege Jerusalem, before his departing at the hearing of the Egyptians coming; after which it is most probable, that he was now come again to renew the siege, which from the first to the last was not above one year and six moneths; and therefore it was but little above a year agoe since Jeremiah first spake thus. But now most probably he renewing the same Prophecie in the eares of all that came unto him into the Court of the prison; and the Princes hearing of it, some of them who are here named, go to the King, and accuse Jeremiah as an enemy to the State, saying, that he was worthy for this to dye. And it is indeed an hainous thing for any Subject to perswade any of his fellow Subjects to fall from his King to his enemies, and therefore he that doth it, is worthy to dye. This is true ordinarily; but for a Prophet, as Jeremiah was, set up by God above Kings, to declare his purpose against them, and to shew them the way of escaping, it was necessary to speak thus; and if Jeremiah had not, the greatest of all had before threatned to slay him, Chap. 1. 17. And therefore it was in him so far from being a crime, that he deserved to be hearkened unto by the King and Princes, and to have been well rewarded for his faithfulness. But example is not from hence to be taken by the ordinary Ministers of Gods Word in any case to perswade the people to fall from their own King to another, or to any that go out as enemies against him and his Kingdome. When these Princes had accused Jeremiah to the King, he tels them, That the King could do nothing against them; and therefore he saith, That he was in their hands, not that it ought so to be, for the King is supream, and all others even Princes are subject to him. But Zedekiah for his wickedness, and his Princes also for theirs, were now left of God, and so all things grew into confusion. Yet it appeareth, that he held his Supremacy still; because that having left Jeremiah to his Princes, and they dealing so outrageously by him as to put him into a miery Dungeon, where he was in danger of soon dying miserably; when he heard of it, he sent and took him out, and placed him where he had been before; neither did the Princes herein oppose him, as the following part of the Chapter sheweth.

Vers. 5.

Vers. 7.

Then Ebedmelech an Ethiopian went to the King sitting in the gate of Benjamin. This is a thing greatly to be noted, that there was not one Prince or other of the Jewish Nation, that was moved at the cruelty used against the Prophet of God; onely a stranger being an Eunuch in the Kings house, was affected at it, and sought his deliverance, which tended to the utter disgracing of the Jewes, who bare themselves upon this, that they were the holy seed, and Gods peculiar people; all others being base and vile in comparison of them; yet now one Ethiopian had more piety towards the man of God in him, than they all. And his love and piety is the more commended by this, that he shewed himself thus for Jeremiah against the Princes, that were of so great power, and so openly, not speaking to the King for him privately in his house, but openly, when he sate upon the judgement seat in the Gate; for there were the Tribunals commonly amongst the Jewes. So that he was without fear of the Princes, and of the envy of the people, who almost all hated Jeremiah, in doing this. But God, who stirred him up to it was with him so, that he prevailed with the King, although standing in awe of the Princes, as appeared before. Yet now he is also moved with compassion, and bids him take with him thirty men, and go, and pull Jeremiah out of the Dungeon; which he did accordingly, not fearing a greater power, that the Princes could easily have made against him, and so took him out in the best manner that he could devise. A notable example, teaching us wherein true Religion standeth, viz. in love, and doing for those that are in misery: as also the Samaritan is by our Lord brought for an example, who had compassion on the wounded man, when as not one Jew; no, not a Priest or Levite would shew him any pity. Again, note for our encouragement in doing good, that when humane reason shew'd him so many difficulties, for which it might seem impossible for him to effect this, as the power of the Princes with the King, the hatred and danger that he should incur by attempting it, and the enmity of all the Jews in the Gate, before whom he must speak, if ever, because otherwise it might be too late, Jeremiah being dead with hunger, cold, and the noisomness of the place; yet he, all these notwithstanding, attempted it, and prevailed to his everlasting fame, and obtaining great favour with the Lord, as we may see Chap. 39. 15.

Note.

Luke. 10. 30.

Note.

Again note, that God hath the Kings heart in his hand, and turneth it as the rivers of water; he was before so pusillanimous, that he durst do nothing, although he had some compassion towards the Prophet in him: but now he taketh courage to send a power, whereby to deliver him, that we may never cease praying for our King, that God would turn his heart, when it is set upon any evil way.

Note:

Lastly note, that one man, even contemptible and obscure may sometime be an instrument of great good, if he takes courage to attempt it when need requires, that none may be faint-hearted about things so necessary, but put on to speak, although he may seem to himself the most unfit amongst many more, and so he may incur the danger of his life; which is also further exemplified in Ester. King Solomon saith, that this man was a servant of the Kings, as the word Ebedmelech signifieth; and that this was not his proper name; and whereas it is rendred, The Ethiopian, he renders it, The Servant of the King, the Ethiopian, in the genitive Case, as if the King, and not he, were called the Ethiopian, or Blackamore, for his black and foul manners: as Amos 7. 9 it is said to the Jews, Are ye not the Children of Ethiopians to me? But there is no need here to flee to any such Exposition, but to take it as our Expositors generally do, Ebedmelech the Ethiopian. For the word Eunuch, it was spoken of before, Chap. 29. 2. Courtiers, that waited upon the King and Queen in their Chamber, were according to the common custome of other Nations called Eunuchs, that is, gelded men, whom they served so, that they might without suspicion attend upon Queens, and Kings Concubines: but of the Israelites it was not lawfull to geld any, Deut. 23. 1. But this man might be an Eunuch indeed, as the word signifieth, because he was a stranger; and that even in Israel there were many such, we may gather from Isa. 56. 4. of whom Kings and Princes served themselves, being brought from other parts, and sold unto them.

Note.

K. Solomon.

This Ethiopian is by Ambrose made a figure of the Gentiles, black by sin, who lifted up Christ, figured out by Jeremiah, when the Jewes had cast him as it were into the Dungeon, and made him stick in the mire, by their calumnies and cruell usage of him; for then the Gentiles believed in him, and extolled him as their Lord, and most mighty Saviour and Redeemer. And whereas old rags are taken by Ebedmelech, that Jeremiah might put them under his armes, when he was by Ropes to be drawn out of the mire, that he might not be hurt; so saith Gregory, by old examples of the faithfull, that patiently suffered grievous things, we ought to comfort other faithfull persons now, as Paul doth Heb. 11.

Then the King sent and took Jeremiah to him into the third entry of the Lords house. That is, saith R. David and Vatablus, to the third gate, which was right over against the Kings house, although Lyra and Dionysius understand the third Court, for there were three, first of the women, second of men, third of Priests; the first seemeth to be best. Here the King secretly asked Jeremiah again, as he had done Chap. 37. 17. and he not being terrified by all that had been done to him, saith the same that he had before done, exhorting the King to yield to the Caldees: a notable example to be followed by all Gods Ministers, and finally the King chargeth him not to let the Princes know what he said unto him, but to tell them only that he petitioned the King that he might not return to Jonathans house to die there.
